Fermiers Généraux. Those who in France in the 18th century farmed the state taxes. They guaranteed an agreed sum to the crown and retained any surplus which they could gather for themselves. They grew rich and amongst their activities was the production of a group of extremely rich illustrated books—notably the La Fontaine (1762) and the Boccaccio (1757-61).

Fern Seed. We have the receipt of fern seed, we walk invisible (1 Henry IV, iv, 4). The seed of certain species of fern is so small as to be invisible to the naked eye, and hence the plant was believed to confer invisibility on those who carried it about their person. It was at one time believed that plants have the power of imparting their own speciality to their wearer. Thus, the yellow celandine was said to cure jaundice; wood-sorrel, which has a heart-shaped leaf, to cheer the heart; liverwort to be good for the liver, and so on.

Why did you think that you had Gygès' ring,
Or the herb that gives invisibility?

BEAUMONT and FLETCHER: Fair Maid of the Inn, i, 1.

The seeds of fern, which, by prolific heat
Cheered and unfolded, form a plant so great,
Are less a thousand times than what the eye
Can unassisted by the tube descry.

BLACKMORE: Creation.

Ferney. The Patriarch or Philosopher of Ferney. Voltaire (1694-1778); so called because for the last twenty years of his life he lived at Ferney, a small sequestered village near Geneva, from which obscure retreat he poured forth his invectives against the French Government, the Church, nobles, nuns, priests, and indeed all classes.

Ferragus. The giant of Portugal in Valentine and Orson (q.v.). The great "Brazen Head" (q.v.), that told those who consulted it whatever they required to know, was kept in his castle.

Ferrara. See ANDREA FERRARA.

Ferrara Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Ferrex and Porrex. Two sons of Gorboduc, a mythical British king, who divided his kingdom between them. Porrex drove his brother from Britain, and when Ferrex returned with an army he was slain, but Porrex was shortly after put to death by his mother. The story is told in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae, and it forms the basis of the first regular English tragedy, Gorboduc, or

Ferrex and Porrex, written by Thomas Norton and Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurst, and acted in 1561.

Fescennine Verses. Lampoons; so called from Fescennia in Tuscany, where performers at merry-makings used to extemporize scurrilous jests of a personal nature to amuse the audience.

Fesse. See HERALDRY.

Fetch. A wraith—the disembodied ghost of a living person; hence fetch-light, or fetch-candle, a light appearing at night and supposed to foretell the death of someone. Fetches most commonly appear to distant friends and relations, at the very instant preceding the death of those they represent.

Fetches. Excuses, tricks, artifices.

Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary? They have travelled all the night? Mere fetches.

King Lear, ii, 4.

Fetish (fet' ish). The name given by the early Portuguese travellers to amulets and other objects supposed to have supernatural powers, used by the natives on the Guinea Coast; from Port. feito, sorcery, charm (Lat. factitius, artificial). Hence, an idol, and object of devotion. Fetishism is found in all primitive nations, taking the form of a belief that the services of a spirit may be appropriated by the possession of its material emblem. In psychopathology the word is used to designate a condition or perversion in which sexual gratification is obtained from other than the genital areas of the body, or from some object that has become thus emotionally charged.

Fettle, as a verb, means to repair; to smooth; as a noun it means condition, state of health, as in good fettle. It is probably from the A.S. fetch, a girdle, with allusion to girding oneself up.

Fettled ale. Ale warmed and spiced, mulled. It is a dialectal use, principally North Country.

Feu de joie (Fr.). A running fire of guns on an occasion of rejoicing.

Feud (fūd). A word of two very different meanings. In its more usual sense a feud is a continuous, bitter quarrel between individuals, families, or parties. Feuds have never played much part in the English manner of life. See VENDETTA. In its other sense a feud is a fief, or land held in fee (q.v.).

Feudal System, The. A system founded on the tenure of feuds or fiefs, given in compensation for military service to the lord of the tenants. It was introduced into England by William the Conqueror, who made himself owner of the whole country and allowed the nobles to hold it from him by payment of homage and military and other service. The nobles in turn had vassals bound to them by similar obligations.

Feuillants (fēr' yong). A reformed Cistercian order instituted by Jean de la Barrière in 1586. So called from the convent of Feuillants, in Languedoc, where they were established in 1577.

The club of the Feuillants, in the French Revolution, was composed of moderate

Jacobins. So called because the convent of the Feuillants, near the Tuileries, was their original club-room (1791-2).

Feuilleton (fè yè tong) (Fr., from feuille, a leaf). The part of French newspapers devoted to tales, light literature, etc.; hence, in England a serial story in a newspaper, or the "magazine page."

Fey (fā). Epithet applied when a person suddenly breaks into a state of light-heartedness. This was formerly supposed to be an indication of an early approaching death. The word is the A.S. fæge (on the point of death, or doomed to die).

FFI. Forces Françaises de l'Interieure. Frenchmen within France who continued the struggle against Germany after the fall of their country in 1940. They were first armed by Britain and their co-operation with British parachute agents was co-ordinated and directed by an organization at the War Office. Later the United States also co-operated through their OSS (q.v.). These Frenchmen were familiarly known as Maquis (q.v.). As soon as the allied invasion landed in June 1944 they came into the open as a civilian army.

Fiacre (fē akr'). A French cab or hackney coach. So called from the hotel de St. Fiacre, Paris, where the first station of these coaches was established by M. Sauvage, about 1650.

Legend has it that St. Fiacre was the son of an Irish king, born in 600, who settled in France and built a monastery at Breuil. His day is August 30th.

Fiars (fī' ārs). Striking the fiars. Taking the average price of corn. Fiars are the legal prices of grain as fixed by the sheriff of a county for the current year. It is a Scottish term, from M.E. and O.Fr. feor, Lar. forum, a market.

Fiasco. A failure. In Italy they cry Ola, ola, fiasco! to an unpopular singer.

In Italian fiasco means a flask, and it is uncertain how it became, in Venetian slang, to mean a failure, an attempt that comes to nothing.

Fiat (fī' āt) (Lat., let it be done). I give my fiat to that proposal. I consent to it. A fiat in law is an order of the court directing that something stated be done.

Fiat experimentum in corpore vili. See CORPUS VILE.

Fiat justitia ruat celum. See PISO'S JUSTICE.

Fib. An attendant on Queen Mab in Drayton's Nymphidia. Fib, meaning a falsehood, is the Latin fabula, a fable.

Fico (fī kō). See FIG.

Fico for the phrase.

I see contempt marching forth, giving me the fico with his thombe in his mouth.—Wit's Miserie (1596).

Fiddle (A.S. fithle; perhaps connected with mediæval Lat. vitula or vidula, whence violin). A violin or stringed instrument of that nature. In Stock Exchange slang a fiddle is one-sixteenth of a pound—1s. 3d.

Fit as a fiddle. In fine condition, perfect trim or order.

He was first fiddle. Chief man, the most distinguished of the company. The allusion is to the leader of concerts, who leads with a fiddle.

To play second fiddle. To take a subordinate part.

To fiddle about. To trifle, fritter away one's time, mess about, play at doing things instead of doing them. To fiddle with one's fingers is to move them about as a fiddler moves his fingers up and down the fiddle-strings.

To fiddle. To manipulate accounts, etc., to one's own advantage, or to the advantage of the parties concerned. "He fiddled it," might indicate that he covered up a deficiency in the accounts.

Fiddle-de-dee! An exclamation signifying what you say is nonsense.

All the return he ever had . . . was a word, too common, I regret to say, in female lips, viz., fiddle-de-dee.—DE QUINCEY: Secret Societies.

Fiddle-faddle. To busy oneself with nothing; to dawdle; to talk nonsense.

Ye may as easily

Outrun a cloud, driven by a northern blast,

As fiddle-faddle so.

JOHN FORD: The Broken Heart, i, 3. (1633).

Fiddler. Slang for a sixpence; also for a farthing.

Drunk as a fiddler. See DRUNK.

Fiddler's fare or pay. Meat, drink, and money.

Fiddler's Green. The land of sailors where there is perpetual mirth, a fiddle that never ceases playing to untiring dancers, plenty of grog, and unlimited tobacco.

Fiddler's money. A silver penny. The fee given to a fiddler at a wake by each dancer.

Fiddler's news. Stale news carried about by wandering fiddlers.

Oliver's fiddler. Sir Roger L'Estrange (1616-1704). So called because he, at one time, was playing a fiddle or viol with others in the house of John Hingston, the composer, when Cromwell was one of the guests.

Fiddlesticks! An exclamation signifying what you say is not worth attention; much the same as fiddle-de-dee (q.v.).

The devil rides on a fiddlestick. See DEVIL (PHRASES).

Fidei Defensor. See DEFENDER OF THE FAITH.

FIDO. Fog Investigation and Dispersal Operation. A method of dispersing fog on airfields by ejecting burning petrol from jets along the runways, developed in Britain during World War II.

Fie! An exclamation indicating that what is reproved is indelicate or undesirable. It is an old word, and is found in many languages; it seems to be an instinctive sound uttered on experiencing something disagreeable.

No word ne wryteth he

Of thilke wikke ensample of Canacee,

That lovede hir owne brother sinfully;

Of swiche cursed stories I sey "fy."

CHAUCER: Man of Lawes Prologue, 77.

Field.

In huntsman's language, the field means all the riders.

In heraldry, the entire surface of the shield.

In military language, the place where a battle is fought, or is about to be fought; the battle itself, or the campaign.

In sportsmen's language it means all the horses of any one race.

To back the field, means to bet against all the horses except one.

To keep back the field, is to keep back the riders.

In the field. A competitor for a prize. A term in horse-racing, as, "So-and-so was in the field." Also in war, as, "the French were in the field already."

Master of the field. The winner; the conqueror in a battle.

To take the field. To make the opening moves in a campaign; to move the army preparatory to battle.

To win the field. To win the battle.

Field-day. A day of particular excitement or importance. A military term, meaning a day when troops have manoeuvres or field practice.

Field-Marshal. A general officer of the highest rank in the British Army. The title was first used in 1736, and is conferred on generals who have rendered conspicuous services, and on members of royal families.

Field Officer. In the British Army any officer between the rank of captain and that of general, i.e. major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier.

Field piece. A piece of field artillery, a field gun.

Field works. Works thrown up by an army besieging or defending a fortress, or in strengthening its position.

Field of Blood. Aceldama (q.v.).

Field of fire. (Mil.). That part of the terrain before infantry or machine guns which their weapons can cover—i.e. which is not interrupted by woods, buildings, or the contours of the ground.

Field of force. A term used in physics to denote the range within which a force, such as magnetism, is effective.

Field of the Cloth of Gold. The plain, near Guines, where Henry VIII met François I in 1520 to discuss the succession to the Empire on the death of Maximilian. It was so called from the splendour and magnificence displayed. Accompanied by Cardinal Wolsey in an immense panoply of state, Henry met the French king and his nobles who were overawed by this magnificence. Many of the imposing ceremonies were spoiled by the rain and wind that swept the countryside.

Field of vision or view. The space in a telescope, microscope, etc., within which the object is visible.

Field of the Forty Footsteps, or The Brother's Steps. At the back of the British Museum, once called Southampton Fields, near the extreme north-east of the present Upper Montagu Street. The tradition is that at the time of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion two brothers fought each other here till both were killed, and for many years forty impressions of their feet remained on the field, and no grass would grow there, or upon the spot upon a bank where the young woman they were fighting for sat watching the duel. The site was built upon about 1800.

Fierabras, Sir (fī'ēr à brās). One of Charlemagne's paladins, and a leading figure in many of the romances. He was the son of Balan (q.v.), King of Spain, and for height of stature, breadth of shoulder, and hardness of muscle he never had an equal. His pride was laid low by Olivier, he became a Christian, was accepted by Charlemagne as a paladin, and ended his days in the odour of sanctity. See BALAN.

Fiere facias (fī'ēr i fās' i às) (Lat., cause it to be done). A judicial writ for one who has recovered damages in the courts, commanding the sheriff to see the judgment of the court duly carried out. It is often abbreviated to fi fa. The term was punningly used in Elizabethan times in connexion with red noses and men with "fiery faces" through drink.

Fiery Cross, The. A signal anciently sent round the Scottish clans in the Highlands summoning them to assemble for battle. It was symbolical of fire and sword, and consisted of a cross the ends of which had been burnt and then dipped in the blood of some animal slain for the purpose—a relic of Gaelic rites. See Scott's Lady of the Lake, canto iii, for an account of it.

The Ku Klux Klan adopted this symbol when it arose after the American Civil War.

Fifteen, The. The Jacobite rebellion of 1715, when James Edward Stuart, "the Old Pretender," with the Earl of Mar, made a half-hearted and unsuccessful attempt to gain the throne.

Fifth. Fifth column. Persons in a country who, whether as individuals or as members of an organization, are ready to give help to an enemy. The origin of the phrase is attributed to General Mola who, in the Spanish Civil War (1936-39), said that he had four columns encircling Madrid and a fifth column working for him in the city.

Fifth-Monarchy Men. A sect of English fanatics of about 1654 to 1660, who maintained that Jesus Christ was about to come a second time to the earth, and establish the fifth universal monarchy. The four preceding monarchies were the Assyrian, the Persian, the Macedonian, and the Roman. In politics, the Fifth-Monarchy Men were zealous reformers and levellers.

Fifty-four Forty or Fight. A slogan used in the U.S.A. presidential election of 1846. For some years there had been a dispute with Britain as to the northern boundary of the U.S.A. in the far west. The U.S.A. claimed that their territory should extend as far north as the southern border of Russian Alaska, which was 54° 40' N.; Great Britain rejected this, and in 1818 it was agreed that the disputed territory should be jointly administered for ten years, which was later extended indefinitely. In 1846 the question was brought forward again in the U.S.A. as an issue in the election. Shortly afterwards, the new President Polk came to an amicable agreement that U.S. territorial claims should end on the 49th parallel.

Fig. Most phrases that include the word fig have reference to the fruit as being an object of trifling value; but in

In full fig, meaning "in full dress," figged out, "dressed up," etc., the word is a variant of feague (see FAKE).

To fig up a horse is to make it lively and spirited by artificial means.

To fig oneself out, is to dress oneself up "regardless."

The speaker sits at one end all in full fig, with a clerk at the table below.—TROLLOPE: West Indies, ch. ix.

I don't care a fig for you; not worth a fig. Nothing at all. Here fig is either an example of something comparatively worthless or the Spanish fico (q.v.)—adopted as English by the Elizabethans—a gesture of contempt made by thrusting the thumb between the first and second fingers, much as we say, "I don't care that for you," snapping the fingers at the same time. See THUMB (To bite one's thumb).

A fig for Peter.

2 Henry VI, ii, 9.

The figo for thy friendship.

Henry V, iii, 6.

I shan't buy my Attic figs in future, but grow them. Said by way of warning to one who is building castles in the air—"don't count your chickens before they are hatched." Xerxes boasted that he was going to conquer Attica, where the figs grew, and add it to his own empire; but he met defeat at Salamis, and "never loosed his sandal till he reached Abdera."

In the name of the Prophet, Figs! A burlesque of the solemn language employed in eastern countries in the common business of life. The line occurs in the imitation of Dr. Johnson's pompous style, in Rejected Addresses, by James and Horace Smith.

Mercury fig. See MERCURY.

Fig leaf. The leaf of the fig tree or the banyan, according to the Bible story (Gen. iii, 7) used by Adam and Eve to cover their nakedness after the Fall. In the days of Victorian prudery tin fig leaves were fitted to statuary in the museums, Crystal Palace, etc.

Fig Sunday. An old provincial name for Palm Sunday. Figs used to be eaten on that day in commemoration of the blasting of the barren fig-tree by Our Lord (Mark xi) which took place on the day following the triumphant entry into Jerusalem.

Many festivals still have their special foods; as, the goose for Michaelmas, pancakes for Shrove Tuesday, salt cod for Ash Wednesday, etc.

Fig-tree. It is said that Judas hanged himself on a fig-tree. See ELDER-TREE.

Figaro (fig' à rô). A type of cunning dexterity, and intrigue. The character is in the Barbier de Séville (1775) and Mariage de Figaro (1784), by Beaumarchais. In the former he is a barber, and in the latter a valet; but in both he outwits everyone. There are several operas founded on these dramas, as Mozart's Nozze di Figaro, Paisiello's Il Barbiere di Siviglia, and Rossini's Il Barbiere di Siviglia.

Fight. He that fights and runs away May live to fight another day. An old saw found in many languages. Demosthenes, being reproached for fleeing from Philip of Macedon at Chæronea, replied, "A man that runs away may fight again."

He that fights and runs away
May turn and fight another day;
But he that is in battle slain
Can never rise to fight again.

These lines occur in James Ray's Complete History of the Rebellion, 1749. A similar sentiment is expressed in Hudibras, iii, 3:

For those that fly may fight again,
Which he can never do that's slain.

The Fighting Fifth. See REGIMENTAL NICK-NAMES.

The Fighting Prelate. Henry Spencer, Bishop of Norwich, who greatly distinguished himself in the rebellion of Wat Tyler. He met the rebels in the field, with the temporal sword, then absolved them, and sent them to the gibbet.

To fight for one's own hand. To uphold one's own cause, to struggle for one's own interest.

To fight shy of. To avoid; to resist being brought into contest or conflict.

To fight the tiger. To play against the bank at faro.

To fight with gloves on. To spar without showing animosity, like boxers, with boxing gloves. Disputants fight with gloves on so long as they preserve all the outward amenities of debate, and conceal their hostility to each other by courtesy and forbearance.

To live like fighting cocks. See COCK.

Fighting French, or La France Combattante, included all Frenchmen at home and abroad who joined together to collaborate with the Allied Nations in their war against Germany. After the fall of France, in 1940, General de Gaulle gathered round him such French troops, etc., as had escaped from France and formed them into a body called the Free French, with the cross of Lorraine for their emblem. On July 14th, 1942, this name was changed to The Fighting French. Not only did French troops fight side by side with the Allies in Africa, Italy, and wherever else there was fighting to be done, but in France itself they worked and fought behind the lines, organizing resistance and making themselves an annoyance and terror to the German occupying authorities.

One of the greatest deeds of this body was the march of General Le Clerc with his column from Lake Chad across the Sahara to join the British 8th Army in Libya. Strengthened and made into an armoured division Le Clerc's men fought thenceforward throughout the war and were given the honour of being the first formation to enter Paris, 23rd August, 1944.

Figure. From Lat. figere, to shape or fashion; not etymologically connected with Eng. finger, though the primitive method of calculating was doubtless by means of the fingers. For Roman figures, etc., see NUMERALS.

A figure of fun. Of droll appearance, whether from untidiness, quaintness, or other peculiarity. "A pretty figure" is a rather stronger expression.

Figure-head. A figure on the head or projecting cutwater of a sailing ship, which has ornamental value but is of no practical use; hence a nominal leader who has no real authority but whose social or other position inspires confidence.

To cut a figure. To make an imposing appearance through dress, equipage, and bearing.

To cut a sorry or a pretty figure is the reverse.

To make a figure. To make a name or reputation, to be a notability, as "he makes no figure at court."

What's the figure? How much am I to pay? What "figure" or sum does my debt amount to?

Filch. To steal or purloin. A piece of 16th-century thieves' slang of uncertain origin. File (q.v.) was used in much the same sense, but there is no evidence of etymological connexion.

With cunning hast thou filched my daughter's heart.

Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 2.

A filch or filchman was a staff with a hook at the end, for plucking clothes from hedges, articles from shop windows, etc.

File. Old slang for a rascal or worthless person; also for a pick-pocket. It comes from the same original as the word file, though in the sense in which it is sometimes used, as meaning a hard-headed, heartless person, it seems to have been connected with the hard, rasping tool, a file.

Rank and file. Soldiers and non-commissioned officers as apart from commissioned officers; hence, the followers in or private members of a movement as apart from its leaders. Rank refers to men standing abreast, file to men standing behind each other.

Filibuster (fil' i būs ter). A piratical adventurer, a buccaneer (q.v.). The word is through Span. filibustero from Dut. vrijbuiters, a free-booter.

To filibuster. In U.S.A. politics, to manoeuvre to frustrate the passing of a bill. It is based on the right of a member of Congress not to be interrupted so long as he holds the floor of the House. The member may recite or talk about any subject under the sun until the time available for passing the bill is exhausted.

Filioque Controversy (fil i ō' kwē). An argument that long disturbed the Eastern and Western Churches, and the difference of opinion concerning which still forms one of the principal barriers to their fusion. The point was: Did the Holy Ghost proceed from the Father and the Son (Filio-que), or from the Father only? The Western Church maintains the former, and the Eastern the latter dogma. The filio-que was recognized by the Council of Toledo, 589.

The gist of the argument is this: If the Son is one with the Father, whatever proceeds from the Father must proceed from the Son also. This is technically called "The Procession of the Holy Ghost."

Fill-dyke. The month of February, when the rain and melted snow fills the ditches to overflowing.

February fill-dyke, be it black or be it white [wet or snowy];

But if it be white it's better to like. Old Proverb.

Filter (Lat. feltrum, felt; filtrum, a strainer). Literally, to run through felt, as jelly is strained through flannel. The Romans strained the juice of their grapes through felt into the winevat, after which it was put into the casks.

Fin de siècle (Fr., end of the century). It has come to mean decadent with particular reference to the 19th century.

Finality John. Earl Russell, who maintained that the Reform Bill of 1832 was a finality, yet in 1854, 1860, and 1866 brought forth other Reform Bills.

Finance. By devious routes this word comes from the late Latin finis, a settlement of a debt, or the winding up of a dispute by the payment of ransom. Hence, revenue derived from fines or subsidies and, in the plural, available money resources. Thus we say, "My finances are exhausted," meaning I have no more funds or available money.

Financial year. The annual period for which accounts are made up. The Finance Act is the name given to the annual Act of Parliament that legalizes the proposals contained in the Budget. The financial year of the British Government ends on the 31st of March.

Find. Findings keepings! An exclamation made when one has accidentally found something that does not belong to him, and implying that it is now the finder's property. This old saying is very faulty law.

Findon Haddock. See FINNAN.

Fine. Fine as fivepence. An old alliterative saying meaning splendidly dressed or turned out.

Fine feathers make fine birds. See FEATHER.

In fine. To sum up; to come to a conclusion; in short.

One of these fine days. Some time or other; at some indefinite (and often problematical) date in the future.

The fine arts. Those arts which chiefly depend on a delicate or fine imagination, as music, painting, poetry, and sculpture, as opposed to the useful arts, i.e. those which are practised for their utility and not for their own sake, as the arts of weaving, metal-working, and so on.

Fingal (fing' gál). The great Gaelic semi-mythological hero, father of Ossian (q.v.), who was purported by Macpherson to have been the original author of the long epic poem Fingal (1762), which narrates the hero's adventures.

Fingal's cave. The basaltic cavern on Staffa, said to have been a home of Fingal. This is the name given to Mendelsohn's Hebridean Overture.

Finger (A.S. finger). The old names for the fingers are:—

A.S. thuma, the thumb.

Towcher (the finger that touches), foreman, or pointer. This was called by the Anglo-Saxons the scute-finger, i.e. the shooting finger, and is now commonly known as the index finger, because it is the one used in pointing.

Long-man or long finger.

Lech-man or ring-finger. The former means "medical finger," and the latter is a Roman expression, "digitus annularis." Called by the Anglo-Saxons the gold-finger. This finger between the long and little finger was used by the Romans as a ring-finger, from the belief that a nerve ran through it to the heart. Hence the Greeks and Romans used to call it the medical finger, and used it for stirring mixtures, under the notion that nothing noxious could touch it without its giving instant warning to the heart. It is still a general notion in parts of England that it is bad to rub salve or scratch the skin with any but the ring finger.

At last he put on her medical finger a pretty, handsome gold ring, whereinto was enchased a precious toadstone of Beausse.—RABELAIS: Pantagruel, III, 17.

Little-man or little finger. Called by the Anglo-Saxons the ear-finger, because it can, from its diminutive size, be most easily introduced into the orifice of the ear.

The fingers each had their special significance in alchemy, and Ben Jonson says—

The thumb, in chromancy, we give to Venus;

The fore-finger to Jove; the midst to Saturn;

The ring to Sol; the least to Mercury.

Alchemist, i, 2.

Blessing with the fingers. See BLESSING.

Cry, baby, cry; put your finger in your eye, etc. This nursery rhyme seems to be referred to in Comedy of Errors, II, 2:—

No longer will I be fool,

To put the finger in the eye and weep.

Fingers and toes. The farrier's name for anbury, or ambury, i.e. a spongy wart on horses and oxen.

Fingers were made before forks. The saying is used (especially at mealtimes) when one wants to convey that ceremony is unnecessary. It makes an interesting commentary on this self-evident statement that forks were not introduced into England until about 1620, before which period fingers were used.

Finished to the finger-nail. Complete and perfect in every detail, to all the extremities. The allusion is obvious.

His fingers are all thumbs. Said of a person awkward in the use of his hands.

To keep one's fingers crossed. To hope for success, to try to ensure against disaster. From the superstition that making the sign of the cross will avert bad luck.

Lifting the little finger. Tippling. In holding a tankard or glass, many persons stick out or lift up the little finger.

Light-fingered gentry. Pickpockets, thieves.

My little finger told me that. The same as "A little bird told me that" (see BIRD), meaning, I know it, though you did not expect it. The expression is in Molière's Malade Imaginaire.

By the pricking of my thumbs,

Something wicked this way comes.

Macbeth, IV, 1.

The popular belief was that an itching or tingling foretold some change or other.

To be finger and glove with another. To be most intimate. The more usual expression is to be hand in glove with.

To burn one's fingers. See BURN.

To have a finger in the pie. To assist or mix oneself officiously in any matter. Said usually in contempt, or censoriously.

To have it at one's fingers' ends. To be quite familiar with it and able to do it readily. The Latin proverb is Scire tanquam unguis digitosque suos, to know it as well as one's fingers and nails. The allusion is obvious; the Latin tag is referred to by Shakespeare in Love's Labour's Lost, V, 1:—

Costard: Go to; thou hast it ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Holofernes: O, I smell false Latin: dunghill for unguem.

To lay, or put, one's finger upon. To point out precisely the meaning, cause, etc.; to detect with complete accuracy.

To twist someone round one's little finger. To do just what one likes with him, to be master of his actions.

With a wet finger. Easily, directly. The allusion is to spinning, in which the spinner constantly wetted the fore-finger with the mouth.

Flores: Canst thou bring me thither?

Peasant: With a wet finger.

Wisdom of Dr. Dodipoll (about 1596).

Sailors find the wind by holding up a wet finger for the breeze to cool that side whence it comes.

Finger-print. An impression taken in ink of the whorls of lines on the finger. In no two persons are they alike, and they never change through the entire life of any individual; hence, they are of very great value as a means of identifying criminals.

Though the individuality of finger-prints had long been known, the publication of Sir Francis Galton's Finger Prints (1893) and Finger Print Directory (1895) drew attention to the facts. The full value of finger-prints was developed by Sir Edward Henry who devised a numerical formula for classifying the impressions. The Henry system has been widely adopted by the police organizations of the world.

Fingle-fangle. A ricolchet word from fangle (see NEW FANGLED) meaning a fanciful trifle. It was fairly common in the 17th century, but is not heard nowadays, except as an archaism.

Finnan Haddocks. Haddocks smoked with green wood; so called from a place-name, either Findhorn in Elgin, or Findon in Kincardineshire, both fishing villages where haddocks are cured.

Fionnuala. The daughter of Lir in old Irish legend, who was transformed into a swan, and condemned to wander over the lakes and rivers of Ireland till the introduction of Christianity into that island. Moore has a poem on the subject in his Irish Melodies.

Firbolgs. See MILESIAHS.

Fir-tree. Atys was metamorphosed into a fir-tree by Cybele, as he was about to lay violent hands on himself. (OVID: Metamorphoses, x, 2.)

Fir-cone. This forms the tip of the thyrsus (q.v.) of Bacchus because the juice of the fir-tree (turpentine) used to be mixed by the Greeks with new wine to make it keep.

Fire. (A.S. fyr; Gr. pur.)

A burnt child dreads the fire. See BURN.

Between two fires. Subjected to attack, criticism, etc., from both sides at once.

Coals of fire. See COALS.

Fire away! Say on; say what you have to say. The allusion is to firing a gun; as, You are primed up to the muzzle with something you want to say; fire away and discharge your thoughts.

Greek fire. See GREEK.

I have myself passed through the fire; I have smelt the smell of fire. I have had experience in trouble, and am all the better for it. The allusion is to the refining of gold, which is passed through the fire and so purged of all its dross.

I will go through fire and water to serve you; i.e. through any difficulties or any test. The reference may be to the ordeals of fire and water which were common methods of trial in Anglo-Saxon times.

If you will enjoy the fire you must put up with the smoke. You must take the sour with the sweet, every convenience has its inconvenience.

Letters of fire and sword. Formerly in Scotland if a criminal refused to answer his citation, it was accounted treason, and "letters of fire and sword" were sent to the sheriff, authorizing him to use either or both these instruments to apprehend the contumacious party.

More fire in the bed-straw. More mischief brewing. A relic of the times when straw was used for beds.

No smoke without fire. To every scandal there is some foundation. Every effect is the result of some cause.

St. Anthony's Fire, St. Elmo's Fire, St. Helen's Fire, etc. See these names.

The fat is in the fire. See FAT.

The Great Fire of London (1666) broke out at Master Farryner's, the king's baker, in Pudding Lane (the Monument now marks the spot) and after three days and nights was arrested at Pie Corner, Smithfield, and at the Temple, Fleet Street. St. Paul's Cathedral, eighty-nine other churches, 13,200 houses were burnt down, and 373 acres within the walls and 64 acres without were devastated. In the City itself only 75 acres 3 roods remained unconsumed.

To fire, or to fire out. To discharge from employment suddenly and unexpectedly.

This use was originally an Americanism.

To fire up. To become indignantly angry; to flare up, get unduly and suddenly excited.

To set the Thames on fire. See THAMES.

We do not fire first, gentlemen. According to tradition this very chivalrous reply was made to Lord Charles Hay (in command of the Guards) at the opening of the battle of Fontenoy (1745) by the French Marquis d'Auteroche after the former had advanced from the British lines and invited the French commander to order his men to fire. The story is told by the historian Espagnac as well as by Voltaire, but it is almost certainly ben trovato, and is not borne out by the description of the battle written a few days after the encounter by Lord Charles to his father, the Marquis of Tweeddale.

Fire-brand. An incendiary; one who incites to rebellion; like a blazing brand which sets on fire all it touches.

Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Troilus and Cressida, ii, 2.

Fire-bug. An habitual committer of arson (usually a psychiatric case); a fire-raiser (see below). The term is also applied to a glow-worm.

Fire-cross. See FIERY CROSS.

Fire-drake or Fire-dragon. A fiery serpent, an ignis-fatuus of large proportions, superstitiously believed to be a flying dragon keeping guard over hid treasures.

There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in 's nose. . . . That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head.—King Henry VIII, v, 3.

Fire-eaters. Persons ready to quarrel for anything. The allusion is to the jugglers who "eat" flaming tow, pour molten lead down their throats, and hold red-hot metal between their teeth. Richardson, in the 17th century; Signora Josephine Girardelli (the original Salamander), in the early part of the 19th century; and Chaubert, a Frenchman, of the present century, were the most noted of these exhibitors.

Fire hunting. An American term for hunting at night with the aid of fire-pans, or links.

Fire-new. Spick and span new (q.v.).

You should have accosted her; and with some excellent jests fire-new from the mint.—Twelfth Night, iii, 2.

Fire raiser. One guilty of arson for profit, usually to collect insurance money.

Fire-ship. A ship filled with combustibles sent against enemy vessels in order to set them on fire.

Fire-worship. Said to have been introduced into Persia by Phædima, widow of Smerdis, and wife of Hystaspes (521-485 B.C.). It is not the sun that is worshipped, but God, who is supposed to reside in it; at the same time the Fire Worshipers reverence the sun as the throne of deity. Cp. PARSEES.

First. A diamond of the first water. See DIAMOND.

At first hand. By one's own knowledge or personal observation.

First-chop. See CHOP.

First Fleet. The first convoy of ships taking convicts to Australia in 1788. The second fleet arrived in 1790. To have been a *first fleet*er became a matter of some pride, and the expression was in use as late as 1848.

First floor. In England the first floor is the story next above the ground-floor, or entrance floor; but in America it is the ground floor itself.

First foot, or first footer. The first visitor at a house after midnight on New Year's Eve. In Scotland and the North of England the custom of "first-footing" is still very popular.

First-fruits. The first profitable results of labour. In husbandry, the first corn that is cut at harvest, which, by the ancient Hebrews, was offered to Jehovah. We also use the word figuratively, as, the first-fruits of sin, the first-fruits of repentance.

First light. Roughly, dawn. Used in World War II to signify the earliest time at which infantry can see to make their way forward; first tank light, about half an hour later, is the earliest time that a tank, closed down for battle, can see to move. The phrases last light and last tank light are used at the end of the day.

First nighter. One who makes a practice of attending the opening performance of plays.

The First Gentleman of Europe. A nickname given to George IV, who certainly was first in rank.

He the first gentleman of Europe! There is no stronger satire on the proud English society of that day than that they admired George. No, thank God, we can tell of better gentlemen.—THACKERAY: The Four Georges: George IV.

The First Grenadier of the Republic. A title given by Napoleon to Latour d'Auvergne (1743-1800), a man of extraordinary courage and self-effacement. He refused all promotion beyond that of captain.

The first stroke is half the battle. "Well begun is half done." "A good lather is half the shave."

Fish. The fish was used as a symbol of Christ by the early Christians because the letters of its Greek name—Ichthus (q.v.)—formed a monogram of the words Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour.

Ivory and mother-of-pearl counters used in card games, some of which are more or less fish-shaped, are so called, not from their shape, but from Fr. fiche, a peg, a card-counter. La fiche de consolation (a little piece of comfort or consolation) is the name given in some games to the points allowed for the rubber.

Fish-flake. An 18th-century American term for a frame on which fish were dried.

Fish day (Fr. jour maigre). A day when persons in the Roman Catholic Church are forbidden to eat meat without ecclesiastical permission; viz. all Fridays and ember days, Ash Wednesday, the Wednesdays of Lent, the vigils of Pentecost, Assumption, All Saints, and Christmas.

Fish-wife. A woman who hawks fish about the streets.

Fish-wives are renowned for their powers of vituperation; hence the term is applied to any blatant, scolding woman.

A fish out of water. Said of a person who is out of his usual environment and so feels awkward and in the way; also of one who is without his usual occupation and is restless in consequence.

A loose fish. A man of loose or dissolute habits. Fish as applied to a human being usually carries with it a mildly derogatory implication.

A pretty kettle of fish. See KETTLE.

A queer fish. An eccentric person.

All is fish that comes to my net. I turn everything to some use; I am willing to deal in anything out of which I can make a profit.

He eats no fish. An Elizabethan way of saying that he is an honest man and one to be trusted, because he is not a papist. Roman Catholics were naturally opposed to the Government, and Protestants, to show their loyalty, refused to adopt their ritual custom of eating only fish on Fridays.

I do profess . . . to serve him truly . . . and to eat no fish.—King Lear, i, 4.

I have other fish to fry. I am busy and cannot attend to anything else just now.

Neither fish, flesh, nor fowl; or neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring. Suitable to no class of people; neither one thing nor another. Not fish (food for the monk), not flesh (food for the people generally), nor yet red herring (food for paupers).

The best fish swim near the bottom. What is most valuable commercially is not to be found on the surface of the earth, nor is anything else really worth having to be obtained without trouble.

There's as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it. Don't be disheartened if you've lost the chance of something good; you'll get another.

Fisherman, King. In the legends of the Holy Grail (q.v.) the uncle of Perceval, and dweller in the Castle of the Grail, where the holy vessel is enshrined.

Fisherman's Ring. A seal-ring with which the Pope is invested at his election, bearing the device of St. Peter fishing from a boat. It is used for sealing legal briefs, and is officially broken up at his death by the Chamberlain of the Roman Church.

To cry stinking fish. See CRY.

To drink like a fish. See DRINK.

To feed the fishes. To be drowned; to be seasick.

To fish for compliments. To try to obtain praise usually by putting leading questions.

To fish in troubled waters. To scramble for personal advantage in times of rebellion, war, etc.; to try to make a calamity a means to personal profit.

To fish the anchor. A nautical term meaning to draw up the flukes to the bulwarks after the anchor has been "catted."

You must not make fish of one and flesh of the other. You must treat both alike. The alliteration has much to do with the phrase.

Fitz. The Norman form of the modern French fits, son of; as Fitz-Herbert, Fitz-William, Fitz-Peter, etc. It is sometimes assumed by illegitimate ormorganatic children of royalties, as Fitz-Clarence, Fitz-roy, etc.

Fitzroy Cocktail (Austr.). One of the many concoctions drunk by strong men "out back." The recipe is methylated spirits, ginger beer, and one teaspoonful of boot polish.

Fitzwilliam Museum (Cambridge). So called from the 7th and last Viscount Fitzwilliam, who, in 1816, left £100,000, with books, paintings, etc., to form the nucleus of a museum for the benefit of the university. The present building was begun in 1837. It was considerably extended in 1930-31.

Five. The pentad, one of the mystic numbers, being the sum of 2 + 3, the first even and first odd compound. Unity is God alone, i.e. without creation. Two is diversity, and three (being 1 + 2) is the compound of unity and diversity, or the two principles in operation since creation, and representing all the powers of nature.

Bunch of fives. Pugilistic slang for the fist.

The Five Boroughs. In English history, the Danish confederation of Derby, Lincoln, Leicester, Stamford, and Nottingham in the 9th and 10th centuries.

Five fingers. A fisherman's name for the star-fish.

The Five Members. Pym, Hampden, Haselrig, Strode, and Holles; the five members of the Long Parliament whom Charles I attempted to arrest in 1642.

The Five-mile Act. An Act passed in 1665 (repealed in 1689) prohibiting ministers who had refused to subscribe to the Act of Uniformity from coming within five miles of any corporate town or within that distance of the scene of their old ministry.

The Five Nations. A description applied by Kipling to the British Empire—the Old Country, with Canada, Australia, South Africa, and India.

In American history the term refers to the five confederated Indian tribes inhabiting the present State of New York, viz. the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, and Senecas. Known also as the Iroquois Confederacy.

The Five Points. See CALVINISM.

Five senses. The five senses are feeling, hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting.

The Five Towns. Towns in the Potteries in which Arnold Bennett (1867-1931) laid the scene of many of his novels and stories. They are Tunstall, Burslem, Hanley, Stoke-upon-Trent, Longton.

The five wits. Common sense, imagination, fantasy, estimation, and memory. Common sense is the outcome of the five senses; imagination is the "wit" of the mind; fantasy is imagination united with judgment; estimation estimates the absolute, such as time, space, locality, and so on; and memory is the "wit" of recalling past events.

Four of his five wits went halting off.

Much Ado, i, 1.

These are the five witts remoyving inwardly:

First, "Common wittte," and then "Ymagination," "Fantasy," and "Estimation" truly,
And "Memory."

STEPHEN HAWES: The Passe-tyme of Plesure (1515)

Also used to mean the five senses.

Alone and warming her five wits

The white owl in the belfry sits.—TENNYSON.

Fiver. A five-pound note. A "tenner" is a ten-pound note.

Fix. In a fix. In an awkward predicament.

Fixed air. An old name of carbonic acid gas, given to it by Dr. Joseph Black (1728-99) because it existed in carbonate of magnesia in a fixed state.

Fixed oils. The true oils; i.e. those which are not changed by heating or distillation, and which harden on exposure to the air, thus differing from essential oils. The glycerides, such as linseed and walnut oils, are examples.

Fixed stars. Stars whose relative position to other stars is always the same, as distinguished from planets, which shift their relative positions.

Flaccus (fläk'üs). Horace (65-8 B.C.), the Roman poet, whose full name was Quintus Horatius Flaccus.

Flags. The following national flags are described as though flying from a mast on the reader's left-hand side.

Argentina: 3 horizontal stripes, blue, white, blue.

Austria: 3 horizontal stripes, red, white, red.

Belgium: 3 vertical stripes, black, yellow, red.

Brazil: Green, with yellow lozenge in centre bearing a blue sphere with white band and stars.

British Empire: See UNION JACK.

Denmark: Red with white cross from edge to edge.

Egypt: Green with white crescent and 3 5-pointed stars.

Eire: 3 vertical stripes, green, white, orange.

Ethiopia: 3 horizontal stripes, green, yellow, red.

Finland: White field with a blue cross.

France: 3 vertical stripes, blue, white, red.

Germany: 3 horizontal stripes, black, red, gold.

Greece: 9 horizontal stripes, blue and white, with white cross on a blue ground in top left corner.

Hungary: 3 horizontal stripes, red, white, green.
 Iceland: Blue, with a white-bordered cross from edge to edge.
 India, Republic of: 3 horizontal stripes, saffron, white, green.
 Iran: White bordered with green at top and red at bottom with arms of lion and sun in centre.
 Iraq: 3 horizontal bars, black, white, green, with a red triangle bearing 2 white stars, in left corner.
 Italy: 3 vertical stripes, green, white, red.
 Japan: White, charged with red rising sun and 16 rays reaching to the edge.
 Mexico: 3 vertical stripes, green, white, red.
 Netherlands: 3 horizontal stripes, red, white, blue.
 Norway: Red with a white-bordered blue cross to edges.
 Pakistan: Green with white border, charged with white crescent and star.
 Peru: 3 vertical stripes, red, white, red.
 Poland: Flag divided horizontally, white and red.
 Portugal: Flag divided vertically green and red.
 Rumania: 3 vertical stripes, blue, yellow, red.
 Siam: 5 horizontal stripes, red, white, blue, white, red.
 Spain: 3 horizontal stripes, red, yellow, red.
 Sweden: Blue with yellow cross to edges.
 Switzerland: Red field with white cross charged on it.
 Turkey: Red with white crescent with star in its centre.
 U.S.A.: See STARS AND STRIPES.
 U.S.S.R.: Red with yellow hammer and sickle surmounted by a 5-pointed star, all in the top left corner.
 Yugoslavia: 3 horizontal stripes blue, white, red.

On railways and elsewhere a red flag is used for signalling Danger; a green flag for Go ahead, or Proceed with Caution.

A black flag is the emblem of piracy or of no quarter. See BLACK.

The Red Flag is the symbol of international Socialism, red having been traditionally recognized as the colour of social revolutionary movements ever since the French Revolution. The Red Flag is a Socialist anthem written by Jim Connell and set to several tunes.

A white flag is the flag of truce or surrender, hence to hang out the white flag is to sue for quarter, to give in.

A yellow flag signals contagious disease on board ship, and all vessels in quarantine or having contagious disease aboard are obliged to fly it.

To flag down. To stop someone; from motor racing, in which the stewards wave a flag at the winner or at any driver they require to stop or to warn to proceed with caution.

The flag's down. Indicative of distress. When the face is pale the "flag is down." Alluding to the ancient custom of taking down the flag of theatres during Lent, when the theatres were closed.

'Tis Lent in your cheeks, the flag's down.—Doddsley's Old Plays, vol. v, p. 314 (Mad World).

The flag of distress. A flag hoisted at the masthead in reverse position to signal that trouble of some sort is on board.

To get one's flag. To become an admiral. Cp. FLAG-OFFICER.

I do not believe that the bullet is cast that is to deprive you of life, Jack; you'll get your flag, as I hope to get mine.—KINGSTON: The Three Admirals, xiii.

To hang the flag half-mast high is in token of mourning or distress.

To lower one's flag. To eat humble pie; to confess oneself in the wrong; to eat one's own words.

To strike the flag. To lower it. The phrase is used of an admiral relinquishing his command afloat; the action is also a token of respect, submission, or surrender.

Trade follows the flag. See FOLLOW.

Flag-ship. A ship carrying a flag-officer (q.v.).

Flag Captain. The captain commanding a vessel in which an admiral is flying his flag.

Flag Lieutenant. An admiral's aide-de-camp.

Flag-officer. An admiral (q.v.), vice-admiral, or rear-admiral. These officers alone are privileged to carry a flag denoting rank. An admiral of the fleet flies a Union Jack; an admiral a plain St. George's Cross, while vice-admirals and rear-admirals have respectively one and two red balls on the cross.

Flagellants (flä jel' änts). The Latin flagellum means a scourge, and this name is given to groups of fanatical persons who performed and administered exaggerated physical penances in public. They appeared in several places and times during the Middle Ages, particularly in Italy in 1260, and again in 1348 when the movement spread further afield in Europe. Although individuals such as St. Vincent Ferrer made use of the flagellant movements for legitimate religious purposes, the Church has never encouraged the practice of public flagellation and has definitely condemned any excesses in this direction.

Flagellum Dei (Lat., the scourge of God). Attila was so called. See SCOURGE of GOD.

Flak. The German abbreviation, adopted into English, of Flugabwehrkanone, meaning anti-aircraft gun or gunfire.

Flam. Flattery for an object; blarney; humbug.

They told me what a fine thing it was to be an Englishman, and about liberty and property . . . I find it was a flam.—GODWIN: Caleb Williams, vol. ii, ch. v.

Flamboyant Architecture. A florid style which prevailed in France in the 15th and 16th centuries. So called from its flame-like tracery. The flamboyant architects of the decline, says Ruskin, were "nothing but skilful masons, with more or less love of the picturesque, and redundancy of undisciplined imagination, flaming itself away in wild and rich traceries, and crowded bosses of grotesque figure sculpture."

Flame. A sweetheart. "An old flame," a quondam sweetheart.

Flaming. Superb, captivating, ostentatious. The Fr. flambant, originally applied to those persons who dressed themselves in rich dresses "flaming" with gold and silver thread.

Flaming swords. Swords with a wavy or flamboyant edge, used now only for state purposes. The Dukes of Burgundy carried swords of this sort, and they were worn in our country till the accession of William III.

The Flaming Tinman, or Black Jack Bosville, is one of the startling characters in George Borrow's Lavengro, and the fight in the dingle one of the great scenes of English literature.

Flaminian Way. The great northern road of ancient Italy, constructed by C. Flaminius in 220 B.C. It led from the Flaminian gate of Rome to Ariminum (Rimini).

Flanders. Flanders' Babies. Cheap wooden jointed dolls common in the early 19th century.

Flanders Mare, The. So Henry VIII called Anne of Cleves, his fourth wife whom he married in January, 1540, and divorced in July of the same year. She died at Chelsea in 1557.

Flanders Poppies. The name given to the red artificial poppies sold in the streets on Remembrance Day for the benefit of ex-service men. The connexion with poppies comes from a poem by John McCrae, which appeared in Punch, December 8th, 1915:—

If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

Flaneur (Fr.). A loungeur, gossipier. From flaner, to saunter about.

Flannels. To be awarded one's flannels. To gain one's cricket colours at Eton.

Flap-dragons. An old name for our "snap-dragon," i.e. raisins soaked in spirit, lighted, and floating in a bowl of spirituous liquor. Gallants used to drink flap-dragons to the health of their mistresses, and would frequently have lighted candle-ends floating in the liquor to heighten the effect. Hence:—

He drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons.—Henry IV, ii, 4.

Flap-jack. A cake baked on a griddle or in a shallow pan, and so called from the practice of tossing it into the air when it was done on one side, and catching it flat with the brown side uppermost.

We'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more o'er puddings and flap-jacks.—Pericles, ii, 1.

In the 20th century the word has been applied to a woman's flat powder compact.

Flapper. In the early years of this century a familiar term for a young girl in her teens. The hair was worn long and plaited in a pigtail, tied with a large bow, which may have suggested a flapper.

Flash. Showy, smart, "swagger"; as a flash wedding, a flash hotel. In Australia the term flash or flashy is applied "to anyone who is proud and has nothing to be proud of," J. KIRBY: Old Times in the Bush of Australia, 1895.

Also counterfeit, sham, fraudulent. Flash notes are forged notes; a flash man is a thief or the companion of thieves.

A mere flash in the pan. All sound and fury, signifying nothing; like the attempt to discharge an old flint-lock gun that ends with a flash in the lock-pan, the gun itself "hanging fire."

Flat. One who is not sharp.

Flat-foot. U.S.A. slang for a policeman. In English slang he is a flatpie.

To be caught flat-footed. To be caught unprepared, as a football player who is tackled by an opponent before he has been able to advance.

To come out flat-footed. To state one's beliefs positively, as though firmly planted on one's feet.

Flat top. British and American name for aircraft-carrier (World War II).

Flat as a flounder. I knocked him down flat as a flounder. A flounder is one of the flat-fish.

Flat as a pancake. Quite flat.

Flat race. A race on the "flat" or level ground without obstacles, as opposed to a steeplechase, or "over the sticks."

He is a regular flat-fish. A dull, stupid fellow. The play is upon flat (stupid), and such fish as plaice, dabs, and soles.

Flatterer. Vitellius (A.D. 15-69), Roman Emperor for a short while in 69. He was a sycophant of Nero's, and his name became a synonym for a flatterer (Tacitus, Ann., vi, 32).

When flatterers meet, the devil goes to dinner. Flattery is so pernicious, so fills the heart with pride and conceit, so perverts the judgment and disturbs the balance of the mind, that Satan himself could do no greater mischief, so he goes to dinner and leaves the haven of wickedness to operate its own mischief.

Porteus, there is a proverb thou shouldst read:

"When flatterers meet, the devil goes to dinner."

PETER PINDAR: Nil Admirari.

Flea. A flea's jump. It has been estimated that if a man, in proportion to his weight, could jump as high as a flea, he could clear St. Paul's Cathedral with ease.

Aristophanes, in the Clouds, says that Socrates and Chærephon tried to measure how many times its own length a flea jumped. They took in wax the size of a flea's foot; then, on the principle of ex pede Herculeum, calculated the length of its body. Having found this, and measured the distance of the flea's jump from the hand of Socrates to Chærephon, the knotty problem was resolved by simple multiplication.

A mere flea-bite. A thing of no moment.

Great fleas have lesser fleas. No matter what our station in life, we all have some "hangers on."

Hobbes clearly proves that every creature
Lives in a state of war by nature;
So naturalists observe a flea
Has smaller fleas that on him prey,
And these have smaller still to bite 'em,
And so proceed ad infinitum.

SWIFT: Poetry; a Rhapsody.

Sent off with a flea in his ear. Peremptorily. A dog which has a flea in the ear is very restless, and runs off in terror and distress.

The phrase is quite an old one, and dates from at least the 15th century in English, and earlier in French. It is found in Heywood's Proverbs, Nash's Pierce Penilesse, Skoggin's Jests, etc.

Ferardo . . . whispering Philantus in the ear (who stood as though he had a flea in his ear), desired him to keep silence.—LYLY: Euphues (1578).

Here the phrase implies that vexatious news has been heard; and in Deloney's Genile Craft (1597) we have a similar instance, where a servant goes away shaking his head "like one that hath a flea in his ear."

Flecknoe, Richard. An Irish priest who printed a host of poems, letters, and travels, and died about 1678. He is now only remembered through Dryden's satire, MacFlecknoe; where it is said he

Reigned without dispute

Through all the realms of nonsense absolute.

Fleeced. Cheated of one's money; sheared like a sheep.

Fleet, The. Fleet Marriages. Clandestine marriages, at one time performed without banns or licence by needy chaplains, in the Fleet Prison, London. As many as thirty marriages a day were sometimes celebrated in this disgraceful manner; and Malcolm tells us that 2,954 were registered in the four months ending with February 12th, 1705. The practice was suppressed and declared null and void in 1774.

Fleet Book Evidence. No evidence at all. The books of the Old Fleet prison are not admissible as evidence to prove a marriage.

Fleet Prison. The most notorious of the old debtors' prisons, the Fleet Prison stood on the site now occupied by the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street. Its history was as dismal as the building itself. Originally used for prisoners committed by the Star Chamber, on the abolition of that court it became a prison for debtors, bankrupts, and persons charged with contempt of court. It was in charge of a warden, who bought the job and reimbursed himself from the exorbitant fees he charged prisoners for board, lodging, and innumerable privileges they never received. Every day a prisoner took it in turns to beg from passers-by, standing in a barred cage opening on the street. The prison was burned down in the Great Fire (1666) and again by the Gordon Rioters in 1780. It was rebuilt again but in 1844 the prisoners were removed to the Queen's Bench Prison, and in 1864 the place was pulled down. See LIBERTIES OF THE FLEET, under LIBERTY.

Fleet Street. Now synonymous with journalism and newspaperdom, Fleet Street in London was a famous thoroughfare centuries before the first newspaper was published there at the close of the 18th century. It takes its name from the old Fleet River, which ran from Hampstead through Hockley-in-the-Hole to Saffron Hill, near where it joined the Hole Bourne (whence Holborn), flowing on with it under what is now Farringdon Street and New Bridge Street to fall into the Thames at Blackfriars. It was navigable for coal-boats, etc., as far as Holborn Bridge (near the present Viaduct), but latterly became so foul that in 1764 it was arched over, and it is now used as a sewer. From earliest days there was a bridge (the Fleet Bridge) across the river at the modern Ludgate Circus.

Flemish Account. A sum less than that expected. In Antwerp accounts were kept in livres, sols, and pence; but the livre or pound was only 12s.; hence, an account of 100 livres Flemish was worth £60 only, instead of £100, to the English creditor.

Flemish School. A school of painting established by the brothers Van Eyck, in the 15th century. The chief early masters were Memling, Weyden, Matsys, and Mabuse. Of the second period, Rubens and Van Dyck, Snyders, and the younger Teniers.

Flesh. Sighing for the flesh-pots of Egypt. Hankering for good things no longer at your command. The children of Israel said they wished they had died "when they sat by the flesh-pots of Egypt" (Exod. xvi, 3) rather than embark on their long sojourn in the wilderness.

He fleshed his sword. Used it for the first time. Men fleshed in cruelty—i.e. initiated or used to it. A sportsman's expression. A sportsman allows a young dog or hawk to have the first game it catches for its own eating, thus at the same time rewarding it and encouraging its taste for blood. This "flesh" is the first it has tasted, and fleshing its tooth thus gives the creature a craving for similar food.

The wild dog

Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent.

2 Henry IV, iv, 5.

Fleshly School, The. In the Contemporary Review for October, 1871, Robert Buchanan published a violent attack on the poetry and literary methods of Swinburne, Rossetti, Morris, O'Shaughnessy, John Payne, and one or two others under the heading The Fleshly School of Poetry, over the signature "Thomas Matland." The incident created a literary sensation; Buchanan at first denied the authorship but was soon obliged to admit it, and some years later was reconciled to Rossetti, his chief victim. Swinburne's very trenchant reply is to be found in his Under the Microscope (1872).

Fleur-de-lis, -lys, or -luce (fleur de lê, loos) (Fr., lily-flower) The name of several varieties of iris, and also of the heraldic lily, which is here shown and which was borne as a charge on the old French royal coat-of-arms.

In the reign of Louis VII (1137-80) the national standard was thickly charged with flowers. In 1365 the number was reduced by Charles VI to three (the mystical church number). Guillim, in his Display of Heraldrie, 1611, says the device is "Three toads erect, saltant"; in allusion to which Nostradamus, in the 16th century, calls Frenchmen crapauds.

The fleur-de-lis was chosen by Flavio Gioja to mark the north point of the compass, out of compliment to the King of Naples, who was of French descent. Gioja was an early-14th-century Italian navigator to whom has been (incorrectly) ascribed the invention of the mariner's compass (q.v.).

Flibbertigibbet. One of the five fiends that possessed "poor Tom" in King Lear. Shakespeare got the name from Harsnet's Declaration of Egregious Popish Impostures (1603), where we are told of forty fiends which the Jesuits cast out, and among the number was "Flibberdigibet," a name which had previously been used by Latimer and others for a mischievous gossip. Elsewhere the name is apparently a synonym for Puck.

Flick. A cinematograph film; to go to the flicks, to go to the pictures.

Flimsy (film' zi). A newspaper journalist's term for newspaper copy, or a telegram. It arises from the thin paper (often used with a sheet of carbon paper to take a copy) on which the reporters and others write up their matter for the press. Flimsy is also used for a £5 bank note.

Fling. I must have a fling at . . . Throw a stone at something. To attack with words, especially sarcastically. To make a haphazard venture. Allusion is to hurling stones from slings.

To have his fling. To sow his wild oats. The Scots have a proverb:—

Let him tak' his fling and find oot his ain wecht (weight).

meaning, give him a free hand and he'll soon find his level.

Flint. To skin a flint. See SKIN.

Flirt. A coquette. The word is from the verb flirt, as, "to flirt a fan," i.e. to open it, or wave it, with a sharp, sudden motion. The fan being used for coquetting, those who coquetted were called "flirts." In Dr. Johnson's day a flirt, according to his Dictionary, was "a pert hussey"; and he gives an account of one in No. 84 of The Rambler, which, in some few particulars, resembles the modern article.

Flittermouse. A bat (cp. Ger. Fledermaus). An earlier name was flinder mouse.

Then came . . . the flyndermows and the wezel and ther cam moo than xx whiche wolde not have comen yf the foxe had losste the feed.—CAXTON: Reynard the Fox, xli.

Floating Academy. The hulks (q.v.); a convict ship.

Flogging a dead horse. See HORSE.

Floor. I floored him. Knocked him down on the floor; hence figuratively, to overcome, beat, or surpass.

Flora's Dial. A fanciful or imaginary dial supposed to be formed by flowers which open or close at stated hours.

Florentine Diamond. One of the large and famous diamonds in the world, weighing 133 carats. It formed part of the Austrian crown jewels, and previously belonged to Charles, Duke of Burgundy. Tradition relates that it was picked up by a peasant and sold for half a crown.

Florian, St. Patron saint of Poland; he was martyred by being drowned in the Enns, near Lorch, about 230. He is also the patron of mercers, having been himself of that craft. His cult was introduced into Poland in 1183; his day is May 4th.

Florid Architecture. The later stages of the pointed style in England (about 1480-1537), often called the Tudor, remarkable for its florid character, or profusion of ornament.

Florida. In 1512 Ponce de Leon sailed from France to the West in search of "the Fountain of Youth." He first saw land on Easter Day, which was then popularly called in Spain pascua florida, flowery Easter, and on that account called the new possession "Florida."

Florimel (flor' i mel). A character in Spenser's Faerie Queene typifying the complete charm of womanhood.

Florin. An English silver coin representing 2s., first issued in 1849 as a tentative introduction of a decimal coinage, being one-tenth of a pound. Camden informs us that Edward III issued gold florins worth 6s., in 1337. The word is generally supposed to be derived from Florence; but as the coin had a lily on one side, probably it is connected with the Lat. flos, a flower. CP. GRACELESS FLORIN.

Florizel (flor' i zel). George IV, when Prince of Wales, corresponded under this name with Mrs. Robinson, the actress, generally known as Perdita, that being the character in which she first attracted the prince's attention. The names come from Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

In Lord Beaconsfield's Endymion (1880) Prince Florizel is meant for Napoleon III.

Flotsam and Jetsam. Wreckage found in the sea or on the shore. "Flotsam," goods found floating on the sea; "jetsam," things thrown out of a ship to lighten it. (O.Fr. floter, to float; Fr. jeter, to throw out). CP. LAGAN.

Flowers in Christian Traditions. Many plants and flowers, such as the aspen, elder, passion-flower, etc., play their part in Christian tradition.

The following are said to owe their stained blossoms to the blood which trickled from the cross:—

The red anemone; the arum; the purple orchis; the crimson-spotted leaves of the roodselken (a French tradition); the spotted persicaria, snake-weed.

Flowery Kingdom, The. China; a translation of the Chinese Hwa-kwo.

Flower of Chivalry. A name given to several knights of spotless reputation, e.g.—

Sir William Douglas, Knight of Liddesdale (slain 1353).

Bayard (le chevalier sans peur et sans reproche) (1475?-1524).

Sir Philip Sidney (1554-86), .

Flower of Kings (Lat. Flos regum). King Arthur was so called by John of Exeter, who was Bishop of Winchester and died 1268.

Fluellen (floo el' en). A Welsh captain and great pedant in Shakespeare's Henry V, who, amongst other learned quiddities, attempted to draw a parallel between Henry V and Alexander the Great; but when he had said that one was born at Monmouth and the other at Macedon, both beginning with the same letter, and that there was a river in both cities, had exhausted his parallelisms.

Fluff. To bungle, to fizzle, to do something carelessly and unskilfully. In theatrical parlance an actor fluffs a part when he loses or has not learned his words.

A little bit of fluff. Edwardian slang for a girl, especially a lively one of the fluffy variety.

Fluke. A lucky chance, a stroke or action that accidentally meets with success, as in billiards when one plays for one thing and gets another. Hence an advantage gained by luck more than by skill or judgment.

Flummery. Flattering nonsense, palaver. In Wales it is a food made of oatmeal steeped in water and kept till it has become sour. In Cheshire and Lancashire it is the prepared skin of oatmeal mixed with honey, ale, or milk; pap; blanc-mange. (Welsh, lymry, wash-brew, from lym, sour or sharp.)

Flummux, To. To bamboozle; to deceive; to be in a quandary. "I am regularly flummuxed"—i.e. perplexed. It is probably the Old English provincial word flummocks, to maul or mangle, or flummock, bewilderment, also untidiness or an untidy person.

Flunk. To fail in examinations or a test completely; found in U.S.A. by mid-19th century.

Flunkey. A male livery servant, a footman, lackey. The word usually has a contemptuous implication and suggests snobbery and toadyism; hence flunkeydom, flunkeyish, etc., pertaining to toadies. Probably a Scottish form of flanker, i.e. one who runs at the side (of carriages, etc.). Cp. Fr. flanquer, to run at the side of.

Flurry. The death-struggle of a whale after harpooning.

Flush. In cards, a whole hand of one suit.

Flush of money. Full of money. Similarly a flush of water means a sudden and full flow of water (Lat. flux-us).

To flush game. A gun dog is said to flush game when he disturbs them and they take to the air.

Flute. The Magic Flute. an opera by Mozart (Die Zauberflöte). The "flute" was bestowed by the powers of darkness, and had the power of inspiring love. Tamino and Pamina are guided by it through all worldly dangers to the knowledge of Divine Truth.

Flutter. Colloquial term for a small gamble.

Flutter the Dovecotes, To. To disturb the equanimity of a society. The phrase occurs in Coriolanus (v, 6).

Fly (plural flies). A hackney coach, a cab. A contraction of Fly-by-night, as sedan chairs on wheels used to be called in the Regency. These "Fly-by-nights," patronized greatly by the Regent and his boon companions during their wild night pranks at Brighton, were invented in 1809 by a carpenter, John Butcher.

Fly. An insect (plural flies). For the theatrical use, see FLYMAN.

It is said that no fly was ever seen in Solomon's temple; and according to Mohammedan legend, all flies shall perish except one, and that is the bee-fly.

The god or lord of flies. In the temple of Actium the Greeks used annually to sacrifice an ox to Zeus, who, in this capacity, was sur-named Apomyios, the avorter of flies. Pliny tells us that at Rome sacrifice was offered to flies in the temple of Hercules Victor, and the Syrians offered sacrifice to the same insects. See ACHOR; BEELZEBUB.

Flies in amber. See AMBER.

Fly. Perspicacious in an unpleasant way, unlikely to be caught.

No flying without wings. Nothing can be done without the proper means.

The eagle doesn't hawk at flies. See AQUILA.

The fly in the ointment. The trifling cause that spoils everything; a biblical phrase.

Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour; so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.—Eccles. x, 1.

The fly on the coach-wheel. One who fancies himself of mighty importance, but who is in reality of none at all. The allusion is to Æsop's fable of a fly sitting on a chariot-wheel and saying, "See what a dust I make!"

There are no flies on him. He's all right; he's very alert; you won't catch him napping.

To crush a fly on a wheel. An allusion to the absurdity of taking a wheel used for torturing criminals and heretics for killing a fly.

To fly a kite. See KITE.

To fly in one's face. To get into a passion with a person; to insult; as a hawk, when irritated, flies in the face of its master.

To fly in the face of danger. To run in a foolhardy manner into danger, as a hen flies in the face of a dog or cat.

To fly in the face of providence. To act rashly, and throw away good opportunities; to court danger.

To fly out at. To burst or break into a passion.

To rise to the fly. To be taken in by a hoax, as a fish rises to the angler's fly and is caught.

Fly-boy. The boy in a printing-office who lifts the printed sheets off the press; so called because he catches the sheets as they fly from the tympan immediately the frisket is opened.

Fly-by-night. One who defrauds his creditors by decamping at night-time; also the early name of a sedan-chair, and later of a horsed vehicle (hence FLY, a cab).

Fly-flat. A racing man's term for a punter who thinks he knows all the ins and outs of the turf, but doesn't.

Flyman. In theatrical language, the scene-shifter, or the man in the "flies," i.e. the gallery over the proscenium where the curtains, scenery, etc., are controlled.

The flyman's plot. The list of all the articles required by the flyman in the play produced.

To come off with flying colours is to succeed triumphantly, as a ship coming out of action with all her colours flying.

Flying Dutchman. In the superstitions of seamen a spectral ship that is supposed to haunt the southern seas round the Cape of Good Hope. She is only to be seen in stormy weather and bodes no good to those who pass her. There are various stories to account for this mysterious and ghostly craft; that worked out by Wagner in his opera Der Fliegende Holländer (1843) was partly suggested by Heinrich Heine. Captain Maryat's novel The Phantom Ship (1839) tells of Philip Vanderdecken's successful but disastrous search for his father, the captain of the Flying Dutchman.

Fo'c'sle. See FORECASTLE.

Fogy or Fogey. An old foggy. A man of advanced years and somewhat antiquated ideas. A disrespectful but good-humoured description. Several fanciful derivations have been found for this word, but its origin is unknown.

Foil. That which sets off something to advantage. The allusion is to the metallic leaf used by jewellers to set off precious stones. (Fr. feuille; Lat. folium; Gr. phullon, a leaf.)

'Til be your foil, Laertes. In mine ignorance Your skill shall, like a star 't the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed. Hamlet, v. 2.

To run a foil. To puzzle; to lead astray. The track of game is called its foil; and an animal hunted will sometimes run back over the same foil in order to mislead its pursuers. In another sense the word means "to baffle, frustrate, parry." It comes from the O.Fr. fouler, to trample upon ( we have the same word in the phrase "to full cloth"). His schemes were foiled, he was prevented in what he had in mind.

Folio. Properly, a ream or sheet in its standard size; but when used of books it denotes a book whose sheets have been folded once only, so that each sheet makes two leaves; hence, a book of large size. Demy folio =  $11\frac{1}{2} \times 17\frac{1}{2}$  in., crown folio =  $10 \times 15$  in., and so forth. It is from the Ital. un libro in foglio, through the Fr. in-folio.

Folio so-and-so, in mercantile books, means page so-and-so, and sometimes the two pages which lie exposed at the same time, one containing the credit and the other the debit of one and the same account. So called because ledgers, etc., are made in folio.

Printers call a page of MS. or printed matter a folio regardless of size.

In conveyances, MSS., typewritten documents, etc., seventy-two words, and in Parliamentary proceedings ninety words, make a folio.

Folkland. See BOCKLAND.

Folk-lore. The study or knowledge of the superstitions, mythology, legends, customs, traditions, sayings, etc., of a people. The word was coined in 1846 by W. J. Thoms (1803-85), editor of the Athenæum.

Folk-mote (folk meeting). A word used in England before the Conquest for what we now call a county or even a parish meeting.

Follow. Follow-my-leader. A parlour game in which each player must exactly imitate the actions of the leader, or pay a forfeit.

Follow your nose, go straight on.

He who follows truth too closely will have dirt kicked in his face. Be not too strict to pry into abuse.

To follow suit. To do as the person before you has done. A phrase from card-playing.

Follower. In addition to its proper meaning of one who follows a leader, the word was used in Victorian days to designate a maid-servant's young man.

Mrs. Marker . . . offers eighteen guineas . . .

Five servants kept . . . No followers.

DICKENS: Nicholas Nickleby.

Folly. A fantastic or foolishly extravagant country seat, built for amusement or vainglory. Fisher's Folly, a large and beautiful house in Bishopsgate, with pleasure-gardens, bowling-green, and hothouses, built by Jasper Fisher, one of the six clerks of Chancery and a Justice of the Peace, is an historical example. Queen Elizabeth lodged there; in 1620 it was acquired by the Earl of Devonshire, and its site is now occupied by Devonshire Square.

Kirby's pleasure, and Fisher's folly,
Spinola's pleasure, and Megge's glory.

Strow: Survey (1603).

Fond. A foolish, fond parent. Here fond does not mean affectionate, but silly, from the obsolete fon, to act the fool, to become foolish (connected with our fun). Chaucer uses the word fonne for a simoleon (Reeve's Tale, 169); Shakespeare has "fond desire," "fond wretch," "fond madwoman," etc., also the well known:—

Pray, do not mock me:

I am a very foolish fond old man,

Fourscore and upward, not an hour more or less;

And, to deal plainly,

I fear I am not in my perfect mind.

King Lear, iv. 7.

Font or Fount. A complete set of type of the same body and face, with all the points, accents, figures, fractions, signs, etc., that ordinarily occur in printed books and papers. A complete fount (which, of course, includes italics) comprises 275 separate pieces of type, not including the special characters needed in almanacs, astronomical and medical works, etc. The word is French, fonte, from fondre (to melt or cast). Cp. TYPE; LETTER.

Fontange. An extravagant head-dress or top-knot introduced in France in 1680 by Mlle Fontange (d. 1681). In England it was called a Tower or Commode. Pieces of gummed linen, rolled into circular bands, served as a foundation to keep in place various feathers, bows and jewelled ornaments. This head-dress, sometimes rising to a height of 2 feet, was abolished by Louis XIV in 1699.

Fontarabia (font à râ' bi à). Now called Fuenterrabía (in Lat., Fons rapidus), near the Gulf of Gascony. Here, according to legend, Charlemagne and all his chivalry fell by the sword of the Saracens. The French romancers say that the rear of the king's army being cut to pieces, Charlemagne returned and revenged their death by a complete victory.

When Charlemagne with all his peerage fell
By Fontarabia. MILTON. Paradise Lost, i, 587.

Food. Food for powder. Soldiers; especially raw recruits levied in times of war; cannon fodder. Prince: Tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

Prince: I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal.: Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men. Henry IV, iv, 2.

The food of the gods. See AMBROSIA; NECTAR.

To become food for the worms, or for the fishes. To be dead and buried, or to be drowned.

Fool. We have many old phrases in which this word plays the chief part; among those which need no explanation are: A fool and his money are soon parted; Fortune favours fools; There's no fool like an old fool; etc. Others that may be mentioned are:—

A fool's bolt is soon shot (Henry V, iii, 7). Simpletons cannot wait for the fit and proper time, but waste their resources in random endeavours. The allusion is to bowmen in battle; the good soldier shot with a purpose, but the foolish soldier at random. Cp. Prov. xxix, 11.

A fool's paradise. To be in a fool's paradise is to be in a state of contentment or happiness that rests only on unreal, fanciful foundations.

As the fool thinks, so the bell clinks. A foolish person believes what he desires.

Every man hath a fool in his sleeve. No one is always wise; there is something of the fool about everyone.

At forty every man is a fool or his own physician. Said by Plutarch (Treatise on the Preservation of Health) to have been a saying of Tiberius. It implies that by the age of 40 a man ought to have learnt enough about his own constitution to be able to keep himself in health.

The Feast of Fools. A kind of Saturnalia, popular in the Middle Ages. Its chief object was to honour the ass on which Our Lord made His triumphant entry into Jerusalem. This mummary was held on the Feast of the Circumcision (Jan. 1). The office of the day was chanted in travesty, then a procession was formed and all sorts of foolery was indulged in. An ass was an essential feature, and from time to time the whole procession imitated braying, especially in the place of "Amen." It was put down only in the 15th century.

The wisest fool in Christendom. James I was so called by Henry IV of France, who learnt the phrase of Sully.

To be a fool for one's pains. To have worked ineffectively; to have had no reward for one's labours.

To be a fool to. Not to come up to; to be very inferior to; as, "bagatelle is a fool to billiards."

To fool about or around. To play the fool; to hang around in an aimless way.

To fool away one's time, money, etc. To squander it, fritter it away.

To make a fool of someone. To mislead him.

Young men think old men fools, old men know young men are. An old saying quoted by Camden in his Remains (1605, p. 228) as by a certain Dr. Metcalfe. It occurs also in Chapman's All Fools, v, 2 (acted 1599).

Court fools. From mediæval times till the 17th century licensed fools or jesters were commonly kept at court, and frequently in the retinue of wealthy nobles. Thus we are told that the regent Morton had a fool, Patrick Bonny; Holbein painted Sir Thomas More's jester, Patson, in his picture of the chancellor; and as late as 1728 Swift wrote an epitaph on Dickie Pearce, the fool of the Earl of Suffolk, who died at the age of 63 and is buried in Berkeley Churchyard, Gloucestershire. Dagonet, the fool of King Arthur, is also remembered.

Among the most celebrated court fools are:—

Rayère, of Henry I; Scogan, of Edward IV; Thomas Killigrew, called "King Charles's jester" (1611-82); Archie Armstrong (d. 1672), and Thomas Derrie, jesters in the court of James I.

James Geddes, to Mary Queen of Scots; his predecessor was Jenny Colquhoun.

Patch, the court fool of Elizabeth, wife of Henry VII.

Will Somers (d. 1560), Henry VIII's jester, and Patche, presented to that monarch by Cardinal Wolsey; and Robert Grene, jester in the court of Queen Elizabeth.

The fools of Charles V of France were Mitton and Thévenin de St. Léger; Haincelin Coq belonged to Charles VI, and Guillaume Louel to Charles VII. Triboulet was the jester of Louis XII and François I (1487-1536); Brusquet, of whom Brantôme says "he never had his equal in repartee," of Henri II; Sibilot and Chicot, of Henri III and IV; and l'Angély, of Louis XIII.

In chess the French name for the "bishop" is fou (i.e. fool), and they used to represent it in a fool's dress; hence, Regnier says: Les fous sont aux échecs les plus proches des Rois (14 Sat.). Fou is said to be a corruption of an eastern word for an elephant (see Thomas Hyde's De Ludis Orientalium, i, 4, 1689), and on old boards the places occupied by our "bishops" were occupied by elephants.

Foolscap. A standard size of printing paper measuring  $13\frac{1}{2} \times 17$  in. and of writing paper measuring  $13\frac{1}{2} \times 16\frac{1}{2}$  in. The name is derived from an ancient watermark, of which the first known specimen occurs in 1540.

Foot. The foot as a measure of length (= 12 in.,  $\frac{1}{3}$  of a yard, or .3047075 of a metre) is common to practically all nations and periods, and has never varied much more than does the length of men's feet, from which the name was taken.

In prosody, the term denotes a division in verse which consists of a certain number of syllables (or pauses) one of which is stressed. Here the term, which comes from Greece, refers to beating time with the foot.

At one's feet. "To cast oneself at someone's feet" is to be entirely submissive to him, to throw oneself on his mercy.

Best foot foremost. Use all possible dispatch. To "set on foot" is to set going. If you have various powers of motion, set your best foremost.

Nay, but make haste; the better foot before.
King John, iv, 2.

Enter a house right foot foremost (Petronius). It is unlucky to enter a house or to leave one's chamber left foot foremost. Augustus was very superstitious on this point. Pythagoras taught that it is necessary to put the shoe on the right foot first. Iamblichus tells us this symbolized that man's first duty is reverence to the gods.

First foot. See FIRST.

How are your poor feet? An old street-cry said to have originated at the Great Exhibition of London in 1851. Tramping about the galleries broke down all but trained athletes.

I have not yet got my foot in. I am not yet familiar and easy with the work. The allusion is to the preliminary exercises in Roman foot-races. While the signal was waited for, the candidates made essays of jumping, running, and posturing, to excite a suitable warmth and make their limbs supple. This was "getting their foot in" for the race. Cp. HAND.

To foot it. To walk the distance instead of riding it; also to dance.

Lo how finely the graces can it foote to the Instrument. They dauncen deftly, and singen soote in their meriment. SPENSER: Shepherd's Calendar; April.

To foot the bill. To pay it; to promise to pay the account by signing one's name at the foot of the bill.

To have one's foot on another's neck. To have him at your mercy; to tyrannize over, or domineer over him completely. See Josh. x, 24.

To measure another's foot by your own last. To apply your personal standards to the conduct or actions of another; to judge people by yourself.

To put one's foot down. To make a firm stand, to refuse or insist upon a thing firmly and finally.

To set a man on his feet. To start him off in business, etc., especially after he has "come a cropper."

To show the cloven foot. To betray an evil intention. The devil is represented with a cloven hoof.

To trample under foot. To oppress, or outrage; to treat with the greatest contempt and discourtesy.

With one foot in the grave. In a dying state.

You have put your foot in it nicely. You have got yourself into a pretty mess. As the famous Irish bull has it, "Every time I open my mouth I put my foot in it."

Footloose. Unfettered, a 17th-century expression. It survives to-day in the phrase "footloose and fancy free."

He is on good footing with the world. He stands well with the world.

To pay your footing. To give money for drink when you first enter on a trade. Entry money for being allowed to put your foot in the premises occupied by fellow-craftsmen. Cp. GARNISH.

Footmen. See RUNNING FOOTMEN.

Footnotes. Notes placed at the bottom of a page.

Foot-pound. The unit of result in estimating work done by machinery. Thus, if we take 1 lb. as the unit of weight and 1 ft. as the unit of distance, a foot-pound would be 1 lb. weight raised 1 ft.

Football Association Cup. See ASSOCIATION.

Footlights. To appear before the footlights. To appear on the stage, where a row of lights is placed in front along the floor to lighten it up.

Fop's Alley. An old name for a promenade in a theatre, especially the central passage between the stalls, right and left in the opera-house.

Forbidden Fruit. The. Figuratively, unlawful sexual indulgence. According to Mohammedan tradition the forbidden fruit partaken of by Eve and Adam was the banyan or Indian fig. See FIG LEAF.

Forcible Feeble. See FEEBLE.

Fore. A cry of warning used by golfers before driving.

To the fore. In the front rank; eminent.

To come to the fore. To stand out prominently; to distinguish oneself; to stand forth.

Fore-and-aft. All over the ship; lengthwise, in opposition to "athwartships" or across the line of the keel.

Forecastle (usually printed—and pronounced —fo'c'sle). So called because anciently this part of a vessel was raised and protected like a castle, so that it could command the enemy's deck. Dana's Seaman's Manual defines it as:—That part of the upper deck forward of the foremast. . . . In merchant ships, the forward part of the vessel under the deck, where the sailors live.

Foreclose. To put an end to. A legal term, meaning to close before the time specified.

When a mortgagee has failed to pay a debt the mortgagee may bring an action to foreclose, and the court will then hold that if the mortgager does not redeem within a certain time the mortgagee shall become owner of the property.

Forefather's Day. See PILGRIM FATHERS.

Forehand. In the 17th century forehanded meant provident, thrifty. To-day it survives only in games, denoting a stroke in which the player takes a ball on his natural side—i.e. right side for a right-handed player, as opposed to back-hand.

Foreshortening. This is a technical term in perspective drawing. In a portrait, for example, an arm represented as pointing at full length towards the observer occupies less space than if it were shown as pointing to one side; yet the perspective must clearly indicate that the full length of the arm is the same.

He forbids the fore-shortenings, because they make the parts appear little.—DRYDEN.

Forestick. The faggot laid in the front of a log fire, which holds all the others in; its opposite is backlog.

Foreign correspondent. A newspaper correspondent living in foreign parts, not a correspondent who is a foreigner. Until The Times newspaper originated the system of sending specially equipped men to reside abroad and send news regularly, all foreign news was sent by casual and amateur correspondents whose own political views gave a distinctive colour to the news—or the presentation of it—they transmitted.

Foreign Office. The department presided over by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. It was instituted in 1782, in place of the old Secretaryship for the Northern Department of Europe, as it had been called since 1688. The Foreign Secretary appoints, sends out, and supervises ambassadors, consuls and other diplomatic agents and keeps himself acquainted with affairs abroad; he represents the British government to foreign ambassadors, etc., who represent their governments in this country, and represents his Government abroad at important international conferences, etc. The Foreign Secretary is assisted by a minister of state and three under-secretaries, one of whom is the permanent under-secretary and executive of the Foreign Office.

Forest City. Cleveland, Ohio.

Forgeries. Broadly speaking, a forgery is an attempt to pass off as genuine some piece of spurious work or writing. It is not always easy to distinguish a forgery and an imposture; strictly, perhaps, the Rowley poems are impostures rather than forgeries.

Billy and Charley Antiques. In 1857 two men known as Billy and Charley, living in Rosemary Lane, Tower Hill, began to make mediæval "antiquities" on a large scale. These were mostly plaques and other objects of no apparent use, cast in lead or an alloy of lead and copper known as cock-metal, and artificially aged by pitting with acids. These objects bore strange and enigmatic devices, usually surrounded by a scroll bearing characters resembling letters, though wholly unintelligible. A great number of simple folk and naïve collectors were taken in, though the nature of these forgeries was so obvious, and they were full of such anachronisms that but little knowledge was needful to discern their nature. The whole business was exposed at a meeting of the British Archæological Association in 1858.

The Ireland Forgeries. One of the most famous of literary forgers was William Henry Ireland (1777-1835), the son of a bookseller and amateur antiquarian. When only 17 young Ireland produced a number of seemingly ancient leases and other documents purporting to be in the handwriting of William Shakespeare, among them being a love-letter to Ann Hathaway, enclosing a lock of hair. Emboldened by the credulity with which his impostures were accepted, he next came out with two new "Shakespeare" plays—Vortigern and Henry II. Ignoring the protests of Kemble, who was suspicious from the outset, Sheridan produced Vortigern at Drury Lane in 1796. During the rehearsals Mrs. Siddons and Mrs. Palmer resigned their roles and refused to be associated with so palpable a fraud. On the opening night the theatre was packed with an audience that grew increasingly critical as the play went on; and when Kemble spoke in his part, "When this solemn mockery is o'er," the house yelled and hissed until the curtain fell—on the first and last performance of Vortigern. Meanwhile Malone and other critics had studied the Miscellaneous Papers said to be Shakespeare's and had declared them forgeries—eventually extorting a confession from Ireland late in that same year, 1796.

The Rowley Poems. Certain poems written by Thomas Chatterton (1752-70), and said by him to have been the work of a 15th-century priest of Bristol named Thomas Rowley, who, in fact, was purely fictitious. Chatterton began to write them before he was 15, and after having been refused by Dodsley, they were published in 1769. Many prominent connoisseurs and litterateurs, including Horace Walpole, were hoaxed by them.

Fork. Old thieves' slang for a finger; hence to fork out, to produce and hand over, to pay up.

A forked cap. A bishop's mitre; so called by John Skelton (early 16th cent.). It is cleft or forked.

Fingers were made before forks. See FINGERS.

The forks. The gallows (Lat. furca). The word also meant a kind of yoke, with two arms stretching over the shoulders, to which the criminal's hands were tied. The punishment was of three degrees of severity: (1) The furca ignominiosa; (2) the furca penālis; and (3) the furca capitālis. The first was for slight offences, and consisted in carrying the furca on the shoulders, more or less weighted. The second consisted in carrying the furca and being scourged. The third was being scourged to death. The word furcifer meant what we call a gallows-bird or vile fellow.

The Caudine Forks. See CAUDINE.

Forlorn Hope. This phrase is the Dutch verloren hoop, the lost squad or troop, and is due to a misunderstanding, as the words are not connected with our forlorn or hope. The French equivalent is enfants perdus, the lost ones. The forlorn hope was originally a picked body of men sent in front to begin an attack; thus Cromwell says, "Our forlorn of horse marched within a mile of the enemy," i.e. our horse picket sent forward to reconnoitre approached within a mile of the enemy's camp. It is now usually applied to a body of men specially selected for some desperate or very dangerous enterprise.

Form. Good or bad form is conformity—or otherwise—with the unwritten laws and conventionalities of society.

We'll eat the dinner and have a dance together, or we shall transgress all form.—STEELE: Tender Husband, v. 1.

Forma pauperis (fôr' ma paw' pēr is) (Lat., plea of poverty). To sue in forma pauperis. When a person has just cause of a suit, but is so poor that he cannot raise the money necessary to enter it, the judge will assign him lawyers and counsel without the usual fees.

Fortiter in re (fört' i tēr in rē) (Lat.). Firmness in doing what is to be done; an unflinching resolution to persevere to the end. See SUAVITER IN MODO.

Fortunatus (fôr tū nă' tūs). A hero of mediæval legend (from Eastern sources) who possessed an inexhaustible purse, a wishing cap, etc. He appears in a German Volksbuch of 1509, Hans Sachs dramatized the story in 1553, and at Christmas, 1599, Dekker's Pleasant Comedy of Old Fortunatus was played before Queen Elizabeth.

You have found Fortunatus's purse. Are in luck's way.

Fortune. Fortune favours the brave. The expression is found in Terence—Fortes fortuna adjuvat (Phormio, i, 4); also in Virgil—Audentes fortuna iuvat (Æn. x, 284), and many other classic writers.

Fortunate Islands. An ancient name for the Canary Islands; also, for any imaginary lands set in, distant seas, like the "Islands of the Blest."

Their place of birth alone is mute
To sounds that echo farther west
Than your sire's Islands of the Blest.
BYRON: The Isles of Greece (Don Juan, iii).

Forty. A number of frequent occurrence in Scripture, and hence formerly treated as, in a manner, sacrosanct. Moses was forty days in the mount; Elijah was forty days fed by ravens; the rain of the flood fell forty days, and another forty days expired before Noah opened the window of the ark; forty days was the period of embalming; Nineveh had forty days to repent; Our Lord fasted forty days; He was seen forty days after His resurrection, etc.

St. Swithin betokens forty days' rain or dry weather; a quarantine extends to forty days; forty days, in the Old English law, was the limit for the payment of the fine for manslaughter; the privilege of sanctuary was for forty days; the widow was allowed to remain in her husband's house for forty days after his decease; a knight enjoined forty days' service of his tenant; a stranger, at the expiration of forty days, was compelled to be enrolled in some tithing; Members of Parliament were protected from arrest forty days after the prorogation of the House, and forty days before the House was convened; a new-made burgess had to forfeit forty pence unless he built a house within forty days, etc. etc.

Fool or physician at forty. See FOOL.

Forty stripes save one. The Jews were forbidden by the Mosaic law to inflict more than forty stripes on an offender, and for fear of breaking the law they stopped short of the number. If the scourge contained three lashes, thirteen strokes would equal "forty save one."

The Thirty-nine Articles of the Anglican Church used sometimes to be called "the forty stripes save one" by theological students.

Forty winks. A short nap.

The Forty Immortals (or simply the Forty). The members of the French Academy, who number forty.

The Hungry Forties. See HUNGRY.

The roaring forties. The Atlantic Ocean between 40° and 50° north latitude; well known for its rough and stormy character.

Forty-five, The. The name given to the rebellion of 1745 led by Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender. On July 25th, accompanied by seven followers, he landed in Scotland and raised the banner of his father, "James III.," the Old Pretender. A large army of clansmen gathered round him, he defeated Sir John Cope at Preston Pans (Sept. 20th) and began his march down into England. On December 4th the Young Pretender reached Derby, but the massing forces of Wade and Cumberland obliged him to retreat to Scotland where, on April 16th, he was utterly defeated on Culloden Moor by the Duke of Cumberland.

"Number 45" is the celebrated number of Wilkes's North Briton (April 23rd, 1763), in which Cabinet Ministers were accused of putting a lie into the king's mouth.

Forty-niners. Prospectors for gold, who rushed to California following the discovery of gold there in 1848. Best remembered to-day, perhaps, in the song Clementine.

Forty-two Line Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Forwards, Marshal. Blücher (1742-1819) was called Marschall Vorwärts, from his constant exhortation to his soldiers in the campaigns preceding Waterloo. Vorwärts! always Vorwärts!

Fosse, The, or Fosse-way. One of the four principal highways made by the Romans in England. It leads from Axminster through Bath, Cirencester, Leicester, and Lincoln, and had a fosse or ditch on each side of it. Cp. ERMINE STREET.

Fossick. An old English verb used in Australia in the sense of "to search." In World War II it came widely into use in the British forces in an unfavourable sense—to fossick around was to move about aimlessly.

Fou. Scots expression for drunk. It is a variant of full.

The clachan yill had made me canty.

I was na fou, but just had plenty.

BURNS: Death and Dr. Hornbook.

Foul-weather Jack. Admiral John Byron (1723-86), said to have been as notorious for foul weather as Queen Victoria was for fine.

Fount of type. See FONT; LETTER; TYPE.

Fountain pen. This apparently modern invention is really of considerable antiquity. In the anonymous "Diary of a Journey to Paris in 1657-58" under date July 11th, 1657 there is reference to a man who "makes pens of silver in which he puts ink, which does not get dry, and without having to take any, one can write a half-quire of paper at a sitting." In 1721 there is an advertisement in a Welsh almanac, "Inkhorns. Fountain pens, the best sort of Holman's ink powder, and red and black led pencils."

Fountain of Youth. In popular folk-tales, a fountain supposed to possess the power of restoring youth. Expeditions were fitted out in search of it, and at one time it was supposed to be in one of the Bahama Islands.

Four. Four Freedoms. Franklin Roosevelt, during World War II, declared as one of the aims of the democratic nations that when the war was over all the peoples of earth might live in freedom from fear, and from want, and with freedom of speech and of worship.

The History of the Four Kings (Livre des Quatre Rois). A pack of cards. In a French pack the four kings are Charlemagne, David, Alexander, and Cæsar.

Four Letters, The. See TETRAGRAMMATON.

The Annals of the Four Masters is the name usually given to a collection of old Irish chronicles published in 1632-36 as Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland. The Four Masters (authors or compilers) were Michael O'Clery (1575-1643), Conaire his brother, his cousin Cucoigriche O'Clery (d. 1664), with Fearfeasa O'Mulconry.

Four Sons of Aymon. See AYMON.

Fourth dimension. The three dimensions of space universally recognized are length, breadth, and height; three in number because we can draw three lines, but no more, all at right angles to one another. A piece of line has only one dimension—length; a region of a surface has two—length and breadth; a solid body in space has three. After the mathematician has applied Algebra to Geometry he can increase the number of his variables without altering the character of his equations; and retaining for convenience his geometrical vocabulary he constructs what he calls an algebraic geometry of as many dimensions as he pleases. A four-dimensional body may be thought of as bearing the same relation to one in the three-dimensional space which we perceive as volume does to area, or area to length. The measurement of time introduces a fourth variable into everyday life; but to say that for that reason time is the fourth dimension of space, and is somehow at right angles to every line that we can draw is a confusion of language. It is safe to say that in mathematical operations time is sometimes found to be behaving very like a fourth spatial dimension.

Fourth Estate of the Realm. The daily Press. The most powerful of all, the others (see ESTATES) being the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. Burke, referring to the Reporters' Gallery, is credited with having said, "Yonder sits the Fourth Estate, more important than them all," but it does not appear in his published works.

Fourth of July. See INDEPENDENCE DAY.

Fourierism. A communistic system, so called from François Marie Charles Fourier (1772-1837), of Besançon. Population was to be grouped into "phalansteries," consisting each of 400 families or 1,800 individuals, who were to live in a common edifice, furnished with workshops, studios, and all sources of amusement. The several groups were at the same time to be associated together under a unitary government like the cantons of Switzerland or the United States. Only one language was to be admitted; all profits were to go to the common purse; talent and industry were to be rewarded; and no one was to be suffered to remain indigent, or without the enjoyment of certain luxuries and public amusement.

Fourteen, in its connexion with Henri IV and Louis XIV. The following are curious and strange coincidences:—

HENRI IV:

14 letters in the name Henri-de-Bourbon. He was the 14th king of France and Navarre on the extinction of the family of Navarre. He was born on Dec. 14, 1553, the sum of which year amounts to 14; he was assassinated on May 14, 1610; and lived 4 times 14 years, 14 weeks, and 4 times 14 days.

14 May, 1552, was born Marguerite de Valois his first wife.

14 May, 1588, the Parisians rose in revolt against him because he was a "heretic."

14 March, 1590, he won the great battle of Ivry.

14 May, 1590, was organized a grand ecclesiastical and military demonstration against him, which drove him from the faubourgs of Paris.

14 Nov., 1590, the Sixteen took an oath to die rather than submit to a "heretic" king.

It was Gregory XIV who issued a Bull excluding Henri from the throne.

14 Nov., 1592, the Paris parlement registered the papal Bull.

14 Dec., 1599, the Duke of Savoy was reconciled to Henri IV.

14 Sept., 1606, was baptized the dauphin (afterwards Louis XIII) son of Henri IV.

14 May, 1610, Henry was assassinated by Ravallac.

LOUIS XIV:

14th of the name. He mounted the throne 1643, the sum of which figures equals 14. He died 1715, the sum of which figures also equals 14. He reigned 77 years, the sum of which two figures equals 14. He was born 1638, died 1715, which added together equals 3353, the sum of which figure comes to 14.

Fourteen Hundred. The cry raised on the Stock Exchange to give notice that a stranger has entered the "House." The term is said to have been in use in Defoe's time, and to have originated at a time when for a considerable period the number of members had remained stationary at 1399.

Fourteen Points. Conditions laid down by President Woodrow Wilson (1856-1924) as those on which the Allies were prepared to make peace with Germany. He outlined them in a speech to Congress on January 11th, 1918, and at the end of the war they were accepted as the basis for the peace. They included the evacuation by Germany of all allied territory, the restoration of Poland, freedom of the seas, reduction of armaments, and open diplomacy.

Fowler, The. Henry I (876-936), son of Otto, Duke of Saxony, and King of Germany from 919 to 936, was, according to an 11th century tradition, so called because when the deputies announced to him his election to the throne, they found him fowling with a hawk on his fist.

Fox. As a name for the Old English broadsword fox probably refers to a maker's mark of a dog, wolf, or fox. The swords were manufactured by Julian del Rei of Toledo, whose trade-mark was a little dog, mistaken for a fox.

O signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.—Henry V, iv, 4

I had a sword, ay, the flower of Smithfield for a sword, a right fox i' faith.—PORTER: Two Angry Women of Abington (1599).

To fox. To steal or cheat; keep an eye on somebody without seeming so to do. A dog, a fox, and a weasel sleep, as they say, "with one eye open."

Foxed. A print or page of a book stained with reddish brown marks is said to be "foxed," because of its colour.

Foxed was also an expression widely used in military parlance during World War II for "bewildered."

Fox-hole. A small slit trench for one or more men.

A fox's sleep. A sleep with one eye. Assumed indifference to what is going on. See above.

A wise fox will never rob his neighbour's hen-roost. It would soon be found out, so he goes farther from home where he is not known.

Every fox must pay his skin to the furrier. The crafty shall be taken in their own williness.

I gave him a flap with a fox-tail. I cajoled him; made a fool of him. The fox-tail was one of the badges of the motley, and to flap with a fox-tail is to treat one like a fool.

Reynard the Fox. See REYNARD.

The fox and the grapes. "It's a case of the fox and the grapes" is said of one who wants something badly but cannot obtain it, and so tries to create the impression that he doesn't want it at all. The allusion is to one of Æsop's fables. See GRAPES.

The Old Fox. Marshal Soult (1769-1851) was so nicknamed, from his strategic talents and fertility of resources.

To set a fox to keep the geese (Lat. Ovem lupo committere). Said of one who entrusts his money to sharpers.

Fox-fire. The phosphoric light, without heat, which plays round decaying matter. It is the Fr. faux, or "false fire," and was first found in 1485.

Foxglove. The flower is named from the animal and the glove. The reason for the second half is obvious from the finger-stall appearance of the flower, but it is not known how the fox came to be associated with it. It belongs to the botanical genus Digitalis, or finger-shaped. The leaves of this genus contain several powerful principles which are highly valuable in the treatment of heart disease.

Fox-trot. A modern ball-room dance. It was introduced from America in the first half of the 20th century. A horse's fox-trot is the short steps it takes when changing from a trot to a walk.

Fra Diavolo (fra dē av' ō lō). Auber's opera of this name (1830) is founded on the exploits of Michele Pozza (1760-1806), a celebrated brigand and renegade monk, who evaded pursuit for many years amidst the mountains of Calabria.

France. See FRANK.

Francesca da Rimini (frān ches' kā da rim' i nī). Daughter of Guido da Polenta, Lord of Ravenna. Her story is told in Dante's Inferno (canto v). She was married to Giovanni Malatesta, Lord of Rimini, but her guilty love for his younger brother, Paolo, was discovered, and both were put to death by him about 1289. Stephen Phillips has a play (1900), and Silvio Pellico a tragedy, on the subject.

Franche Comté. Territory in upper Burgundy, which was made a county in 915 by Hugh the Black. It got its name of the free county by being taken from Reynaud III (1127-48) and later restored to him.

Franciscans (frān sis' kānz). The friars minor founded by St. Francis of Assisi in 1209. They form one Order of Friars Minor, divided into three distinct and independent branches, of which one is known simply as Friars Minor, another as Friars Minor Conventual and the third as Friars Minor Capuchin. The Order had 64 houses in England at the time of the Reformation, being known as Grey Friars, from the indeterminate colour of their habit; which is now brown. The Friars Minor observe the unmitigated rule of St. Francis, with its insistence on poverty, abstinence, and preaching; Friars Minor Conventual have a modified rule with regard to the holding of property, and wear a black tunic with a white cord. The Capuchins, initiated in 1525, have the strictest rules of any, subsisting largely on the begging of the lay brothers. The Recollects, or Cordeliers, and Observants were formerly divisions of the Order, and were amalgamated with the Friars Minor by Leo XIII in 1897.

The Order of Franciscan Nuns was founded in 1212 by St. Clare; they are hence known as the Clares or Poor Clares; also Minoreesses. Various reformations have taken place in the Order, giving rise to the Colettines, Grey Sisters, Capuchin Nuns, Sisters of the Annunciation, Conceptionists, and the Urbanists, the last named observing a modified rule and being permitted to hold property.

Frangipane, frangipani (frän' ji pän, frän ji pa' ni). The name is supposed to come from the Marquis Frangipani, a soldier under Louis XIV. It is applied to a kind of pastry cake filled with cream, almonds, and sugar; also to a perfume made from, or imitating the smell of, the flower of a West Indian tree Plumeria rubra, or red jasmine.

Frangipani pudding. Pudding made of broken bread (Lat. frangere, to break; panis, bread).

Frank. One belonging to the Teutonic nations that conquered Gaul in the 6th century (whence the name France). By the Turks, Arabs, etc., of the Levant the name is given to any of the inhabitants of the western parts of Europe, as the English, Germans, Spaniards, French, etc.

Frankalmoin, frankalmoigne (frängk' älmoin) is an old legal term composed of frank, free, and almoin, an alms-chest, or alms. The term was applied to land held by religious bodies in perpetuity free of all encumbrances or dues on condition that the religious and their successors prayed for the soul of the donor.

Frankelin's Tale (Chaucer). See DORIGEN.

Frankenstein (frängk' ên stîn). The young student in Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley's romance of that name (1818). He made a soulless monster out of corpses from churchyards and dissecting-rooms, and ended it with life by galvanism. The tale shows how the creature longed for sympathy, but was shunned by everyone and became the instrument of dreadful retribution on the student who usurped the prerogative of the Creator.

Frankfurter. A small smoked sausage of beef and pork, somewhat akin to the saveloy.

Frankincense (frängk' in sens). The literal meaning of this is pure, or true incense. It is a fragrant gum exuded from several trees of the genus Boswellia, abundant on the Somali coast and in South Arabia. The ceremonial use of frankincense was practised by the Egyptians, Persians, Babylonians, Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, and the gum is an ingredient of modern incense used liturgically.

Frank-pledge. The system by which, in Anglo-Saxon times, the freemen in a tithing were pledged for each other's good behaviour. Hallam says every ten men in a village were answerable for each other, and if one of them committed an offence the other nine were bound to make reparation, or to see that it was made.

Frater (frä' ter). The refectory or dining-room of a monastery, where the brothers (Lat. fratres) met together for meals. Also called the fratry.

In old vagabonds' slang a frater was much the same as an Abram-man (q.v.).

A Frater goeth wyth a Liscence to beg for some Spittlehouse or Hospital. Their pray is comonly upon poore women as they go and come to the markets.—AWDELEY: Fraternity of Yacabondes (1575).

Frateretto (frät' êr et' ô). A fiend mentioned by Edgar in King Lear; this is another of the names that Shakespeare obtained from Harsnet's Declaration. See FLIBBERTIGIBBET.

Frateretto calls me, and tells me Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware of the foul fiend.—King Lear iii, 6.

Fraternization in war-time parlance means soldiers occupying an enemy country holding communication with the civil inhabitants.

Fraticelli (frät' ichel' ê) (Little Brethren). A sect of renegade and licentious monks which appeared about the close of the 13th century and threw off all subjection to the Pope, whom they denounced as an apostate. They had wholly disappeared by the 15th century.

Frazzle (U.S.A.). A frayed edge, hence worn to a frazzle, reduced to a state of nervousness.

Frea. See FREYA.

Free. A free and easy. A social gathering where persons meet together without formality to chat and smoke. In a free and easy way, with an entire absence of ceremony.

A free fight. A fight in which all engage, rules being disregarded.

Free on board. Said of goods delivered on board ship, or into the conveyance, at the seller's expense; generally contracted to F.O.B.

I'm free to confess. There's nothing to prevent me admitting. . . .

To have a free hand. See HAND.

To make free with. To take liberties with; to treat whatever it is as one's own.

Free Bench (francus bancus). A legal term denoting a widow's right to a copyhold in certain English manors. It is not a dower or gift, but a free right independent of the will of the husband. Called bench because, upon acceding to the estate, she becomes a tenant of the manor, and entitled to sit on the bench at manorial courts.

Free coup (in Scotland) means a piece of waste land where rubbish may be deposited free of charge; also the right of doing so.

Free French. See FIGHTING FRENCH.

Free lance. See LANCE.

Free Trade. The system by which goods are allowed to enter one country from another country without paying customs duty for the protection of home producers. For many years it was held that the prosperity of Britain depended upon leaving the ports open to the shipping and goods of all the world. In 1932 Great Britain abandoned Free Trade by imposing a general tariff on imported goods.

The Apostle of Free Trade. Richard Cobden (1804-65), who established the Anti-Corn Law League in 1838.

Freebooter. A pirate, an adventurer who makes his living by plundering; literally, one who obtains his booty free (Dut. vrij, free, boot, booty).

Freehold. An estate held in fee-simple or fee-tail; one on which no duty or service is owing to any lord but the sovereign. Cp. COPYHOLD.

Freeman, Mrs. The name assumed by the Duchess of Marlborough in her correspondence with Queen Anne. The queen called herself Mrs. Morley.

Freeman of Bucks. A cuckold. The allusion is to the buck's horn. See HORNS.

Freemasonry. In its curious and characteristic ritual Freemasonry traces its origins to the building of Solomon's Temple. Without accepting or rejecting this theory, however, it can be taken as a fact that it has existed for many centuries as a secret society. In mediæval days operative, i.e. actual stone-masons, banded together with secret pass-words, signs and tests, and Masonic students find material for research in the marks engraved on fashioned stones in cathedrals and certain ancient buildings. Freemasonry as we know it was already flourishing in the 17th century, and although Sir Christopher Wren's association with the Craft has not been established, it is likely. Elias Ashmole describes his own initiation in 1682. The mother Grand Lodge of England was founded in London in 1717 and took under its aegis the many small lodges that were working up and down the country. Even the extremely ancient York lodge, which has given its name to most of the Masonic rites of the Continent and U.S.A., acknowledged its authority. From this first Grand Lodge of England derive all Masonic lodges of whatever kind throughout the world.

In Britain Masonry has three degrees, the first is called Entered Apprentice; the second, Fellow Craft, the third, Master Mason. Royal Arch masonry is an adjunct to these, and is peculiar to Britain. Mark Masonry is a comparatively modern addition to the fraternity. In the U.S.A. the first regular lodge was founded at Boston in 1733, though there are minutes extant of a lodge in Philadelphia in 1730. The ritual side of Freemasonry has appealed to American more than it has to British masons, and many degrees are worked in U.S.A. with elaborate ritual and mysteries. In addition to the three degrees of British masonry there are the Cryptic Degrees of Royal and Select Masters; the Chivalric Rite, with three degrees of Knights Red Cross, Temple and of Malta; and the 33 degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. The various Grand Orients of the Continent (all disowned by the Grand Lodge of England on account of their political activities) were founded at different times and work modifications of the Scottish Rite. The part played by masonic lodges in the French Revolution is still obscure; Philippe Egalité was head of the Grand Orient but repudiated it during the Terror. Napoleon was reported to have been initiated at Malta in 1798; he certainly favoured masonry and during the Empire Cambacérès, Murat, and Joseph Bonaparte were successive Grand Masters. Freemasonry has been condemned by the Holy See not only for being a secret society but for its alleged subversive aims—aims that may be cherished by Continental Masons but which are quite unknown to their British and American brethren.

The Lady Freemason. Women are not admitted into freemasonry, but the story goes that a lady was initiated in the early 18th century. She was the Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger, daughter of Lord Doneraile, who hid herself in an empty clock-case when the lodge was held in her father's house, and witnessed the proceedings. She was discovered, and compelled to submit to initiation as a member of the craft.

Freezing-point. The temperature at which a liquid becomes solid; if mentioned without qualification, 32° Fahrenheit (0° Centigrade), the freezing-point of water is meant. For other liquids the name is added as the freezing-point of milk, sulphuric ether, quicksilver, and so on. In Centigrade and Réaumur's instruments zero marks the freezing-point. The zero of Fahrenheit's thermometer is 32° below the freezing-point of water, being the lowest temperature observed by him in the winter of 1709.

Freischutz (fri' shutz) (the free-shooter). A legendary German archer in league with the devil, who gave him seven balls, six of which were to hit infallibly whatever the marksman aimed at, and the seventh was to be directed as the devil wished. F. Kind wrote the libretto, and Weber set to music, the opera based on the legend, called Der Freischutz (1820).

French. French Cream. Brandy; from the custom (which came from France) of taking a cup of coffee with brandy in it instead of cream after dinner.

To take French leave. To take without asking leave or giving any equivalent; also, to leave a party, house, or neighbourhood without bidding good-bye to anyone; to slip away unnoticed. This kind of backhanded compliment to our neighbours used to be very common (cp. "French gout" for venereal disease), and many objectionable things or practices have been called "French."

It is only fair to say that the French have returned the compliment in many ways. The equivalent of "to take French leave" is S'en aller (or filer) à l'anglaise; in the 16th century a creditor used to be called un Anglais, a term used by Clement Marot.

French of Stratford at Bow. This has been taken to mean French as spoken by an Englishman, and a Cockney at that, but it has no such ironical connotation. Stratford and Bromley were fashionable suburbs in those days, and at Bromley was the convent of St. Leonard's where the daughters of well-to-do citizens and others were taught French by the nuns. French was a common acquirement of the time and freely used at Court and in society; but it was a somewhat archaic French, descending from Norman days, and not such as was current in Paris.

And French, she [the nun] spak ful faire and fetisly,

After the scole of Stratford atte Bowe,

For French of Paris was to hir unknowe.

CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales; Prologue, 124.

Frenchman. Nicknames of a Frenchman are "Crapaud" (q.v.), "Jean," "Mossoo," "Robert Macaire" (q.v.); but of a Parisian "Grenouille" (frog).

French Canadian, "Jean Baptiste."

French peasantry, "Jacques Bonhomme."

Done like a Frenchman, turn and turn again (1 Henry VI, iii, 4). The French were frequently ridiculed as a fickle, wavering nation. Dr. Johnson says he once read a treatise the object of which was to show that a weathercock is a satire on the word Gallus (a Gaul or cock).

Fresco (fres' kō). A method of painting upon fresh mortar. The plaster must be fresh to absorb the colour, and since it dries rapidly, the artist must work with great dexterity and speed. The wall must be free of saltpetre, and only such colours can be used as are not affected by lime—many brilliant greens, reds and yellow being thus ruled out. Frescoes should not be confused with wall paintings such as Leonardo's famous Last Supper at Santa Maria delle Grazie, Milan.

Freshman. An undergraduate of a university in his first term.

Freyja (frá' yá). In Scandinavian mythology the sister of Freyr and wife of Odin, who deserted her because she loved finery better than her husband. She is the fairest of the goddesses, goddess of love and also of the dead. She presides over marriages, and, besides being the Venus, may be called the Juno of Asgard. She is also known as Frea, Frija, Frigg, Frige, etc., and it is from her that our Friday is named.

Friar (Lat. frater, a brother). A religious, especially one belonging to one of the four great orders, i.e. Franciscans, Dominicans, Augustinians, and Carmelites. See these names.

In printer's slang a friar is a part of the sheet which has failed to receive the ink properly, and is therefore paler than the rest. As Caxton set up his press in Westminster Abbey, it is but natural that monks and friars should give foundation to some of the printer's slang. Cp. MONK.

Curtal Friar. See CURTAL.

Friar Bungay (būng' gā). A famous necromancer of the 15th century, whose story is much overlaid with legend. It is said that he "raised mists and vapours which befriended Edward IV at the battle of Barnet." In the old prose romance, The Famous History of Friar Bacon, and in Greene's Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (acted 1591), he appears as the assistant to Roger Bacon (d. 1292).

Friar John. A prominent character in Rabelais's Gargantua and Pantagruel, a tall, lean, wide-mouthed, long-nosed friar of Seville.

In the original he is called "Friar John des Entommeures": Urquhart mistakenly translated this as "of the Funnels"; "of the Trenchermen" is the best equivalent (entamer, to broach, to carve, with reference to a hearty appetite). Entommoirs are "funnels"; and as this word has been used as slang for the throat perhaps that accounts for the mistake.

Friar Rush. A legendary house-spirit who originated as a kind of ultra-mischievous and evil-dispositioned Robin Goodfellow in mediæval German folk-tales. A prose History of Friar Rush appeared in English as early as 1568, and in 1601 Henslowe records a comedy (now lost), Friar Rush and the Proud Woman of Antwerp, by Day and Houghton.

Friar Tuck. Chaplain and steward of Robin Hood.

In this our spacious isle I think there is not one
But he hath heard some talk of Hood and Little John;
Of Tuck, the merry friar, which many a sermon made
In praise of Robin Hood, his outlaws, and their trade
DRAYTON: Polyolbion, xxvi, 311-16.

Friar's Heel. The outstanding upright stone at Stonehenge, formerly supposed by some to stand in the central axis of the avenue, is so called. Geoffrey of Monmouth says the devil bought the stones of an old woman in Ireland, wrapped them up in a wyth, and brought them to Salisbury Plain. Just before he got to Mount Ambre the wyth broke, and one of the stones fell into the Avon, the rest were carried to the plain. After the fiend had fixed them in the ground, he cried out, "No man will ever find out how these stones came here." A friar replied, "That's more than thou canst tell," whereupon the foul fiend threw one of the stones at him and struck him on the heel. The stone stuck in the ground and remains so to the present hour.

Friar's Lantern. One of the many names given to the Will o' the Wisp, Friars Major (Fratres majores). The Dominicans.

Friars Minor (Fratres minores). The Franciscans.

Friar's Tale. In the Canterbury Tales a tale throwing discredit on Summoners. Chaucer obtained it from the Latin collection, Promptuarium Exemplorum.

Friday. The sixth day of the week was the dies Veneris in ancient Rome, i.e. the day dedicated to Venus. The northern nations adopted the Roman system of nomenclature, and the sixth day was dedicated to their nearest equivalent to Venus, who was Frigg or Freyja (q.v.); hence the name Friday (A.S. frige-dæg). In France the Latin name was kept, and Friday is Vendredi.

Friday was regarded by the Norsemen as the luckiest day of the week: among Christians generally it has been regarded as the unluckiest, because it was the day of Our Lord's crucifixion, and is a fast-day in the Catholic Church. Mohammedans (among whom Friday is the Sabbath) say that Adam was created on a Friday, and legend has it that it was on a Friday that Adam and Eve ate the forbidden fruit, and on a Friday that they died. Among the Buddhists and Brahmins it is also held to be unlucky; and the old Romans called it nefastus, from the utter overthrow of their army at Gallia Narbonensis. In England the proverb is that "a Friday moon brings foul weather," but it is not, apparently, unlucky to be born on this day, for, according to the old rhyme, "Friday's child is loving and giving."

Black Friday. See BLACK.

Good Friday. See GOOD.

He who laughs on Friday will weep on Sunday. Sorrow follows in the wake of joy. The line is taken from Racine's comedy, Les Plaideurs.

Long Friday. Good Friday was so called by the Saxons, probably because of the long fasts and offices used on that day.

Man Friday. The young savage found by Robinson Crusoe on a Friday, and kept as his servant and companion on the desert island; hence, a faithful and willing attendant, ready to turn his hand to anything.

Never cut your nails on a Friday. "Cut them on Friday you cut them for sorrow." See NAIL-PARING.

Friend. A Quaker (q.v.), i.e. a member of the Society of Friends; also, one's second in a duel, as "Captain B. acted as his friend." In the law courts counsel refer to each other as "my learned friend," though they may be entire strangers, just as in the House of Commons one member speaks of another as "my honourable friend."

A friend at court. Properly, a friend in a court of law who watches the trial and tells the judge if he can discover an error (See AMICUS CURIAE). The term is generally applied to a friend who is in a position to help one by influencing those in power.

A friend in need is a friend indeed. The Latin saying (from Ennius) is, Amicus certus in re incerta cernitur, a sure friend is made known when (one is) in difficulty.

A friendly suit, or action. An action at law brought, not with the object of obtaining a conviction or damages, but to discover the law on some debatable point, to get a legal and authoritative decision putting some fact on record.

Better kinde frend than fremd kinde. This is the motto of the Waterton family, and it means "better kind friend (i.e. neighbour) than a kinsman who dwells in foreign parts" (cp. Prov. xxvii, 10, "Better is a neighbour that is near, than a brother far off"). Fremd is an Old English word (from Old Teutonic) meaning foreign, strange, outlandish.

The Friend of Man. The name given to the Marquis de Mirabeau (1715-89), father of Mirabeau, the French revolutionary orator. His great work was L'Ami des Hommes, hence the nickname.

The soldier's friend. An official appointed by the authorities at the various pension boards to assist soldiers in making out and presenting their claims to pensions, etc.

Friendship. The classical examples of lasting friendship between man and man are Achilles and Patroclus, Pylades and Orestes, Damon and Pythias, and Nisus and Euryalus. See these names. To these should be added David and Jonathan.

Frigg, or Frigga. See FREYJA.

Frills. "Airs and graces"; as, to put on frills, to give oneself airs.

Fringe. The fringes on the garments of the Jewish priests were accounted sacred, and were touched by the common people as a charm. Hence the desire of the woman who had the issue of blood to touch the fringe of Our Lord's garment. (Matt. ix, 20-22.)

Frippery. Rubbish of a tawdry character; worthless finery; foolish levity. A friperer or fripperer was one who dealt in old clothes (cp. Fr. friperie, old clothes, cast-off furniture, etc.).

Old clothes, cast dresses, tattered rags.

Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit.

BEN JONSON: Epig. I, lvi.

Also, a shop where odds and ends, old clothes, and so on are dealt in. Hence Shakespeare's:—

We know what belongs to a frippery.

Tempest, iv, i.

Frith. By frith and fell. By wold and wild, wood and common. Frith means ground covered with scrub or underwood; fell is a common.

Frithiof (frit' vof). A hero of Icelandic myth who married Ingeborg, daughter of a petty king of Norway, and widow of Hring, to whose dominions he succeeded. His adventures are recorded in the saga which bears his name, and which was written about the close of the 13th century. The name signifies "the peace-maker."

Fritz. Frederick the Great of Prussia (1712, 1740-86) was known as Old Fritz. In World War I the men in the trenches commonly hailed any prisoner or German in the enemy lines as Fritz.

Froebel (frer' bël). The name given to a system of teaching young children devised by F. W. A. Froebel (1782-1852), a German schoolmaster. The main part of his system has been put into practice in kindergartens where children's senses are developed by means of clay-modelling, work with colour-brushes, mat-plaiting, etc., as well as the care of animals, flowers, and suchlike.

Frog. A frog and mouse agreed to settle by single combat their claims to a marsh; but, while they fought, a kite carried them both off. (Æsop: Fables, clxviii.)

Old Æsop's fable, where he told

What fate unto the mouse and frog befel.

CARY: Dante, cxliii.

In Ovid's Metamorphoses (vi, 4) we are told that the Lycian shepherds were changed into frogs for mocking Latona.

As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs

Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny.

Frenchmen, properly Parisians, have been nicknamed Frogs or Froggies (grenouilles) from their ancient heraldic device (see FLEUR-DE-LIS), which was three frogs or three toads. Qu'en disent les grenouilles?—What do the frogs (people of Paris) say?—was in 1791 a common court phrase at Versailles. There was a point in the pleasantry when Paris was a quagmire, called Lutetia (mud-land). See CRAPAUD. Further point is given to the nickname by the fact that the back legs of the edible frog (Rana esculenta) form a delicacy in French cuisine that awakened much contemptuous humour in the less exquisite English.

Frogmen. In World War II strong swimmers dressed in rubber suits with paddles on their feet resembling frogs legs, who entered enemy harbours by night and attached explosives to shipping and installations. Since the war they have sometimes been used in salvage operations.

Frog's march. Carrying an obstreperous prisoner, face downwards, by his four limbs.

It may be fun to you, but it is death to the frogs. A caution, telling one that one's sport should not be at the expense of other people's happiness. The allusion is to Æsop's fable of a boy stoning frogs for his amusement.

Nic Frog. The Dutchman in Arbuthnot's History of John Bull (1712). Frogs are called "Dutch nightingales."

A frog in the throat. A temporary loss of voice.

Fronde (frond). A political party during the ministry of Cardinal Mazarin, in the minority of Louis XIV (1648-53). Its members, who were opposed to the court party, were called Frondeurs from fronde, a sling, they being likened to boys who sling stones about the streets and scamper away the moment anyone in authority approaches.

Frost Saints. See ICE SAINTS.

Frozen Words. Everyone knows the incident of the "frozen horn" related by Munchausen, also how Pantagruel and his friends, on the confines of the Frozen Sea, heard the uproar of a battle, which had been frozen the preceding winter, released by a thaw (Rabelais: Bk. iv, ch. 56). The joke appears to have been well known to the ancient Greeks, for Antiphanes applies it to the discourses of Plato: "As the cold of certain cities is so intense that it freezes the very words we utter, which remain congealed till the heat of summer thaws them, so the mind of youth is so thoughtless that the wisdom of Plato lies there frozen, as it were, till it is thawed by the ripened judgment of mature age" (Plutarch's Morals).
Truth in person doth appear
Like words congealed in northern air.

BUTLER: Hudbras, Pt. i, l, lines 147-8.

Frying-pan. Out of the frying-pan into the fire. In trying to extricate yourself from one evil, you fall into a greater. The Greeks used to say, "Out of the smoke into the flame"; and the French say, "Tomber de la poêle dans la braise."

Frying-pan brand. An Australian term of the mid-19th century to describe the large brand superimposed by cattle thieves to blot out the rightful owner's brand.

Fub. To hoax, impose upon, swindle. "You are trying to fub me off with a cock-and-bull story." Connected with Ger. foppen, to hoax. Fob is another form of the same word.

Fuchsia (fū' shā). A genus of highly ornamental shrubs coming from Mexico and the Andes, though two species are found in New Zealand. They were so named in 1703, in honour of the German botanist Leonhard Fuchs (1501-66). The best-known varieties in this country are derived from the Chilean species Fuchsia macrostemma.

Fudge. A word of contempt bestowed on one who says what is absurd or untrue. A favourite expression of Mr. Burchell in the Vicar of Wakefield.

A sort of soft candy is known as fudge.

Fudge-box. An attachment on newspaper printing machines to allow of late news being added on the machine while running. This news appears in the "Stop-press" column, which is, consequently, called the fudge-box. In this sense the word is another form of fudge (q.v.).

Fuel. Adding fuel to fire. Saying or doing something to increase the anger of a person already angry.

Fugger (fug' ěr). A noted family of German merchant-bankers, famous in the 15th and 16th centuries and proverbial for their great wealth, their news-letter, and fine library. "Rich as a Fugger" is common in Elizabethan dramatists. Charles V introduced some of the family into Spain, where they superintended the mines.

I am neither an Indian merchant, nor yet a Fugger, but a poor boy like yourself.—Guzman de Alfarache (1599).

Fugleman. Originally a leader of a wing (Ger. flügel, wing) or file; now applied to a soldier who stands in front of men at drill to show them what to do.

Führer (fū' rër). The title, meaning in German "leader," assumed by Adolf Hitler when he acceded to the supreme power in Germany on the death of Hindenburg in 1934.

Fulhams, or Fullams. An Elizabethan name for loaded dice. Dice made with a cavity were called gourds; those made to throw the high numbers were high fullams or gourds, and those made to throw the low numbers were low fullams or gourds.

For gourd and fullam holds
And "high" and "low" beguile the rich and poor.
Merry Wives of Windsor, i, 3.

Have their fulhams at command,
Brought up to do their feats at hand.

BUTLER: Upon Gaming.

The name was probably from Fulham, which was notorious as the resort of crooks and rogues of every description.

Full. Full dress. The dress worn on occasions of ceremony; court dress, uniform, academics, evening dress, etc., as the case may be. A full-dress debate is one for which preparation and arrangements have been made, as opposed to one arising casually.

Full house. A term in the game of poker for a hand holding three of one kind and two of another, e.g. 3 tens and 2 sixes.

Full moon, or the full of the moon. The period when the whole disk of the moon is illuminated and it presents a perfect orb to the earth.

Full of beans. See BEAN.

Full up. Quite full, occupied to its utmost capacity. Said also of one who is drunk. Cp. Fou.

In full cry. Said of hounds that have caught the scent, and give tongue in chorus; hence, hurrying in full pursuit.

In full fig. See FIG.

In full swing. Fully at work; very busy; in full operation.

Fum, or Fung-hwang. The phoenix (q.v.) of Chinese legend, one of the four symbolical animals presiding over the destinies of China.

It originated from fire, was born in the Hill of the Sun's Halo, and has its body inscribed with the five cardinal virtues. It is this curious creature that is embroidered on the dresses of certain mandarins.

Fum. See GEORGE, ST.

Fumage. Another name for Hearth-money or Chimney-money (q.v.) (Lat. fumus, smoke).

Fume. In a fume. In ill temper, especially from impatience.

Fun. To make fun of. To make a butt of; to ridicule; to play pranks on one.

Like fun. Thoroughly, energetically, with delight.

On'y look at the dimmercrats, see what they've done, Jest simply by stickin' together like fun.

LOWELL: Biglow Papers (First series, iv, st. 5).

Fun. The Funds, or The Public Funds. Money lent at interest to Government on Government security.

The sinking fund. Money set aside by the Government for paying off a part of the national debt. This money is "sunk," or withdrawn from circulation, for the bonds purchased by it are destroyed.

To be out of funds, out of money.

Fundamentalism. A religious movement that arose in U.S.A. about 1919. It opposed all theories of evolution and anthropology, teaching that God transcends all the laws of nature, and that He manifests Himself by exceptional and extraordinary activities. Belief in the literal meaning of the Scriptures is an essential tenet. In 1925 a professor of science was convicted of violating the State laws of Tennessee by teaching evolution, and this incident aroused interest and controversy far beyond the religious circles of U.S.A. The Fundamentalist attitude was largely set forth by William Jennings Bryan, who insisted that the theory of evolution was a denial of Bible teaching and hence a doctrine inimical to Christianity.

Funeral (Late Lat. funeralis, adj. from funus, a burial). Funus is connected with fumus (Sanskrit dhu-mas), smoke, and the word seems to have referred to the ancient practice of disposing of the dead by cremation. Funerals among the Romans took place at night by torchlight, that magistrates and priests might not be made ceremonially unclean by seeing a corpse, and so be prevented from performing their sacred duties.

Most of our funeral customs are derived from the Romans; as dressing in black, walking in procession, carrying insignia on the bier, raising a mound over the grave, called tumulus (whence our tomb), etc. In Roman funerals, too, the undertaker, attended by lictors dressed in black, marched with the corpse, and, as master of the ceremonies, assigned to each follower his proper place in the procession. The Greeks crowned the dead body with flowers, and placed flowers on the tomb also; and the Romans decked the funeral couch with leaves and flowers, and spread flowers, wreaths, and fillets on the tomb of friends. In England the Passing Bell or the Soul Bell used to be tolled from the parish church when a parishioner was dying, and there are many references to it in literature. At the funeral the bell would be tolled at intervals as many times as the dead person's age in years.

Public games were held both in Greece and Rome in honour of departed heroes. Examples of this custom are numerous; as the games instituted by Hercules at the death of Pelops, those held by Achilles in honour of Patroclus (Iliad, Bk. xxiii), those held by Æneas in honour of his father Anchises (Æneid, Bk. v), etc.; and the custom of giving a feast at funerals came to us from the Romans, who not only feasted the friends of the deceased, but also distributed meat to the persons employed.

Thrift thrift, Horatio! the funeral baked meats

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

Hamlet, i, 2.

Fung-hwang. See FUM.

Funk. To be in a funk, or a blue funk, may be the Walloon "In de fonk zun," literally to "be in the smoke." Colloquially to be in a state of trepidation from uncertainty or apprehension of evil. It first appeared in England at Oxford in the first half of the 18th century.

Funny Bone. A pun on the word humerus, the Latin (and hence scientific) name for the upper bone of the arm. It is the inner condyle of this, or, to speak untechnically, the knob, or enlarged end of the bone terminating where the ulnar nerve is exposed at the elbow. A knock on this bone at the elbow produces a painful sensation.

Furbelow. A corruption of falbalas (q.v.).

Furcam et Flagellum (fēr' kām et flā jel' ūm) (Lat., gallows and whip). The meanest of all servile tenures, the bondman being at the lord's mercy, both life and limb. Cp. FORKS.

Furies, The. The Roman name (Furie) for the Greek Erinyes (q.v.), said by Hesiod to have been the daughters of Ge (the earth) and to have sprung from the blood of Uranus, and by other accounts to be daughters of night and darkness. They were three in number, Tisiphone (the Avenger of blood), Alecto (Implacable), and Megæra (Disputatious).

The Furies of the Guillotine. Another name for the tricoteuses (q.v.).

Furphy. In World War I latrine buckets were supplied to the Australian forces by the firm of Furphy & Co., whose name appeared on all their products. Hence a "furphy" was a latrine rumour.

Furry Dance (fū' ri). An ancient ceremony of Helston and other Cornish towns, held on May 8th, locally known as Flora's Day. Couples dance through the streets and houses to a tune of immemorial antiquity, probably coeval with the dance, which may be of Druidic origin.

Fusiliers. Foot-soldiers that used to be armed with fusils or light muskets.

The Royal English Fusiliers, the first regiment using the name, was raised in 1685.

Fustian (fūs' chān). A coarse twilled cotton cloth with a velvety pile, probably so called from Fustat, a suburb of Cairo.

It is chiefly used now in its figurative sense meaning inflated or pompous talk, claptrap, bombast (q.v.), pretentious words.

Discourse fustian with one's own shadow.—Othello, ii, 3.

Some scurvy quaint collection of fustian phrases, and uplandish words.—HEYWOOD: Faire Maide of the Exchange, ii, 2.

Futhorc (fu' thôrk). The ancient Runic alphabet of the Anglo-Saxons and other Teutons; so called, on the same principle as the A B C, from its first six letters, viz., f, u, th, o, r, k.

Futurism. An art movement which originated in Turin in 1910 under the influence of F. T. Marinetti. Its adherents sought to introduce into painting a "poetry of motion" whereby, for example, the painted gesture should become actually "a dynamic condition." The Futurists tried to indicate not only the state of mind of the painter but also that of the figures in the picture. The original Futurists included Marinetti, Boccioni, Carra, Russolo, and Severini. Their first exhibitions were held in Paris, 1911, and London, 1912.

Fylfot. A mystic sign or emblem, known also as the swastika and gammadion, and in heraldry as the cross cramponée, used (especially in Byzantine architecture and among the North American Indians) as an ornament, and as of religious import. It has been found at Hissarlik, on ancient Etruscan tombs, Celtic monuments, Buddhist inscriptions, Greek coins, etc., and has been thought to have represented the power of the sun, of the four winds, of lightning, and so on. Its shape is that of a right-angled cross, the arms of which are of equal length, with an additional piece at the extremity of each, fixed at a right-angle, each addition being of the same length and in the same direction. It is used nowadays in jewellery as an emblem of luck.

The name fylfot was adopted by antiquaries from a MS. of the 15th century, and is probably fill foot, signifying a device to fill the foot of a stained window. See SWASTIKA.

G

G. This letter is a modification of the Latin C (which was a rounding of the Greek gamma, Γ); until the 3rd century B.C. the g and k sounds were represented by the same letter, C. In the Hebrew and old Phœnician alphabets G is the outline of a camel's head and neck. Heb. gimel, a camel.

G.C.B. See BATH.

G.I. In World War II, American enlisted men called themselves G.I.s. It is actually an abbreviation of Government Issue, a term attached to all their clothing, equipment, etc. After speaking for some time of G.I. shirts, G.I. blankets, and G.I. haircuts, the soldiers began to apply the term to themselves.

G-man, short for Government Man, an agent of the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation. See FEDERAL.

G.O.M. The initial letters of "Grand Old Man," a nickname of honour given to W. E. Gladstone (1809-98) in his later years. Lord Rosebery first used the expression in 1882.

Gab. The gift of the gab or gob. Fluency of speech, also the gift of boasting, connected with gabble, and perhaps with gab, the mouth.

There was a man named Job
Lived in the land of Uz,
He had a good gift of the gob,
The same thing happen us.

Book of Job: ascribed to Zachary Boyd (d. 1653).

Gabbara. The giant who, according to Rabelais, was "the first inventor of the drinking of healths."

Gabble Ratchet. See GABRIEL'S HOUNDS.

Gabelle (gâ bel'). A tax on salt. All the salt made in France had to be brought to the royal warehouses, and was there sold at a price fixed by the Government. The iniquity was that some provinces had to pay twice as much as others. It was abolished in 1789, together with the corvée (forced labour on the roads).

Gaberdine (gäb' er dēn). A long, coarse cloak or gown, especially as worn in the Middle Ages by Jews and almsmen. The word is the Spanish gabardina, a frock worn by pilgrims.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine.

Merchant of Venice, i, 3.

Gaberlunzie (gäb' er lünzi, gäb' er lün yi). A mendicant; or one of the king's bedesmen, who were licensed beggars. The name has also been given to the wallet carried by a gaberlunzie-man. Its derivation is unknown.

Gabriel (gä' bri el) (i.e. man of God). One of the archangels of Hebrew mythology, sometimes regarded as the angel of death, the prince of fire and thunder, but more frequently as one of God's chief messengers, and traditionally said to be the only angel that can speak Syriac and Chaldee. The Mohammedans call him the chief of the four favoured angels, and the spirit of truth. Milton makes him chief of the angelic guards placed over Paradise.

Betwixt these rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of the angelic guards.

Paradise Lost, iv, 549.

In the Talmud Gabriel appears as the destroyer of the hosts of Sennacherib, as the man who showed Joseph the way (Gen. xxxvii, 15), and as one of the angels who buried Moses (Deut. xxxiv, 6).

It was Gabriel who (we are told in the Koran) took Mohammed to heaven on Alborak and revealed to him his "prophetic lore." In the Old Testament Gabriel is said to have explained to Daniel certain visions; in the New Testament he announced to Zacharias the future birth of John the Baptist, and appeared to Mary, the mother of Jesus (Luke i, 26, etc.).

Gabriel's horse. Haizum.

Gabriel's hounds, called also Gabble Ratchet. Wild geese. The noise of geese in flight is like that of a pack of hounds in full cry. The legend is that they are the souls of unbaptized children wandering through the air till the Day of Judgment.

Gabrielle. La Belle Gabrielle (1571-1599). Daughter of Antoine d'Estrées, grand-master of artillery, and governor of the Île de France. Towards the close of 1590, Henri IV happened to sojourn for a night at the Château de Cœuvres, and fell in love with her. He married her to Liancourt-Damerval, created her Duchesse de Beaufort, and took her to live with him at court.

Charmanthe Gabrielle,
Percé de mille dards,
Quand la gloire m'appelle
A la suite de Mars. Henri IV.

Gad. By gad. A minced form of Gad, occurring also in such forms as Gadzooks, Begad, Egad.

How he still cries "Gad!" and talks of popery coming on, as all the fanatiques do.—Pepys: Diary, Nov. 24, 1662.

Gad-fly. Not the roving but the goading fly (A.S. gad, a goad).

Gadget (gāj' et). An expressive word introduced into general use during World War I, popularized, apparently, by the R.A.F. where it was used for almost any little tool or appliance.

Gadshill (gādz hil). About 3 miles N.W. of Rochester. Famous for the attack of Sir John Falstaff and three of his knavish companions on a party of four travellers, whom they robbed of their purses (1 Henry IV, ii, 4), and also as the home of Charles Dickens, who died there in 1870.

Gadshill is also the name of one of the thievish companions of Sir John Falstaff.

Gad-steel. Flemish steel. So called because it is wrought in gads, or small bars (A.S. gad, a small bar; Icel. gaddr, a spike).

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words.
Titus Andronicus, iv, 1.

Gaelic (gā' lik). The language of the Gaelic branch of the Celtic race which, in Greek and Roman times, occupied much of Central Europe. The name is now applied only to the Celtic language spoken in the Scottish Highlands. In the 18th century this was called Erse.

Gaff. Slang for humbug; also for a cheap public entertainment or a low-class music-hall.

Crooked as a gaff. Here gaff is an iron hook at the end of a short pole, used for landing salmon, etc., or the metal spur of fighting-cocks. (Span. and Port. gafa, a boat-hook.)

To blow the gaff. See Blow.

To stand the gaff. To bear punishment or railery, with calmness.

Gaffer. An old country fellow; a boss or foreman; a corruption of "grandfather." Cp. GAMMER.

If I had but a thousand a year, Gaffer Green,
If I had but a thousand a year.
Gaffer Green and Robin Rough.

Gag. In theatrical parlance, an interpolation. When Hamlet directs the players to say no more "than is set down" (iii, 2) he cautions them against gagging; also a joke.

Gag-man. One who is employed to supply jokes for films or radio programmes.

To apply the gag. Said of applying the closure in the House of Commons. Here gag is something forced into the mouth to prevent speech.

Gaiety. Gaiety of Nations. This phrase, now often used in an ironic sense, such as "that won't add much to the gaiety of nations," springs from the words uttered by Dr. Johnson on hearing of the death of David Garrick—"I am disappointed by that stroke of death which has eclipsed the gaiety of nations and impoverished the public stock of harmless pleasure."

Gaiety Girl. One of the beauty chorus for which the old Gaiety Theatre in the Strand was famous in the '90s and Edwardian days. Several of them married into the peerage.

Gala Day (gā' là). A festive day; a day when people put on their best attire. (Ital. gala, finery.)

Galahad, Sir (gāl' a hād). In the Arthurian legends the purest and noblest knight of the Round Table. He is a late addition and was invented by Walter Map in his Quest of the San Graal. He was the son of Lancelot and Elaine: at the institution of the Round Table one seat (the Siege Perilous) was left unoccupied, and could be occupied only by the knight who could succeed in the Quest. When Sir Galahad sat there it was discovered that it had been left for him. Vide Malory's Morte d'Arthur, Tennyson's The Holy Grail, etc.

Galatea (gāl ā tē' a). A sea-nymph, beloved by Polypheme, but herself in love with Acis. Acis was crushed under a huge rock by the jealous giant, and Galatea threw herself into the sea, where she joined her sister nymphs. Handel has an opera entitled Acis and Galatea (1732). The Galatea beloved by Pygmalion (q.v.) was a different person.

Galaxy. The (gāl' āk sī). The "Milky Way." A long white luminous track of stars which seems to encompass the heavens like a girdle. According to modern astronomical theory the Galaxy is a vast collection of stars set in a curiously flattened shape something like a double convex lens. It is because our Sun—and we ourselves in the planetary system with it—is in the midst of this Galaxy that the mass of stars appears so dense when we are looking lengthwise through it, whereas when we look out sideways, so to speak, we see the constellations of the heavens separately. It is supposed that the whole vast Galactic system revolves round a centre somewhere in the constellation of Sagittarius, 30,000 light years (a light year is six million million miles) from the Sun.

According to classic fable, it is the path to the palace of Zeus or Jupiter. (Gr. gala, galaktos, milk.)

Through all her courts
The vacant city slept; the busy winds,
That keep no certain intervals of rest,
Moved not; meanwhile the galaxy displayed
Her fires, that like mysterious pulses beat,
Aloft;—momentous but uneasy bliss!

WORDSWORTH: Vandracour and Julia, 94.

Galen (gā len). A Greek physician and philosopher of the 2nd century A.D. For centuries he was the supreme authority in medicine. Hence, Galenist, a follower of Galen's medical theories; Galenical, a simple, vegetable medicine.

Galen says "Nay" and Hippocrates "Yea." The doctors disagree, and who is to decide? Hippocrates—a native of Cos, born 460 B.C.—was the most celebrated physician of antiquity.

Galère (gà lâr'). Que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère? What business had he to be in that galley? This is from Molière's comedy of Les Fourberies de Scapin. Scapin wants to bamboozle Géronte out of his money, and tells him that his master (Géronte's son) is detained prisoner on a Turkish galley, where he went out of curiosity. Géronte replies "What business had he to go on board the galley?" The phrase is applied to a person who finds himself in difficulties through being where he ought not to be, or in some unexpected predicament.

Vogue la galère. See VOGUE.

Galimatias (gäl i mā'shäs). Nonsense; unmeaning gibberish. The word first appeared in France in the 16th century, but its origin is unknown; perhaps it is connected with gallimaufry (q.v.). In his translation of Rabelais Urquhart heads ch. ii of Bk. I a "Galimatias of Extravagant Conceits found in an Ancient Monument."

Gall (gawl). Bile; the very bitter fluid secreted by the liver; hence used figuratively as a symbol for anything of extreme bitterness; colloquially, impudence.

Gall and wormwood. Extremely disagreeable and annoying.

And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord: Remembering my affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall.—Lam. iii, 18, 19.

The gall of bitterness. The bitterest grief; extreme affliction. The ancients taught that grief and joy were subject to the gall as affection was to the heart, knowledge to the kidneys, and the gall of bitterness means the bitter centre of bitterness, as the heart of heart means the innermost recesses of the heart or affections. In the Acts it is used to signify "the sinfulness of sin," which leads to the bitterest grief.

I perceive thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.—Acts viii, 23.

The gall of pigeons. The story goes that pigeons have no gall, because the dove sent from the ark by Noah burst its gall out of grief, and none of the pigeon family has had a gall ever since.

For sin' the Flood of Noah
The dow she has nae ga'.

JAMIESON: Popular Ballads (Lord of Rorlin's Daughter)

Gallant. The meaning of this word varies with its pronunciation. As gäl' änt it is an adjective meaning brave, grand, fine, chivalrous; as gäl änt' it describes the cavalier or admirer of women, a flirt, or the adjective and verb implying this.

Gallery. To play to the gallery. To work for popularity. As an actor who sacrifices his author for popular applause.

The instant we begin to think about success and the effect of our work—to play with one eye on the gallery—we lose power, and touch, and everything else.—KIPLING: The Light that Failed.

Galley Halfpence. Silver coin brought over by merchants ("galley-men") from Genoa, who used the Galley Wharf, Thames Street. These halfpence were larger than our own, and their use was forbidden in England early in the 15th century.

Gallia (gäl' i ä). France; the Latin name for Gaul.

Gallia Braccata (trousered Gaul). Gallia Narbonensis—South-western Gaul, from the Pyrenees to the Alps—was so called from the "braccæ," or trousers, which the natives wore in common with the Scythians and Persians.

Gallia Comata. That part of Gaul which belonged to the Roman emperor, and was governed by legates (legati), was so called from the long hair (coma) worn by the inhabitants flowing over their shoulders.

Gallicism (gäl' i sizm). A phrase or sentence constructed after the French idiom; as, "when you shall have returned home you will find a letter on your table." In Matt. xv, 32, is a Gallicism: "I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat." Cp. Mark vii, 2.

Galligaskins (gäl i gäs' kinz). A loose, wide kind of breeches worn by men in the 16th and 17th centuries.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury and encroaching frosts . . .
A horrid chasm discol'd, with orifice
Wide, discontinuous.

J. PHILIPS: The Splendid Shilling (1703).

The taylor of Bisiter, he has but one eye;
He cannot cut a pair of green galagaskins, if he were to try.—Aubrey MS.

The word is a corruption of Fr. garguesque, which was the Ital. grechesca, Greekish, referring to a Greek article of clothing.

Gallimaufry (gäl i maw' fri). A medley; any confused jumble of things; but strictly speaking, a hotch-potch made up of all the scraps of the larder. (Fr. gallimafrée, the origin of which is unknown, though it is probably related to galimatias).

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,
Both young and old, one with another, Ford;
He loves the gallimaufry [all sorts].

Merry Wives, ii, 1.

Gallo-Belgicus (gäl ò bel' j kùs). An annual register in Latin for European circulation, first published in 1598.

It is believed,
And told for news with as much diligence
As if 'twere writ in Gallo-Belgicus.

THOMAS MAY: The Heir, 1615.

Galloglass (gäl' ò glas). An armed servitor (or foot-soldier) of an ancient Irish chief. O.I.R. and Gael. gall, a stranger, oglach, a warrior.

The Galloglass are pycked and scelerated men of great and mightie bodies, crewel without compassion.
—JOHN DRYMOK: Treatise of Ireland (1600).

Galloway (gäl' ò wä). A horse less than fifteen hands high, of the breed which originally came from Galloway in Scotland.

Thrust him downstairs! Know we not Galloway nags?—2 Henry IV, ii, 4.

Gallup Poll (gäl' ùp pöl). A method devised by Dr. George Gallup for ascertaining the trend of public opinion by interrogating a cross-section of the population. Trained interviewers question a very small sample of the public, which is carefully chosen with regard to its composition of men or women, geographical distribution, age groups and social position. For the British Parliamentary election of 1945 the interviewers spoke to 1,809 persons out of the 25,000,000 voters. These were so scientifically selected that the Gallup Poll forecast was less than 1 per cent. wrong when the actual voting figures were made known. On the other hand, their forecast was as wrong as that of everyone else at the American Presidential election of 1948.

Galore (gá lór'). One of our words from Old Irish go leor, to a sufficiency; hence, in abundance, and abundance itself.

For his Poll he had trinkets and gold galore,
Besides of prize-money quite a store.

Jack Robinson (A Sailor's Song).

Galosh (gá losh'). The word comes to us from the Span. galocha (wooden shoes); Ger. galosche; Fr. galosche, which is probably from Gr. kalopous, a shoe-maker's last.

The word was originally applied to a kind of clog or patten worn as a protection against wet in days when silk or cloth shoes were common. It is in this sense that writers so remote as Langland use the word:—

... the kynde of a knyght that cometh to be

To geten hus gylte spores and galoches y-couped, Piers Plowman, xxi, 12.

The modern galoshes are rubber overshoes, and are sometimes spelled goloshes.

Galway Jury (gaw'l wā). An enlightened, independent jury. The expression has its birth in certain trials held in Ireland in 1635 upon the right of the king to the counties of Ireland. Leitrim, Roscommon, Sligo, and Mayo gave judgment in favour of the Crown, but Galway opposed it; whereupon the sheriff was fined £1,000, and each of the jurors £4,000.

Gama, Vasco da (väs' kô da ga' ma). One of the greatest of the early Portuguese navigators (d. 1524), and the first European to double the Cape of Good Hope. He is the hero of Camoëns's Lusiad (1572),

Gama, captain of the venturous band,
Of bold emprise, and born for high command,
Whose martial fires, with prudence close allied,
Ensured the smiles of fortune on his side.

Gamboge (gām bözh). So called from Cambodia or Camboja, whence it was first brought. It is a gum resin made from various species of a laurel-like tree of Siam, Cambodia, and Cochinchina. When powdered it becomes a brilliant yellow which forms a pigment in water-colour paints.

Gambrel. A bent piece of wood used by butchers, from which they suspend carcasses.

Game. Certain wild animals and birds, legally protected, preserved, and pursued for sport, such as hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath-game, etc. See SPORTING SEASON.

The game is not worth the candle. See CANDLE.

The game is up. The scheme, endeavour, etc., has come to nothing; everything has failed.

The game's afoot. The hare has started; the enterprise has begun.

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot!
Follow your spirit!—SHAKESPEARE. Henry V, iii, 1.

He's a game 'un! He's got some pluck; he's "a plucked 'un." Another allusion to game-cocks.

He's at his little games again, or at the same old game. He's at his old tricks; he's gone back to his old habits or practices.

To die game. To maintain a resolute attitude to the last. A phrase from cock-fighting.

To have the game in one's hands. To have such an advantage that success is assured; to hold the winning cards.

To play a waiting game. To bide one's time, knowing that that is the best way of winning; to adopt Fabian tactics (q.v.).

To play the game. To act in a straightforward, honourable manner; to keep to the rules.

This they all with a joyful mind
Bear through life like a torch in flame,
And falling, fling to the host behind—
"Play up! Play up! and play the game!"

SIR H. NEWBOLT: Vitae Lampada.

You are making game of me. You are bamboozling me, "pulling my leg," holding me up to ridicule.

Game Chicken. The sobriquet of the pugilist, Hen Pearce. Beginning as a pupil of James Belcher, he eventually defeated his teacher in a terrible battle on Barnt Moor near Doncaster, 6th December, 1805.

Game Laws. A survival of the forest laws imposed by William the Conqueror. Game licences were first issued in 1784. The seasons during which certain game might be shot were set out in the Game Act of William IV, 1831.

Game leg. A lame leg. In this instance game is a dialect form of the Celtic cam, meaning crooked. It is of comparatively modern usage. Gammy is also used in this sense.

Gamelyn, The Tale of (gām' lin). A Middle-English metrical romance, found among the Chaucer MSS. and supposed to have been intended by him to form the basis of one of the un-written Canterbury Tales. Gamelyn is a younger son to whom a large share of property had been bequeathed by the father. He is kept in servitude and tyrannically used by his elder brother until he is old enough effectually to rebel. After many adventures, during which he becomes a leader of outlaws in the woods, he comes to his own again with the help of the king, and justice is meted out to the elder brother and those who aided him. Thomas Lodge made the story into a novel—Rosalynde, or Euphues' Golden Legacie (1590)—and from this Shakespeare drew a large part of As You Like It. The authorship is, however, still in doubt.

Gammadion (ga mā' di òn). The fylfot (q.v.), or swastika, so called because it resembles four Greek capital gammas (Γ) set at right angles.

Gammer. A rustic term for an old woman; a corruption of grandmother, with an intermediate form "granmer." Cp. GAFFER.

Gammer Gurton's Needle. The earliest English comedy with the exception of Ralph Roister Doister; acted at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1552, and printed in 1575. It was published as "By Mr. S. Mr. of Art," who remained unidentified until Isaac Reed in 1782 announced that it was Bishop Still. The comedy is vigorous and it closes with the discovery of Gammer Gurton's missing needle in the seat of Hodge's breeches.

Gammon. This word comes from the same original as game and gamble, but in Victorian slang it meant to impose upon, delude, cheat; and sometimes, to play a game upon. As an exclamation it meant "Nonsense, you're pulling my leg!"

A landsman said, "I twig the chap—he's been upon the Mill,
And 'cause he gammons so the flats, ve calls him Veeping Bill."

Ingoldsby Legends.

Gammon, the buttock or thigh of a hog salted and cured, is the Fr. jambon, O.Fr. gambon, from gambe, the leg.

Gamp. Sarah Gamp is a disreputable monthly nurse in Dickens's Martin Chuzzlewit, famous for her bulky umbrella and perpetual reference to Mrs. Harris, a purely imaginary person, whose opinions always confirmed her own. Hence a gamp is a common term for an umbrella.

Gamut (gām'üt). Originally, the first or lowest note in Guido of Arezzo's scale, corresponding to G on the lowest line of the modern bass staff; later, the whole series of notes recognized by musicians; hence, the whole range or compass.

It is gamma ut; gamma (the third letter of the Greek alphabet) was used by Guido to mark the first or lowest note in the mediæval scale; and ut is the first word in the mnemonic stanza, Ut queant laxis resonare fibris, etc. (see DOH), containing the names of the hexachord. Gamma ut, or G ut, was added to the scale in the 11th century.

Ganelon. A type of black-hearted treachery, figuring in Dante's Inferno and grouped by Chaucer (Nun's Priest's Tale, 407) with Judas Iscariot and "Greek Sinon, that broughtest Troye al outrely to sorwe." He was Count of Mayence, one of Charlemagne's paladins. Jealousy of Roland made him a traitor; and in order to destroy his rival, he planned with Marsillus, the Moorish king, the attack of Roncesvalles.

Ganesha (gän'esh à). The god of wisdom in Hindu mythology, lord of the Ganas, or lesser deities. He was the son of Siva, is propitiated at the commencement of important work, at the beginning of sacred writings, etc.

Gang. A gang of saws. A number of circular power-driven saws mounted together so that they can reduce a tree trunk to planks at a single operation.

Gang agley, To (Scot.). To go wrong. The verb to gley, or gley, means to look askint, sideways.

The best-laid schemes of mice and men
Gang aft agley. BURNS: To a Mouse.

Gang-day. The day when boys gang round the parish to beat its bounds. See BOUNDS.

Ganges, The (gän'jēz). So named from ganga or gunga, a river; as in Kishenganga, the black river; Neelganga, the blue river; Naraingunga, the river of Naranyana or Vishnu, etc. The Ganges is the Borra Ganga, or great river.

Those who through the curse, have fallen from heaven, having performed ablution in this stream, become free from sin; cleansed from sin by this water, and restored to happiness, they shall enter heaven and return again to the gods.—The Ramayana (section xxxv).

Gangway. Originally, the boarded way (hence sometimes called the gang-board, gang, an alley) in the old galleys made for the rowers to pass from stem to stern, and where the mast was laid when it was unshipped; now, the board with a railing at each side by which passengers walk into or out of a ship.

As we were putting off the boat they laid hold of the gangboard and unhooked it off the boat's stern.—Cook: Second Voyage, Bk. iii, ch. iv.

Below the gangway. In the House of Commons, on the farther side of the passage-way between the seats which separate the Ministry from the rest of the Members. To sit "below the gangway" is to sit amongst the general members, and not among the Ministers or ex-Ministers and leaders of the Opposition.

Ganymede (gän'i mēd). In Greek mythology, the cup-bearer of Zeus, successor to Hebe, and the type of youthful male beauty. Originally a Trojan youth, he was taken up to Olympus and made immortal. Hence, a cup-bearer generally.

Nature waits upon thee still,
And thy verdant cup does fill;
'Tis fill'd wherever thou dost tread
Nature's self's thy Ganymede.

COWLEY: The Grasshopper (Anacreontics).

Gaora (gā'ōr'a). According to Hakluyt this was a tract of land inhabited by people without heads, with eyes in their shoulders and their mouths in their breasts. See BLEMMEYES.

Gape. Looking for gape-seed. Gaping about and doing nothing. A corruption of "Looking agapesing"; gapesing (still used in Norfolk) is staring about with one's mouth open.

Seeking a gape's nest (Devon). A gape's nest is a sight which one stares at with wide-open mouth. Cp. MARE'S NEST.

Garcia (gar'si à). To take a message to Garcia is to be resourceful and courageous, to be able to accept responsibility and carry one's task through to the end. The phrase originated in the exploit of Lieut. Andrew Rowan who, in the Spanish-American War of 1898, made his way through the Spanish blockade into Cuba, made contact with General Calixto Garcia, chief of the Cuban insurgent forces, and carried news from him back to Washington.

Garcias. The soul of Pedro Garcias. Money. The story is that two scholars of Salamanca discovered a tombstone with this inscription: "Here lies the soul of the licentiate Pedro Garcias"; and on searching found a purse with a hundred golden ducats. (Gil Blas, Preface.)

Garden. Garden City. A name given alike to Norwich and to Chicago; also, as a general name, to model suburbs and townships that have been planned with a special view to the provision of open spaces, and wide roads.

The Garden or Garden Sect. The disciples of Epicurus, who taught in his own private garden.

The Garden of Eden. See EDEN. The name as applied to Mesopotamia, with its vast sandy deserts, is nowadays somewhat ironical; but it is traditionally supposed to be its "original site."

In many countries the name is applied to the more fertile districts as—

Garden of England. Kent and Worcestershire are both so called.

Garden of Europe. Italy.

Garden of France. Amboise, in the department of Indre-et-Loire; also Touraine.

Garden of India. Oude.

Garden of Ireland. Carlow.

Garden of Italy. The island of Sicily.

Garden of South Wales. The southern division of Glamorganshire.

Garden of Spain. Andalusia.

Garden of Switzerland. Thurgau.

Garden of the Hesperides. See HESPERIDES.

Garden of the Sun. The East Indian (or Malayan) Archipelago.

Garden of the West. Illinois; Kansas ("the Garden State") is also so called.

Garden of the World. The region of the Mississippi.

Gardy loo. The cry of warning formerly given by Edinburgh housewives when about to throw the contents of the slop-pail out of the window into the street below. It is a corruption of Fr. garde l'eau, beware of the water.

Atten o'clock at night the whole cargo is flung out of a back window that looks into some street or lane, and the maid calls "Gardy loo" to the passengers.—SMOLLETT: Humphrey Clinker.

Gargamelle (gar' gâ mel). In Rabelais's satire, daughter of the king of the Parpaillons (butterflies), wife of Grangousier, and mother of Gargantua (q.v.). On the day that she gave birth to him she ate sixteen quarters, two bushels, three pecks, and a pipkin of dirt, the mere remains left in the tripe which she had for supper.

She is said to be meant either for Anne of Brittany, or Catherine de Foix, Queen of Navarre.

Gargantua (gar găn' tū à). A giant of mediæval (perhaps Celtic) legend famous for his enormous appetite (Sp. garganta, gullet), adopted by Rabelais in his great satire (1532), and made the father of Pantagruel. One of his exploits was to swallow five pilgrims with their staves and all in a salad. He is the subject of a number of chap-books, and became proverbial as a voracious and insatiable guzzler.

You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first [before I can utter so long a word]; 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size.—As You Like It, iii, 2.

Gargouille (gar goo ēl'). The great dragon that lived in the Seine, ravaged Rouen, and was slain by St. Romanus, Bishop of Rouen, in the 7th century.

Gargoyle (gar' goil). A spout for rain-water in Gothic architecture, projecting from the wall so that the water falls clear, and usually carved into some fantastic shape, such as a dragon's head, through which the water flows. So named from Fr. gargouille, the throat, gullet.

Garibaldi (gâr i bol' di). The red shirt made famous by Garibaldi and his men in their deliverance of Italy in 1860 had a very simple origin. It was in Montevideo, in 1843, where Garibaldi was raising an Italian legion, that a number of red woollen shirts came on the market owing to the difficulty of export due to the war with Argentina. The Uruguay government bought them up cheaply and handed them over to Garibaldi for his men. When the Italian Legion came over to Europe in 1848 they brought their red shirts with them, thus furnishing Italy with her long-treasured symbol of freedom.

The Garibaldi biscuit, in which currants are mixed in the pastry, was a form of food much favoured by the General on his farm in Caprera.

Garland. The primary use of this word, meaning a wreath of flowers either worn or festooned around some object, has been extended to include a collection of pieces in prose or verse, a sort of choice anthology.

What I now offer to your Lordship is a collection of Poetry, a kind of Garland of Good Will.—PRIOR's dedication to his Poems.

Garlic. The old superstition that garlic can destroy the magnetic power of the loadstone has the sanction of Pliny, Solinus, Ptolemy, Plutarch, Albertus, Mathiolus, Rueus, Rulandus, Renodæus, Langius, and others. Sir Thomas Browne places it among Vulgar Errors (Bk. ii, ch. 3).

Martin Rulandus saith that Onions and Garlick . . . hinder the attractive power [of the magnet] and rob it of its virtue of drawing iron, to which Renodæus agrees; but this is all lies.—W. SALMON: The Complete English Physician, ch. xxv (1693).

Garnish. In old prison slang, the entrance-money, to be spent in drink, demanded by jailbirds of new-comers. Garnish means embellishment, extra decoration to dress, etc.; hence, it was applied by prisoners to fetters, and the garnish-money was money given for the "honour" of wearing them. The custom became obsolete with the reform of prisons.

In its original meaning to garnish was to warn, and it is in this sense that the word is now used legally. John X (called the garnishee) is garnished or warned not to pay a sum he owes to Henry Y as Henry Y owes money to George Z but is disputing the debt.

Garratt. The Mayor of Garratt. Garratt is near Earlsfield, Wimbledon; the first "mayor" was elected in 1778. He was really merely the chairman of an association of villagers formed to put a stop to encroachments on the common, and as his election coincided with a general election, the society made it a law that a new "mayor" should be chosen at every general election. This tickled the public fancy, crowds assembled to see the fun (on one occasion there were 80,000 persons present) and the most fantastic candidates came forward under assumed names to contest the "mayoralty" on the most outrageous platforms. The addresses of these mayors, written by Garrick, Wilkes, and others, are satires on the corruption of electors and political squibs. The first recorded mayor was "Squire Blownedown"; the last was "Sir" Harry Dimsdale (1796) a muffin-seller and dealer in tinware.

Foote has a farce entitled The Mayor of Garratt. All that remains of Garratt is a lane so named.

Garraway's. A noted coffee-house in Change Alley, Cornhill, which existed for over 200 years and was founded by Thomas Garway, a tobacconist and coffee merchant in the 16th century. Here the promoters of the South Sea Bubble met. Sales were held periodically, and tea was introduced to England in 1657, selling at from 16s. to 50s. a pound. Garraway's was closed and the house demolished in 1874.

Garrote (Span. garrote, a stick). A Spanish method of execution by fastening a cord round the neck of the criminal and twisting it with a stick till strangulation ensued. In 1851 General Lopez was garrotted for attempting to gain possession of Cuba; and about that time the term was first applied to the practice of London thieves and roughs who strangled their victim while an accomplice rifled his pockets.

Garter. The Most Noble Order of the Garter. The highest order of knighthood in Great Britain and in the world, traditionally instituted by King Edward III about 1348, re-constituted in 1805 and 1831. The popular legend is that Joan, Countess of Salisbury, accidentally slipped her garter at a court ball. It was picked up by the king, who gallantly diverted the attention of the guests from the lady by binding the blue band round his own knee, saying as he did so, "Honi soit qui mal y pense" (Evil—or shame—be to him who thinks evil of it) (q.v.). The order is limited to the Sovereign, and other members of the Royal Family, with twenty-five Knights, and such foreign royalties as may be admitted by statute. The only Ladies of the Garter are the Sovereign's Queen and his eldest daughter when she is heir apparent to the throne; and until, in 1912, Viscount Grey (then Sir Edward Grey) was admitted to the order, no commoner for centuries had been able to put "K.G." after his name.

Each knight is allotted a stall in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The habits and insignia are the garter, mantle, surcoat, hood, star, collar, and George—a jewelled figure representing St. George and the Dragon.

Wearing the garters of a pretty girl either on the hat or knee was a common custom with our forefathers. Brides usually wore on their legs a host of gay ribbons, to be distributed after the marriage ceremony amongst the bridegroom's friends; and the piper at the wedding dance never failed to tie a piece of the bride's garter round his pipe.

Magic garters. In the old romances, etc., garters made of the strips of a young hare's skin saturated with motherwort. Those who wore them excelled in speed.

Prick the garter. An old swindling game, better known as "Fast and loose." See under FAST.

Garvies. Sprats; perhaps so called from Inchgarvie, the island in the Firth of Forth that supports the central pier of the Forth Bridge.

Gasconade. Absurd boasting, vainglorious braggadocio. It is said that a Gascon being asked what he thought of the Louvre in Paris, replied, "Pretty well; it reminds me of the back part of my father's stables." The vainglory of this answer is the more palpable when it is borne in mind that the Gascons were proverbially poor. The Dictionary of the French Academy gives the following specimen: "A Gascon, in proof of his ancient nobility, asserted that they used in his father's house no other fuel than the bâtons of the family marshals."

Gas mask. A popular name for any contrivance designed to preserve the wearer from inhaling poison gas. In World War I (when gas was first used) the gas mask went through various forms from a sort of greasy felt domino to a box respirator strapped on the chest. In World War II there were several kinds of respirator—for infants, for small children, civilians, civilians on national duty, and for the Services; all of which differed only in the period for which they were effective.

Gat-tooth. Chaucer's "Wife of Bath" was gat-toothed (see Prol. to Cant. Tales, 468, and Wife of Bath's Prol. 603); this probably means that her teeth were set wide apart, with gats, i.e. openings or gaps between them; but some editors have thought it is goat-toothed (A.S. gat), i.e. lascivious, like a goat.

Gate. Gate money. Money paid at the door or gate for admission to an enclosure where some entertainment or contest, etc., is to take place.

Gate of Italy. A narrow gorge between two mountain ridges in the valley of the Adige, in the vicinity of Trent and Roveredo.

Gate of Tears. The passage into the Red Sea. So called by the Arabs (Bab-el-Mandeb) from the number of shipwrecks that took place there.

Gates of Dreams. See DREAMS.

Gate-posts. The post on which a gate hangs is called the hanging-post; that against which it shuts is called the banging-post.

Gath (gäth). In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.), this means Brussels, where Charles II long resided while in exile.

Tell it not in Gath. Don't let your enemies hear it. Gath was famous as being the birth-place of the giant Goliath.

Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon: lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.—2 Sam. i, 20.

Gather. He is gathered to his fathers. He is dead. A phrase from the Bible: "All that generation were gathered unto their fathers" (Judges ii, 10).

Gathering is a common phrase among Dis-senters to describe any sort of religious or social assembly.

Bibliographically, it is any number of leaves which may be put together and joined into a section of the book by being sewn through.

Gatling Gun. An early form of automatic weapon invented in the U.S.A. in 1867. It had a large number of barrels, the projectiles in which could be discharged in rapid succession. It preceded all types of weapons constructed on the principle of discharging numerous projectiles rapidly through the same barrel, as a machine gun.

Gauche (gôsh) (Fr., the left hand). Awkward.

Gaucherie. Behaviour not according to the received forms of society; awkward and untoward ways.

Gaacho (gou'chô). A cowboy of the S. American pampas, of mixed Indian and Spanish descent. The word is also applied to an itinerant minstrel of the Argentine pampas, who goes from village to village with horse and guitar.

Gaudy-day (gaw'di) (Lat. gaudium, joy). A holiday, a feast-day; especially an annual celebration of some event, such as the foundation of a college.

Gaul (gawl). In classical geography, the country inhabited by the Gauls, hence, in modern use, France. Cisalpine Gaul lay south and east of the Alps, in what is now northern Italy. Transalpine Gaul was north and northwest of the Alps, and included Narbonensis, Aquitania, Lugdunensis, and Belgica. It was inhabited by Franks, Germans, Burgundians, Celts and others, as well as Gauls.

Insulting Gaul has roused the world to war.

THOMSON: Autumn.

Shall haughty Gaul invasion threaten?—BURNS.

Gaunt. John of Gaunt (1340-99), third son of Edward III; so called from Ghent, in Flanders, the place of his birth.

Gauntlet. To run the gauntlet. To be attacked on all sides, to be severely criticized. The word came into English at the time of the Thirty Years' War as ganilope, meaning the passage between two files of soldiers, and is the Swedish gata, a way, passage (cp. GAT-TOOTH above), and lopp (connected with our leap), a course. The reference is to a punishment formerly common among soldiers and sailors; the company or crew, provided with rope ends, were drawn up in two rows facing each other, and the delinquent had to run between them, while every man dealt him as severe a chastisement as he could.

To throw down the gauntlet. To challenge. The custom in the Middle Ages, when one knight challenged another, was for the challenger to throw his gauntlet on the ground, and if the challenge was accepted the person to whom it was thrown picked it up.

Gautama (gaw ta' ma). The family name of Buddha (q.v.). His personal name was Siddhattha, his father's name Siddhodana, and his mother's Maya. Buddha means "The Enlightened," "The One Who Knows," and he assumed this title at about the age of 36, when, after seven years of seclusion and spiritual struggle, he believed himself to have attained to perfect truth.

Gauvaine. Gawain (q.v.).

Gavelkind (găv' el kind). A tenure of Saxon origin, still in force in some parts of Kent and formerly in Wales, Northumberland, and elsewhere, whereby land and property of persons dying intestate descended from the father to all his sons in equal proportions, or to the daughters in the absence of sons. The youngest had the homestead, and the eldest the horse and arms. The word is the A.S. gafol, tribute, tax (cp. GABELLE), and kind, nature, species.

Coke (1 Institutes, 140 a) says the word is gif eal cyn (give all the kin).

Gawain (gă wân). One of the most famous of the Arthurian knights, nephew of King Arthur, and probably the original hero of the Grail quest. He appears in the Welsh Triads and the Mabinogion as Gwalchmei, and in the Arthurian cycle is the centre of many episodes and poems. The Middle English poem (about 1360), Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, is a romance telling how Gawain beheads the Green Knight in single combat.

Gay. A gay deceiver. A Lothario (q.v.); a libertine.

The Gay Science. A translation of gai saber, the old Provençal name for the art of poetry.

A guild formed at Toulouse in 1323 with the object of keeping in existence the dying Provençal language and culture was called the Gai Saber. Its full title was "The Very Gay Company of the Seven Troubadours of Toulouse."

Gaze. To stand at gaze. To stand in doubt what to do. A term in forestry. When a stag first hears the hounds it stands dazed, looking all round, and in doubt what to do. Heralds call a stag which is represented full-faced, a "stag at gaze."

As the poor frightened deer, that stands at gaze,

Wildly determining which way to fly.

Rape of Lucrece, 1149.

Gaze-hound. See LYME-HOUND.

Gazebo (gă zé' bô). A humorous Latin future tense applied to the English gaze, to describe a summer-house with an extensive prospect. The word is also used for a balcony, window, or any other vantage spot whence a good view can be obtained.

Gazette. A newspaper. The first newspapers were issued in Venice by the Government, and came out in manuscript once a month, during the war of 1563 between the Venetians and Turks. The intelligence was read publicly in certain places, and the fee for hearing it read was one gazetta (a Venetian coin, somewhat less than a farthing in value).

The first official English newspaper, called The Oxford Gazette, was published in 1642, at Oxford, where the Court was held. On the removal of the Court to London, the name was changed to The London Gazette. This name was revived in 1665, during the Great Fire. Now the official Gazette, published every Tuesday and Friday, contains announcements of pensions, promotions, bankruptcies, dissolutions of partnerships, etc.

Gazetted. Posted in The London Gazette as having received some official appointment, service promotion, etc., or on being declared bankrupt, etc.

Gazetteer. A geographical and topographical index or dictionary; so called because the name of one of the earliest in English (L. Eachard's, 1693) was The Gazetteer's or Newsmen's Interpreter, i.e. it was intended for the use of journalists, those who wrote for the Gazettes.

Gear. In machinery, the wheels, chains, belts, etc., that communicate motion to the working parts are called the gear or gearing (Sax. gearwa, clothing). The term is more particularly applied to a toothed wheel or a series of toothed wheels for the transmission of motion from one machine to another, or from one part of a machine to another. High gear is said of an arrangement of wheels, etc., whereby the driving part moves slowly in relation to the driven part; Low gear is the reverse of this, the driving part moving relatively more quickly than the driven; Differential gear is a combination of toothed gear wheels connecting two axles but allowing them to revolve at different speeds. Gear is also applied to all forms of equipment, as, for example, sports gear.

In good gear. To be in good working order.

Out of gear. Not in working condition, when the "gearing" does not act properly; out of health.

Gee-up! and Gee-whoa! Interjections addressed to horses meaning respectively "Go ahead!" and "Stop!" From them came the childish "gee-gee," a horse, a term adopted by sporting men and others, as in "Backing the gee-gees."

Geese. See GOOSE.

Gehenna (ge hen' à) (Heb.). The place of eternal torment. Strictly speaking, it means simply the Valley of Hinnom (Ge-Hinnom), where sacrifices to Baal and Moloch were offered (Jer. xix, 6, etc.), and where refuse of all sorts was subsequently cast, for the consumption of which fires were kept constantly burning.

And made his grove
The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna called, the type of hell.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, Bk. i, 403.

Gelert (gel' èrt). Llewelyn's dog. See BETH GELERT.

Gemara (ge ma' rà) (Aramaic, complement). The second part of the Talmud (q.v.), consisting of annotations, discussions, and amplifications of the Mishna, which is the first part. The Mishna is the interpretation of the written law, the Gemara the interpretation of the Mishna. There is the Babylonian Gemara and the Jerusalem Gemara. The former, which is the more complete, is by the academies of Babylon, and was completed about A.D. 500; the latter by those of Palestine, completed towards the close of the 4th or during the 5th century A.D.

Gemini (jem' i nì). A zodiacal sign. See THE TWINS.

Gen (jen), an R.A.F. slang word meaning information, full details. It comes from either "General Information" or from "Genuine," and it is sometimes used as a verb, i.e. To gen it up, to swot it up.

Gendarmes (zhon' darm). "Men at arms," the armed police of France. The term was first applied to those who marched in the train of knights; subsequently to the cavalry; in the time of Louis XIV to a body of horse charged with the preservation of order; after the Revolution to a military police chosen from old soldiers of good character; and now to the ordinary police.

Gender Words. These are words which, prefixed to the noun, indicate an animal's sex:—Bull, cow: Elephant, rhinoceros, seal, whale.
Dog, bitch: ape, fox (the bitch is usually called a vixen), otter, wolf.
Buck, doe: hare, rabbit, deer.
He, she: general gender words for quadrupeds.
Cock, hen: gender words for most birds.

In many cases a different word is used for each of the sexes, e.g.:—
Boar, sow; cockerel, pullet; colt, filly; drake, duck; drone, bee; gander, goose; hart, roe; ram, ewe; stag, hind; stallion, mare; steer, heifer; ram, wether; tup, dam.

Generalissimo. The supreme commander, especially of a force drawn from two or more nations, or of a combined military and naval force. The title is said to have been coined by Cardinal Richelieu on taking supreme command of the French armies in Italy, in 1629. Called Tagus among the ancient Thessalians, Brennus among the ancient Gauls, Pendragon among the ancient Welsh or Celts.

In modern times the title has been applied to Marshal Foch (1851-1929) who was appointed generalissimo of the Allied forces in France in 1918; to Joseph Stalin (b. 1879) who was made marshal and generalissimo of the Soviet forces in 1943; to General Franco (b. 1882) who proclaimed himself generalissimo of the Spanish army in 1939; to Marshal Chiang Kai-Shek, President of the Nationalist Republic of China, and leader of the Chinese armies against the Japanese and internal foes.

General Issue. The plea of "Not guilty" to a criminal charge; "Never indebted" to a charge of debt; the issue formed by a general denial of the plaintiff's charge.

Generic Names. See BIDDY.

Generous. Generous as Hatim. An Arabian expression. Hatim was a Bedouin chief famous for his warlike deeds and boundless generosity. His son was contemporary with Mohammed.
Let Zal and Rustum bluster as they will,
Or Hatim call to Supper—heed not you.
FITZGERALD: Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, x.

Geneva (je nē' vā). See GIN.

The Geneva Bible. See BTBLÉ, THE ENGLISH.

The Geneva Bull. A nickname given to Stephen Marshall (c. 1594-1655), a Presbyterian divine, and one of the authors of Smectymnus (q.v.), because he was a disciple of John Calvin, of Geneva, and when preaching he roared like a "bull of Bashan."

Geneva Convention. Henri Dunant, a Swiss, published an account of the sufferings of the wounded at the battle of Solferino in 1859. From this sprang (1) the International Red Cross, and (2) an international convention, 1864, governing the treatment of wounded. At a conference in London in 1872 Dunant suggested a code for the treatment of prisoners of war which was adopted by all civilized nations.

Geneva courage. Pot valour; the braggadocio which is the effect of having drunk too much gin (q.v.), or geneva. Cp. DUTCH COURAGE.

Geneva Cross. See RED CROSS.

Geneva doctrines. Calvinism. Calvin, in 1541, was invited to take up his residence in Geneva as the public teacher of theology. From this period Geneva was for many years the centre of education for the Protestant youths of Europe.

Geneviève, St. (je nà vèv) (422-512). Patroness of the city of Paris. Her day is January 3rd, and she is represented in art with the keys of Paris at her girdle, a devil blowing out her candle, and an angel relighting it, or as restoring sight to her blind mother, or guarding her father's sheep. She was born at Nanterre, and was influential in averting a threatened attack on Paris by Attila, the Hun.

Genius (pl. Genii). In Roman mythology the tutelary spirit that attended one from his cradle to his grave, governed his fortunes, determined his character, and so on. The Eastern genii (sing. genie) were entirely different from the Roman, not attendant spirits, but fallen angels, dwelling in Djinnistan, under the dominion of Eblis; the Roman were very similar to the guardian angels spoken of in Matt. xviii, 10; and in this sense Mephistopheles is spoken of as the evil genius (the "familiar") of Faust. The Romans maintained that two genii attended every man from birth to death—one good and the other evil. Good luck was brought about by the agency of "his good genius," and ill luck by that of his "evil genius."

The genius loci was the tutelary deity of a place.

The word is from the Lat. gignere, to beget (Gr. gignesthai, to be born), from the notion that birth and life were due to these dii genitales. Hence it is used for birth-wit or innate talent; hence propensity, nature, inner man.

Genocide (jen' ò sid). A word invented by Prof. Raphael Lemkin, of Duke University, U.S.A., and used in the drafting of the official indictment of war criminals in 1945. It comes from the Greek genos, race; and Latin caedere, to kill. It is defined as acts intended to destroy, in whole or in part, national, ethnical, racial, or religious groups. On 9th December, 1948, it was declared by the United Nations General Assembly to be a crime in international law.

Genre Painter (zhon' rè). A painter of domestic, rural, or village scenes, such as A Village Wedding, The Young Recruit, Blind Man's Buff, The Village Politician, etc. In the drama, Victor Hugo introduced the genre system in lieu of the stilted, unnatural style of Louis XIV's era.

We call those "genre" canvases, whereon are painted idylls of the fireside, the roadside, and the farm; pictures of real life.—E. C. STEDMAN; Poets of America, ch. iv.

Gens (jenz) (Lat. pl. gentes). A clan or sept in ancient Rome; a number of families deriving from a common ancestor, having the same name, religion, etc.

Gens braccata (Lat.). Trousered people. The Romans wore no trousers ("breeches") like the Gauls, Scythians, and Persians. Cp. GALLIA BRACCATA.

Gens togata. See TOGA.

Gentle. Belonging to a family of position; well born; having the manners of genteel persons.

We must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.—Winter's Tale, v, 2.

The word is from Lat. gentilis, of the same family or gens, through O.Fr. gentil, high-born.

The gentle craft. Shoe-making; so called from St. Crispin, who is said to have been a Roman citizen of high birth who was converted to Christianity, left his native city on account of persecution, became a shoemaker at Soissons, and was martyred about 285.

As I am a true shoemaker and a gentleman of the gentle craft, buy spurs yourselves, and I'll find ye boots these seven years.—DEKKER: The Shoemaker's Holiday, or a Pleasant Comedy of the Gentle Craft, I, 1 (1599).

Angling is also known as "the gentle craft"—perhaps because there is nothing that can be called rough about its practice.

The Gentle Shepherd. A nickname given by Pitt to George Grenville (1712-70). In the course of a speech on the cider tax (1763) Grenville addressed the House somewhat plaintively: "Tell me where? tell me where?" Pitt hummed a line of a song then very popular, "Gentle shepherd, tell me where?" The House burst into laughter; and the name stuck to Grenville. The line is from a song by Samuel Howard (1710-82), a writer of many popular lyrics.

Gentleman (formed on the model of Fr. gentilhomme). Properly, a man entitled to bear arms but not of the nobility; hence, one of gentle birth, of some position in society, and with the manners, bearing, and behaviour appropriate to one in such a position.

Be it spoken (with all reverent reservation of duty) the King who hath power to make Esquires, Knights, Barons, Barons, Viscounts, Earls, Marquesses, and Dukes, cannot make a Gentleman, for Gentility is a matter of race, and of blood, and of descent, from Gentle and noble parents and ancestors, which no Kings can give to any, but to such as they beget.—EDMOND HOWES.

Juliana Berners, in her Boke of St. Albans (1486), in the treatise "Blasyng of Armys," has a curious use of the word:—

Of the offspring of the gentillman Jafeth came Habraham, Moyses, Aron, and the profetys; and also the kyng of the right lyne of Mary, of whom that gentillman Jhesus was borne very god and man; after his manhode kyng of the londe of Judea of Jues, gentillman by is modre Mary pryncce of Cote armure.

In the York Mysteries also (about 1440) we read. "Ther schall a gentillman, Jesu, unjustely be judged."

A gentleman at large. A man of means, who does not have to work for his living, and is free to come and go as he pleases. Formerly the term denoted a gentleman attached to the court but having no special duties.

A gentleman of fortune. A pirate, an adventurer (a euphemistic phrase).

A gentleman of the four outs. A vulgar upstart, with-out manners, with-out wit, with-out money, and with-out credit. There are variants of the phrase, and sometimes the outs are increased to five:—

Out of money, and out of clothes,
Out at the heels, and out at the toes,
Out of credit—but, don't forget,
Never out of but aye in debt!

A gentleman's gentleman. A manservant, especially a valet.

Fag. My master shall know this—and if he don't call him out I will.

Lucy: Ha! ha! ha! You gentlemen's gentlemen are so hasty! SHERIDAN: The Rivals, II, ii.

A nation of gentlemen. So George IV called the Scots when, in 1822, he visited their country and was received with great expressions of loyalty.

Gentleman Commoner. See FELLOW COMMONER.

Gentleman Pensioner. See GENTLEMEN AT ARMS, below.

Gentleman-ranker. In the days of the small regular army before World War I this term was applied to a well-born or educated man who enlisted as a private soldier. It was considered a last resort of one who had made a mess of things.

We're poor little lambs who've lost our way,
Baa! Baa! Baa!
We're little black sheep who've gone astray,
Baa—aa—aa!
Gentlemen-rankers out on the spree,
Damned from here to Eternity,
God ha' mercy on such as we.
Baa! Yah! Bah!

KIPLING: Gentlemen Rankers.

Gentleman Usher. A court official belonging to one of four classes, viz.: (1) Gentlemen Ushers of the Privy Chamber; these are in closest association with the Sovereign, wait on him at chapel, and conduct him in the absence of the Lord Chamberlain. (2) Gentlemen Ushers Daily Waiters, who are headed by Black Rod (q.v.) and officiate monthly by turns in the Presence Chamber. (3) Gentlemen Ushers Quarterly Waiters, who act as deputies for the preceding in their absence. (4) The Gentleman Usher to the Robes, who replaces the Groom of the Stole (q.v.), an office which was allowed to lapse at the accession of Queen Victoria, the Mistress of the Robes taking his place.

Gentlemen at Arms, The Honourable Corps of. The Bodyguard of the Sovereign (formerly called Gentlemen Pensioners), acting in conjunction with the Yeomen of the Guard (q.v.). It consists of 40 retired officers of ranks from general to major of the Regular Army and Marines, and has a Captain, Lieutenant, Standard Bearer, Clerk of the Cheque & Adjutant, and a Harbinger.

The gentleman in black velvet. It was in these words that the 18th-century Jacobites used to toast the mole that made the molehill that caused William III's horse to stumble and so brought about his death.

The Old Gentleman. The Devil; Old Nick. Also a special card in a prepared pack, used for tricks or cheating.

To put a churl upon a gentleman. To drink beer just after drinking wine.

Geomancy (jē ō mǎn sī) (Gr. ge, the earth; manteia, prophecy). Divining by the earth. Diviners in the 16th century made deductions from the patterns made by earth thrown into the air and allowed to fall on some flat surface, and drew on the earth their magic circles, figures, lines, etc.

Geopolitics (jē ō pol' i tiks). Theories relating to a nation's political dependence on physical environment and its geographical position. The chief developers of these theories were Sir Halford Mackinder, Father Walsh (U.S.A.), and Karl Haushofer in Germany. The Nazis seized on the teachings of the last-named and distorted them to support their demand for lebensraum.

George. St. George. The patron saint of England since about the time of the institution of the Order of the Garter (c. 1348), when he was "adopted" by Edward III. He is commemorated on April 23rd.

St. George had been popular in England from the time of the early Crusades, for he was said to have come to the assistance of the Crusaders at Antioch (1089), and many of the Normans (under Robert, son of William the Conqueror) then took him as their patron.

St. George suffered martyrdom near Lydda before the 4th century. There are various versions of his Acta, one saying that he was a tribune and that he was asked to come and subdue a dragon that infested a pond at Silene, Libya, and fed on the dwellers in the neighbourhood. St. George came, rescued a princess (Sabra) whom the dragon was about to make its prey, and slew the monster.

That St. George is an historical character is beyond all reasonable doubt; but no connexion whatever can be established between this martyr and the Arian bishop George of Cappadocia, as Gibbon and others have suggested.

The legend of St. George and the dragon is simply an allegorical expression of the triumph of the Christian hero over evil, which St. John the Divine beheld under the image of a dragon. Similarly, St. Michael, St. Margaret, St. Silvester, and St. Martha are all depicted as slaying dragons; the Saviour and the Virgin as treading them under their feet; St. John the Evangelist as charming a winged dragon from a poisoned chalice given him to drink; and Bunyan avails himself of the same figure when he makes Christian prevail against Apollyon.

The legend forms the subject of an old ballad given in Percy's Reliques, in which St. George was the son of Lord Albert of Coventry.

St. George he was for England, St. Denis was for France. This refers to the war-cries of the two nations—that of England was "St. George!" that of France, "Montjoye St. Denis!"

Our ancient word of courage, fair "St. George",
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons.

Richard III, v, 3.

St. George's Cross. Red on a white background.

When St. George goes on horseback St. Yves goes on foot. In times of war it was supposed that lawyers have nothing to do. St. George is the patron of soldiers, and St. Yves, or Yvo, an early French judge and lawyer noted for his incorruptibility and just decrees (d. 1303, canonized 1347), patron of lawyers.

George IV was the only English king whose manner of life dubbed him with nicknames. As Prince Regent he was known as "Prinny," "Prince Florizel" (the name under which he corresponded with Mrs. Robinson); "The First Gentleman of Europe," "The Adonis of fifty" (for writing this Leigh Hunt was sent to prison in 1813). As king he was called, among less offensive titles, "Fum the Fourth." Byron writes (Don Juan, xi, 78):—

And where is Fum the Fourth, our royal bird?

George Cross and Medal. The George Cross is second only to the Victoria Cross. It consists of a plain silver cross, with a medallion showing St. George and the Dragon in the centre. The words "For Gallantry" appear round the medallion, and in the angle of each limb of the cross is the royal cipher. It hangs from a dark blue ribbon. The George Cross was founded in 1940, primarily for civilians, and is awarded only for acts of the greatest heroism or the most conspicuous courage in circumstances of extreme danger. The George Medal (red ribbon with five narrow blue stripes) is awarded in similar circumstances to the Cross where services are not so outstanding as to merit the higher award.

As good as George-a-Green. Resolute-minded; one who will do his duty come what may. George-a-green was the mythical Pinner (Pinner or Pindar) or pound-keeper of Wakefield, who resisted Robin Hood, Will Scarlett, and Little John single-handed when they attempted to commit a trespass in Wakefield.

Were ye bold as George-a-Green,

I shall make bold to turn again.

BUTLER: Hudibras.

Robert Greene wrote a comedy (published 1599) called George-a-Greene, or the Pinner of Wakefield.

Geraint (ge rānt' ge rint'). In Arthurian legend, a tributary prince of Devon, and one of the knights of the Round Table. In the Mabinogion story he is the son of Erbin, as he is in the French original, Chrestien de Troyes' Eric et Enide, from which Tennyson drew his Geraint and Enid in the Idylls of the King.

Geraldine (je' rāl dēn). The Fair Geraldine. Lady Elizabeth Fitzgerald (d. 1589) is so called in the Earl of Surrey's poems. She was the youngest daughter of the Earl of Kildare.

Geranium. The Turks say this was a common mallow changed by the touch of Mohammed's garment.

The word is Gr. geranos, a crane; and the wild plant is called "Crane's Bill," from the resemblance of the fruit to the bill of a crane.

Gerda, or Gerdhr (gēr' dā). In Scandinavian mythology (the Skirnismal), a young giantess, wife of Frey, and daughter of the frost giant Gymer. She is so beautiful that the brightness of her naked arms illumines both air and sea.

Geriatrics (jē ri āt' riks). The study of old age, medically and socially. The word comes from the Greek geron, an old man.

German or germane. Pertaining to, nearly related to, as cousins-german (first cousins), germane to the subject (bearing on or pertinent to the subject). This word has no connexion with the German nation, but is Lat., germanus, of the same germ or stock.

Those that are germane to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman.—Winter's Tale, iv, 3.

Germany. The English name for the German Deutschland (Fr. Allemagne) is the Lat. Germania, the source of which is not certain; it is thought to be the form given by the Romans to the Celtic or Gaulish name for the Teutons; in which case it may be connected either with Celt. gair, neighbour, gavim, war-cry, or ger, spear.

Geoffrey of Monmouth, recording popular eponymic legends, says that Ebrancus, a mythological descendant of Brute (q.v.) and founder of York (Eboracum), had twenty sons and thirty daughters. All the sons, except the eldest, settled in Germany, which was therefore called the land of the germans or brothers. Spenser, speaking of "Ebranck," says:—

An happy man in his first days he was,

And happy father of fair progeny;

For all so many weeks as the year has

So many children he did multiply!

Of which were twenty sons, which did apply

Their minds to praise and chivalrous desire.

Those germans did subdue all Germany,

Of whom it hight. Faerie Queene, II, x, 22.

German comb. The four fingers and thumb. The Germans were the last nation to adopt periwigs; and while the French were never seen without a comb in one hand, the Germans adjusted their hair by running their fingers through it.

He apparelled himself according to the season, and afterwards combed his head with an Alman comb.—RABELAIS: Bk. i, 21.

German silver. A silvery-looking alloy of copper, zinc, and nickel. It was first made in Europe at Hildburghausen, in Germany, in the early 19th century, but had been used by the Chinese time out of mind.

Geronimo (je ron' i mō). The name taken by Goyathlay (One who Yawns), an Apache chieftain who led a sensational Indian campaign against the Whites in 1885-6. He was captured by General Cook, escaped, was recaptured, and imprisoned for some time. He later became a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, and wrote his memoirs, 1906.

Gerrymander (jer i mǎn' dēr). So to divide a county or nation into representative districts as to give one special political party undue advantage over others. The word is derived from Elbridge Gerry (1744-1814), who adopted the scheme in Massachusetts in 1812 when he was governor. Gilbert Stuart, the artist, looking at the map of the new distribution, with a little invention converted it into a salamander. "No, no!" said Russell, when shown it, "not a Sala-mander, Stuart, call it a Gerry-mander."

Hence, to hocus-pocus statistics, election results, etc., so as to make them appear to give other than their true result, or so as to affect the balance.

Gertrude, St. An abbess (d. 664), aunt of Charles Martel's father, Pepin. She founded hospices for pilgrims, and so is a patron saint of travellers, and is said to harbour souls on the first night of their three days' journey to heaven. She is also the protectress against rats and mice, and is sometimes represented as surrounded by them, or with them running about her distaff as she spins.

Geryon (ger'ion). In Greek mythology, a monster with three bodies and three heads, whose oxen ate human flesh, and were guarded by Orthros, a two-headed dog. Hercules slew both Geryon and the dog.

Gessler, Hermann (ges'ler). The tyrannical Austrian governor of the three Forest Cantons of Switzerland who figures in the Tell legend. See TELL, WILLIAM.

Gesta Romanorum (jes' ta rô mâ nôr' ûm). A pseudo-devotional compilation of popular tales in Latin (many from Oriental sources), each with an arbitrary "moral" attached for the use of preachers, assigned—in its collected form—to about the end of the 14th century. The name, meaning "The Acts of the Romans," is merely fanciful. It was first printed at Utrecht about 1472, and the earliest English edition is that of Wynkyn de Worde about 1510, but long before this the people had, through the pulpit, come to know it, and many English poets, from Chaucer to William Morris, have laid it under contribution. Shakespeare drew the plot of Pericles from the Gesta Romanorum, as well as the incident of the three caskets in the Merchant of Venice.

Gestapo (ge sta' pō). A word made up from the German Geheime Staatspolizei, the political police who acquired such sinister fame in Nazi Germany. It was organized by Heinrich Himmler as an independent supreme Reich authority, beyond all judicial or administrative control, and to it was committed the execution of all punitive or repressive measures of the government.

Gestas (jes' tās). The traditional name of the impenitent thief. See DYSMAS.

Get. With its past and past participle got, one of the hardest-worked words in the English language; the following example from a mid-Victorian writer shows some of its uses—and abuses:—

I got on horseback within ten minutes after I got your letter. When I got to Canterbury I got a chaise for town; but I got wet through, and have got such a cold that I shall not get rid of in a hurry. I got to the Treasury about noon, but first of all got shaved and dressed. I soon got into the secret of getting a memorial before the Board, but I could not get an answer then; however, I got intelligence from a messenger that I should get one next morning. As soon as I got back to my inn, I got my supper, and then got to bed. When I got up next morning, I got my breakfast, and, having got dressed, I got out in time to get an answer to my memorial. As soon as I got it, I got into a chaise, and got back to Canterbury by three, and got home for tea. I have got nothing for you, and so adieu.

For phrases such as To get out of bed the wrong side, To get the mitten, To get the wind up, etc., see the main word in the phrase.

How are you getting on? How do things fare with you? How are you prospering?

To get at. To tamper with, bribe, influence to a wrong end; especially used in horse-racing.

To get by. To get along all right, just satisfactorily.

To get down to it. To set about your work or whatever it is you have in hand in down-right earnest.

To get it in the neck. To receive a thorough dressing down, beating, punishment, etc.

To get off. To escape; also (of a girl) to become engaged to be married, or to make acquaintanceship with a man.

To get there. To succeed; to "arrive"; attain one's object.

To get up. To rise from one's bed. To learn, as "I must get up my history." To organize and arrange, as "We will get up a bazaar."

To get well on, or well oiled. To become intoxicated.

Who are you getting at? Who are you trying to take a rise out of? Whose leg are you trying to pull? A question usually asked sarcastically by the intended butt.

Your get-up was excellent. Your style of dress exactly suited the part you professed to enact. In the same way, She was got up regardless, her dress was splendid; money was no object when obtaining it—it was bought "regardless of expense."

Gethsemane (geth sem' á ni). The Orchis maculata, supposed in legendary story to be spotted by the blood of Christ.

Gewgaw. A showy trifle. The word may be an imitation of Fr. jou-jou, a baby word for a toy (jouer, to play), or it may be from givegove, a M.E. reduplication of give.

Ghebers. See GUEBRES.

Ghibelline (gib' e lën). The imperial and aristocratic faction in Italy in the Middle Ages, opposed to the Guelphs (see GUELPHS AND GIBELLINES). The name was the war-cry of the followers of the Emperor Conrad at the battle of Weinsberg (1140), and is the Italian form of Ger. Wäiblingen, an estate in Württemberg, then belonging to the Emperor's family, the House of Hohenstaufen. See GOBLIN.

Ghost. To give up the ghost. To die. The idea is that life is independent of the body, and is due to the habitation of the ghost or spirit in the material body.

Man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?—Job xiv, 10.

The ghost of a chance. The least likelihood. "He has not the ghost of a chance of being elected," not the shadow of a probability.

The ghost walks. Theatrical slang for salaries are about to be paid; when there's no money in the treasury actors say "the ghost won't walk this time." The allusion is to Hamlet i, 1, where Horatio asks the ghost if it "walks" because—

Thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth.

Ghost-word. A term invented by Skeat (Philol. Soc. Transactions, 1886) to denote words that have no real existence but are due to the blunders of scribes, printers, or editors, etc. Like ghosts we may seem to see them, or may fancy that they exist; but they have no real entity. We cannot grasp them. When we would do so, they disappear. Acre-fight and slughorn (q.v.) are examples.

Intrusive letters that have no etymological right in a word but have been inserted through false analogy with words similarly pronounced (like the gh in sprightly or the h in *agha*st) are sometimes called ghost-letters.

Ghost writer. The anonymous author who writes speeches, articles, or even books—especially autobiographies—for which another and better-known person gets the credit.

Giants, i.e. persons well above the average height and size, are by no means uncommon as "sports" or "freaks of nature"; but the widespread belief in pre-existing races or individual instances of giants among primitive peoples is due partly to the ingrained idea that the present generation is invariably a degeneration—"There were giants in the earth in those days" (Gen. vi, 4)—and partly to the existence from remote antiquity of cyclopæan buildings, gigantic sarcophagi, etc., and to the discovery from time to time in pre-scientific days of the bones of extinct monsters which were taken to be those of men. Among instances of the latter may be mentioned the following:—

A skeleton discovered at Lucerne in 1577 19 ft. in height. Dr. Plater is our authority for this measurement.

"Teutobochus," whose remains were discovered near the Rhone in 1613. They occupied a tomb 30 ft. long. The bones of another gigantic skeleton were exposed by the action of the Rhone in 1456. If this was a human skeleton, the height of the living man must have been 30 ft.

Pliny records that an earthquake in Crete exposed the bones of a giant 46 cubits (i.e. roughly 75 ft.) in height; he called this the skeleton of Orion, others held it to be that of Otus.

Anteus is said by Plutarch to have been 60 cubits (about 90 ft.) in height. He furthermore adds that the grave of the giant was opened by Serbonius.

The "monster Polypheme." It is said that his skeleton was discovered at Trapani, in Sicily, in the 14th century. If this skeleton was that of a man, he must have been 300 ft. in height.

Giants of the Bible.

ANAK. The eponymous progenitor of the Anakim (see below). The Hebrew spies said they were mere grasshoppers in comparison with these giants. (Josh. xv, 14; Judges i, 20; and Numb. xiii, 33).

GOLIATH of Gath (1 Sam. xvii, etc.). His height is given as 6 cubits and a span: the cubit varied and might be anything from about 18 in. to 21 in., and a span was about 9 in.; this would give Goliath a height of between 9 ft. 9 in. and 11 ft. 3 in.

OG, King of Bashan (Josh. xii, 4, Deut. iii, 8, iv, 47, etc.), was "of the remnant of the Rephaim." According to tradition, he lived 3,000 years and walked beside the Ark during the Flood. One of his bones formed a bridge over a river. His bed (Deut. iii, 11) was 9 cubits by 4 cubits.

The ANAKIM and REPHAIM were tribes of reputed giants inhabiting the territory on both sides of the Jordan before the coming of the Israelites. The NEPHILIM, the offspring of the sons of God and the daughters of men (Gen. vi, 4), a mythological race of semi-divine heroes, were also giants.

The giants of Greek mythology were, for the most part, sons of Tartarus and Ge. When they attempted to storm heaven, they were hurled to earth by the aid of Hercules, and buried under Mount Etna. Those of Scandinavian mythology were evil geni, dwelling in Jotunheim (giant-land), who had terrible and superhuman powers, could appear and disappear, reduce and extend their stature at will, etc.

Many names of ancient giants will be found in their appropriate places in this Dictionary.

Giants of Later Tradition.

ANDRONICUS II was 10 ft. in height. He was grandson of Alexius Comnenus. Nicetas asserts that he had seen him.

CHARLEMAGNE was nearly 8 ft. in height, and was so strong he could squeeze together three horseshoes with his hands.

ELEAZER was 7 cubits (nearly 11 ft.). Vitellus sent this giant to Rome; he is mentioned by Josephus. Goliath was 6 cubits and a span.

GABARA, the Arabian giant, was 9 ft. 9 in. This Arabian giant is mentioned by Pliny, who says he was the tallest man seen in the days of Claudius.

HARDRADA (Harold) was nearly 8 ft in height ("5 ells of Norway"), and was called "the Norway giant."

MAXIMINUS I was 8 ft. 6 in. in height. Roman emperor from about 235 to 238.

ÖSEN (Heinrich) was 7 ft. 6 in. in height at the age of 27, and weighed above 37 st. He was born in Norway.

PORUS was 5 cubits in height (about 7½ ft.). He was an Indian king who fought against Alexander the Great near the Hydaspes. (Quintus Curtius: De rebus gestis Alexandri Magni.) Josephus speaks of a Jew 10 ft. 2 in.

Becanus asserts that he had seen a man nearly 10 ft. high, and a woman fully 10 ft.

Gasper Bauhin speaks of a Swiss 8 ft. in height. Del Rio tells us he himself saw a Piedmontese in 1572 more than 9 ft. in height.

A Mr. Warren (in Notes and Queries, August 14th, 1875) said that his father knew a woman 9 ft. in height, and adds "her head touched the ceiling of a good-sized room."

Vanderbrook says he saw in the Congo a black man 9 ft. high.

A giant was exhibited at Rouen in the early part of the 18th century 17 ft. 10 in. (!) in height.

Gorapus, the surgeon, tells us of a Swedish giantess, who, at the age of 9, was over 10 ft. in height.

Turner, the naturalist, tells us he saw in Brazil a giant 12 ft. in height.

M. Thetev published, in 1575, an account of a South American giant, the skeleton of which he measured. It was 11 ft. 5 in.

Giants of Modern Times.

BAMFORD (Edward) was 7 ft. 4 in. He died in 1768, and was buried in St. Dunstan's churchyard.

BATES (Captain) was 7 ft. 11½ in. He was a native of Kentucky, and was exhibited in London in 1871. His wife, Anne Hannen Swan, a native of Nova Scotia, was the same height.

BLACKER (Henry) was 7 ft. 4 in. and most symmetrical. He was born at Cuckfield, in Sussex, in 1724, and was called "The British Giant."

BRADLEY (William) was 7 ft. 9 in. in height. He was born in 1787, and died 1820. His birth is duly registered in the parish church of Market Weighton, in Yorkshire, and his right hand is preserved in the museum of the College of Surgeons.

BRICE (M. J.) exhibited under the name of Anak, was 7 ft. 8 in. in height at the age of 26. He was born in 1840 at Ramonchamp, in the Vosges, and visited England 1862-5. His arms had a stretch of 95½ in.

BRUSTED (Von) was 8 ft. in height. This Norwegian giant was exhibited in London in 1880.

BUSBY (John) was 7 ft. 9 in. in height, and his brother was about the same. They were natives of Darfield, in Yorkshire.

CHANG, the Chinese giant, was 8 ft. 2 in. in height. He was exhibited in London in 1865-6, and again in 1880.

COTTER (Patrick) was 8 ft. 7½ in. in height. This Irish giant died at Clifton, Bristol, in 1802. A cast of his hand is preserved in the museum of the College of Surgeons.

DANIEL, the porter of Oliver Cromwell, was a man of gigantic stature.

ELEIZEGUE (Joachim) was 7 ft. 10 in. in height. He was a Spaniard, and exhibited in the Cosmorama Regent Street, London, in the mid-19th century.

EVANS (William) was 8 ft. at death. He was a porter of Charles I, and died in 1632.

FRANK (Big) was 7 ft. 8 in. in height. He was Francis Sheridan, an Irishman, and died in 1870.

FRENZ (Louis) was 7 ft. 4 in. in height. He was called "the French giant," and his left hand is preserved in the museum of the College of Surgeons.

GILLY was 8 ft. This Swedish giant was exhibited in the early part of the 10th century.

GORDON (Alice) was 7 ft. in height. She was a native of Essex, and died in 1737, at the age of 19.

HALE (Robert) was 7 ft. 6 in. in height. He was born at Somerton, in Norfolk, and was called "the Norfolk giant" (1820-62).

HOLMES (Benjamin) was 7 ft. 6 in. in height. He was a Northumberland man, and was made sword-bearer to the Corporation of Worcester. He died in 1892.

LOUISHSKIN. A Russian giant of 8 ft. 5 in.; drum-major of the Imperial Guards.

MCDONALD (James) was 7 ft. 6 in. in height. Born in Cork, Ireland, and died in 1760.

MCDONALD (Samuel) was 6 ft. 10 in. in height. This Scot was usually called "Big Sam." He was the Prince of Wales's footman, and died in 1802.

MAGRATH (Cornelius) was 7 ft. 10 in. in height at the age of 16. He was an orphan reared by Bishop Berkeley, and died at the age of 20 (1740-60).

MELLON (Edmund) was 7 ft. 6 in. in height at the age of 19. He was born at Port Leicester, in Ireland (1665-84).

MIDDLETON (John) was 9 ft. 3 in. in height. (Cp. GABARA, above.) "His hand was 17 inches long and 8½ broad." He was born at Hale, Lancashire, in the reign of James I. (Dr. Plott: Natural History of Staffordshire, p. 295.)

MILLER (Maximilian Christopher) was 8 ft. in height. His hand measured 12 in., and his forefinger was 9 in. long. This Saxon giant died in London at the age of 60 (1674-1734).

MURPHY was 8 ft. 10 in. in height. An Irish giant of the late 18th century. He died at Marseilles.

O'BRIEN, or CHARLES BYRNE, was 8 ft. 4 in. in height. The skeleton of this Irish giant is preserved in the College of Surgeons. He died in Cockspur Street, London (1761-83).

O'BRIEN (Patrick), was 8 ft. 7 in. in height. He died August 3, 1804, aged 39.

RIECHART (J. N.) was 8 ft. 4 in. in height. He was a native of Friedberg, and both his father and mother were of gigantic stature.

SALMERON (Martin) was 7 ft. 4 in. in height. He was called "The Mexican Giant."

SAM (Big). See MCDONALD.

SHERIDAN. See FRANK.

SWAN (Anne Hannen). See BATES.

TOLLER (James) was 8 ft. at the age of 24. He died in February, 1819.

In the museum of Trinity College, Dublin, is a human skeleton 8 ft. 6 in. in height.

Thomas Hall, of Willingham, was 3 ft. 9 in. at the age of 3.

Giants, Battle of the. Melagnano or Marignano, situated on the Lambro, 9 miles south-east of Milan. On September 13-14th, 1515 the French under Francis I defeated the Swiss mercenaries defending the city of Milan. The same battlefield was the scene of the French victory over the Austrians, June 8th, 1859.

Giant's Causeway. A formation of prismatic basaltic columns, projecting into the sea about 8 miles E.N.E. of Portrush, Co. Antrim, on the north coast of Ireland. It is fabled to be the beginning of a road to be constructed by the giants across the channel, reaching from Ireland to Scotland.

Giants' Dance, The. Stonehenge, which Geoffrey of Monmouth says was removed from Killaraus, a mountain in Ireland, by the magical skill of Merlin.

Giants' Leap, The. A name popularly given in many mountainous districts to two prominent rocks separated from each other by a wide chasm or open stretch of country across which some giant is fabled to have leapt while being pursued and so to have baffled his followers.

Giants' Ring, The. A prehistoric circular mound near Milltown, Co. Down, Ireland. It is 580 ft. in diameter, and has a cromlech in the centre.

Giants' War with Zeus, The. The War of the Giants and the War of the Titans should be kept distinct. The latter was after Zeus became god of heaven and earth, the former was before that time. Kronos, a Titan, had been exalted by his brothers to the supremacy, but Zeus dethroned him, after ten years' contest, and hurled the Titans into hell. The other war was a revolt by the giants against Zeus, which was readily put down by the help of the other gods and the aid of Hercules.

Giaour (jou' èr). Among Mohammedans, one who is not an adherent of their faith, especially a Christian; generally used with a contemptuous or insulting implication. The word is a variant of Guebre (q.v.).

The city won for Allah from the Giaour,
The Giaour from Othman's race again may wrest.
BYRON: Childe Harold, c. ii, st. 77.

Gib Cat (jib kât). A tom-cat. The male cat used to be called Gilbert. Tibert or Tybalt (q.v.) is the French form of Gilbert, and hence Chaucer, or whoever it was that translated that part of the Romance of the Rose, renders "Thibert le Cas" by "Gibbe, our Cat" (line 6204). Generally used of a castrated cat.

I am as melancholy as a gib cat or a lugged bear.—
1 Henry IV, i, 2.

Gibberish (jib' er ish). Unmeaning talk; words without meaning; formerly, the lingo of rogues and gipsies. Johnson says in his Dictionary—

As it was anciently written gebrish it is probably derived from the chymical cant [i.e. the mystical language of the alchemists], and originally implied the jargon of Gebir and his tribe.

Geber, the Arabian, was by far the greatest alchemist of the 11th century, and wrote several treatises in mystical jargon. Friar Bacon, in 1282, furnishes a specimen of this gibberish. He is giving the prescription for making gunpowder, and says:—

Sed tamen salis-petræ
LURU MONE CAP URBE
Et sulphuris.

The second line is merely an anagram of Carbonum pulvere (pulverized charcoal).

Gibeonite (gib' i on it). A slave's slave, a workman's labourer, a farmer's under-strapper, or Jack-of-all-work. The Gibeonites were made "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to the Israelites (Josh. ix, 27).

Gibraltar (jīb rol' tār). The "Calpe" and "Pillars of Hercules" of the ancients. The modern name is a corruption of Gebel-al-Tarik, the Hill of Tarik, Tarik being a Saracen leader who, under the orders of Mousa, landed at Calpe in 710, utterly defeated Roderick, the Gothic King of Spain, and built a castle on the rock. It was taken from the Moors in 1462; in 1704 a combined force of English and Dutch took the place, since when it has remained in British hands. The Spaniards and French besieged it in 1704-5, the Spaniards in 1727, and the Spaniards and French in 1779-83, when it was held by Lord Heathfield.

Gibson Girl. A type of feminine beauty characteristic of its period depicted by Charles Dana Gibson (1867-1944) in several popular series of black-and-white drawings, dating from 1896. His delineations of the American girl enjoyed an enormous vogue, culminating in the series entitled The Education of Mr. Pipp which appeared in Colliers Weekly (1899) and formed the basis of a play of that name. The Gibson girl, who was depicted in various poses and occupations, was tall, bending forward somewhat from the waist, her individuality accentuated by the period costume of sweeping skirts and large hats.

Gibus (jī' būs). An opera-hat named after its inventor, a Parisian hat-maker in the early 19th century. It is a cloth top-hat with a collapsible crown that enables the wearer to fold it up when not in use.

Giff Gaff. Give and take; good turn for good turn.

Gifford Lectureships founded in the universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and St. Andrews in 1885 by a bequest of Adam Lord Gifford. Their subject is Natural Theology, without reference to creed or sect.

Gift-horse. Don't look a gift-horse in the mouth. When a present is made, do not inquire too minutely into its intrinsic value. The proverb has its counterpart in many languages.

Giggle. Have you found a giggle's nest? A question asked in Norfolk when anyone laughs immoderately and senselessly. The meaning is obvious—have you found the place where giggles are made? Cp. GAFE'S NEST.

Gig-lamps. Slang for spectacles, especially large round ones; the reason is obvious.

Giglet. Formerly a light, wanton woman, the word is still in common use in the West of England for a giddy, romping, tomboy girl; and in Salop a flighty person is called a "giggle."

If this be
The recompense of striving to preserve
A wanton giglet honest, very shortly
Twill make all mankind panders.
MASSINGER: The Fatal Dowry, III, i (1619).

Gigman. A quite respectable person (in contempt); hence gigmanity, smug respectability, a word invented by Carlyle. A witness in the trial for murder of John Thurtell (1823) said, "I always thought him [Thurtell] a respectable man." And being asked by the judge why he thought so, replied, "He kept a gig."

Gigolo (jīg' ō lō). A French slang term for a prostitute's bully, but more commonly applied to a lounge lizard, a fellow who hires himself out as a dancing-partner or male escort to wealthy women.

Gilbertian (gil bër' ti ān). A term applied to anything humorously topsy-turvy, any situation such as those W. S. Gilbert (1836-1911) depicted in the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. Of these perhaps the Mikado (1885) furnishes the best examples.

Gilbertines (gil' bër tīnz). An English religious order founded in the 12th century by St. Gilbert of Sempringham, Lincolnshire. The monks observed the rule of the Augustinians and the nuns that of the Benedictines.

Gild. To gild the pill. It was the custom of old-time doctors—quacks and genuine—to make their nauseous pills more attractive, at least to the sight, by gilding them over a thin coating of sugar. Hence the phrase means to make an unattractive thing at least appear desirable.

Gilded Chamber. The. A familiar name for the House of Lords.

Gilderoy. A famous cattle-stealer and highwayman of Perthshire, who is said to have robbed Cardinal Richelieu in the presence of the king, and hanged a judge. He was hanged in 1636; he was noted for his handsome person, and his real name was Patrick Macgregor. There are ballads on him in Percy's Reliques, Ritson's collection, etc., and a modern one by Campbell.

' To be hung higher than Gilderoy's kite is to be punished more severely than the very worst criminal. The greater the crime, the higher the gallows, was at one time a practical legal axiom. The gallows of Montrose was 30 feet high. The ballad says:—

Of Gilderoy sae fraid they were
They bound him mickle strong,
Tull Edenburrow they led him thair
And on a gallows hong;
They hong him high aboon the rest,
He was so trim a boy . . .

Giles. A mildly humorous generic name for a farmer; the "farmer's boy" in Bloomfield's poem was so called.

Giles. St. Patron saint of cripples. The tradition is that Childeric, king of France, accidentally wounded the hermit in the knee when hunting; and the hermit, that he might the better mortify the flesh, refusing to be cured remained a cripple for life.

His day is September 1st, and his symbol a hind, in allusion to the "heaven directed hind" which went daily to his cave near the mouth of the Rhone to give him milk. He is sometimes represented as an old man with an arrow in his knee and a hind by his side.

Churches dedicated to St. Giles were usually situated in the outskirts of a city, and originally without the walls, cripples and beggars not being permitted to pass the gates. See CRIPPLE-GATE.

Giles of Antwerp. Giles Coignet, the Flemish painter (1530-1600).

Gills. Humorous slang for the mouth.

Blue about the gills. Down in the mouth; depressed looking.

Rosy, or red about the gills. Flushed with liquor.

White in the gills. Showing unmistakable signs of fear or terror—sometimes of sickness.

Gillie. A Gaelic word for a Highland manservant or attendant, especially one who waits on a sportsman fishing or hunting.

Gillies' Hill. In the battle of Bannockburn (1314) King Robert Bruce ordered all the gillies, drivers of carts, and camp followers to go behind a height. These, when the battle seemed to favour the Scots, desirous of sharing in the plunder, rushed from their concealment with such arms as they could lay hands on; and the English, thinking them to be a new army, fled in panic. The height was ever after called The Gillies' Hill.

Gillie-wet-foot. A barefooted Highland lad.

Gillites. (U.S.A.). Calvinistic followers of Dr. Gill in the District of Columbia.

Gillyflower (jil i flou' ér). Not the July-flower, but Fr. girofée, from girofle (a clove), called by Chaucer "gylofre." The common stock, the wallflower, the rocket, the clove pink, and several other plants are so called. (Gr. karyophullon; Lat. caryophyllum.)

The fairest flowers of the season.

Are our carnations and streaked gillyflowers.

Winter's Tale, iv, 2.

Gilpin, John (gil' pin), of Cowper's famous ballad (1782) is a caricature of a Mr. Beyer, an eminent linendraper at the end of Paternoster Row, where it joins Cheapside. He died in 1791, at the age of 98. It was Lady Austin who told the adventure to our domestic poet, to divert him from his melancholy. The marriage adventure of Commodore Truncheon in Peregrine Pickle is very similar to the wedding-day adventure of John Gilpin.

John Gilpin was a citizen

Of credit and renown;

A trainband captain eke was he

Of famous London town.

Gilt-edge Investments. A phrase introduced in the last quarter of the 19th century to denote securities of the most reliable character, such as Consols and other Government and Colonial stock, first mortgages, debentures, and shares in first-rate companies, etc.

Gimlet-eyed (gim' let), keen-eyed, very sharp-sighted, given to watching or peering into things. A gimlet-eye is occasionally applied to a squint.

Gimmer. A jointed hinge; in Somersetshire, gimmace. These words, as also gimmel, are variants of gemel, a ring formed of two interlaced rings, from Lat. gemellus, the diminutive of geminus, a twin.

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips . . .

And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel bit

Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless.

Henry V, iv, 2.

Gin. A contraction of Geneva, the older name of the spirit, from Fr. genièvre (O.Fr. genèvre), juniper, the berries of which were at one time used to flavour the extract of malt in the manufacture of gin.

Gin-sling. A long drink composed mainly of gin and lemon. It has been attributed to John Collins, famous bar-tender of Limmer's Hotel in London, but it undoubtedly dates from before his time and is found in the U.S.A. by 1800.

Ginevra (jin ev' ra). A young Italian bride who hid in a trunk with a spring-lock. The lid fell upon her, and she was not discovered till the body had become a skeleton. (ROGERS: Italy.)

Gingerbread. Tawdry wares, showy but worthless. The allusion is to the gingerbread cakes fashioned like men, animals, etc., and profusely decorated with gold leaf or Dutch leaf, which looked like gold, commonly sold at fairs up to the middle of the 19th century.

To take the gilt off the gingerbread. To destroy the illusion; to appropriate all the fun or profit and leave the dull base behind.

Gingerly. Cautiously, with hesitating, mincing, or faltering steps. The word is over 400 years old in English; it has nothing to do with ginger, but is probably from O.Fr. gensour, comparative of gent, delicate, dainty.

They spend their goods . . . upon their dancing minions, that mins it fel ginerlie, God wot, tripping like gotes, that an egge would not brek under their feet.—STURGES: Anatomy of Abuses, II, 1, (1583).

Gingham (ging' am). A playful equivalent of umbrella; properly, a cotton or linen fabric dyed usually in stripes or checks; so called from a Malay word ginggang (that came to us through Dutch), meaning striped. Littré's derivation of gingham from Guingamp, in Brittany, has nothing to support it.

Ginnunga Gap (gi nung' ga). The abyss between Niflheim (the region of fog) and Muspelheim (the region of heat). It existed before either land or sea, heaven or earth as a chaotic whirlpool. (Scandinavian mythology.)

Giotto's O (jot' ô). The old story goes that the Pope wishing to employ artists from all over Italy sent a messenger to collect specimens of their work. When the man visited Giotto di Bondone (1276-1337) the artist paused for a moment from the picture he was working on and with his paintbrush drew a perfect circle on a piece of paper. In some surprise the man returned to the Pope, who, appreciating the perfection of Giotto's artistry and skill by this unerring circle, required no further proof but employed Giotto forthwith. Thus the story—ancient but unauthenticated.

I saw . . . that the practical teaching of the masters of Art was summed up by the O of Giotto.—RUSKIN: Queen of the Air, iii.

Giovanni, Don. See DON JUAN.

Gipsy. A member of a dark-skinned nomadic race which first appeared in England about the beginning of the 16th century, and, as they were thought to have come from Egypt, were named Egyptians, which soon became corrupted to Gypcians, and so to its present form. They call themselves Romany (from Gypsy rom, a man, husband), which is also the name of their language—a debased Hindi dialect with large additions of words from Persian, Armenian, and many European languages.

The name of the largest group of European gypsies is Atzigan; this, in Turkey and Greece, became Tshingian, in the Balkans and Roumania Tsigan, in Hungary Czigan, in Germany Zigeuner, in Italy Zingari, in Portugal Cigano, and in Spain Gitano. The original name is said to mean "dark man." See also BOHEMIAN.

Serious study of the Gypsies, their origin, history, language, etc., has been carried out by George Borrow, R. Hindes-Groome, B. Vesey-Fitzgerald, and others.

Giralda. The name given to the great square tower of the cathedral at Seville (formerly a Moorish minaret), which is surmounted by a statue of Faith, so pivoted as to turn with the wind. Giralda is a Spanish word, and means a weather-vane.

Gird. To gird up the loins. To prepare for hard work or a journey. The Jews wore a girdle only when at work or on a journey. Even to the present day, Eastern people who wear loose dresses gird them about the loins.

To gird with the sword. To raise to a peerage. It was the Saxon method of investiture to an earldom, continued after the Conquest. Thus, Richard I "girded with the sword" Hugh de Pudsey, the aged Bishop of Durham, making (as he said) "a young earl of an old prelate."

Girdle. A good name is better than a golden girdle. A good reputation is better than money. It used to be customary to carry money in the belt, or in a purse suspended from it, and a girdle of gold meant a "purse of gold."

Children under the girdle. Not yet born.

He has a large mouth but small girdle. Great expenses but small means.

He has undone her girdle. Taken her for his wife. The Roman bride wore a chaplet of flowers on her head, and a girdle of sheep's wool about her waist. A part of the marriage ceremony was for the bridegroom to loose this.

If he be angry, he knows how to turn his girdle (Much Ado About Nothing, v, 1). He knows how to prepare himself to fight. Before wrestlers engaged in combat, they turned the buckle of their girdle behind them. Thus, Sir Ralph Winwood writes to Mr. Secretary Cecil:

I said, "What I spake was not to make him angry." He replied, "If I were angry, I might turn the buckle of my girdle behind me."—Dec 17, 1602.

The girdle of Venus. See CESTUS.

To put a girdle round the earth. To travel or go round it. Puck says, "I'll put a girdle round about the earth in forty minutes." (Midsummer Night's Dream, ii, 2.)

Girl. This word is not present in Anglo-Saxon, but appears in Middle English (13th cent.), and its etymology has given rise to a host of guesses. It was formerly applicable to a child of either sex (a boy was sometimes distinguished as a "knave-girl"), and is nowadays applied to an unmarried woman of almost any age. It is probably a diminutive of some lost word cognate with Pomeranian goer and Old Low German gor, a child. It appears nearly 70 times in Shakespeare, but only twice in the Authorized Version (Joel iii, 3; Zech. viii, 5).

Girl Guides. The opposite number to the Boy Scouts and organized in 1910 by General Baden-Powell and his sister, Miss Agnes Baden-Powell. The training is essentially the same as that of the Scouts and is based on similar promises and laws. There are three sections: Brownies, aged 8 to 11; Guides, 11 to 16; and Rangers for girls over 16 years of age.

In U.S.A., where they were organized in 1921, they are called Girl Scouts.

Girondists, or The Gironde. The moderate republicans in the French Revolution (1791-93). So called from the department of Gironde, which chose for the Legislative Assembly men who greatly distinguished themselves for their oratory, and formed a political party. They were subsequently joined by Brissot (and were hence sometimes called the Brissotins), Condorcet, and the adherents of Roland.

They were the ruling party in 1792 but were overthrown in the Convention by the Mountain in 1793 and many of their leaders were executed, including Brissot, Vergniaud, Genonné, Ducos and Sillery.

Gis. A corruption of Jesus or J. H. S. Ophelia says, "By Gis and by St. Charity" (Hamlet, iv, 5).

Gitano. See GRPSY.

Give. For phrases such as Give the devil his due, Give a dog a bad name and hang him, To give one beans, etc., see the principal noun.

A given name. In American usage a given name is a first, or Christian name.

A give-away is a revealing or betraying circumstance.

To give and take. To be fair; in intercourse with others to practise forbearance and consideration. In horse-racing a give and take plate is a prize for a race in which the runners which exceed a standard height carry more, and those that come short of it less, than the standard weight.

To give away. To hand the bride in marriage to the bridegroom, to act the part of the bride's father. Also, to let out a secret, inadvertently or on purpose; to betray an accomplice.

To give in. To confess oneself beaten, to yield.

To give it anyone, to give it him hot. To scold or thrash a person. As "I gave it him right and left." "I'll give it you when I catch you."

To give oneself away. To betray oneself by some thoughtless action or remark; to damage one's own cause by carelessly letting something out.

To give out. To make public. Also, to come to an end, to become exhausted; as "My money has quite given out."

To give what for. To administer a sound thrashing.

To give way. To break down; to yield.

Gizzard. The strong, muscular second stomach of birds, where the food is ground, attributed humorously to man in some phrases.

That stuck in his gizzard. Annoyed him, was more than he could stomach, or digest.

Glacis. The sloping bank on the outer edge of the covered way in old fortifications.

Glad. To give the glad eye. See EYE.

Glad rags. A demoded slang term for evening dress.

Gladiators. Those who fought in the ring in Rome, originally criminals who thus had the choice of death or liberty. They first appeared at the funeral ceremonies of the Romans in 263 B.C.; they were introduced into festivals about 215 B.C. Such combats were suppressed in the Eastern Empire by Constantine in A.D. 325 and in the West by Theodoric in A.D. 500.

Gladstone. A leather bag of various sizes, all convenient to be carried, is so called from the famous statesman William Ewart Gladstone (1809-98). His name was also given to cheap claret, because, in 1860, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, he reduced the duty on French wines.

Glæsting's Sow. See GLASTONBURY.

Glamorgan (glà mór' gán). Geoffrey of Monmouth says that Cundah and Morgan, the sons of Gonorill and Regan, usurped the crown at the death of Cordellia. The former resolved to reign alone, chased Morgan into Wales, and slew him at the foot of a hill, hence called Gla-Morgan or Glyn-Morgan, valley of Morgan. (See Spenser: Faerie Queene II, x, 33.) The name is really Welsh for "the district by the side of the sea" (gŵlad, district, mor, the sea, gant, side).

Glasgow of. See KENTIGFRN, ST.

Glasgow magistrate. A salt herring; so called because when George IV visited Glasgow some wag placed a salt herring on the iron guard of the carriage of a well-known magistrate who formed one of the deputation to receive him.

Glass. Glass breaker. A wine-bibber. In the early part of the 19th century it was by no means unusual with toppers to break off the stand of their wineglass, so that they might not be able to set it down, but were compelled to drink it clean off, without heel-taps.

Glass House. Army slang for a military prison. It was originally applied to the military prison at North Camp, Aldershot, which had a glass roof.

Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. Those who are open to criticism should be very careful how they criticize others. An old proverb found in varying forms from the time of Chaucer at least (Troilus and Cresseide, Bk. ii). Cp. also Matt. vii, 1-4.

Glass slipper (of Cinderella). See CINDER-ELLA.

Glasse, Mrs. Hannah. A name immortalized by the reputed saying in a cookery book, "First catch your hare" (which see under CATCH).

Glassite. A Sandemanian (q.v.).

Glastonbury. An ancient town in Somerset, dating from Roman times, and famous in the Arthurian and Grail cycles as the place to which Joseph of Arimathea came, and as the burial place of King Arthur (see AVALON). It was here that Joseph planted his staff—the famous Glastonbury Thorn—which took root and burst into leaf every Christmas Eve. This name is now given to a variety of Cratægus, or hawthorn, which flowers about old Christmas Day, and is fabled to have sprung from Joseph's staff.

The name, A.S. Glæstingaburh, means "the city of Glæstings." Its origin, says Professor Freeman, lurks in a grotesque shape, in that legend of Glæsting and his sow, a manifestly English legend, which either William of Malmesbury himself or some interpolator at Glastonbury has strangely thrust into the midst of the British legends. Glæsting's lost sow leads him by a long journey to an apple-tree by the old church; pleased with the land, he takes his family, the Glæstingas, to dwell there.—English Towns, p. 95.

Glauber Salts (glou' bér). A strong purgative, so called from Johann Rudolph Glauber (1604-68), a German alchemist who discovered it in 1658 in his search for the philosopher's stone. It is sodium sulphate, crystallized below 34° C.

Glaucus (glaw' kûs). The name of a number of heroes in classical legend, including:

(1) A fisherman of Bœotia, who became a sea-god endowed with the gift of prophecy and instructed Apollo in the art of soothsaying. Milton alludes to him in Comus (l. 895), and Spenser mentions him in the Faerie Queene (IV, xi, 13):

And Glaucus, that wise soothsayer understood and Keats gives his name to the old magician whom Endymion met in Neptune's hall beneath the sea (Endymion, Bk. iii). See also SCYLLA.

(2) A son of Sisyphus who would not allow his horses to breed; the goddess of Love so infuriated them that they killed him. Hence, the name is given to one who is so overfond of horses that he is ruined by them.

(3) A commander of the Lycians in the War of Troy (Iliad, Bk. vi.) who was connected by ties of ancient family friendship with his enemy, Diomed. When they met in battle they not only refrained from fighting but exchanged arms in token of amity. As the armour of the Lycian was of gold, and that of the Greek of brass, it was like bartering precious stones for French paste. Hence the phrase A Glaucus swap.

Gleek (Ger. gleich, like). An old card-game, the object being to get three cards all alike, as three aces, three kings, etc. Four cards all alike, as four aces, four kings, etc., is known as mournival.

A mournival of aces, gleek of knaves,
Just nine a-piece. Albumazar, iii, 5.
Poole in his English Parnassus (about 1650) called the four elements Nature's first mournival.

Gleek is played by three persons. The two and threes are thrown out of the pack; twelve cards are then dealt to each player, and eight are left for stock, which is offered in rotation to the players for purchase. The trumps are called Tiddy, Tumbler, Tib, Tom, and Tower. Mention of it is of frequent occurrence in 16th- and early-17th-century literature.

Gleipnir (glíp' nér) (Old Norse, the fetter). In Scandinavian legend, the chain by which the wolf Fenrir was bound. It was extremely light, and made of the noise made by the footfalls of a cat, the roots of the mountains, the sinews of bears, the breath of fishes, the beards of women, and the spittle of birds. When the chain breaks, the wolf will be free and the end of the world will be at hand.

Glencoe. The massacre of Glencoe. The treacherous massacre of the Macdonalds of Glencoe on February 13th, 1692. Pardon had been offered to all Jacobites who submitted on or before December 31st, 1691. Mac-Ian, chief of the Macdonalds of Glencoe, delayed till the last minute, and, on account of the state of the roads, did not make his submission before January 6th. The Master of Stair (Sir John Dalrymple) obtained the king's permission "to extirpate the set of thieves." Accordingly, on February 1st, 120 soldiers, led by a Captain Campbell, marched to Glencoe, told the clan they were come as friends, and lived peaceably among them for twelve days; but on the morning of the 13th, the glenmen, to the number of thirty-eight, were scandalously murdered, their huts set on fire, and their flocks and herds driven off as plunder. Thomas Campbell and Scott have written poems, and Talfourd a play on the subject.

Glendoveer (glen dô vēr'). The name given by Southey in his Curse of Kehama to a kind of sylph, the most lovely of the good spirits. The name is Sanskrit ganharva through the Fr. grandover.

I am a blessed Glendoveer,
'Tis mine to speak and yours to hear.
Rejected Addresses (Imitation of Southey).

Glengarry. A narrow valley in Inverness-shire after which the Glengarry bonnet, or cap, is named.

Glim. See DOUSE THE GLIM.

Global (glô' bál). A word that came into use in World War II, meaning world-wide, extending to every part of the globe.

Gloria (glôr' i a). A cup of coffee with brandy in it instead of milk; also, a mixture of silk and wool used for covering umbrellas, etc.

Gloria in Excelsis (glôr i a in ek sel' sis). The doxology, "Glory be to the Father," etc., so called because it begins with the words sung by the angels at Bethlehem. The first verse is said to be by St. Basil, and the latter portion is ascribed to Telephorus, 139 A.D. During the Arian controversy it ran thus: "Glory be to the Father by the Son, and in the Holy Ghost."

Gloriana (glôr i an' à). Spenser's name in his Faerie Queene for the typification of Queen Elizabeth. She held an annual feast for twelve days, during which time adventurers appeared before her to undertake whatever task she chose to impose upon them. On one occasion twelve knights presented themselves before her, and their exploits form the scheme of Spenser's allegory of which only six and a half books remain.

Glory, glorious. Hand of Glory. In folk lore, a dead man's hand, preferably one cut from the body of a man who has been hanged, soaked in oil and used as a magic torch by thieves. Robert Graves points out that Hand of Glory is a translation of the French main de gloire, a corruption of mandragore, the plant mandragora, whose roots had a similar magic value to thieves. See HAND.

Glory-hole. A small room, cupboard, etc., where all sorts of rubbish and odds and ends are heaped.

Glory be to the Father. See GLORIA IN EXCELSIS.

Glorious John. John Dryden, the poet (1631-1701). George Borrow gave this name to the publisher John Murray (1778-1843).

Glorious First of June. June 1st, 1794, when Lord Howe, who commanded the Channel fleet, gained a decisive victory over the French off Cape Ushant.

Glorious Uncertainty of the Law, The. The toast at a dinner given to the judges and counsel in Sergeant's Hall. The occasion was the elevation of Lord Mansfield to the peerage and to the Lord Chief Justiceship (1756), and was somewhat prophetic of the legal decisions and innovations that were to follow.

Gloucester (glos' tēr). The Celtic name of the town was Caer Glou (bright city); the Romans Latinized this to Glevum colonia; the Saxons restored the old Glou, and added ceaster, to signify it had been a Roman camp.

Glove. In the days of chivalry it was customary for knights to wear a lady's glove in their helmets, and to defend it with their life.

One ware on his headpiece his ladies sleeve, and another bare on his helme the glove of his dearlyng.
—HALL: Chronicle, Henry IV.

On ceremonial occasions gloves are not worn in the presence of royalty, because one is to stand unarmed, with the helmet off the head and gauntlets off the hands, to show that there is no hostile intention.

Gloves used to be worn by the clergy to indicate that their hands are clean and not open to bribes; and in an assize without a criminal, the sheriff presents the judge with a pair of white gloves. Anciently, judges were not allowed to wear gloves on the bench; so to give a judge a pair of gloves symbolized that he need not take his seat. But, on the contrary, bishops were sometimes given gloves as a symbol of accession to their See. The Glovers Company of London was founded in 1556.

Glove money. A bribe, a perquisite: so called from the ancient custom of a client presenting a pair of gloves to a counsel who undertook a cause. Mrs. Croaker presented Sir Thomas More, the Lord Chancellor, with a pair of gloves lined with forty pounds in "angels," as a "token." Sir Thomas kept the gloves, but returned the lining. Relics of this ancient custom still survive here and there in the presentation of gloves to those attending weddings and funerals.

There also existed at one time the claim of a pair of gloves by a lady who chose to salute a gentleman caught napping in her company.

Hand in glove. Sworn friends; on most intimate terms; close companions, like glove and hand.

He bit his glove. He resolved on mortal revenge. On the Border, to bite the glove was considered a pledge of deadly vengeance.

Stern Rutherford right little said,

But bit his glove and shook his head.

SCOTT: Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Here I throw down my glove. I challenge you. In allusion to an ancient custom of a challenger throwing his glove or gauntlet at the feet of the person challenged, and bidding him to pick it up. To take up the glove means to accept the challenge.

I will throw my glove to Death itself, that there's no maculation in thy heart.—Troilus and Cressida, iv, 4.

Glubbaddrib (glüb düb' drib). The land of sorcerers and magicians visited by Gulliver in his Travels. (SWIFT.)

Gluckists (gluk ists). A foolish rivalry excited Paris from 1774 until 1780 between the admirers of Gluck and those of Piccinni. Marie Antoinette favoured Gluck, and many in Young France leant towards the rival claimant. In the streets, coffee-houses, private houses, and even schools, the merits of Gluck and Piccinni were canvassed; and all Paris was ranged on one side or the other.

Glumdalclitch (glüm däl' klitch). A girl, nine years old, and forty feet high, who had charge of Gulliver in Brobdingnag. (SWIFT: Gulliver's Travels.)

Glutton, The. Vitellius, the Roman emperor (15-69), reigned from January 4th to December 22nd, A.D. 69, was so called. See APICIUS.

Gnome (nôm). According to the Rosicrucian system, a misshapen elemental spirit, dwelling in the bowels of the earth, and guarding the mines and quarries. The word seems to have been first used (perhaps invented) by Paracelsus, and to be Gr. ge-nomos, earth-dweller. Cp. SALAMANDER.

The four elements are inhabited by spirits called sylphs, gnomes, nymphs, and salamanders. The gnomes or demons of the earth, delight in mischief.—POPE: Pref. Letter to the Rape of the Lock.

Gnostics (nos' tiks). The knowers, opposed to believers, various sects in the first six centuries of the Christian era, which tried to accommodate Christianity to the speculations of Pythagoras, Plato, and other Greek and Oriental philosophers. They taught that knowledge, rather than mere faith, is the true key of salvation. In the Gnostic creed Christ is esteemed merely as an eon or divine attribute personified, like Mind, Truth, Logos, Church, etc., the whole of which eons made up this divine pleroma or fullness.

Go. A go. A fix, a scrape; as in here's a go or here's a pretty go—here's a mess or awkward state of affairs. Also a share, portion, or tot, as a go of gin.

A go-between. One who acts as an intermediary; one who interposes between two parties.

All the go. All the fashion, quite in vogue.

Her carte is hung in the West-end shops;

With her name in full on the white below;

And all day long there's a big crowd stops

To look at the lady who's "all the go".

SIMS: Ballads of Babylon ("Beauty and the Beast").

A regular goer. One who goes the pace.

Go as you please. Not bound by any rules; do as you like; uncereemonious.

Go it! An exclamation of encouragement, sometimes ironical.

Go it alone. From the game of euchre, to play single-handed.

Go to! A curtailed oath. "Go to the devil!" or "go to hell!"

Cassius: I [am] abler than yourself.

To make conditions.

Brutus: Go to! You are not, Cassius.

Julius Caesar, iv, 3.

Go-to-meeting clothes, behaviour, etc. One's best.

I'll go through fire and water to serve you. See FIRE.

I've gone and done it! or I've been and gone and done it! There! I've done the very thing I oughtn't to have done!

It is no go. It is not workable.

That goes for nothing. It doesn't count; it doesn't matter one way or the other.

That goes without saying. The French say: Cela va sans dire. That is a self-evident fact; well understood or indisputable.

To give one the go-by. To pass without notice.

To go ahead. To prosper, make rapid progress towards success; to start.

To go back on one's word. To fail to keep one's promise.

To go bald-headed for a thing. To go for it as hard as possible. At the Battle of Warburg, 1760, the Life Guards were commanded by Lord Cranby. As he galloped at their head his hat and wig blew off, disclosing a completely bald head. Hence the expression, to go at a thing regardless of consequences.

To go by the board, the whole hog, to the wall, with the stream, etc. In these and many similar phrases see under the principal word.

To go for a man. To attack him, either physically or in argument, etc.

To go farther and fare worse. To take more pains and trouble and yet find oneself in a worse position.

To go hard with one. To prove a troublesome matter. "It will go hard with me before I give up the attempt," i.e. I won't give it up until I have tried every means to success, no matter how difficult, dangerous, or painful it may be.

To go in for. To follow as a pursuit or occupation.

To go the whole hog. See HOG.

To go it. To be fast, extravagant, headstrong in one's behaviour and habits. To go it blind is to act without stopping to deliberate. In poker, if a player chooses to "go it blind," he doubles the ante before looking at his cards.

To go off one's head, nut, onion, rocker, etc. Completely to lose control of oneself; to go mad, either temporarily or permanently; to go out of one's mind.

To go on all fours. See ALL FOURS.

To go to grass. To succumb, give in. From the putting out of race-horses or hunters to grass when they are too old for racing or hunting.

To go to the wall. See WALL.

To go under. To become ruined; to fail utterly, lose caste.

Also to pass as, to be known as; as "He goes under the name of 'Mr. Taylor,' but we all know he is really 'Herr Schneider.'"

Go-backs. Would-be settlers in the Far West who returned East discouraged and spread gloomy rumours about the difficulties they had encountered.

Go-getter. An enterprising, ambitious person.

Goat. From very early times the goat has been connected with the idea of sin (cp. SCAPEGOAT) and associated with devil-lore. It is an old superstition in England and Scotland that a goat is never seen during the whole of a twenty-four hours, because once every day it pays a visit to the devil to have its beard combed. Formerly the devil himself was frequently depicted as a goat; and the animal is also a type of lust and lechery.

Don't play the giddy goat! Don't make a ridiculous fool of yourself; keep yourself within bounds. A goat frolicking about is a very absurd sight.

The Goat and Compasses. There have been several more or less ingenious derivations found for this inn sign; none of them has yet been endowed with authority. A once favourite theory is that the words are a corruption of the old Commonwealth tavern sign "God encompasses us," though there is no ground for supposing that any such inn existed in Puritan days. It is almost certainly of some now-forgotten armorial origin.

To get one's goat. An old Americanism for annoying one, making him wild.

To separate the sheep from the goats. To divide the worthy from the unworthy, the good from the evil. A Biblical phrase, the allusion being to Matt. xxv, 32:—

And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

Goatsucker or goat-owl. A name popularly given to the nightjar, from the ancient and very widespread belief that this bird sucks the udders of goats. In Greek, Latin, French, German, Spanish, and some other languages its name has the same signification.

Gobbler. A turkey-cock is so called from its cry.

Gobelin Tapestry (go' be lin). So called from the Gobelins, a French family of dyers founded by Jean Gobelin (d. 1476); their tapestry works were taken over by Louis XIV as a royal establishment about 1670, and are still in the Faubourg St. Marcel, Paris. Part of the buildings were burned down by the Communards in 1871.

Goblin. A familiar demon, dwelling, according to popular belief, in private houses and chinks of trees; and in many parts miners attribute those strange noises heard in mines to them. The word is the Fr. gobelin, probably a diminutive of the surname Gobel, but perhaps connected with Gr. kobalos, an impudent rogue, a mischievous sprite, or with the Ger. kobold (q.v.).

God. A word common, in slightly varying forms, to all Teutonic languages, probably from a Sanskrit root, ghu—to worship; it is in no way connected with good.

It was Voltaire who said, "Si Dieu n'existait pas, il faudrait l'inventer."

Greek and Roman gods were divided into Dii Majores and Dii Minores, the greater and the lesser. The Dii Majores were twelve in number:—

LATIN.	GREEK.
JUPITER ( King )	ZEUS.
Apollo ( the sun )	Apollôn.
Mars ( war )	Arês.
Mercury ( messenger )	Hermês.
Neptune ( ocean )	Poseidon.
Vulcan ( smith )	Hephaistos.
JUNO ( Queen )	HERA.
Cerês ( village )	Demêter.
Diana ( moon, hunting )	Artêmis.
Minerva ( wisdom )	Athênê.
Venus ( love and beauty )	Aphroditê.
Vesta ( home-life )	Hestia.

Their blood was ichor, their food was ambrosia, their drink nectar.

Four other deities are often referred to:—

Bacchus ( wine )	Dionysos.
Cupid ( love )	Eros.
Pluto ( the underworld )	Plutôn.
Saturn ( time )	Kronos.

Of these Proserpine (Latin) and Persephone (Greek) was the wife of Pluto, Cybele was the wife of Saturn, and Rhea of Kronos.

In Hesiod's time the number of gods was thirty thousand, and that none might be omitted the Greeks observed a Feast of the Unknown Gods.

Some thirty thousand gods on earth we find Subjects of Zeus, and guardians of mankind.
Hesiod, i, 250.

A god from the machine. See DEUS EX MACHINA.

Among the gods. In the uppermost gallery of a theatre, just below the ceiling, which was frequently embellished with a representation of a mythological heaven. The French call this paradis.

God bless the Duke of Argyll. See ARGYLE.

God helps those who help themselves. In French, Aide-toi, le ciel t'aidera. (La Fontaine, vi, 18.); and among the Fragments of Euripides is:—

Bestir yourself, and then call on the gods,
For heaven assists the man that laboureth.
No. 435.

God made the country, and man made the town. Cowper in The Task (The Sofa 749). Cp. Cowley's "God the first garden made, and the first city Cain" (On Gardens). Varro says in De Re Rustica, Divina Natura dedit agros; ars humana œdificavit urbes.

God save the Queen. See NATIONAL ANTHEM.

God sides with the strongest. Fortune favours the strong. Napoleon I said, Le bon Dieu est toujours du côté des gros bataillons, God is always on the side of the big battalions, but the phrase is far older than his day. Tacitus (Hist. iv, 17) has Deos fortioribus adesse, the gods are on the side of the strongest; the Comte de Bussy, writing to the Count of Limoges, used it in 1677, as also did Voltaire in his Epistole à M. le Riche, February 6th, 1770.

God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb. The phrase comes from Sterne's Sentimental Journey (1782), but it was not original with Sterne, for Dieu mesure le froid à la brebis tondue appears in Henri Estienne's Les Premices (1594), and "To a close-shorn sheep God gives wind by measure" in Herbert's Jacula Prudentum (1640). It may be noticed that though Sterne's version is more poetical, he did not improve the sense in substituting lamb for sheep; for lambs are never shorn!

Man proposes, God disposes. An old proverb found in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, etc. In Prov. xvi, 9, it is rendered:—

A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps; and Publius Syrus (No. 216) has:—

Homo semper aliud, Fortuna aliud cogitat
(Man has one thing in view, Fate has another).

Whom God would destroy He first makes mad.

A translation of the Latin version (Quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat) of one of the Fragments of Euripides. Cp. also Stultum facit fortuna quem vult perdere (Publius Syrus, No. 612). He whom Fortune would ruin she robs of his wits.

Whom the gods love die young. The Lat. Quem Di diligunt, adolescens moritur (Plautus: Bacchides, IV, vii, 18). Byron says:—

Heaven gives its favourites early death.
Childe Harold, iv, 102.

God's Acre. A churchyard or cemetery.

Godless Florin. See GRACELESS FLORIN.

Goddam or Godon (gò dām', gò don'). A name given by the French to the English at least as early as the 15th century, on account of the favourite oath of the English soldiers which was looked upon almost as a shibboleth. Joan of Arc is reported to have used the word on a number of occasions in contemptuous reference to her enemies.

Godfather. To stand godfather. To pay the reckoning, godfathers being often chosen for the sake of the present they are expected to make to the child at christening or in their wills.

Godchild. One for whom a person stands sponsor in baptism. A godson or a goddaughter.

Godiva, Lady (gò dí' vā). Patroness of Coventry. In 1040, Leofric, Earl of Mercia and Lord of Coventry, imposed certain exactions on his tenants, which his lady besought him to remove; he said he would do so if she would ride naked through the town. Lady Godiva took him at his word, and the Earl faithfully kept his promise.

The legend is recorded by Roger of Wendover (d. 1236), in Flores Historiarum, and this was adapted by Rapin in his History of England, 1732 into the story as commonly known. An addition of the time of Charles II asserts that everyone kept indoors at the time, but a certain tailor peeped through his window to see the lady pass and was struck blind in consequence. He has ever since been called "Peeping Tom of Coventry." Since 1678 the incident of Lady Godiva's ride has been annually commemorated at Coventry by a procession in which "Lady Godiva" plays a leading part.

Godolphin Barb. See DARLEY ARABIAN.

Goel (gō' el). The name among the ancient Jews for one who redeemed back to the family property that a member of it had sold; as this was usually done by the next of kin, on whom also devolved the duty of the avenger of blood, the name was later applied specially to the avenger of blood.

Goemot or Goemagot (gō' mot, gō em' à got). Names given in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Chronicles (I, xvi), Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, x, 10), etc., to Gog Magog (q.v.).

Gog and Magog. In English legend, the sole survivors of a monstrous brood, the offspring of the thirty-three infamous daughters of the Emperor Diocletian, who murdered their husbands. Being set adrift in a ship they reached Albion, where they fell in with a number of demons. Their descendants, a race of giants, were extirpated by Brute and his companions, with the exception of Gog and Magog, who were brought in chains to London and were made to do duty as porters at the royal palace, on the site of the Guildhall, where their effigies were placed at least since the reign of Henry V. The old giants were destroyed in the Great Fire, and were replaced by figures fourteen feet high, carved in 1708 by Richard Saunders and were subsequently destroyed in the wreck of Guildhall in an air raid in 1940. Formerly wickerwork models were carried in the Lord Mayors' Shows.

In the Bible Magog is spoken of as a son of Japheth (Gen. x, 2), in the Revelation Gog and Magog symbolize all future enemies of the kingdom of God, and in Ezekiel Gog is a prince of Magog, a terrible ruler of a country in the north, probably Scythia or Armenia. By rabbinical writers of the 7th century A.D. Gog was identified with Antichrist.

Gogmagog Hill. The higher of two hills, some three miles south-east of Cambridge. The legend is that Gogmagog fell in love with the nymph Granta, but she would have nothing to say to the huge giant, and he was metamorphosed into the hill. (DRAYTON: Polyolbion, xxi.)

Goggles. A very ancient word coming, through the old English gogelen, to look askant, from the Celtic gog, a nod, a shaking of the head. The word is now applied to spectacles, but until Victorian days it was used to describe any rolling of the eyes or squinting.

Such sight have they that see with goggles eyes.

SIR P. SIDNEY: Arcadia.

He goggled his eyes and groped in his money-pocket.—HORACE WALPOLE: Letters.

Golconda (gol kon' dā). An ancient kingdom and city in India (west of Hyderabad), famous and powerful up to the early 17th century. The name is emblematic of great wealth, particularly of diamonds; but there never were diamond mines in Golconda, the stones were only cut and polished there.

Gold. By the ancient alchemists, gold represented the sun, and silver the moon. In heraldry gold (called "or") is depicted by dots.

In Great Britain every article in gold is compared with a given standard of pure gold, which is supposed to be divided into twenty-four parts called carats (q.v.); gold equal to the standard is said to be twenty-four carats fine. Manufactured articles are never made of pure gold, but the quality of alloy used has to be stated. Sovereigns (and most wedding rings) contain two parts of alloy to every twenty-two of gold, and are said to be twenty-two carats fine. Thus, 20 lb. troy of standard gold were coined into 934 sovereigns and 1 half-sovereign; 1 oz. troy was therefore worth £3 17s. 10½d. (£46 14s. 6d. per lb.), and 1 oz. of pure gold, on the same basis, £4 4s. 11½d. Since 1915 the market price of gold has, however, exceeded these figures. The best gold watch-cases contain six parts of silver or copper to eighteen of gold, and are therefore eighteen carats fine; cheaper gold articles may contain nine, twelve, or even fifteen parts of alloy.

A gold brick. An American phrase descriptive of any form of swindling. It originated in the gold-rush days when a cheat would sell his dupe an alleged—or even a real—gold brick, in the latter case substituting a sham one before making his get-away. In World War II, gold-bricking was synonymous with idling, shirking, or getting a comrade to do one's job.

All he touches turns to gold. All his ventures succeed; he is invariably fortunate. The allusion is to the legend of Midas (q.v.).

All that glisters is not gold (Shakespeare: Merchant of Venice, ii, 7). Do not be deceived by appearances.

All thing which that schineth as the gold
Nis not gold as that I have herd it told.

CHAUCER: Canon's Yeoman's Tale, 243.
Not all that tempts your wand'ring eyes
And heedless hearts, is lawful prize;
Nor all that glisters gold.

GRAY: Ode on Death of a Favourite Cat.

Healing gold. Gold given to a king for "healing" the king's evil, which was done by a touch.

He has got the gold of Tolosa. His ill gains will never prosper. Cæpio, the Roman consul, in his march to Gallia Narbonensis, desecrated the temple of the Celtic Apollo at Tolosa (Toulouse), and stole from it all the gold and silver vessels and treasure belonging to the Cimbrian Druids. This, in turn, was stolen from him while it was being taken to Massilia (Marseilles); and when he encountered the Cimbrians both he and Maximus, his brother-consul, were defeated, and 112,000 of their men were left upon the field (106 B.C.).

Mannheim gold. A sort of pinchbeck, made of copper, zinc, and tin, used for cheap jewellery and invented at Mannheim, Germany.

The gold of the Nibelungen. See NIBELUNGEN HOARD.

The Gold Purse of Spain. Andalusia is so called because it is the most fertile portion of Spain.

Golden. Jean Dorat (1510-88), one of the Pleiad poets of France, was so called ("Auratus") by a pun on his name.

Golden Ball. Edward Hughes Ball, a dandy in the days of the Regency (fl. 1820-30). He married a Spanish dancer.

The Golden-mouthed. St. Chrysostom (d. 407), a father of the Greek Church, was so called for his great eloquence.

The Golden Stream. St. John Damascene (d. 756), author of Dogmatic Theology.

The Golden-tongued (Gr. Chrysologos). St. Peter, Bishop of Ravenna (d. about 449), was so called.

Golden Age. An age in the history of peoples when everything was as it should be, or when the nation was at its summit of power, glory, and reputation; the best age, as the golden age of innocence, the golden age of literature. Ancient chronologers divided the time between Creation and the birth of Christ into ages; Hesiod describes five. See AGE.

The "Golden Ages" of the various nations are usually given as follows:—

ASSYRIA. From the reign of Esarhaddon, third son of Sennacherib, to the fall of Nineveh (about 700 to 600 B.C.).

CHALDEO-BABYLONIAN EMPIRE. From the reign of Nabopolassar to that of Belshazzar (about 606-538 B.C.).

CHINA. The reign of Tæ-tsong (618-26), and the era of the T'ang dynasty (626-84).

EGYPT. The reigns of Sethos I and Rameses II (about 1350-1273 B.C.), the XIXth Dynasty.

MEDIA. The reign of Cyaxares (about 634-594 B.C.).

PERSIA. From the reign of Khosru, or Chosroes, I, to that of Khosru II (about A.D. 531-628).

ENGLAND. The reign of Elizabeth (1558-1603).

FRANCE. Part of the reigns of Louis XIV and XV (1640-1740).

GERMANY. The reign of Charles V (1519-58).

PORTUGAL. From John I to the close of Sebastian's reign (1383-1578).

PRUSSIA. The reign of Frederick the Great (1740-86).

RUSSIA. The reign of Peter the Great (1672-1725).

SPAIN. The reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, when the crowns of Castile and Aragon were united (1474-1516).

SWEDEN. From Gustavus Vasa to the close of the reign of Gustavus Adolphus (1523-1632).

Golden Apples. See APPLE OF DISCORD; ATALANTA'S RACE; HESPERIDES.

Golden Ass, The. A satirical romance by Apuleius, written in the 2nd century, and called the golden because of its excellency. It tells the adventures of Lucian, a young man who, being accidentally metamorphosed into an ass while sojourning in Thessaly, fell into the hands of robbers, eunuchs, magistrates, and so on, by whom he was ill-treated; but ultimately he recovered his human form. It contains the story of Cupid and Psyche—the latest born of the myths.

Golden Bull, The. An edict by the Emperor Charles IV, issued at the Diet of Nuremberg in 1356, for the purpose of fixing how the German emperors were to be elected. It was sealed with a golden bull. See BULL.

To worship the golden calf. To bow down to money, to abandon one's principles for the sake of gain. The reference is to the golden calf made by Aaron when Moses was absent on Mt. Sinai. For their sin in worshipping the calf the Israelites paid dearly (Exodus, xxxii).

Golden Fleece, The. The old Greek story is that Iphigeneia persuaded her husband, Athamas, that his son Phryxus was the cause of a famine which desolated the land. Phryxus was thereupon ordered to be sacrificed, but, being apprised of this, he made his escape over sea on the winged ram, Chrysomallus, which had a golden fleece. When he arrived at Colchis, he sacrificed the ram to Zeus, and gave the fleece to King Æetes, who hung it on a sacred oak. It later formed the quest of Jason's celebrated Argonautic expedition, and was stolen by him. See ARGO; JASON.

Australia has been called "The Land of the Golden Fleece," because of the quantity of wool produced there.

Golden Fleece, The Order of the (Fr. l'ordre de la toison d'or). An order of knighthood common to Spain and Austria, instituted in 1429, for the protection of the Church, by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, on his marriage with the Infanta Isabella of Portugal. Its badge is a golden sheepskin with head and feet attached, and its motto Pretium laborum non vile. The selection of the fleece as a badge is perhaps best explained by the fact that the manufacture of wool had long been the staple industry of the Netherlands.

Golden Gate, The. The name given by Sir Francis Drake to the strait connecting San Francisco Bay with the Pacific. San Francisco is hence called The City of the Golden Gate.

Golden Horn, The. The inlet of the Bosphorus on which Istanbul is situated. So called from its curved shape and great beauty.

Golden Horde. The Mongolian Tartars who in the 13th century established an empire in S.E. Russia under Bator, grandson of Genjhis Khan. They invaded Russia and made the great hero Alexander Nevsky Grand Duke in 1252. They were later defeated in 1481.

Golden Legend, The. (Lat. Legenda aurea.) A collection of so-called lives of the saints made up by Jacques de Voragine in the 13th century; valuable for the picture it gives of mediæval manners, customs, and thought. Jortin says that the "lives" were written by young students of religious houses to exercise their talents by accommodating the narratives of heathen writers to Christian saints.

Longfellow's The Golden Legend (1851) is based on a story by Hartmann von der Aue, a German minnesinger of the 12th century.

Golden number. The number of the year in the Metonic Cycle (q.v.). As this consists of nineteen years it may be any number from 1 to 19, and in the ancient Roman and Alexandrian calendars this number was marked in gold, hence the name. The rule for finding the golden number is:—

Add one to the number of years and divide by nineteen; the quotient gives the number of cycles since 1 B.C. and the remainder the golden number, 19 being the golden number when there is no remainder.

It is used in determining the Epact and the date of Easter.

Golden ointment. Eye salve. In allusion to the ancient practice of rubbing "stynas of the eye" with a gold ring to cure them.

"I have a sty here, Chilax."

"I have no gold to cure it."

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Mad Lover, v. i.

Golden Roses. An ornament made of gold in imitation of a spray of roses, one rose containing a receptacle into which is poured balsam and musk. The rose is solemnly blessed by the Pope on Laetare Sunday, and is conferred from time to time on sovereigns and others, churches and cities distinguished for their services to the Church. The last to receive it was Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians in 1925. That presented by Pius IX to the Empress Eugenie in 1856 is preserved in Farnborough Abbey.

Golden Rule, The. "Do as you would be done by."

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets.—Matt. vii, 12.

Golden shower or Shower of gold. A bribe, money. The allusion is to the classical tale of Zeus and Danaë. See DANAË.

Golden State, The. California; so called from the gold fever of 1849.

Golden Town, The. So Mainz or Mayence was called in Carolingian times.

Golden Valley, The. The eastern portion of Limerick is so called, from its great natural fertility. The name is also given to the valley in mid-Wales from Pentirilas to Hay.

Golden Verses. Greek verses containing the moral rules of Pythagoras, usually thought to have been composed by some of his scholars. He enjoins, among other things, obedience to God and one's rulers, deliberation before action, fortitude, and temperance in exercise and diet. He also suggests making a critical review each night of the actions of that day.

Golden Wedding. The fiftieth anniversary of wedding, husband and wife being both alive.

A good name is better than a golden girdle. See GIRDLE.

The golden bowl is broken. Death. A biblical allusion:—

Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern; then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.—Eccles. xii, 6, 7.

The golden section of a line. Its division into two such parts that the area of the rectangle contained by the smaller segment and the whole line equals that of the square on the larger segment. (Euclid, ii, 11.)

The three golden balls. See BALLS.

To keep the golden mean. To practise moderation in all things. The wise saw of Cleobulus, King of Rhodes (about 630-559 B.C.).

Goldfish Club. World War II. It is similar to the Caterpillar Club (q.v.) and is for those who had ditched their aeroplanes and taken to the rubber dinghy. A cloth insignia was presented.

Golgotha (gol' goth à). The place outside Jerusalem where Christ was crucified. The word is Aramaic and means "a skull," and according to Jerome and others the place was so called from a tradition that Adam's skull had been found there. The more likely reason is that it designated a bare hill or rising ground, having some fancied resemblance to a bald skull.

Golgotha seems not entirely unconnected with the hill of Gareb, and the locality of Goath, mentioned in Jer. xxxi, 39, on the north-west of the city. I am inclined to fix the place where Jesus was crucified . . . on the mounds which command the valley of Hinnom, above Birket-Mamila.—RENAN: Life of Jesus, ch. xxv.

Golgotha, at the University church, Cambridge, was the gallery in which the "heads of the houses" sat; so called because it was the place of skulls or heads. It has been more wittily than truly said that Golgotha was the place of empty skulls.

Goliath (gō lī' áth). The Philistine giant, slain by the stripling David with a small stone hurled from a sling. (1 Sam. xvii, 23-54.)

Golosh. See GALOSH.

Gombeen Man. A village usurer; a money-lender. The word is of Irish extraction.

They suppose that the tenants can have no other supply of capital than from the gombeen man.—EGMONT HAKE: Free Trade in Capital.

Gombo. Pidgin French, or French as it is spoken by the coloured population of Louisiana, the French West Indies, Bourbon, and Mauritius.

Creole is almost pure French, not much more pronounced than in some parts of France; but Gombo is a mere phonetic burlesque of French, interlarded with African words, and other words which are neither African nor French, but probably belong to the aboriginal language of the various countries to which the slaves were brought from Africa.—E. WAKEFIELD, in The Nineteenth Century, October, 1891.

Gomerell (gom' ér èl), a Scottish word for a stupid senseless person, a blockhead.

Gondola (gon' dō là). A long, narrow Venetian boat. Also the carriage attached to an airship in which the passengers are carried.

Goneril (gon' er il). One of Lear's three daughters. Having received her moiety of Lear's kingdom, the unnatural daughter first abridged the old man's retinue, then gave him to understand that his company was troublesome. In Holinshed she appears as "Gonorilla." Cp. CORDELIA.

Gonfalon or Gonfanon (gon' fà lon). An ensign or standard. A gonfalonier was a magistrate in certain of the old Italian republics that had a gonfalon.

Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanced,
Standards and gonfalons, 'twixt van and rear
Stream in the air, and for distinction serve
Of hierarchies, of orders, and degrees.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, v. 589.

Gonnella's Horse (gò nel' à). Gonnella, the domestic jester of the Duke of Ferrara, rode on a horse all skin and bone. The jests of Gonnella are in print.

His horse was as lean as Gonnella's, which (as the Duke said) "Osso atque pellis totus erat" (Plautus).—CERVANTES: Don Quixote.

Gonsalez (gon sa' lez). Fernan Gonsalez, the hero of many Spanish ballads, lived in the 10th century. His life was twice saved by his wife Sancha, daughter of Garcias, King of Navarre.

Gonville and Caius. See CAIUS.

Good. The Good. Among the many who earned—or were given—this appellation are:—Alfonso VIII (or IX) of Leon, "The Noble and Good" (1158-1214).

Haco I, King of Norway (about 920-960).

Jean II of France, le Bon (1319, 1350-64).

Jean III, Duke of Brittany (1286, 1312-41).

Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (1396, 1419-67).

René, called The Good King René, Duke of Anjou, Count of Provence, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Sicily (1409-80).

The Prince Consort, Albert the Good (1819-61), husband of Queen Victoria.

Good Duke Humphrey. Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester (1391-1447), youngest son of Henry IV, said to have been murdered by Suffolk and Cardinal Beaufort (Shakespeare: 2 Henry VI, iii, 2); so called because of his devotion to the Church. To Dine with Duke Humphrey. See HUMPHREY.

Good Friday. The Friday preceding Easter Day, held as the anniversary of the Crucifixion. "Good" here means holy; Christmas, as well as Shrove Tuesday, used to be called "the good tide."

Born on Good Friday. According to old superstition, those born on Christmas Day or Good Friday have the power of seeing and commanding spirits.

Good Parliament, The. Edward III's Parliament of 1376; so called because of the severity with which it pursued the unpopular party of the Duke of Lancaster.

Good Regent. James Stewart, Earl of Moray (d. 1570), a natural son of James V and half-brother of Mary Queen of Scots. He was appointed Regent of Scotland after the imprisonment of Queen Mary.

Good Samaritan. See SAMARITAN.

There is a good time coming. This has been for a long time a familiar saying in Scotland, and it is introduced by Scott in his Rob Roy. In 1846 Charles Mackay wrote a once-popular song so called:—

There's a good time coming, boys,

A good time coming;

We may not live to see the day,

But earth shall glisten in the ray

Of the good time coming.

Cannon-balls may aid the truth,

But thought's a weapon stronger;

We'll win our battle by its aid:—

Wait a little longer.

Good and all, For. Not tentatively, not in pretence, nor yet temporarily, but bona fide, and altogether.

The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all.—L'ESTRANGE: Fables.

Good-bye. A contraction of God be with you. Similar to the French adieu, which is à Dieu (I commend you to God).

Goodfellow. See ROBIN GOODFELLOW.

Goodman. A husband or master. In Matt. xxiv, 43, "If the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched

There's nae luck about the house
When our gudeman's awa.—Mickle.

Goodman of Ballengeich. The assumed name of James V of Scotland when he made his disguised visits through the country districts around Edinburgh and Stirling, after the fashion of Haroun-al-Raschid, Louis XI, etc.

Goodman's Croft. The name given in Scotland to a strip of ground or corner of a field left untilled, in the belief that unless some such place were left, the spirit of evil would damage the crop. Here Goodman is a propitiatory euphemism for the devil.

Goods. I carry all my goods with me (Omnia mea mecum porto). Said by Bias, one of the seven sages, when Priene was besieged and the inhabitants were preparing for flight.

That fellow's the goods. He's all right, just the man for the job.

"He's got the goods on you!" He's got evidence against you.

To deliver the goods. Said of one who fulfills his promises or who comes up to expectations.

Goodwin Sands. It is said that these dangerous sandbanks, stretching about 10 miles NE. and SW. some 5½ miles off the Kentish coast, consisted at one time of about 4,000 acres of low land (Lomea, the Infera Insula of the Romans) fenced from the sea by a wall, and belonging to Earl Godwin. William the Conqueror bestowed them on the abbey of St. Augustine, Canterbury, but the abbot allowed the seawall to fall into a dilapidated state, so that the sea broke through in 1100 and inundated the whole. See TENTERDEN STEEPLE.

Goodwood Races. So called from the park in which they are held. They begin the last Tuesday of July, and last four days, the chief being Thursday, called the "Cup Day." These races are held in a private park, the property of the Duke of Richmond. The racecourse is one of the oddest shaped in the world, with a curious loop at the end of the 5-furlong gallop. The course of the Goodwood Cup is 2 miles 5 furlongs. The Cup was first run in 1812; the Goodwood Stakes in 1823; the Stewards Cup in 1840.

Goody. A depreciative, meaning weakly, moral and religious. In French, bon homme is used in a similar way.

The word is also a rustic variant of goodwife, the mistress of a household (cp. GOODMAN), and is sometimes used as a title, like "Gammer" (q.v.), as "Goody Blake," "Goody Dobson."

A goody is something especially nice to eat, a sweet, jam tart, or curranty bun.

Goody-goody. Affectedly, or even hypocritically, pious, but with no strength of mind or independence of spirit.

Goody Two-shoes. This nursery tale first appeared in 1765. It was written for John Newbery (1713-67), the originator of children's books, probably by Oliver Goldsmith.

Googly. A cricket term for a ball bowled so as to break a different way from the way it swerves.

Goose. A foolish or ignorant person is called a goose because of the alleged stupidity of this bird; a tailor's smoothing-iron is so called because its handle resembles the neck of a goose. Note that the plural of the iron is gooses, not geese.

Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose.—Macbeth, ii, 3.

Geese save the Capitol. The tradition is that when the Gauls invaded Rome a detachment in single file clambered up the hill of the Capitol so silently that the foremost man reached the top without being challenged; but while he was striding over the rampart, some sacred geese, disturbed by the noise, began to cackle, and awoke the garrison. Marcus Manlius rushed to the wall and hurled the fellow over the precipice. To commemorate this event, the Romans carried a golden goose in procession to the Capitol every year (390 B.C.).

Those consecrated geese in orders,
That to the capitol were warders,
And being then upon patrol,
With noise alone beat off the Gaul.

BUTLER: Hudibras, ii, 3.

The Goose Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Goose fair. A fair formerly held in many English towns about the time of Michaelmas (q.v.), when geese were plentiful. That still held at Nottingham was the most important.

Goose month. The lying-in month for women.

His geese are swans. He sees things in too rosy a light, is too pleased with his own doings and his own possessions.

Goose step. A form of military marching in which the legs are moved only from the hips, the knees being kept rigid, each leg being swung as high as possible. It was never popular in the British army, where it was introduced as a form of recruit drill in the late 18th century. In a modified form it still exists in the slow march. The goose step (Stechschritt) in its most exaggerated form has been a full-dress and processional march in the German army since the days of Frederick the Great. When the Axis flourished it was introduced into the Italian army (il passo di oca) but it was soon ridiculed into desuetude.

Goose-trap. A late-18th-century American colloquialism for a swindle.

He can't say Bo! to a goose. See Bo.

He killed the goose that laid the golden eggs. He grasped at what was more than his due, and lost what he had. The Greek fable says a countryman had a goose that laid golden eggs; thinking to make himself rich, he killed the goose to get the whole stock of eggs at once, but lost everything.

He steals a goose, and gives the giblets in alms. He amasses wealth by over-reaching, and saves his conscience by giving small sums in charity.

He's cooked his goose. He's done for himself, he's made a fatal mistake, ruined his chances, "dished" himself. The phrase is of 19th-century origin, though how it arose cannot now be traced.

If they come here we'll cook their goose,

The Pope and Cardinal Wiseman.

Street ballad of 1851, the time of the "Papal Aggression."

Michaelmas goose. See MICHAELMAS.

Mother Goose. Famous as giving the name to Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes, which first seems to have been used in Songs for the Nursery; or Mother Goose's Melodies for Children, published by T. Fleet in Boston, Mass., in 1719. The rhymes were free adaptations of Perrault's Contes de ma mère l'oye ("Tales of my Mother Goose") which appeared in 1697.

The Goose and Gridiron. A public-house sign, properly the coat of arms of the Company of Musicians—viz. a swan with expanded wings, within a double tressure [the gridiron], counter, flory, argent. Perverted into a goose striking the bars of a gridiron with its foot; also called "The Swan and Harp."

In the United States the name is humorously applied to the national coat-of-arms—the American eagle with a gridiron-like shield on its breast.

The old woman is plucking her goose. A children's way of saying "it is snowing."

The royal game of goose. The game referred to by Goldsmith (Deserted Village, 232) as being present in the ale-house—

The pictures placed for ornament and use,

The twelve good rules, the royal game of goose—was a game of compartments through which the player progressed according to the cast of the dice. At certain divisions a goose was depicted, and if the player fell into one of these he doubled the number of his last throw and moved forward accordingly.

The "twelve good rules" was a broadside showing a rough cut of the execution of Charles I with the following "rules" printed below:—

1. Urge no healths; 2. Profane no divine ordinances; 3. Touch no state matters; 4. Reveal no secrets; 5. Pick no quarrels; 6. Make no comparisons; 7. Maintain no ill opinions; 8. Keep no bad company; 9. Encourage no vice; 10. Make no long meals; 11. Repeat no grievances; 12. Lay no wagers.

These were said to have been "found in the study of King Charles the First, of Blessed Memory," and in the 18th century were frequently framed and displayed in taverns.

To shoe the goose. To fritter away one's time on unnecessary work; to play about, trifle.

Tuning goose. The entertainment given in Yorkshire when the corn at harvest was all safely stacked.

Wayz Goose. See WAYZ.

Gooseberry. Gooseberry fool. A dish made of gooseberries scalded and pounded with cream.

B.D.—14

The word fool is from the French fouler, to press or crush.

Let anything come in the shape of fodder or eating stuff, it is wellcome, whether it be Sawsedge, or Custard, or Flawne, or Foole.—JOHN TAYLOR: The Great Eater, 1610.

He played old gooseberry with me. He took great liberties with my property, and greatly abused it; in fact, he played the very deuce with me and my belongings.

The big gooseberry season. A mid-Victorian phrase applied to the dull time in journalism when Parliament was not sitting, the Law Courts were up, and nobody was in Town, when the old-fashioned editor published accounts of giant gooseberries, sea-serpents, vegetable marrows, sweet peas, just to fill up his paper.

To play, or be gooseberry. To act as chaperon; to be an unwanted third when lovers are together. The origin of the phrase is obscure, but it has been suggested that it arose from the charity of the chaperon occupying herself in picking gooseberries while the lovers were more romantically occupied.

Goosebridge. Go to Goosebridge. "Rule a wife and have a wife." Boccaccio (ix, 9) tells us that a man who had married a shrew asked Solomon what he should do to make her more submissive; and the wise king answered, "Go to Goosebridge." Returning home, deeply perplexed, he came to a bridge which a muleteer was trying to induce a mule to cross. The beast resisted, but the stronger will of his master at length prevailed. The man asked the name of the bridge, and was told it was "Goosebridge."

Gopher (gō' fēr). A native of Minnesota, U.S.A. The word probably comes from the prairie rodent of that name.

Gopher wood, the wood of which Noah made his ark (Gen. vi, 14). There has been much discussion as to what wood is really meant, but it is now considered that it is that of the cypress.

Gordian Knot (gôr' di ân). A great difficulty. Gordius, a peasant, being chosen king of Phrygia, dedicated his wagon to Jupiter, and fastened the yoke to a beam with a rope of bark so ingeniously that no one could untie it. Alexander was told that "whoever undid the knot would reign over the whole East." "Well then," said the conqueror, "it is thus I perform the task," and, so saying, he cut the knot in twain with his sword. Thus: To cut the Gordian knot is to get out of a difficult or awkward position by one decisive step; to solve a problem by a single brilliant stroke.

Such praise the Macedonian got

For having rudely cut the Gordian knot.

WALLER: To the King.

Turn him to any cause of policy,

The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,

Familiar as his garter.

Henry V, i, 1.

Gordon Riots. Riots in 1780, headed by Lord George Gordon, to compel the House of Commons to repeal the bill passed in 1778 for the relief of Roman Catholics. Gordon was of unsound mind, and died in 1793, a proselyte to Judaism. Dickens has given a very vivid description of the Gordon Riots in Barnaby Rudge.

Gore. A triangular piece of material, or of land, from the low Latin gora. Cp. Kensington Gore, and the Gore, New York (late 18th century).

Gorgon (gôr' gon). Anything unusually hideous, particularly a hideous or terrifying woman. In classical mythology there were three Gorgons, with serpents on their heads instead of hair, Medusa was the chief, and the only one that was mortal; but so hideous was her face that whoever set eyes on it was instantly turned into stone. She was slain by Perseus, and her head placed on the shield of Minerva.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquered virgin,
Wherewith she froze her foes to congealed stone?
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dashed brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe.

MILTON: Comus, 458.

Gorgonzola (gôr gôn zô' la). A town in Italy some 12 miles north-east of Milan and chiefly famous for the cheese once made there. This is of a Stilton nature, made from the whole milk of cows and mottled or veined with a penicillium which is the principal ripening agent. It is usually exported with a thin, claylike coat made of gypsum and lard or tallow.

Gorham Controversy (gôr' am). This arose out of the refusal (1848) of the bishop of Exeter to institute the Rev. Cornelius Gorham to the vicarage of Brampford Speke, "because he held unsound views on the doctrine of baptism." After two years' controversy, the Privy Council decided in favour of Mr. Gorham.

It was a major sensation of its decade and at one time seemed likely to split the Church of England in twain.

Gospel. This is an Anglo-Saxon compound word, "god spell," good news. It is employed to describe collectively the lives of Christ as narrated by the evangelists in the New Testament; it signifies the message of redemption set forth in those books; it is used as a term for the entire Christian system of religion; and it is applied to any doctrine or teaching set forth for some specific purpose.

The first four books of the New Testament, known as the Gospels, are ascribed to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. The first three of these are called "synoptic," as they follow the same lines and have, broadly speaking, the same point of view. The fourth Gospel was written some thirty years later than the others. Critics are still uncertain as to the real authorship of the Gospels.

Gospel according to . . . The chief teaching of [so-and-so]. The Gospel according to Mammon is the making and collecting of money.

The Gospel of Nicodemus, or "The Acts of Pilate" is an apocryphal book compiled about the 5th century. It gives an elaborate and fanciful description of the trial, death and resurrection of Our Lord; names the two thieves (Dismas and Gestas); Pilate's wife (Procla); the centurion (Longinus), etc., and ends with the conversion of Annas, Caiaphas, and the Sanhedrin.

The Gospel of Peter is an apocryphal book first mentioned in the year 191. Only a fragment remains, and it departs from the canonical gospels in several particulars.

The Gospel of Thomas is a Gnostic apocryphal book full of stories of crude prodigies and puerile fancies.

The gospel of wealth. The hypothesis that wealth is the great end and aim of man, the one thing needful.

The Gospel side of the altar is to the left of the celebrant facing the altar.

Gospeller. The priest who reads the Gospel in the Communion Service; also a follower of Wyclif, called the "Gospel Doctor"; anyone who believes that the New Testament has in part, at least, superseded the Old.

Hot Gospellers was an old nickname for the Puritans; it is now frequently applied to the more energetic and vociferous evangelists who conduct revival meetings.

Gossamer. According to legend, this delicate thread is the ravelling of the Virgin Mary's winding-sheet, which fell to earth on her ascension to heaven. It is said to be God's seam, i.e. God's thread. Actually, the name is from M.E. gossomer, literally goose-summer, or St. Martin's summer (early November), when geese are eaten and gossamer is prevalent.

Gossip. A tattler; a sponsor at baptism, a corruption of God-sibb, a kinsman in the Lord. (A.S. sibb, relationship, whence sibman, kinsman; he is our sib, is still used.)

'Tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips [sponsors for her child]; yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's servant, and serves for wages.—Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii, 1.

Gotch. In East Anglian dialect a large stone jug with a handle. Fetch the gotch, mor—i.e. fetch the great water-jug, my girl.

A gotch of milk I've been to fill.

R. BLOOMFIELD: Richard and Kate.

Goth. One of an ancient tribe of Teutons which swept down upon and devastated large portions of southern Europe in the 3rd to 5th centuries, establishing kingdoms in Italy, southern France, and Spain. They were looked on by the civilized Romans as merely destroying barbarians; hence the name came to be applied to any rude, uncultured, destructive people.

The last of the Goths. See RODERICK.

Gotham (gô' thâm). Wise Men of Gotham—fools, wisacres. The village of Gotham, in Nottinghamshire, was for centuries proverbial for the folly of its inhabitants, and many tales have been fathered on them, one of which is their joining hands round a turnbush to shut in a cuckoo. Cp. COGGESHALL.

It is said that King John intended to make a progress through this town with the view of purchasing a castle and grounds. The townsmen had no desire to be saddled with this expense, and therefore when the royal messengers appeared, wherever they went they saw the people occupied in some idiotic pursuit. The king being told of it, abandoned his intention, and the "wise men," of the village cunningly remarked, "More fools pass through Gotham than remain in it."

A collection of popular tales of stupidity was published in the reign of Henry VIII as Merie Tales of the Mad Men of Gotam, gathered together by A. B. of Phisike, Doctour. This "A. B." has been supposed to be Andrew Boorde (c. 1490-1549), physician and traveller.

Most nations have fixed upon some locality as their limbus of fools; thus we have Phrygia as the fools' home of Asia Minor, Abdera of the Thracians, Bœotia of the Greeks, Nazareth of the ancient Jews, Swabia of the modern Germans, and so on.

Gothamites. Inhabitants of New York. The term was in use by 1800. The name of Gotham was given to New York by Washington Irving in his Salmagundi, 1807.

Gothic Architecture. A style prevalent in Western Europe from the 12th to the 16th centuries, characterized by the pointed arch, clustered columns, etc. The name has nothing to do with the Goths, but was bestowed in contempt by the architects of the Renaissance period on mediæval architecture, which they termed clumsy, fit only for barbarians or Goths.

St. Louis . . . built the Ste. Chapelle of Paris, . . . the most precious piece of Gothic in Northern Europe.—RUSKIN: Fors Clavigera, vol. I.

A revival in England of Gothic architecture and ornament, was started by wealthy dilettanti such as Horace Walpole in the 18th century. It was further popularized by Ruskin and Sir Walter Scott, and took a concrete form in the architecture of the Catholic A. W. Pugin (1812-52).

Gouk or Gowk. The cuckoo (from Icel. gaukr); hence, a fool, a simpleton.

Hunting the gowk is making one an April fool. See APRIL.

A gowk storm is a storm consisting of several days of tempestuous weather, believed by the peasantry to take place periodically about the beginning of April, at the time that the gowk or cuckoo visits this country; it is also, curiously enough, a storm that is short and sharp, a "storm in a tea-cup."

That being done, he hoped that this was but a gowk-storm.—SIR G. MACKENZIE: Memoirs, p. 70.

Gourd. "Doctored" dice with a secret cavity were called gourds. See FULHAMS.

Jonah's gourd. This plant (see Jonah iv, 6-10), the Heb. kikayon, was probably the Palma Christi, called in Egypt kiki. Niebuhr speaks of a specimen which he himself saw near a rivulet, which in October "rose eight feet in five months' time." And Volney says, "Wherever plants have water the rapidity of their growth is prodigious. In Cairo," he adds, "there is a species of gourd which in twenty-four hours will send out shoots four inches long." (Travels, vol. i, p. 71.)

Gourmand and Gourmet (goor' mond, goor' mā) (Fr.). The Gourmand is one whose chief pleasure is eating; but a gourmet is a connoisseur of food and wines. The gourmand regards quantity more than quality, the gourmet quality more than quantity. See APICIUS.

In former times [in France] gourmand meant a judge of eating, and gourmet a judge of wine. . . . Gourmet is now universally understood to refer to eating, and not to drinking.—HAMERTON: French and English, Pt. v, ch. iv.

The gourmand's prayer. "O Philoxenos, Philoxenos, why were you not Prometheus?" Prometheus was the mythological creator of man, and Philoxenos was a great epicure, whose great and constant wish was to have the neck of a crane, that he might enjoy the taste of his food longer before it was swallowed into his stomach. (Aristotle: Ethics, iii, 10.)

Gout. The disease is so called from the Fr. goutte, a drop, because it was once thought to proceed from a "drop of acrid matter in the joints."

Goven. St. Goven's Bell. See INCHCAPE.

Government Stroke. Early Australian slang for taking a long time over very little work; still a common expression in that country.

Gowan (gou' an). A Scotch word for various field flowers, especially the common daisy, sometimes called the ewe-gowan, apparently from the ewe, as being frequent in pastures fed on by sheep.

Gowk. See GOUK.

Gown. Gown and town row. In university towns, a scrimmage between the students of different colleges and the townsmen. These feuds go back at least to the reign of King John, when 3,000 students left Oxford for Reading, owing to a quarrel with the men of the town.

Gownsmen. A student at one of the universities; so called because he wears an academical gown.

Graal. See GRAIL.

Grab. To clutch or seize. He grabbed him, i.e. he caught him.

Land grabber. A common expression in Ireland during the last two decades of the 19th century, to signify one who takes the farm or land of an evicted tenant. The corresponding phrase in the 18th century was Land Pirate.

Grace. A courtesy title used in addressing or speaking of dukes, duchesses, and archbishops. "His Grace the Duke of Devonshire," "My Lord Archbishop, may it please Your Grace," etc.

Act of grace. A pardon; a general pardon granted by Act of Parliament, especially that of 1690, when William III pardoned political offenders; and that of 1784, when the estates forfeited for high treason in connexion with "the '45" were restored.

Grace before (or after) meat. A short prayer asking a blessing on, or giving thanks for, one's food. Here the word (which used to be plural) is a relic of the old phrase to do graces or to give graces, meaning to render thanks (Fr. rendre graces, Lat. gratias agere), as in Chaucer's

They weren right glad and joyeful, and answereden ful mekely and benigely, yeldinge graces and thankinges to hir lord Melibee.—Tale of Melibee, §71.

Grace card or Grace's card. The six of hearts is so called in Kilkenny. One of the family of Grace, of Courtstown, in Ireland, equipped at his own expense a regiment of foot and troop of horse, in the service of James II. William III promised him high honours if he would join the new party, but the indignant baron wrote on a card, "Tell your master I despise his offer." The card was the six of hearts, and hence the name.

Grace cup or Loving cup. This is a large tankard or goblet from which the last draught at a banquet is drunk, the cup being passed from guest to guest. The name is also applied to a strong brew, as at Oxford, of beer flavoured with lemon-peel, nutmeg and sugar, and very brown toast.

Grace days, or Days of grace. The three days over and above the time stated in a commercial bill. Thus, if a bill is drawn on June 20th, and is payable in one month, it is due on July 20th, but three "days of grace" are added, bringing the date to July 23rd.

Grace, Herb of. See HERB OF GRACE.

Grace notes are musical embellishments, vocal or instrumental, not essential to the harmony or melody of a piece. They used to be much more common in music for the viol and harpsichord than they are for modern instruments, and it was not unusual for a virtuoso to introduce them at his own discretion.

The three Graces. In classical mythology, the goddesses who bestowed beauty and charm and were themselves the embodiment of both. They were the sisters Aglaia, Thalia, and Euphrosyne.

They are the daughters of sky-ruling Jove,
By him begot of faire Euryome, . . .
The first of them hight mylde Euphrosyne,
Next faire Aglaia, last Thalia merry;
Sweete Goddesses all three, which me in mirth do cherish. SPENSER: Faerie Queene, VI, x, 22.
Andrea Appiani (1754-1817), the Italian fresco artist, was known as the Painter of the Graces.

Time of grace. See SPORTING SEASONS.

To get into one's good graces. To insinuate oneself into the favour of.

To fall from grace. Apart from a theological implication, this means to relapse from a moral position one has attained.

To take heart of grace. To take courage because of favour or indulgence shown.

With a good or bad grace. Gracefully or ungracefully, willingly or unwillingly. With a good grace has an air of rather forced acquiescence.

Year of Grace. The year of Our Lord, Anno Domini. In University language it is the year allowed to a Fellow who has been given a College living, at the end of which he must resign either his fellowship or the living.

Graceless or Godless florin. The first issue of the English florin (1849), called "Graceless" because the letters D.G. ("by God's grace") were omitted, and "Godless" because of the omission of F.D. ("Defender of the Faith").

It happened that Richard Lalor Sheil (1791-1851), master of the Mint at the time, was a Catholic, and the suspicion was aroused that the omission was made on religious grounds. The florins were called in and re-cast, and Mr. Sheil left the Mint the following year on his appointment as minister to Florence.

Grade. In American usage this word is used for the more common English gradient for the rate of ascent or descent of a road or railway track, also for the hill itself. A grade-crossing is usually known in Britain as a level crossing.

To make the grade, to rise to the occasion, to have it in one to do what has to be done; from the analogy of a locomotive succeeding in drawing its load up a steep gradient.

Gradely. A north of England term meaning thoroughly; regularly; as A gradely fine day. The word is from Scand. gráith, ready, prompt.

Gradgrind, Thomas. A character in Dickens's Hard Times, typical of a man who allows nothing for the weakness of human nature, and deals with men and women as a mathematician with his figures.

Gradual. An antiphon sung between the Epistle and the Gospel, as the deacon ascends the steps (late Lat. graduales) of the altar. Also, a book containing the musical portions of the service at mass—the graduals, introits, kyries, gloria in excelsis, credo, etc.

The Gradual Psalms. Ps. cxx to cxxxiv inclusive; probably so called because they were sung when the ascent to the inner court was made by the priests. In the Authorized Version they are called Songs of Degrees, and in the Revised Version Songs of Ascents. Cp. HALLEL.

Grāmes, The (grāmz). A clan of freebooters who inhabited the Debatable Land (q.v.), and were transported to Ireland at the beginning of the 17th century.

Graft. Illicit profit or commission. Of U.S.A. origin, the word is now world wide. It seems to have come into use in the 1890s.

Grahame's Dyke. A popular name for the remains of the old Roman wall between the firths of Clyde and Forth, the Wall of Antoninus.

Grail, The Holy. The cup or chalice traditionally used by Christ at the Last Supper, and the centre round which a huge corpus of mediæval legend, romance, and allegory revolves.

According to one account, Joseph of Arimathea preserved the Grail, and received into it some of the blood of the Saviour at the Crucifixion. He brought it to England, but it disappeared. According to others, it was brought by angels from heaven and entrusted to a body of knights who guarded it on top of a mountain. When approached by anyone of not perfect purity it disappeared from sight, and its quest became the source of most of the adventures of the Knights of the Round Table. But see also PERCEFOREST.

The mass of literature concerning the Grail cycle, both ancient and modern, is enormous: the chief sources of the principal groups of legends are—the Peregrin (Welsh, given in the Mabinogion), which is the most archaic form of the Quest story; Wolfram's Parzifal (about 1210), the best example of the story as transformed by ecclesiastical influence; the 13th-century French Percival le Gallois (founded on earlier English and Celtic legends which had no connexion with the Grail), showing Percival in his later rôle as an ascetic hero (translated by Dr. Sebastian Evans, 1893, as The High History of the Holy Grail); and the Quête du St. Graal, which, in its English dress, forms Bks. 13-18 of Malory's Morte d'Arthur. See FISHERMAN, KING; GALAHAD; PERCIVAL.

It was the French poet, Robert le Boron (fl. about 1215), who, in his Joseph d'Arimathie or Le Saint Graal, first definitely attached the history of the Grail to the Arthurian cycle.

The framework of Tennyson's Holy Grail (1869, Idylls of the King), in which the poet expressed his "strong feeling as to the Reality of the Unseen," is taken from Malory.

Grain. A knave in grain. A thoroughgoing knave, a knave all through. An old phrase which comes from dyeing. The brilliant crimson dye obtained from the kermes and cochineal insects used to be thought to come from some seed, or grain; it was of a very durable and lasting nature, dyed the thing completely and finally, through and through. Hence also the word ingrained, as in "an ingrained [i.e. ineradicable] habit."

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermeil stain
Like crimson dyed in grain!

SPENSER: Epithalamion, 226.

'Tis ingrain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.—
SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, i, 5.

To go against the grain. Against one's inclination. The allusion is to wood, which cannot be easily planed the wrong way of the grain.

Your minds,

Pre-occupied with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul.—Coriolanus, ii, 3.

With a grain of salt. See SALT.

Gramercy. Thank you very much; from O.Fr. grant, great, merci, reward, the full meaning of the exclamation being "May God reward you greatly." When Gobbo says to Bassanio, "God bless your worship!" he replies, "Gramercy. Wouldst thou aught with me?" (Merchant of Venice, ii, 2.)

Grammar. Cæsar is not above the grammarians. Suetonius tells us (De Grammaticis, 22) that Tiberius was rebuked by a grammarian for some verbal slip, and upon a courtier remarking that if the word was not good Latin it would be in future, now that it had received imperial recognition, he was rebuked with the words Tu enim Cæsar civitatem dare potes hominibus, verbis non potes (Cæsar, you can grant citizenship to men, but not to words). Hence the saying, Cæsar non supra grammaticos.

But when a later Emperor, the German Sigismund I, stumbled into a wrong gender at the Council of Constance (1414), no such limitation would be admitted; he replied, Ego sum Imperator Romanorum, et supra grammaticam (I am the Roman Emperor, and am above grammar!).

The Scourge of Grammar. So Pope, in the Dunciad (iii, 149), called Giles Jacob (1686-1744), a very minor poet, who, in his Register of the Poets, made an unprovoked attack on Pope's friend, Gay.

Prince of Grammarians. Apollonius of Alexandria (2nd cent. B.C.), so called by Priscian.

Grammont (gra' mong). The Count de Grammont's short memory, is a phrase arising from a story told of the Count's marriage to Lady Elizabeth Hamilton—La Belle Hamilton—of the Restoration court. When he was leaving England after a visit in which this young lady's name had been compromised by him, he was followed by her brothers with drawn swords, who asked him if he had not forgotten something. "True, true," said the Count pleasantly; "I promised to marry your sister." With which he returned to London and married Elizabeth, 1663.

Granby, The Marquess of. At one time this was a popular inn sign, there being in London alone over twenty public-houses of this name. John Manners, Marquess of Granby (1721-70) commanded the Leicester Blues against the Pretender in the '45; was a lieutenant-general at Minden (1759) and commander-in-chief of the British army in 1766. He was a very bald man, and most of the inn-signs exaggerated this defect in his appearance. See TO GO BALD-HEADED.

Grand, Le. (Fr., the Great.)

Le Grand Batârd. Antoine de Bourgogne (d. 1504), a natural son of Philip the Good, famous for his deeds of prowess.

Le Grand Condé. Louis II of Bourbon, Prince de Condé, one of France's greatest military commanders (1621-86). The funeral oration pronounced at his death was Bossuet's finest composition.

Le Grand Corneille. Pierre Corneille, the French dramatist (1606-84).

Le Grand Dauphin. Louis, son of Louis XIV (1661-1711).

La Grande Mademoiselle. The Duchesse de Montpensier (1627-93), daughter of Gaston, Duc d'Orléans, and cousin of Louis XIV.

Le Grand Monarque. Louis XIV, King of France (1638-1715).

Le Grand Pan. Voltaire (1694-1778).

Monsieur le Grand. The Grand Equerry of France in the reign of Louis XIV, etc.

Grand.

Grand Alliance. Signed May 12th, 1689, between Germany and the States General, subsequently also by England, Spain, and Savoy, to prevent the union of France and Spain.

Grand Guignol. See GUIGNOL.

Grand Lama. See LAMA.

Grandee. In Spain, a nobleman of the highest rank, who has the privilege of remaining covered in the king's presence.

Grandison, Sir Charles, the hero of Samuel Richardson's History of Sir Charles Grandison, published in 1753. Sir Charles is the beau-ideal of a perfect hero, the union of a good Christian and a proper English gentleman, aptly described by Sir Walter Scott as "a faultless monster that the world ne'er saw." It has been suggested that Richardson's model for this character was the worthy Robert Nelson (1665-1715), a religious writer and eminent non-juror.

Grandison Cromwell. The nickname given by Mirabeau to Lafayette (1757-1834), implying that he had all the ambition of a Cromwell, but wanted to appear before men as a Sir Charles Grandison.

Grandmontines. An order of Benedictine hermits founded by St. Stephen of Muret about 1100, with its mother house at Grandmont, Normandy. They came to England soon after the foundation and established three houses, one of which, at Craswall, Herefordshire (fl. c. 1222-1464) is one of the loneliest and most interesting monastic ruins in England.

Grange. Properly the granum (granary) or farm of a monastery, where the corn was kept in store. In Lincolnshire and the northern counties the name is applied to any lone farm; houses attached to monasteries where rent was paid in grain were also called granges.

Till thou return, the Court I will exchange

For some poor cottage, or some country grange.

DRAYTON: Lady Geraldine to Earl of Surrey.

Tennyson's poem, Mariana, was suggested by the line in Shakespeare's Measure for Measure (iii, 1):—

There, at the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

The word came into more common use in Victorian times when new and largish houses were being built in the country and often magniloquently called The Grange.

In U.S.A. The Grange is a nation-wide association for promoting the interests of agriculture.

Grangerize (grăn' jēr iz). To "extra-illustrate" a book; to supplement it by the addition of illustrations, portraits, autograph letters, caricatures, prints, broadsheets, biographical sketches, anecdotes, scandals, press notices, parallel passages, and any other sort of matter directly or indirectly bearing on the subject. So called from James Granger (1723-76), vicar of Shiplake, Oxon, who collected some 14,000 engraved portraits and in 1769 published his Biographical History of England from Egbert the Great to the Revolution. . . . "with a preface showing the utility of a collection of engraved portraits." The book went through several editions with additional matter, and in 1806 was edited by Mark Noble. Collectors made this book a sort of core around which they assembled great collections of portraits, etc., and in 1856 two copies of the book were sold by London booksellers, one in 27 volumes with 1,300 portraits, the other in 19 volumes containing 3,000 portraits. There was for many years a fashion of Grangerizing books, with the result that many excellent editions of biographies, etc., were ruined by having the plates torn out, for pasting into some dilettante's collection.

Grangousier. In Rabelais's satire, Gargantua and Pantagruel, a king of Utopia, who married in "the vigour of his old age," Gargamelle, daughter of the king of the Parpaillons, and became the father of Gargantua (q.v.). Some say he is meant for Louis XII, but Motteux thinks the "academy figure" of this old Priam was John d'Albret, King of Navarre.

Granite. Granite City, The. Aberdeen.

Granite Redoubt. The grenadiers of the Consular Guard were so called at the battle of Marengo in 1800, because when the French had given way they formed into a square, stood like stone against the Austrians, and stopped all further advance.

Granite State, The. New Hampshire is so called, because the mountainous parts are chiefly granite.

Granny-knot. An ill-tied reef knot which breaks down when any strain is placed upon it.

Grape. The grapes are sour. You disparage it because it is beyond your reach. The allusion is to Æsop's well-known fable of the fox which tried in vain to get at some grapes, but when he found they were beyond his reach went away saying, "I see they are sour."

Grape shot. A form of projectile at one time much used with smooth-bore guns. It consisted of a large number of cast-iron bullets packed in layers between thin iron plates and then arranged in tiers (usually three), the whole being held together by an iron bolt passing through the centre of the plates. When fired the shot broke up and distributed the bullets in showers. The well-known phrase "A whiff of grape shot" occurs in Carlyle's French Revolution (III, vii, 7).

Grape-sugar. Another name for glucose (dextrose), a fermentable sugar, less sweet than cane-sugar, and obtained from dried grapes and other fruits as well as being made chemically. It is used in the manufacture of jams, beer, etc.

Grapevine telegraph. The intangible and untraceable means whereby rumours—as often as not false—are conveyed around by whisperings, etc.

Grass. Not to let the grass grow under one's feet. To be very active and energetic.

A grass hand is a compositor who fills a temporary vacancy; hence to grass, to take only temporary jobs as a compositor.

Grass widow. Formerly, an unmarried woman who has had a child; but now, a wife temporarily parted from her husband; also, by extension, a divorced woman. The word has nothing to do with grace widow (a widow by courtesy). The phrase grass widower is used in the same sense.

Grasshopper. Considered as the sign of a grocer because it was the crest of Sir Thomas Gresham, merchant grocer. The Royal Exchange, founded by him, used to be profusely decorated with grasshoppers, and the brass one on the eastern part of the present building escaped the fires of 1666 and 1838.

Grattan's Parliament. The free Irish Parliament established in Dublin in 1782, when Henry Grattan (1746-1820) obtained the repeal of Poyning's Law (q.v.). It lasted till the coming into force of the Act of Union, January 1st, 1801.

Grave. Solemn, sedate, and serious in look and manner. This is Lat. gravis, heavy, grave; but "grave," a place of interment, is A.S. græf, a pit; græf-an, to dig.

Close as the grave. Very secret indeed.

It's enough to make him turn in his grave. Said when something happens to which the deceased person would have strongly objected.

Someone is walking over my grave. An exclamation made when one is seized with an involuntary convulsive shuddering.

To carry away the meat from the grave. See MEAT.

With one foot in the grave. At the very verge of death. The expression was used by Julian, who said he would "learn something even if he had one foot in the grave." The parallel Greek phrase is, "With one foot in the ferry-boat," meaning Charon's.

Gravelled. I'm regularly gravelled. Nonplussed, like a ship run aground and unable to move.

When you were gravelled for lack of matter.—As You Like It, iv, 1.

Gray. See GREY.

Gray-back. Confederate soldier in the American Civil War. So called from the colour of the Confederate army uniform.

Gray's Inn (London) was the inn or mansion of the Lords de Grey, and the property belonged to them from at least as early as 1307 to 1505. It was let to students of law in the 14th century, and is still one of the four Inns of Court (q.v.). In the Hall, erected 1555-60, Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors was first acted, 1594. The walks and gardens were laid out by Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam. The library contained some 30,000 volumes and MSS. but, together with the Hall, it was destroyed in the air-raids of 1940-41. The Hall was rebuilt and opened in 1951.

Grease. Slang for money, especially that given as a bribe; "palm-oil."

Like greased lightning. Very quick indeed.

To grease one's palm or fist. To give a bribe.

Grease my fist with a taster or two, and ye shall find it in your pennyworth.—Quarles: The Virgin Widow, iv, 1, p. 40.

S.: You must oyl it first.

C.: I understand you—

Greaze him i' the fist.

CARTWRIGHT: Ordinary (1651).

To grease the wheels. To make things run smoothly, pass off without a hitch; usually by the application of a little money.

Greaser. The American name for a Mexican or Spanish American, generally used in contempt.

Great, The. The term is usually applied to the following:—

ABBAS I, Shah of Persia. (1557, 1585-1628).

VLADIMIR, Grand Duke of Russia. (973-1015.)

WALDEMAR I, of Denmark. (1131, 1157-1182.)

Great Bear, The. See BEAR.

Great Bible, The. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Great Bullet-head, George Cadoudal (1771-1804), leader of the Chouans, born at Brech, in Morbihan.

Great Captain. See CAPITANO, EL GRAN.

Great Cham of Literature. So Smollett calls Dr. Johnson (1709-84).

Great Commoner. William Pitt, Earl of Chatham (1708-78).

Great Dauphin, The. See GRAND.

Great Divide. The Rocky Mountains.

Great Elector, The. Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg (1620-88).

Great Go. At the universities, a familiar term for the final examinations for the B.A. degree; at Oxford usually shortened to Greats. Cp. LITTLE GO.

Great Harry. The name popularly given to the Henry Grace de Dieu, the first double-decked warship in the English navy. Built in 1512, and named after Henry VIII, she was a three-master of about 1,000 tons, carried 72 guns and sailed with a crew of 700 men. She was burned accidentally at Woolwich, in 1533.

Great Head. Malcolm III, of Scotland; also called Canmore, which means the same thing. (Reigned 1057-1093.)

Great Lakes. The five American inland seas—Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, Ontario, and Superior.

Great Mogul. The title of the chief of the Mogul Empire (q.v.).

Great Scott or Scot! An exclamation of surprise, wonder, admiration, indignation, etc. It seems to have originated in America about the late 60s of last century, perhaps in memory of General Winfield Scott (1786-1866) a popular figure in the mid-19th century after his victorious campaign in Mexico in 1847.

In England the expression is sometimes humorously extended to "Great Scotland Yard!"

Great Unknown, The. Sir Walter Scott, who published Waverley (1814), and the subsequent novels as "by the author of Waverley," anonymously. It was not till 1827 that he admitted the authorship, though it was already pretty well known.

The Great White Way. The name formerly applied to Broadway, the theatrical district of New York City.

Greatheart, Mr. The guide of Christiana and her family to the Celestial City in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, part II.

Grecian. See BLUE-COAT SCHOOL.

Grecian bend. An affectation in walking with the body stooped slightly forward, assumed by English women in 1868.

Grecian Coffee-house, in Devereux Court, the oldest in London, was originally opened by Pasqua, a Greek slave, brought to England in 1652 by Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant. This Greek was the first to teach the method of roasting coffee and to introduce that beverage into England.

A Grecian nose or profile is one where the line of the nose continues that of the forehead without a dip.

Greco, El (grek' ô), or The Greek. A Cretan named Domenico Theotocopuli, who studied under Titian and Michelangelo, and moved to Spain about 1570. He was the foremost painter of the Castilian school in the 16th century.

Greegrees. The name given on the West Coast of Africa to amulets, charms, fetishes, etc.

A greegree man. One who sells these.

Greek. A merry Greek. In Troilus and Cressida (i, 2) Shakespeare makes Pandarus, bantering Helen for her love to Troilus, say, "I think Helen loves him better than Paris"; to which Cressida, whose wit is to parry and pervert, replies, "Then she's a merry Greek indeed," insinuating that she was a "woman of pleasure." See GRIG.

All Greek to me. Quite unintelligible; an unknown tongue or language. Casca says, "For mine own part, it was all Greek to me." (Julius Cæsar, 1, 2.)

Last of the Greeks. Philopœmen, of Megalopolis, whose great object was to infuse into the Achæans a military spirit, and establish their independence (252-183 B.C.).

To play the Greek. To indulge in one's cups. The Greeks have always been considered a luxurious race, fond of creature comforts. The rule in Greek banquets was E pithi e apithi (Quaff, or be off!).

When Greek meets Greek, then is the tug of war. When two men or armies of undoubted courage fight, the contest will be very severe. The line is slightly altered from a 17th-century play, and the reference is to the obstinate resistance of the Greek cities to Philip and Alexander, the Macedonian kings.

When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war. NATHANIEL LEE: The Rival Queens, iv, 2.

Greek Calends. Never. To defer anything to the Greek Calends is to defer it sine die. There were no calends in the Greek months. See NEVER.

Greek Church. A name often given inaccurately to the Eastern or Orthodox Church (q.v.) of which the Greek Church is only an autocephalous unit, recognized as independent by the Patriarch of Constantinople in 1850. It is governed by a synod under the presidency of the Archbishop of Athens, and does not differ in any point of doctrine from its parent the Orthodox Church.

Greek Cross. See CROSS.

Greek fire. A combustible composition used for setting fire to an enemy's ships, fortifications, etc., of nitre, sulphur, and naphtha. Tow steeped in the mixture was hurled in a blazing state through tubes, or tied to arrows. The invention is ascribed to Callinicos, of Heliopolis, A.D. 668, and it was used by the Greeks at Constantinople.

Greek gift. A treacherous gift. The reference is to the Wooden Horse of Troy (q.v.), or to Virgil's Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes (Æneid, ii, 49), "I fear the Greeks, even when they offer gifts."

Greek trust. No trust at all. "Gracà fides" was with the Romans no faith at all.

Green. Young, fresh, as green cheese, cream cheese, which is eaten fresh; a green old age, an old age in which the faculties are not impaired and the spirits are still youthful; green goose, a young or mid-summer goose.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old.—MORTIMER: Husbandry.

Immature in age or judgment, inexperienced, young.

My salad days
When I was green in judgment!
Antony and Cleopatra, i, 5.
The text is old, the orator too green.

Simple, raw, easily imposed upon; the characteristic greenhorn (q.v.).

"He is so jolly green," said Charley.—DICKENS: Oliver Twist, ch. ix.

For its symbolism, etc., see COLOURS.

Do you see any green in my eye? See EYE.

If they do these things in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? (Luke xxiii, 31.) If they start like this, how will they finish? Or, as Pope says (Moral Essays, Ep. I), "Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

To give a girl a green gown. A 16th-century descriptive phrase for romping with a girl in the fields and rolling her on the grass so that her dress is stained green.

There's not a budding Boye, or Girle, this day,
But is got up, and gone to bring in May . . .
Many a green-gown has been given;
Many a kisse, both odd and even.

HERRICK: Corinna's Going a-Maying.

To look through green glasses. To feel jealous of one; to be envious of another's success. Cp. GREEN-EYED MONSTER below.

The Board of Green Cloth. See BOARD.

The moon made of green cheese. See MOON.

The wearing of the green. An Irish patriotic and revolutionary song, dating from 1798. Green (cp. EMERALD ISLE) was the emblematic colour adopted by Irish Nationalists.

They're hanging men and women for the wearing of the green.

Gentlemen of the Green Baize Road. Whist players. "Gentlemen of the Green Cloth Road," billiard players. (See Bleak House, ch. xxvi, par. 1.) Probably the idea of sharpers is included, as "Gentlemen of the Road" means highwaymen.

Green belt. A stretch of country around a city or large town that has been set aside to be kept open and free from all building except within certain limits.

Green Dragoons. The old 13th Dragoons (whose regimental facings were green). Later called the 13th Hussars, whose regimental facings have been white since 1861.

Green-eyed monster, The. So Shakespeare called jealousy:—

Iago: O! beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-ey'd monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on. Othello, iii, 3.

A greenish complexion was formerly held to be indicative of jealousy; and as cats, lions, tigers, and all the green-eyed tribe "mock the meat they feed on," so jealousy mocks its victim by loving and loathing it at the same time.

Green fingers, said of a successful gardener whose fingers are supposed to have a sort of magic touch that makes whatever he plants grow and flourish.

Green hands. A nautical phrase for inferior sailors. See ABLE-BODIED SEAMAN, and cp. GREENHORN below.

The Green Howards. The official name, since 1920, of the Yorkshire Regiment, the 19th of the line, named after Sir Charles Howard, colonel from 1738 to 1748. Green was the colour of the regimental facings.

The Green Isle. Ireland. See EMERALD ISLE.

The Green Knight. In the old romance, Valentine and Orson, a Pagan who demanded Fezon in marriage but, overcome by Orson, resigned his claim.

Green Linnets. The 39th Foot, so called from the colour of their facings. Now the Dorsetshire, and the facings are white.

Green Man. This common public-house sign probably represents either a Jack-in-the-Green (q.v.), or a game-keeper, who used at one time to be dressed in green.

But the "Green Man" shall I pass by unsung,
Which mine own James upon his sign-post hung?
His sign, his image—for he once was seen
A squire's attendant, clad in keeper's green.

CRABBE: Borough.

The public-house sign, The Green Man and Still, is probably from the arms of the Distillers' Company, the supporters of which were two Indians, which, by the sign-painters, were depicted as clad in green boughs like a "green man," or Jack-in-the-Green.

On a golf course the green-man is the club servant who is responsible for the putting greens.

Green Mountain Boys. Men of Vermont, U.S.A.—a term in use since 1775. Vermont, or Vert Mont, so called from its forest-covered mountains, was formed from the states of New Hampshire and New York in 1777, largely through the action of its farmers who agitated for an independent state of their own, and were called the Green Mountain Boys.

Green Ribbon Day in Ireland is March 17th, St. Patrick's Day, when the shamrock and green ribbon are worn as the national badge.

Green room. The common waiting-room beyond the stage at a theatre for the performers; so called because at one time the walls were coloured green to relieve the eyes affected by the glare of the stage lights.

Green sickness, the old name for chlorosis, a form of anaemia now very rare but once common in adolescent girls. It was characterized by a greenish pallor.

Green wax. In old legal practice an estreat (certified extract from an official record) formerly delivered to the sheriff by the Exchequer for levy. It was under the seal of the court, which was impressed upon green wax.

Greenbacks. A legal tender note in the United States, first issued in 1862, during the Civil War, as a war-revenue measure; so called because the back is printed in green.

Greengage. A variety of plum introduced into England from France (with others) by Sir William Gage of Hengrave, Suffolk, about 1725, and named in honour of him. Called by the French "Reine Claude," out of compliment to the daughter of Anne de Bretagne and Louis XII, generally called la bonne reine (1499-1524).

Greenhorn. A novice at any trade, profession, sport, etc., a simpleton, a youngster. Cp. GREEN HAND; GREENER.

Greensleeves. A very popular ballad in Elizabethan days, first published in 1581, given in extenso in Clement Robinson's Handefull of Pleasant Delities (1584), and twice mentioned by Shakespeare (Merry Wives, ii, 1, and v, 5.). The air goes back to Elizabethan times, and was used for many ballads. During the Civil Wars it was a party tune to which the Cavaliers sang political ballads. Pepys (April 23rd, 1660) mentions it under the title of The Blacksmith, by which it was sometimes known.

Greenlander. A native of Greenland, which was originally so called (Gronland) by the Norsemen in the 10th century with the idea that if only they gave the country a good name it would induce settlers to go there! Facetiously applied to a greenhorn.

Greenwich. So named by Danish settlers; it means "the green place on the bay" (wich, vig), or place situated on the coast or near the mouth of a river; as Sandwich, Lerwick, Schleswig.

Greenwich barbers. Retailers of sand; so called because the inhabitants of Greenwich used to "shave the pits" in the neighbourhood to supply London with sand.

Greenwich stars. The stars used by astronomers for the lunar computations in the nautical ephemeris.

Greenwich time. Mean time for the meridian of Greenwich, i.e. the system of time in which noon occurs at the moment of passage of the mean sun over the meridian of Greenwich. It is the standard time adopted by astronomers; Greenwich noon is in legal use throughout Great Britain, Ireland, France, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, the Farøe Islands, Gibraltar, Algeria, St. Thomas and Princes Isles, the Ivory Coast, Dahomey, and Morocco.

Since 1883 the system of Standard Time by zones has been accepted by all civilized nations. Standard Time differs from Greenwich Mean Time by an integral number of hours, either slow or fast. Mid-European Time, is, for example, one hour fast of Greenwich Time; Pacific Time is 9 hours slow; i.e. noon at Greenwich is 3 a.m. of the same day in British Columbia.

Gregorian. Gregorian Calendar. See CALENDAR.

Gregorian chant. Plain-song; a mediæval system of church music, so called because it was introduced into the service by Gregory the Great (600).

Gregorian Epoch. The epoch or day on which the Gregorian calendar commenced in October, 1582.

Gregorian telescope. The first form of the reflecting telescope, invented by James Gregory (1638-75), professor of mathematics at St. Andrews (1663).

Gregorian tree. The gallows; so named from Gregory Brandon and his son, Robert (who was popularly known as "Young Gregory"), hangmen from the time of James I to 1649. Sir William Segar, Garter Knight of Arms, granted a coat of arms to Gregory Brandon. See HANGMEN.

This trembles under the black rod, and he Doth fear his fate from the Gregorian tree,
Mercurius Pragmaticus (1641).

Gregorian Year. The civil year, according to the correction introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582. See CALENDAR. The equinox which occurred on March 25th in the time of Julius Cæsar, fell on March 11th in the year 1582. This was because the Julian calculation of 365½ days to a year was 11 min. 10 sec. too much. Gregory suppressed ten days in October, so as to make the equinox fall on March 21, 1583, as it did at the Council of Nice, and, by some simple arrangements, prevented the recurrence in future of a similar error.

The New Style, as it was called, was adopted in England in 1752, when Wednesday, September 2nd, was followed by Thursday, September 14th.

This has given rise to a double computation, as Lady Day, March 25th, Old Lady Day, April 6th; Midsummer Day, June 24th, Old Midsummer Day, July 6th; Michaelmas Day, September 29th, Old Michaelmas Day, October 11th; Christmas Day, December 25th, Old Christmas Day, January 6th.

Until 1752 the legal new year in Britain began on March 25th, though New Year's Day was popularly reckoned as January 1st. It was, therefore, customary to put for all dates between January 1st and March 25th the two years involved: e.g. January 31st, 1721 in popular reckoning would be written or printed as January 31st, 1720/21, that is, 1720 legally but popularly and actually 1721.

Gregories. Hangmen. See GREGORIAN TREE.

Gregory. A feast held on St. Gregory's Day (March 12th), especially in Ireland but formerly common to all Europe.

Gremlin (grem' lin). One of a tribe of imaginary elves, whom the R.A.F. in World War II blamed for all inexplicable failures, mechanical or otherwise, in aeroplanes.

Grenadier. Originally a soldier whose duty in battle was to throw grenades, i.e. explosive shells, weighing from two to six pounds. There were some four or five tall, picked men, chosen for this purpose from each company; later each regiment had a special company of them; and when, in the 18th century, the use of grenades was discontinued (not to be revived until World War I), the name was retained for the company composed of the tallest and finest men. In the British Army it now survives only in the Grenadier Guards, the First regiment of Foot Guards (3 battalions), noted for their height, fine physique, traditions, and discipline.

Grendel. The mythical, half-human monster in Beowulf (q.v.), who nightly raided the king's hall and slew the sleepers; he was slain by Beowulf.

Gresham, Sir Thomas. See CLEOPATRA AND HER PEARL; GRASSHOPPER.

To dine with Sir Thomas Gresham. See DINE.

Greta Hall. The poet of Greta Hall. Southey, who lived at Greta Hall, in the Vale of Keswick (1774-1843).

Gretna Green Marriages. Runaway matches. In Scotland, all that is required of contracting parties is a mutual declaration before witnesses of their willingness to marry, so that elopers reaching Gretna, a hamlet near the village of Springfield, Dumfriesshire, 8 miles N.W. of Carlisle, and just across the border, could (up to 1856) get legally married without either licence, banns, or priest. The declaration was generally made to a blacksmith.

By an Act of 1856 the residence in Scotland for at least 21 days of one of the parties is essential before a marriage can be performed.

Grève (gräv). Place de Grève. The Tyburn of old Paris, where for centuries public executions took place. The present Hôtel de Ville occupies part of the site, and what is left of the Place is now called the Place de l'Hôtel de Ville. The word grève means the strand of a river or the shore of the sea, and the Place is on the bank of the Seine.

Who has e'er been to Paris must needs know the Grève.

The fatal retreat of th' unfortunate brave,
Where honour and justice most oddly contribute
To ease Hero's pains by a halter or gibbet.

PRIOR: The Thief and the Cordelier.

Grey. Greys, The. The Royal Scots Greys (2nd Dragoons) were raised in 1678. It is now uncertain whether their name comes from their grey horses or their uniform, which was also grey. The horses survived the uniform, but both have now gone, as the regiment is mechanized.

Greybeard. An old man—generally a doddering old fellow; also an earthen pot for holding spirits; a large stone jar. Cp. BELLARMINE.

Grey Cloak. A City of London alderman who has passed the chair; so called because his official robe is furred with grey amis.

Grey Eminence. The name given to François Leclerc du Tremolay (1577-1638), or Père Joseph, as he was called, the Capuchin agent and trusty counsellor of Cardinal Richelieu. He owed his sobriquet to the fact that his influence and his policy inspired the Cardinal's actions, and that he was, as it were, a shadowy cardinal in the background.

Grey Friars. Franciscans (q.v.). Black Friars are Dominicans, and White Friars Carmelites.

Grey goose feather, or wing. "The grey goose wing was the death of him," the arrow which is winged with grey goose feathers.

Grey mare. See MARE.

Grey matter, a pseudo-scientific euphemism for the brain, for common sense. The active part of the brain is composed of a greyish tissue which contains the nerve-endings.

Grey Sisters. See FRANCISCANS.

Grey Washer by the Ford, The. An Irish wraith which seems to be washing clothes in a river; but when the "doomed man" approaches she holds up what she seemed to be washing, and it is the phantom of himself with his death wounds from which he is about to suffer.

Greyhound. Juliana Berners, in the Boke of St. Albans (1486) gives the following as "the properteis of a goode Grehound":—

A greyhounde shoulde be heded like a snake, And necked like a Drake; Foted like a Kat, Tayled like a Rat; Syded like a Teme, Chyned like a Beme.

"Syded like a teme" probably means both sides alike, a plough-team being meant.

Greyhound. The Greyhound as a public-house sign is in honour of Henry VII, whose badge it was; it is still the badge (in silver) of the King's Messengers.

Gridiron. This is emblematic of St. Lawrence whose feast is celebrated on August 10. One unsubstantiated legend says that he was roasted on a gridiron; another that he was bound to an iron chair and thus roasted alive. All that is certainly known of him is that he was martyred in the year 258 and is buried in the church dedicated to him outside the walls of Rome. The church of St. Lawrence Jewry in the City of London has a gilt gridiron for a vane.

Gridironer. An Australian settler who bought land in strips like the bars of a gridiron, so that the land lying between was rendered worthless and could be acquired later at a bargain price.

Grief. To come to grief. To meet with disaster; to be ruined; to fail in business.

Griffin. A mythical monster, also called Griffon, Gryphon, etc., fabled to be the offspring of the lion and eagle. Its legs and all from the shoulder to the head are like an eagle, the rest of the body is that of a lion. This creature was sacred to the sun, and kept guard over hidden treasures. See ARIMASPIANS.

[The Griffin is] an Emblem of valour and magnanimity, as being compounded of the Eagle and Lion, the noblest Animals in their kinds; and so is it applicable unto Princes, Presidents, Generals, and all heroic Commanders; and so is it also born in the Coat-arms of many noble Families of Europe.—SM THOMAS BROWNE: Pseudodoxia Epidemica, III, xi.

The Londoners' familiar name for the figure on the monument placed on the site of Temple Bar is The Griffin.

Among Anglo-Indians a newcomer, a green-horn (q.v.) is called a griffin; and the residue of a contract feast, taken away by the contractor, half the buyer's and half the seller's, is known in the trade as griffins.

A griffon is a small, rough-haired terrier used in France for hunting.

Grig. Merry as a grig. A grig is a cricket, or grasshopper; but it is by no means certain that the animal is referred to in this phrase (which is at least as old as the mid-sixteenth century); for grig here may be a corruption of Greek, "merry as a Greek," which dates from about the same time. Shakespeare has: "Then she's a merry Greek"; and again, "Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks" (Troilus and Cressida, i, 2; iv, 4); and among the Romans Græcarum signified "to play the reveller."

Grim. The giant in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (pt. ii), who tried to stop pilgrims on their way to the Celestial City, but was slain by Mr. Greatheart. See also GRIMSBY: GRIM'S DYKE.

Grimalkin. An old she-cat, especially a wicked- or eerie-looking one: from grey and Malkin (q.v.). Shakespeare makes the Witch in Macbeth say, "I come, Graymalkin." The cat was supposed to be a witch and was the companion of witches.

Grimes Graves is the name given to prehistoric—probably Neolithic—flint mines near Brandon in Suffolk. The shaft is some forty feet deep and from it radiate passages in all directions. The old flint-miners worked with picks made of deer antlers, some of which have been found at the flint face as left by those ancient toilers.

Grimm's Law. The law of the permutation of consonants in the principal Aryan languages, first formulated by Jacob L. Grimm, the German philologist, in 1822. Thus, what is p in Greek, Latin, or Sanskrit, becomes f in Gothic, and b or f in the Old High German; what is t in Greek, Latin, or Sanskrit becomes th in Gothic, and d in Old High German; etc. Thus changing p into f, and t into th, "pater" becomes "father." Grimm's Law has, naturally, much greater philological importance than this example shows.

Grimshy (Lincolnshire). Founded, according to the old legend, by Grim, the fisherman who saved the life of Havelok (q.v.), son of the king of Denmark. Grim was laden with gifts by the royal parent, and returned to Lincolnshire, where he built the town whose ancient seal still contains the names of "Gryme" and "Habloc."

Grim's Dyke or Ditch. The name given to the great fortified fosse which was probably built in prehistoric times by the first invaders from the Continent as a protection against the aborigines. It can still be traced along most of its length through the Chilterns.

Grin. To grin like a Cheshire cat. See CAT.

You must grin and bear it. Resistance is hopeless; you may make a face, if you like, but you cannot help yourself.

Grind. To work up for an examination.

To grind one down. To reduce the price asked; to lower wages.

To take a grind. To take a constitutional; to cram into the smallest space the greatest amount of physical exercise. This is the physical grind. The literary grind is a turn at hard study.

Grinders. The double teeth which grind the food put into the mouth. The preacher speaks of old age as the time when "the grinders cease because they are few" (Eccles. xii, 3).

To take a grinder. An obsolete gesture of obloquy and insult, performed by applying the left thumb to the nose and revolving the right hand round it, as if working a hand-organ or coffee-mill; done when someone had tried to practise on your credulity, or to impose upon your good faith.

Griselda or Griseldi (gri zil' dā, gri zel' dā). The model of enduring patience and obedience, often spoken of as "Patient Grisel." She was the heroine of the last tale in Boccaccio's

Decameron, obtained by him from an old French story, Parement des Femmes; it was translated from Boccaccio by Petrarch, and thence used by Chaucer for his Clerk's Tale in the Canterbury Tales.

The synopsis of the story is:—

The Marquis of Saluzzo, having been prevailed upon by his subjects to marry, in order to please himself in the affair, made a choice of a countryman's daughter [viz., Griselda], by whom he had two children which he pretended to put to death. Afterwards, feigning that he was weary of his wife, and had taken another, he had his own daughter brought home, as if he had espoused her, whilst his wife was sent away destitute. At length, being convinced of her patience, he brought her home again, presenting her children, now grown up, and ever afterwards loved and honoured her as his lady.

The trials to which the flinty-hearted marquis subjected his innocent wife are almost as unbelievable as the fortitude with which she is credited to have borne them, and perhaps it is just as well that, as Chaucer says in his own "Envoy" to the Clerk's Tale:—

Grisilde is dead, and eke her patience,
And both at once buried in Italie.

Grist. All's grist that comes to my mill. All is appropriated that comes to me; I can make advantage out of anything; all is made use of that comes in my way. Grist is that quantity of corn which is to be ground at one time.

To bring grist to the mill. To bring profitable business or gain; to furnish supplies.

Grit. See CLEAR GRIT, s.v. CLEAR.

Grizel (griz' ēl). A variant—like Grissel—of Griselda (q.v.). Octavia, wife of Mark Antony and sister of Augustus Cæsar, is called the "patient Grizel" of Roman story.

For patience she will prove a second Grissel.

Taming of the Shrew, ii, 1.

Groaning Chair. A rustic name for a chair in which a woman sits after her confinement to receive congratulations. Similarly "groaning cake" and "groaning cheese" (called in some dialects kemmo, because its making was kept a secret) are the cake and cheese which used to be provided in "Goose month" (q.v.), and "groaning malt" was a strong ale brewed for the occasion.

For a nurse, the child to dandle,
Sugar, soap, spiced pots and candle,
A groaning chair and eke a cradle.

Poor Robin's Almanack, 1676.

Groat. A silver fourpence. The Dutch had a coin called a groot (i.e. great, with reference to its thickness), hence the fourpenny-piece of Edward III was the groat or great silver penny. The modern fourpenny-piece—never officially, but often popularly, called a groat—was issued from 1836 to 1856, the issue of the true groat having ceased in 1662.

He that spends a groat a day idly, spends idly above six pounds a year.—FRANKLIN: Necessary Hints.

You half-faced groat. A 16th-century colloquialism for "You worthless fellow." The debased groats issued in the reign of Henry VIII had the king's head in profile, but those in the reign of Henry VII had the king's head with the full face. See King John, i, 1.

Thou half-faced groat! You thick-cheeked chitty-face!

MUNDAY: The Downfall of Robert, Earle of Huntingdon, (1598).

Groats. Husked oat or wheat, fragments rather larger than grits (A.S. grut, coarse meal).

Blood without groats is nothing. Family without fortune is worthless. The allusion is perhaps to black pudding, which consists chiefly of blood and groats formed into a sausage.

Grog. Any spirits, but especially rum, diluted with water. Admiral Vernon, who was nicknamed Old Grog by his sailors because he walked the deck in rough weather in a grogam cloak, was the first to dilute the rum on board ship, hence the name. Six-water grog is one part rum to six parts of water.

Grog-blossoms. Blotches or pimples on the face produced by over-indulgence in drink.

Grogam (grog' rām). A coarse kind of taffeta made of silk and mohair or silk and wool, stiffened with gum. A corruption of the Fr. gros-grain.

Gossips in grief and grograms clad.

PRAED: The Troubadour, c. i, st. 5.

The blood of the Grogams. See BLOOD.

Grommet. See GRUMMET.

Grongar Hill, on the right bank of the Towy in Carmarthenshire, was rendered famous by the poem of that name by John Dyer (c. 1700-58). Although a native of a nearby village, Llangathen, most of his life was spent in Lincolnshire where he held various livings. His descriptions of Grongar Hill and its neighbourhood have a peculiar fascination.

Groom of the Stole. See STOLE.

Groove. To get into a groove. To get into a narrow, undeviating course of life or habit, to become restricted in outlook and ways.

To be in the groove. To be in the right mood, to be doing something successfully. A phrase originating from the accurate reproduction of music by a needle set in the grooves of a gramophone record.

Gross. The French word gros, big, bulky, corpulent, coarse, which in English has developed many meanings not present in French. Thus, a gross is twelve dozen; a great gross, twelve gross; gross weight is the entire weight without deductions; gross average is the general average. A vilain in gross was a villain the entire property of his master, and not attached to the land; a common in gross is one which is entirely personal property, and does not belong to the manor. Cp. ADVOWSON IN GROSS.

Grotesque. Literally, in "Grotto style." The chambers of ancient buildings revealed in mediæval times in Rome were called grottoes, and as the walls of these were frequently decorated with fanciful ornaments and outré designs, the word grotesque (grotesco) came to be applied to similar ornamentation.

Grotto. Pray remember the grotto. This cry is still occasionally raised by small children in the streets who collect old shells, bits of coloured stone or pottery, with leaves, flowers, and so on, build a little "grotto," and kneel beside it with their caps ready for pennies. The custom should be restricted to July 25th

(St. James's Day), for it is a relic of the old shell grottoes which were erected with an image of the saint for the behoof of those who could not afford the pilgrimage necessary to pay a visit on that day to the shrine of St. James of Compostella.

The scallop shell was the badge worn in the hats or cloaks of pilgrims to the shrine of St. James the Greater, probably because it made a useful begging-spoon or bowl.

And how should I know your true love

From many another one?

Oh by his scallop shell and hat

And by his sandal shoon.

Friar of Orders Grey.

Ground. Ground floor. The story level with the ground outside; or, in a basement-house, the floor above the basement. In U.S.A. known as the first floor.

Ground swell. A long, deep rolling or swell of the sea, caused by a recent or distant storm, or by an earthquake.

It would suit me down to the ground. Wholly and entirely.

To break ground. To be the first to commence a project, etc.; to take the first step in an undertaking.

To gain ground. To make progress; to be improving one's position.

To have the ground cut from under one's feet. To see what one has relied on for support suddenly removed.

To hold one's ground. To maintain one's authority, popularity, etc.; not to budge from one's position.

To lose ground. To become less popular or less successful; to drift away from the object aimed at.

To shift one's ground. To try a different plan; to change one's argument or the basis of one's reasoning.

To stand one's ground. Not to yield or give way; to stick to one's colours; to have the courage of one's opinion.

Ground and lofty tumbling. An 18th-century phrase for an acrobatic performance on the ground and upon a tight-rope, or swing.

Ground hog. The wood-chuck or N. American marmot.

Ground-hog Day. Candlemas (February 2nd), from the saying that the ground hog first appears from his hibernation on that day.

Groundlings. Those who occupied the cheapest portion of an Elizabethan theatre, i.e. the pit, which was the bare ground in front of the stage, without any seats. The actor who to-day "plays to the gallery" in Elizabethan times

Split the ears of the groundlings.

Hamlet, iii, 2.

Growlers. The old four-wheeled cabs were called "growlers" from the surly and discontented manners of their drivers, and "crawlers" from their slow pace.

Grub Stake. To. A miner's term for equipping a gold prospector with what he needs in exchange for a share of his finds.

Grub Street. The former name of a London street in the ward of Cripplegate Without, which, says Johnson, was Much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems; whence any mean production is called grubstreet.

The word is used allusively for needy authors, literary hacks, and their work.

In 1830 the name was changed to Milton Street—not from the poet, though he lived in the neighbourhood for years and was buried at St. Giles's, Cripplegate—but in honour of the carpenter and builder who was ground landlord at the time. The street leads north out of Fore Street, Moorfields, to Chiswell Street.

Gruel (groo' èl). To take one's gruel, to accept one's punishment, to take what's coming to one.

He had a gruelling, he was punished severely (in boxing, etc.).

A gruelling time, gruelling heat, etc. Exhausting, over-powering.

Grummet. The cabin-boy on board ship; the youth whose duty it was to take in the topsails, or top the yard for furling the sails or slinging the yards. The name is also given to a ring of rope made by laying a single strand, and to a powder-wad.

Grundy. What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will our strait-laced neighbours say? The phrase is from Tom Morton's Speed the Plough (1798). In the first scene Mrs. Ashfield shows herself very jealous of neighbour Grundy, and farmer Ashfield says to her: "Be quiet, wull ye? Always sing, dinging Dame Grundy into my ears. What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will Mrs. Grundy think? . . ."

Gruyère Cheese (groo' yâr). A kind of cheese made in the Jura district of Switzerland and France, taking its name from the district of Gruyère in Canton Fribourg. The curd is pressed in large, shallow cylindrical moulds, and while still in the mould is well salted for at least a month. The cheese is of a pale yellow colour and is characterized by an abundance of large air-bubbles.

Gryll. Let Gryll be Gryll, and have his hoggish mind (Spenser: Faerie Queene, II, xii, 87). Don't attempt to wash a blackamoor white; the leopard will never change his spots. Gryll is the Gr. grullios, a hog. When Sir Guyon disenchanting the forms in the Bower of Bliss (q.v.) some were exceedingly angry, and Gryll, who had been metamorphosed by Acrasia into a hog, abused him most roundly.

Gryphon. See GRIFFIN.

Guadiana. According to the old legend the Spanish river was so called from the Squire of Durandarte of this name. Mourning the fall of his master at Roncesvalles, he was turned into the river. See Don Quixote, II, 23. Actually, it is Arabic wadi, a river, and Anas, its classical name (Sirabo).

Guanó (gwa' nō). A fertilizing substance found on many small islands off the western coast of South America and other places. It is composed of the droppings of the immense flocks of sea-birds that resort to these rocky islets, and is found in beds as much as 60 ft. in depth. It is valuable as containing much ammonium oxalate with urates, and phosphates.

Guard. To be off one's guard. To be careless or heedless.

To put one on his guard. To "give him the tip," show him where the danger lies.

A guardroom is the place where military offenders are detained; and a guardship is a ship stationed in a port or harbour for its defence.

Guards, The. See HOUSEHOLD TROOPS.

Guards of the Pole. See BEAR, THE GREAT.

Gubbings. The wild and savage inhabitants in the neighbourhood of Brent Tor, Devon, who, according to Fuller in his Worthies (1661)—lived in holes, like swine; had all things in common; and multiplied without marriage. Their language was vulgar Devonian. . . . They lived by pilfering sheep; were fleet as horses; held together like bees; and revenged every wrong. One of the society was always elected chief, and called King of the Gubbings.

Gudgeon. Gaping for gudgeons. Looking out for things extremely improbable. As a gudgeon is a bait for fish, it means a lie, a deception.

To swallow a gudgeon. To be bamboozled with a most palpable lie, as silly fish are caught by gudgeons. (Fr. goujon, whence the phrase avalier le goujon, to swallow the bait, to die.)

Make fools believe in their foreseeing

Of things before they are in being;

To swallow gudgeons are they're caught.

And count their chickens are they're hatched.

BUTLER: Hudibras, II, 3.

Gudrun (gud' run). The heroine of the great popular German epic poem, Gudrun, or Kudrun, written about 1210, and founded on a passage in the prose Edda (q.v.).

Gudule or Gudila, St. (gu dül'). Patron saint of Brussels, daughter of Count Witger, died 712. She is represented with a lantern, from a tradition that she was one day going to the church of St. Morgelle with a lantern, which went out, but the holy virgin lighted it again with her prayers. Her feast day is January 8th.

Guebres or Ghebers (gā' bērz). Followers of the ancient Persian religion, reformed by Zoroaster; fire-worshippers; Parsees. The name, which was bestowed upon them by their Arabian conquerors, is now applied to fire-worshippers generally.

Guelphs and Ghibellines (gwelfs, gib' e lēnz). Two great parties whose conflicts made so much of the history of Italy and Germany in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. The Guelphs were the papal and popular party in Italy; their name is the Italian form of Welfe, as "Ghibelline" is that of Waiblingen, and the origin of these two words is this: At the battle of Weinsburg, in Suabia (1140), Conrad, Duke of Franconia, rallied his followers with the war-cry Waiblingen (his family estate), while Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, used the cry of Welfe (the family name). The Ghibellines supported in Italy the side of the German emperors; the Guelphs opposed it, and supported the cause of the Pope.

The reigning dynasty in Great Britain, the royal House of Windsor, is, through the ducal House of Brunswick, descended from the Guelphs.

Guenever. See GUINEVER.

Guerilla War (ge ril' à). A petty war carried on by bodies of irregular troops acting independently of each other. From Span. guerilla, diminutive of guerra, war. The word is applied to the armed bands of peasants, and to individuals, who carry on irregular war on their own account, especially at such time as their government is contending with invading armies.

Guerinists (ger' i nists). An early 17th-century sect of French Illuminati (q.v.), founded by Peter Guérin. They were Antinomians, and claimed a special revelation of the Way to Perfection.

Guerino Meschino [the Wretched]. An Italian romance, half chivalric and half allegorical, first printed in Padua in 1473. Guerino was the son of Millon, King of Albania. On the day of his birth his father was dethroned, and the child was rescued by a Greek slave, and called Meschino. When he grew up he fell in love with the Princess Elizena, sister of the Greek Emperor, at Constantinople.

Guernsey Lily. See MISNOMERS.

Guess. The modern American use of the verb, meaning to think, to suppose, to be pretty sure, was good colloquial English before America was colonized. Shakespeare has:—

Bed.: Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.

Tal.: Not all together: better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways.

Henry VI, ii, 1.

and Spenser:—

But now is time, I gesse, homeward to go.

Shepherd's Calendar: June, 117.

Gueux, Les (lâ gër). The league of Flemish nobles organized in 1565 to resist the introduction of the Spanish Inquisition into the Netherlands by Philip II of Spain. The word means "ragamuffins" or "beggars"; and the origin of its application is said to be that when the Duchess of Parma made inquiry about them of Count Berlaymont, he told her they were "the scum and offscouring of the people" (les gueux). The party took the name in defiance, and dressed like beggars, substituting a fox's tail for a feather, etc.

Guides. The military name for men formed into companies for reconnoitring purposes; especially a regiment of cavalry and infantry in the Punjab Frontier Force of the Anglo-Indian army, originally raised by Sir Henry Lawrence in 1846.

Among the incidents in the history of the Guides are the march to Delhi during the Mutiny (1857), the massacre at Kabul (1879) and the relief of Chitral (1895). See also GIRL GUIDES.

In the French army the Guides were created in 1744 as a small company, but the number was gradually increased, and they relinquished their special duties, till in Napoleon's time they formed a personal bodyguard of 10,000 strong.

Napoleon III made the corps a part of the Imperial Guard.

Guignol (gè nyol). The principal character in a popular French puppet-show (very like our "Punch and Judy") dating from the 18th century. As the performance comprised macabre and gruesome incidents the name came to be attached to short plays of this nature; hence Grand Guignol, a series of such plays, or the theatre in which they are performed.

Guildhall. Properly, the meeting-place of a trade guild, i.e. an association of persons exercising the same trade or craft, formed for the protection and promotion of their common interests. In London the guilds became of importance in the 14th century, and as it came about that the Corporation was formed almost entirely from among their members their Hall was used as the Town Hall or headquarters of the Corporation, as it still is to-day. Here are the Court of Common Council, the Court of Aldermen, the Chamberlain's Court, the police court presided over by an alderman, the Corporation Art Gallery, Museum, etc.

Portions of the London Guildhall were badly damaged in the air-raids of 1940-41, the Council Chamber and the roof of the great hall being entirely destroyed.

The ancient guilds are to-day represented by the Livery Companies (q.v.).

Guillemites. See WILLIAM OF MALEVAL, ST.

Guillotine (gil' õ tèn). So named from Joseph Ignace Guillotin (1738-1814), a French physician, who proposed its adoption to prevent unnecessary pain.

It was introduced April 25th, 1792, and is still used in France. A previous instrument invented by Antoine Louis (1723-92), a French surgeon, was called a Louissette. The Maiden (q.v.) was a similar instrument.

In English Parliamentary phraseology the terms "guillotine," "to guillotine," "to apply the guillotine," signify the curtailment of a debate by fixing beforehand when the vote on the various parts of a Bill must be taken.

Guinea. A gold coin current in England from 1663 to 1817, originally made of gold from Guinea in West Africa and intended for use in the Guinea trade. The earliest issues bore a small elephant beneath the head of the king. The nominal value was originally 20s.; from 1717 it was legal tender for 21s., but its actual value varied, and in 1695, owing to the bad condition of silver coin, was as high as 30s.

It is still the custom for professional fees, subscriptions, the price of race-horses, pictures, and other luxuries, to be paid in guineas, though there is no such coin current. See SPADE GUINEA.

Guinea-dropper. A cheat. The term is about equal to thimble-rig, and alludes to an ancient cheating dodge of dropping counterfeit guineas.

Who now the guinea-dropper's bait regards,
Tricked by the sharper's dice or juggler's cards?
GAY: Trivia, iii, 249.

Guinea fowl. So called because it was brought to us from the coast of Guinea, where it is very common.

Guinea-hen. An Elizabethan synonym for a prostitute.

Ere . . . I would drown myself for the love of a Guinea-hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.—Othello, i, 3.

Guineapig. A term used in financial circles for a purely "ornamental" director of a public company, generally a man of title or social position who allows his name to be used in return for his fees—which formerly amounted to a guinea and a lunch each time he attended a board meeting.

It was also an old name for a midshipman.

He had a letter from the captain of the Indiaman offering you a berth on board as guineapig, or midshipman.—CAPTAIN MARRYAT: Poor Jack, ch. xxxi.

A special jurymen who is paid a guinea a case; as is also a clergyman without cure, who takes occasional duty for a guinea a sermon. It is now applied to one used as a test case for a medical or psychological experiment.

Guineapig Club. A club founded in World War II for severely wounded R.A.F. personnel who had to undergo plastic surgery, or volunteered for experimental operations.

Guinever (gwin 'e vēr) (Geoffrey of Monmouth's Guanhumara, the Welsh Gwenhwyvar, meaning "the white ghost"). In the Arthurian legends, the wife of King Arthur. According to Malory she was the daughter of Leodegrance, king of the land of Camelard. She entertained a guilty passion for Sir Lancelot of the Lake, one of the knights of the Round Table, but during the absence of King Arthur in his expedition against Leo, king of the Romans, she was seduced by Modred, her husband's nephew, who had usurped the kingdom. Arthur hastened back, Guinever fled, and a desperate battle was fought, in which Modred was slain and Arthur mortally wounded. Guinever took the veil at Almesbury, where later she died. She was buried at Glastonbury, and has left her name as a synonym for a beautiful, faithless, but repentant wife.

Gule (gül). The Gule of August. August 1st, Lammas Day, a quarter day in Scotland, and half quarter day in England. The word is probably the Welsh gwyl (Lat. vigilia), a festival.

Gules (gülz). The heraldic term for red. In engraving it is shown by perpendicular parallel lines. From mediæval Latin gula, ermine dyed red.

With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules.

Timon of Athens, iv, 3.

And threw warm gules on Madeline's fair breast.

KEATS: Eve of St. Agnes.

Gulf. A man that goes in for honours at the Universities who is not good enough to be classed and yet has shown sufficient merit to pass. When the list is made out a line is drawn after the classes, and the few names put below are in the "gulf," and those so honoured are "gulfed." In the good old times these men were not qualified to stand for the classical tripos.

The ranks of our curatehood are supplied by youths whom, at the very best, merciful examiners have raised from the very gates of "pluck" to the comparative paradise of the "Gulf".—Saturday Review.

A great gulf fixed. An impassable separation.

The allusion is to the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Luke xvi, 26).

Gulf Stream. The great, warm ocean current which flows out of the Gulf of Mexico (whence its name) and, passing by the eastern coast of the United States, is, near the banks of Newfoundland, deflected across the Atlantic to modify the climate of Western Europe as far north as Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla. It washes the shores of the British Isles.

Gulistan (Pers., the garden of roses). The famous collection of moral sentences by Sadi (about 1190-1291), the most celebrated of Persian poets, except, perhaps, Omar Khayyam. It consists of sections on kings, dervishes, contentment, love, youth, old age, social duties, etc., with many stories and philosophical sayings.

Gull. A well-known Elizabethan synonym for one who is easily duped, especially a high-born gentleman (cp. BEJAN). Dekker wrote his Gull's Hornbook (1609) as a kind of guide to the behaviour of contemporary gallants.

The most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention played on.

SHAKESPEARE: Twelfth Night, v, 1.

Gulliver's Travels (gül' i ver). This, the best known of the works of Jonathan Swift (1667-1745) was published in 1726. It consists of four travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver. The first is to Lilliput, a country of tiny men and women some six inches high; the second is to Brobdingnag, a land of giants as big in comparison to Gulliver as he was to the Lilliputians. His third voyage took him to Laputa, the flying island inhabited by scientific quacks. Lastly Gulliver found himself in the country of the Houyhnhnms (pronounced whin' imz), a race of horses endowed with human reason and bearing rule over the race of men called Yahoos. Frequently looked upon as a mere children's book, it is in reality a biting social and political satire.

Whether we read it, as children do, for the story, or as historians, for the political allusions, or as men of the world, for the satire and philosophy, we have to acknowledge that it is one of the wonderful and unique books of the world's literature.—EDMUND GOSSE: History of English Literature.

Gully-raker. In early Australian slang, one who combs wild country and appropriates any unbranded cattle he finds there.

Gumbo. A thick vegetable soup eaten in the U.S.A.

Gummed. He frets like gummed velvet or gummed taffety. Velvet and taffeta were sometimes stiffened with gum to make them "sit better," but, being very stiff, they fretted out quickly.

Gumption. Common sense, the wit to turn things to account, capability. The derivation and origin of the word are unknown.

Gum-shoes. The American name for the English galoshes.

Gun. This word was formerly used for some large, stone-throwing engine of war besides the firearm, but it is not certain that the first-mentioned use was the earlier. In The House of

Fame (iii, 553) Chaucer speaks of the trumpet sounding:—

As swifte as pelet out of gonne
Whan fire is in the poudre ronne.

and in the Legend of Good Women (Cleopatra, 58) he seems to use the word in reference to the ballista:—

With grisly sounne out gooth the grete gonne,
And hertely they hurtelen al attounes,
And fro the toppes down cometh the grete stones.

The word is a shortened form of the old Scandinavian female name, Gunnildr (gunnr is Icelandic for war, and hildr for battle); and it may have been given first to the ballista and then, when cannon came into use, transferred to the firearm. The bestowing of female names on arms is not uncommon; there are the famous "Mons Meg," "Queen Elizabeth's pocket-pistol," as well as the "Big Bertha" of World War I—the long-range gun that bombarded Paris, so called in honour of Bertha Krupp, wife of the head of the great armament factory at Essen.

Barisal guns, or lake guns. See BARISAL.

Evening or sunset gun. A gun fired at sunset, or about 9 o'clock p.m.

He's a great gun. A man of note or consequence.

Minute gun. The firing of a gun once a minute, generally as a salute at a royal or state funeral.

Sure as a gun. Quite certain. It is as certain to happen as a gun to go off if the trigger is pressed.

To blow great guns. To be very boisterous and windy. Noisy and boisterous as the reports of great guns.

To lay a gun. To aim it (used only of artillery).

To run away from one's own guns. To eat one's words; desert what is laid down as a principle. The allusion is obvious.

To stick to one's guns. To maintain one's position, argument, etc., in spite of opposition.

To gun for someone. To set out deliberately to get a person and do him a mischief.

To give it the gun. In R.A.F. parlance during World War II, to open the throttle of an aeroplane suddenly and hard.

Gun cotton. A highly explosive compound, prepared by saturating cotton or other cellulose material with nitric and sulphuric acids.

Gun-man. A desperado armed with a revolver and prepared to use it in the most reckless manner. A term of American origin.

Gun money. Base money issued in Ireland by James II, made from old brass cannon, with a small admixture of silver.

Gun room. A room in the afterpart of a lower gun-deck for the accommodation of junior officers.

Gun-runner. One who unlawfully smuggles guns into a country for belligerent purposes. The word is formed on the model of blockade-runner.

Gunnar. The Norse form of Gunther (q.v.).

Gunner. Kissing the gunner's daughter. Being flogged on board ship. At one time sailors in the Royal Navy who were to be flogged were tied to the breech of a cannon.

Gunpowder Plot. The project of a few Roman Catholics to destroy James I with the Lords and Commons when he opened Parliament, on November 5th, 1605.

It was to be done by exploding barrels of gunpowder placed in cellars adjacent to the chamber, and Guy Fawkes, a convert to Catholicism, was deputed to fire the train. Had the plot succeeded, and king and Parliament been destroyed, Prince Charles and his sister were to have been made captive, and a Catholic rising attempted in the Midlands. One of the Catholic peers was, however, warned to keep away from Parliament that day; he communicated his news to the authorities; the cellars were searched and Guy Fawkes taken, the night of November 4th.

The ceremony of searching the vaults of the Houses before the annual opening of Parliament is a legacy of the Gunpowder Plot.

Gunter's Chain, for land surveying, is so named from Edmund Gunter (1581-1626), the great mathematician and professor of Astronomy at Gresham College, 1619-26. It is sixty-six feet long, and divided into one hundred links. As ten square chains make an acre, it follows that an acre contains 100,000 square links.

Gunter's scale is a two-foot rule having scales of chords, tangents, etc., and logarithmic lines, engraved on it; it is used in surveying and navigation for the mechanical solving of problems.

According to Gunter. Carefully and correctly done; with no possibility of mistake; the American counterpart of "according to Cocker" (see COCKER), which is more common in England.

Gunther (gun' ter). In the Nibelungen saga, a Burgundian king, brother of Kriemhild (= Gudrun), the wife of Sigurd (= Siegfried). He resolved to wed the martial queen Brunhild (q.v.), who had made a vow to marry only the man who could ride through the flames that encircled her castle. Gunther failed (see GRANI), but Siegfried did so in his likeness and remained with the Queen for three nights, his sword being between them all the time. Gunther then married Brunhild, but later Kriemhild told Brunhild that it was Siegfried who had ridden through the fire; jealousy sprang up between the families, Siegfried was slain at Brunhild's desire, and she killed herself, her dying wish being to be burnt on a pile with Siegfried at her side, his sword between them. Gunther was slain by Atli because he refused to reveal where he had hidden the hoard of the Nibelungs. Gundicarius, a Burgundian king who, with his whole tribe, perished by the sword of the Huns in 437, is supposed to be the historical character round whom these legends collected.

Gurgoyle. See GARGOYLE.

Gurney Light. See BUDE.

Guru (goo' roo). A Sanskrit word meaning venerable; it is now applied to a Hindu spiritual teacher and leader.

Gustia Bone. See BAWBEE.

Gutenberg's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Guthlac, St., (güth' läk) of Crowland, Lincolnshire, is represented in Christian art as a hermit punishing demons with a scourge, or consoled by angels while demons torment him. He was a member of the royal family of Mercia in the 7th century.

Guthrum (güth' rüm). Silver of Guthrum's Lane. Fine silver was at one time so called, because the chief gold and silver smiths of London resided there in the 13th and 14th centuries. The street, which is now called Gutter Lane, and runs from Cheapside into Gresham Street, was originally Gudrun's or Goderth's Lane. The hall of the Goldsmiths' Company is still in this locality.

Guy. An effigy of a man, stuffed with combustibles and supposed to represent Guy Fawkes, carried round in procession and finally burnt on November 5th, in memory of Gunpowder Plot (q.v.); hence, any dowdy, fantastic figure, a "fright." In American usage the word, as applied to a person, has a much wider significance, and can mean almost anyone.

To guy a person, is to chaff him, to make fun of him.

To do a guy. To decamp.

Guy of Warwick. An English hero of legend and romance, whose exploits were first written down by an Anglo-Norman poet of the 12th century and were, by the 14th century, accepted as authentic history.

To obtain Phelis (Felix) as his wife he undertook many knightly deeds. He rescued the daughter of the Emperor of Germany, and went to fight against the Saracens, slaying the doughty Coldran, Elmaye King of Tyre, and the soldan himself. Then he returned and wedded Phelis; but in forty days went back to the Holy Land, where he slew the giant Amārant, and many others. He again returned to England, and slew at Winchester Colbrand, the Danish giant, in single combat, thus redeeming England from Danish tribute. At Windsor he destroyed a boar of "passing might and strength"; on Dunsmore Heath he slew the "Dun-cow of Dunsmore, a monstrous wyld and cruell beast"; and in Northumberland a dragon "black as any cole." Having achieved all this, he became a hermit near Warwick. Daily he went in rags to his own castle and begged bread of his wife Phelis; but on his death-bed he sent her a ring, by which she recognized her lord, and went to close his dying eyes.

I am not Sampson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand, to mow them down before me.—Henry VIII, v, 3.

Guy's Hospital. Founded in 1722 by Thomas Guy (c. 1645-1724), bookseller, and philanthropist. He amassed an immense fortune in 1720 by speculations in the South Sea Stock, and gave £238,292 to found and endow the hospital which is situated in Southwark.

Gwynn, Eleanor or Nell (1650-87) was a popular London actress. She first became known when selling oranges at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, and in 1665 she appeared as Cydaria in Dryden's Indian Emperor. She was an illiterate girl but excellent company and soon won the favour of Charles II by whom she had a son, Charles Beauchamp (1670-1726) who was created Duke of St. Albans in 1684. Nell Gwynn left the stage in 1682, but she never lost the king's favour, and one of his dying wishes was that she should be looked after.

Gyges (gí' jēz). A king of Lydia of the 7th century B.C., who founded a new dynasty, warred against Asurbanipal of Assyria, and is memorable in legend for his ring and his prodigious wealth.

According to Plato, Gyges descended into a chasm of the earth, where he found a brazen horse; opening the sides of the animal, he found the carcass of a man, from whose finger he drew a brazen ring which rendered him invisible.

Why, did you think that you had Gyges ring, Or the herb that gives invisibility [fern-seed]?

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Fair Maid of the Inn, i, 1.

It was by the aid of the ring that Gyges obtained possession of the wife of Candaules (q.v.) and, through her, of his kingdom.

Gymnosophists (jim nos' o fists). A sect of ancient Hindu philosophers who went about with naked feet and almost without clothing. They lived in woods, subsisted on roots, and never married. They believed in the transmigration of souls. Strabo divides them into Brahmins and Samans. (Gr. gymnos, naked; sophistes, sages.)

Gyp (jip). The name at Cambridge (and at Durham) for a college servant, who acts as valet to two or more undergraduates, the counterpart of the Oxford scout. He differs from a bedmaker, inasmuch as he does not make beds; but he runs on errands, waits at table, wakes men for morning chapel, brushes their clothes, and so on. The word is probably from gippo, a 17th-century term for a scullion.

Gypsy. See GIPSY.

Gyromancy. A kind of divination performed by walking round in a circle or ring until one fell from dizziness, the direction of the fall being of significance.

Gytrash. A north-of-England spirit, which, in the form of horse, mule, or large dog, haunts solitary ways, and sometimes comes upon the belated travellers.

I remembered certain of Bessie's tales, wherein figured a . . . spirit called a Gytrash.—CHARLOTTE BRONTË: Jane Eyre, xii.

H

H. The form of our capital H is through the Roman and Greek directly from the Phœnician (Semitic) letter Heth or Kheth, which, having two cross-bars instead of one, represented a fence. The corresponding Egyptian hieroglyph was a sieve, and the Anglo-Saxon rune is called hægel, hail.

H.M.S. His or Her Majesty's service or ship, as H.M.S. Wellington.

Habeas Corpus (hā' bē ās kōr' pūs). The Habeas Corpus Act was passed in 1679, and defined a provision of similar character in Magna Charta, to which also it added certain details. Its chief purpose was to prohibit any judge, under severe penalties, from refusing to issue to a prisoner a Writ of Habeas Corpus by which the jailer was obliged to produce the prisoner in court in person and to certify the cause of imprisonment, thus preventing people being imprisoned on mere suspicion, and making it illegal for one to be left in prison an indefinite time without trial.

It further provides that every accused person shall have the question of his guilt decided by a jury of twelve, and not by a Government agent or nominee; that no prisoner can be tried a second time on the same charge; that every prisoner may insist on being examined within twenty days of his arrest, and tried at the next session; and that no one may be sent to prison beyond the seas, either within or without the British Dominions.

Habeas Corpus means "[I hear] that you have the body"; these being the opening words of the writ.

The Habeas Corpus Act has been suspended in times of political and social disturbance, and its provisions have been more than once amended and extended.

A Habeas Corpus Act was passed in Ireland in 1782, and in Scotland its place is taken by the Wrongous Imprisonment Act of 1701.

Haberdasher. The word is probably connected with O.Fr. hapertas, a word of unknown origin denoting some kind of fabric; but Prof. Weekley makes what he calls the "dubious" conjecture that it is from O.Fr. avoir (aveir), goods, property (as in avoirpouois), and Fr. and Provençal ais, a shop-board.

To match this saint there was another,
As busy and perverse a brother,
An haberdasher of small wares
In politics and state affairs.

BUTLER: Hudibras, iii, 2.

The Haberdashers is one of the twelve great London livery companies. It was founded in the 15th century as the Merchant Haberdashers' Company. The Hall, destroyed by enemy action in 1940, was built by Christopher Wren.

Habit is Second Nature. The wise saw of Diogenes, the cynic (412-323 B.C.).

Shakespeare: "Use almost can change the stamp of nature" (Hamlet, iii, 4).

French: L'habitude est une seconde nature.

Latin: Usus est optimus magister.

Habsburg or Hapsburg (hābz' bērg) is a contraction of Habichs-burg (Hawk's Tower); so called from the castle on the right bank of the Aar, built in the 11th century by Werner, Bishop of Strasburg, whose nephew (Werner II) was the first to assume the title of "Count of Habsburg." His great-grandson, Albrecht II, assumed the title of "Landgraf of Sundgau." His grandson, Albrecht IV, in the 13th century, laid the foundation of the greatness of the House, the original male line of which became extinct on the death of Charles VI in 1740. The late imperial family of Austria were the Habsburg-Lorraines, springing from the marriage of Maria Theresa, daughter of Charles VI, with Francis I, Duke of Lorraine, in 1736.

Habsburg Lip. See AUSTRIAN LIP.

Hack. Short for hackney (q.v.), a horse let out for hire; hence, one whose services are for hire, especially a literary drudge, compiler, furbisher-up of better men's work. Goldsmith, who well knew from his own experience what the life was, wrote an "Epitaph" on one:—

Here lies poor Ned Purdon, from misery freed,
Who long was a bookseller's hack;
He led such a damnable life in this world,
I don't think he'll wish to come back.

Hackell's Coit. A vast stone said to weigh about 30 tons, near Stanton Drew, Somerset; so called from a tradition that it was a quoit or coit thrown by Sir John Hautville. In Wiltshire three huge stones near Kennet are called the Devil's coits.

Hackney. Originally (14th cent.) the name given to a class of medium-sized horses, distinguishing them from war-horses. They were used for ordinary riding, and later the name was applied to a horse let out for hire—whence hackney carriage and hackney writer or hack (q.v.).

The knights are well horsed, and the common people and others on littell *hakeney*s and geldynges.
—Froissart.

The name of the London borough of Hackney has no connection whatever with the foregoing. There is some doubt as to its actual derivation; the earliest mention of the place is in a patent of Edward IV.

Had it, To have. An expression which came into wide use during World War II. It may have sprung from North Australia where it was used prior to the War in the sense of anything which was past or done with, i.e. a book which one had read and finished with had "had it." During the war it came to be synonymous with "done for," i.e. of a man killed or seriously wounded—"he's had it." In both these senses it may be short for "had his time;" as the full expression was also found during the war, i.e. one who had been caught by shell fire with no cover available and expected to be killed would say afterwards "I thought I'd had my time." Since then the expression has strayed farther from the original sense and is now applied sarcastically to something one has not had, i.e. to one who has missed his train an onlooker will say "you've had it."

Haddock. According to tradition, it was a haddock in whose mouth St. Peter found the piece of money, the stater or shekel (Matt. xvii, 27), and the two marks on the fish's neck are said to be impressions of the finger and thumb of the apostle. It is a pretty story, but haddocks cannot live in the fresh water of the Lake of Gennesaret. Cp. JOHN DORY.

O superstitious dainty, Peter's fish,
How com'st thou here to make so goodly dish?
METELLUS: Dialogues (1693).

Hades (hā' dēz). In Homer, the name of the god (Pluto) who reigns over the dead; but in later classical mythology the abode of the departed spirits, a place of gloom but not necessarily a place of punishment and torture. As the state or abode of the dead it corresponds to the Hebrew Sheol, a word which, in the Authorized Version, has frequently been translated by the misleading Hell. Hence Hades is sometimes vulgarly used as a euphemism for Hell.

The word is usually derived from Gr. a, privative, and idein, to see, i.e. the unseen: but this derivation is not at all certain. Cp. INFERNO.

Hadith (hā' dith) (Ar., a saying or tradition). The traditions about the prophet Mohammed's sayings and doings. This compilation, which was made in the 10th century by the Moslem jurists Moshin and Bokhari, forms a supplement to the Koran as the Talmud to the Jewish Scriptures. The Hadith was not allowed originally to be committed to writing, but the danger of the traditions being perverted or forgotten led to their being placed on record.

Hadj (haj). The pilgrimage to the Kaaba (shrine at the great mosque of Mecca), which every Mohammedan feels bound to make once at least before death. Those who neglect to do so "might as well die Jews or Christians." These pilgrimages take place in the twelfth month of each year, Zu 'l-Hajjia, roughly corresponding to our August.

Until comparatively recent years none but a Moslem could make this pilgrimage except at risk of his life, and the Hadj was only performed by Burckhardt, Burton and a few other intrepid travellers in the disguise of zealous Mohammedans.

Hadji (ha' jē). A Mohammedan who has made the Hadj or pilgrimage to the Prophet's tomb at Mecca. Every Hadji is entitled to wear a green turban.

Hadrian's Wall, a Roman rampart that runs for 73½ miles between Wallsend-on-Tyne and Bowness on the Solway Firth. It was erected about A.D. 122 by the Emperor Hadrian to keep back the Pictish tribes of North Britain, and was repaired by Severus in 208. The wall was 20 ft. high and 8 ft. thick, with strong points every mile or so, and towers between. To the south of the wall is a parallel vallum or ditch with three ramparts, all of earthworks. Excavations and research have been made at various points, notably at the ancient Borcovicus, near the present Housesteads.

Hamony (hē' mò nī). The name invented by Milton (Comus, 638) for a mythical plant which is of "sovereign use against all enchantments, mildew, blast, or damp, or ghastly Furies' apparition." The reference is probably to Hamonia, an old name for Thessaly, a country specially endowed with mystical associations by the ancient Greeks, but Coleridge rather fancifully says the word is hæma-oïnos (blood-wine), and refers to the blood of Jesus Christ, which destroys all evil. The leaf, says Milton, "had prickles on it," but "it bore a bright golden flower." With this explanation the prickles become the crown of thorns, the flower the fruits of salvation.

Hafiz (ha' fīz). A Persian poet (fl. 14th cent.), and one of the greatest poets of the world. His ghazels (i.e. songs, odes) tell of love and wine, nightingales, flowers, the instability of all things human, of Allah and the Prophet, etc.; and his tomb at Shiraz is still the resort of pilgrims. The name Hafiz is Arabic for "one who knows the Koran and Hadith (q.v.) by heart."

Hag. A witch or sorceress; originally, an evil spirit, demon, harpy. (A.S. hagtesse, a witch or hag.)

How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?
Macbeth, iv, 1.

Hag-knots. Tangles in the manes of horses, etc., supposed to be used by witches for stirrups. The term is common in the New Forest. Seamen use the word hag's-teeth to express those parts of a matting, etc., which spoil its general uniformity.

Hagarenes (hāg a rēnz). An old name for the Saracens, Arabs, or Moors, who were supposed to be descendants of Hagar, Abraham's bondwoman.

San Diego . . . hath often been seen conquering . . . the Hagarene squadrons.—CERVANTES: Don Quixote, Pt. ii, Bk. iv, 6.

Hagen (ha' gen). In the Nibelungenlied and the old Norse sagas (where he is called Hogni), a Burgundian knight, liegeman to the king, Gunther (q.v.), in some accounts his brother and in others a distant kinsman.

Haggadah (hāga' dā). The portion of the Midrash (q.v.) which contains rabbinical interpretations of the historical and legendary, ethical, parabolic, and speculative parts of the Hebrew Scriptures: the portion devoted to law, practice, and doctrine is called the Halachah. They were commenced in the 2nd century A.D. and completed by the 11th.

Hagganah (hāg á na'), the Jewish defence force raised in Palestine during the British mandate (1923-48), for defensive and aggressive action towards establishing the country as a Jewish commonwealth.

Hague, The (hāg), is the English form of the Dutch 's Gravenhage or Den Haag, the capital of the Netherlands. The Hague Tribunal is an international court of justice established at the suggestion of Tsar Nicholas II in 1899, when 16 powers signed the agreement by which each power nominates four members to serve for six years. Many international cases have been referred to the Court, including one about the sovereignty of Greenland, in 1932, which was adjudicated to Denmark.

Ha-ha. A ditch or sunk fence serving the purpose of a hedge without breaking the prospect.

Haidee (hī' dē). A beautiful Greek girl in Byron's Don Juan who died of love when parted from him.

Hail. Health, an exclamation of welcome, like the Lat. salve. It is from the Icel. heill, hale, healthy, and represents the A.S. greeting wes hal (may you) be in whole (or good) health. Hail, the frozen rain, is A.S. hagol.

All hail, Macbeth! Hail to thee, thane of Glamis.
Macbeth, 1, 3.

Hail fellow well met. One on easy, familiar terms; an intimate acquaintance.

Hail fellow well met, all dirty and wet;

Find out, if you can, who's master, who's man.

SWIFT: My Lady's Lamentation.

To hail a ship. To call to those on board.

To hail an omnibus or a cab is to accost the driver in order to stop or hire the vehicle.

Hainault (hā' nolt). A province in Belgium. Also a forest in Essex which ceased to exist in the 19th century, though the name survives. The Fairlop oak (q.v.) was here.

Hair. One single tuft is left on the shaven crown of a Mussulman, for Mohammed to grasp hold of when drawing the deceased to Paradise.

And each scalp had a single long tuft of hair.

BYRON: Siege of Corinth.

The scalp-lock of the North American Indians, left on the otherwise bald head, is for a conquering enemy to seize when he tears off the scalp.

The ancients believed that till a lock of hair is devoted to Proserpine, she refuses to release the soul from the dying body. When Dido mounted the funeral pile, she lingered in suffering till Juno sent Iris to cut off a lock of her hair; Thanatos did the same for Alcestis, when she gave her life for her husband; and in all sacrifices a forelock was first cut off from the head of the victim as an offering to the black queen.

It was an old idea that a person with red hair could not be trusted, from the tradition that Judas had red hair.

Rosalind: His very hair is of the dissembling colour.

Celia: Somewhat browner than Judas's.—As You Like It, iii, 4.

A man with black hair but a red beard was the worst of all. The old rhyme says:—

A red beard and a black head.

Catch him with a good trick and take him dead.

See also RED-HAIRED PERSONS.

Byron says, in The Prisoner of Chillon:—

My hair is grey, but not with years,

Nor grew it white

In a single night,

As men's have grown from sudden fears.

and it is a well-authenticated fact that this can take, and has taken, place. It is told that Ludovico Sforza became grey in a single night; Charles I, also, while he was on his trial; and Marie Antoinette grew grey from grief during her imprisonment.

Hair shirt, a garment of coarse haircloth (made from horsehair and wool or cotton) worn next the skin by ascetics and penitents.

Hair-spring is a fine, spiral spring in a clock or watch for regulating the movement of the balance.

Hair trigger, a trigger that allows the firing mechanism of a rifle or revolver to be operated by a very slight pressure. Invented in the 16th century.

Against the hair. Against the grain, contrary to its nature.

If you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions.—Merry Wives of Windsor, ii, 3.

Both of a hair. As like as two peas, or hairs; also, similar in disposition, taste, or trade, etc.

Hair by hair you will pull out the horse's tail. Slow and sure wins the race.

Plutarch says that Sertorius, in order to teach his soldiers that perseverance and wit are better than brute force, had two horses brought before them, and set two men to pull out their tails. One of the men, a burly Hercules, tugged and tugged, but all to no purpose; the other was a sharp, weazen-faced tailor, who plucked one hair at a time, amidst roars of laughter, and soon left the stump quite bare.

Keep your hair on! Obsolete slang for Don't lose your temper, don't get excited! Wool is sometimes substituted for hair in this phrase.

The hair of the dog that bit you. See DOG.

To a hair or To the turn of a hair. To a nicety.

To comb his hair the wrong way. To cross or vex him by running counter to his prejudices, opinions, or habits.

To make one's hair stand on end. To terrify. Dr. Andrews, of Beresford Chapel, Walworth, who attended an execution says: "When the executioner put the cords on the criminal's wrists, his hair, though long and lanky, of a weak iron-grey, rose gradually and stood perfectly upright, and so remained for some time, and then fell gradually down again."

Fear came upon me and trembling, . . . [and] the hair of my flesh stood up.—Job iv, 14, 15.

To split hairs. To argue over petty points, make fine, cavilling distinctions, quibble over trifles.

To tear one's hair. To show signs of extreme anguish, grief, or vexation.

Without turning a hair. Without indicating any sign of distress or agitation. The phrase is from the stable; for when horses sweat they show it by a roughening of the hair.

Hair-brained. See HARE-BRAINED.

Hair-breadth 'scape. A very narrow escape from some danger or evil. In measurement the forty-eighth part of an inch is called a "hair-breadth."

Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances

Of moving accidents by flood and field.

Of hair-breadth 'scapes i' th' imminent deadly breach.

Othello, i, 3.

Hair Stane. A hoar-stone (q.v.) is so called in Scotland.

Hajar al-Aswad (há' jar al äs' wád). The famous black stone in the north-east corner of the Kaaba; it is an irregular oval, about 7 in. in breadth, and is surrounded with a circle of gold. The legend is that when Abraham wished to build the Kaaba, the stones came to him of their own accord, and the patriarch commanded all the faithful to kiss this one.

The stone is probably an aerolite, and it was worshipped long before Mohammed's day, for in the 2nd century A.D. Maximus Tyrius spoke of the Arabians paying homage to it, and Persian legend states that it was an emblem of Saturn.

Hajji Baba (hăj' i ba' ba), the title of the strange story told by J. J. Morier (c. 1780-1849) which has become a classic of its kind. Morier was born in Syria and spent much of his life in the East. In 1824 he published this remarkable romance of Persia in which Hajji Baba, a barber and a delightful rogue of the Gil Blas genus, narrated his adventures shady and amusing. So true to life was the story that the Persian government took pains to prove that it was not an authentic account of a real person but the work of a devil-inspired Ferangi.

Hake. We lose in hake, but gain in herring. Lose one way, but gain in another. Herring are persecuted by the hake, which are therefore driven away from a herring fishery.

Halcyon Days (hăl' si on). A time of happiness and prosperity. Halcyon is the Greek for a kingfisher, compounded of hals (the sea) and kup (to brood on). The ancient Sicilians believed that the kingfisher laid its eggs and incubated for fourteen days, before the winter solstice, on the surface of the sea, during which time the waves of the sea were always unruffled.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be
As halcyon brooding on a winter's sea. DRYDEN.
The peaceful king fishers are met together
About the deck and prophesie calm weather.

WILD: Iter Boreale.

Half. Half and half. A mixture of two liquors, especially porter and ale, in equal quantities.

Half done, as Elgin was burnt. In the wars between James II of Scotland and the Douglasses in 1452, the Earl of Huntly burnt one-half of the town of Elgin, being the side which belonged to the Douglasses, but left the other side standing because it belonged to his own family. (Scott: Tales of a Grandfather, xxi.)

Half is more than the whole. This is what Hesiod said to his brother Perseus, when he wished him to settle a dispute without going to law. He meant "half of the estate without the expense of law will be better than the whole after the lawyers have had their pickings." The remark, however, has a very wide significance.

Unhappy they to whom God has not revealed,
By a strong light which must their sense control,
That half a great estate's more than the whole.

—COWLEY: Essays in Verse and Prose, iv.

Half-seas over. Midway between one condition and another: now usually applied to a person slightly drunk.

I am half-seas o'er to death.—DRYDEN.

I have just left the Right Worshipful and his Myrmidons about a Sneaker of Five Gallons. The whole Magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the Slip. Our Friend the Alderman was half Seas over.—Spectator, No. 616 (Nov. 5th, 1714).

Half Joe. A Portuguese coin (worth about $4), current on the Atlantic coast of the U.S.A. in the 18th century.

Half the battle. See BATTLE.

He is only half-baked. He is soft, a noodle. See BAKED.

My better half. See BETTER.

Not half. Not half bad means "not at all bad"; pretty good, indeed; better than I had expected; but Not half! has a more ironical meaning, and means something like "Rather! I should think so!"

To do a thing by halves. To do it in a slapdash manner, very imperfectly.

To go halves. To share something equally with another.

Half-deck. An old sailing-ship term: the quarters of the second mate, carpenters, coopers, boatswain, and all secondary officers. Quarter-deck, the quarters of the captain and superior officers. In a gun-decked ship half-deck is below the spar-deck, and extends from the main-mast to the cabin bulkheads.

Half-mast high. The position of a flag flying from the middle of the flagstaff in token of respect to a dead person.

Half-timer. One engaged in some occupation for only half the usual time; the term was formerly applied to a child attending school for half time and working the rest of the day. Half-timers were done away with by the Education Act of 1918.

Half-tone block. A typographic printing-block for illustrations, produced by photographing on to a prepared plate through a screen or grating which breaks up the picture of the object to be reproduced into small dots of varying intensity, thus giving the lights and shades, or tones.

Half-world. See DEMI-MONDE.

Halgaver (hăl' gá vër). Summoned before the mayor of Halgaver. The mayor of Halgaver is an imaginary person, and the threat is given to those who have committed no offence against the laws, but are simply untidy and slovenly. Halgaver is a moor in Cornwall, near Bodmin, famous for an annual carnival held there in the middle of July. Charles II was so pleased with the diversions when he passed through the place on his way to Scilly that he became a member of the "self-constituted" corporation. The mayor of Garratt (q.v.) is a similar "magnate."

Halifax. Halifax Law. By this (law), whoever committed theft in the liberty of Halifax, Yorkshire, was to be executed on the Halifax gibbet, a kind of guillotine.

At Halifax the law so sharpe doth deale,
That whoso more than thirteen pence doth steale,
They have a jyn that wondrous quick and well
Sends thieves all headless into heaven or hell.

TAYLOR (the Water Poet): Works ii, (1630).

Hull, Hell, and Halifax. See HULL.

Halifax, Nova Scotia, was so called by the Hon. Edward Cornwallis, the governor, in compliment to his patron, the Earl of Halifax (1749).

Hall Mark. The official mark stamped on gold and silver articles after they have been assayed, so called because the assaying or testing and the stamping was done at the Goldsmiths' Hall. The hall mark includes (1) the standard mark, (2) the assay office, or "hall" mark.

(3) the date letter, and sometimes (4) the duty mark. With it is found (5) the maker's mark.

(1) The standard mark. For gold, a crown in England and a thistle in Scotland, for 22- and 18-carat gold. In Ireland, a crowned harp for 22-carat, three feathers for 20-carat and a unicorn's head for 18-carat. Lower standards of gold have the number of carats in figures, without the device.

For silver, a lion passant in England, a thistle in Edinburgh, a thistle plus a lion rampant in Glasgow, a crowned harp in Dublin.

(2) The Assay Office mark.

London—a leopard's head (g.v.).

Sheffield—a York Rose for gold, a crown for silver.

Chester—three sheaves and a sword.

Edinburgh—a castle.

Glasgow—the city arms: a tree, a bird, a bell, and a salmon with a ring in its mouth.

Dublin—Hibernia.

Marks of Assay Offices now closed, and dates of closing:—

Exeter, 1882—a castle.

Newcastle, 1883—three castles.

Norwich, 1701—castle over lion.

York, 1856—five lions on a cross.

(3) The date letter. A letter of the alphabet indicates the date of an article. The London Assay Office uses 20 letters of the alphabet, Glasgow 26 and most of the others 25. The letter is changed each year, and at the beginning of each new cycle a new type-face is adopted and the shape of the letters' frame is changed. Given the date letter and the Assay Office mark, the date of manufacture of an article may be easily discovered on referring to a table.

(4) The duty mark. Articles on which duty has been paid are stamped with the head of the reigning sovereign.

(5) The maker's mark. A device or set of initials which the maker has registered at the Assay Office, and which he stamps on goods which he intends to send for hall marking.

Hallel (hāl' el). A Jewish hymn of praise sung at the four great festivals, consisting of Ps. cxiii to cxviii both included. Ps. cxxxvi was called the Great Hallel. And sometimes the Songs of Degrees (see GRADUAL PSALMS) sung standing on the fifteen steps of the inner court seem to be so called (i.e. cxx to cxxxvii both included).

Hallelujah is the Heb. halelu-Jah, "Praise ye Jehovah."

Hallelujah Lass. A name given to female members of the Salvation Army in the early days of that movement.

Hallelujah Victory. A victory said to have been gained by some newly baptized Britons over the Picts and Scots near Mold, Flintshire in 429. They were led by Germanus, Bishop of Auxerre, and commenced the battle with loud shouts of "Hallelujah!"

Halloween (hāl ð en'). October 31st, which in the old Celtic calendar was the last day of the year, its night being the time when all the witches and warlocks were abroad and held their wicked revels. On the introduction of Christianity it was taken over as the Eve of

All Hallows, or All Saints, and—especially in Scotland and the north of England—it is still devoted to all sorts of games in which the old superstitions can be traced. See Burns's poem Hallowe'en.

Hall Sunday. The Sunday preceding Shrove Tuesday; the next day is called Hall Monday or Hall Night. Shrove Tuesday is also called Pancake Day, and the day preceding it, Callop Monday, from the special foods popularly prepared for those days. All three were days of merrymaking. Hall is a contraction of Hallow, meaning holy or festal.

Halo. In Christian art the same as a nimbus (g.v.). The luminous circle round the sun or moon caused by the refraction of light through a mist is also called a halo. The word is from Gr. halos, originally a circular threshing-floor.

Ham Actor. A bad actor, especially one who over-acts or performs his part in a stiff and stilted fashion. The origin of the term is uncertain; it may arise from the delusion such bad actors often entertain that they can perform that most difficult of parts—Hamlet.

Hamadryads. See DRYAD.

Hambletonian (hām bêl tō' nî en), the name given to a superior strain of horse bred in U.S.A. for trotting, and descended from a stallion called Hambletonian (1849-76).

Hamet. See CID HAMET.

Hamiltonian System. A method of teaching foreign languages by inter-linear translations, suggested by James Hamilton (1769-1831).

Hamlet. It's Hamlet without the Prince. Said when the person who was to have taken the principal place at some function is absent. The allusion, of course, is to Shakespeare's Tragedie of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, which would lose all its meaning if the part of the Prince were omitted.

The play is based on a crude story told by the 13th-century Saxo Grammaticus (a Danish chronicler) in his Historia Danica (first printed 1514), which found a place in Pierre de Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques (1570), a French miscellany of translated legend and romance. This formed the groundwork of the lost pre-Shakespearean play—the so-called Ur-Hamlet (Ger. Ur, original)—which Shakespeare transformed into a great dramatic masterpiece.

Hammer. In personal appellatives:—

Pierre d'Ailly (1350-1425), Le Marteau (hammer) des Hérétiques, president of the council that condemned John Huss.

St. Augustine (354-430) is called by Hake-well "that renowned pillar of truth and hammer of heresies."

John Faber (1478-1541), the German controversialist, was surnamed Malleus Hereticorum, from the title of one of his works.

St. Hilary, Bishop of Poitiers (d. 368), was known as "The Hammer of the Arians."

Charles Martel (g.v.).

Edward I (1239-1307), "Longshanks," was called "The Hammer of the Scots." On his tomb in Westminster Abbey is the inscription "Edwardus longus Scotorum Malleus hic est."

The second name of Judas Maccabeus, the son of Mattathias the Hasmonean, is thought by some to denote that he was a "Hammer" or "Hammerer," because Makkébeth is Hebrew for a certain kind of hammer.

Hammer and Sickle. Since 1923, the emblems of the U.S.S.R., symbolic of productive work in the factory and on the land.

Gone to the hammer. Applied to goods sent to a sale by auction; the auctioneer giving a rap with a small hammer when a lot is sold, to intimate that there is an end to the bidding, hence to sell under the hammer.

They live hammer and tongs. Are always quarrelling.

Both parties went at it hammer and tongs; and hit one another anywhere and with anything.—James Payn.

To be hammered. A Stock Exchange term, used of one who is in the "House" officially declared a defaulter. This is done by the "Head Waiter," who goes into the rostrum and, before making the announcement, attracts the attention of the members present by striking the desk with a hammer.

To hammer away at anything. To go at it doggedly; to persevere.

Hammercloth. The cloth that covers the driver's seat, or "box," in an old-fashioned coach. It may be connected with Dan. hammel, a swingle-bar, or with hammock, the seat which the cloth covers being formed of straps or webbing stretched between two crutches like a sailor's hammock.

Hammock or Hummock. A small round hill, usually wooded.

Hampton Court Conference. A conference held at Hampton Court in January, 1604, to settle the disputes between the Church party and the Puritans. It lasted three days. Its chief results were a few slight alterations in the Book of Common Prayer, but it was here that the first suggestion was made for the official retranslation of the Bible which resulted in the Authorized Version of 1611.

Hanaper (hăn' à pěr). Hanap was the mediæval name for a goblet or wine-cup, and the hanaper (connected with hamper) was the wickerwork case that surrounded it. Hence the name was given to any round wicker basket and especially to one in which documents that had passed the Great Seal were kept in the Court of Chancery. The office where the Chancellor carried on his business—the Exchequer, or a branch thereof—thus came to be known as the Hanaper, and its officials as Comptrollers, Clerks, etc., of the Hanaper. In England these were abolished in 1842, but for many years in Ireland the official title of the Permanent Secretary to the Chancery Division and to the Lord Chancellor remained "Clerk of the Crown and Hanaper."

Hancock. John Hancock (1737-93) was an American statesman and the first to sign the Declaration of Independence, beneath which document his signature stands out boldly. To put your John Hancock to a deed, etc., was an old American phrase for signing it.

Hand. A symbol of fortitude in Egypt, of fidelity in Rome. Two hands symbolize concord; by a closed hand Zeno represented dialectics, and by an open hand eloquence.

In early art the Deity was frequently represented by a hand extended from the clouds; sometimes the hand was open, with rays issuing from the fingers, but generally it was in the act of benediction, i.e. with two fingers raised.

In card-games the word is used for the game itself, for an individual player (as "a good hand at whist") or the cards held by him.

A saint in heaven would grieve to see such "hand" Cut up by one who will not understand.

CRABBE: Borough.

Also for style of workmanship, handwriting, etc. ("he writes a good hand").

Operatives at a factory are called hands. As a measure of length a hand = four inches. Horses are measured up the fore leg to the shoulder, and are called 14, 15, 16 (as it may be), hands high.

Dead man's hand. It is said that carrying a dead man's hand will produce a dead sleep. Another superstition is that a lighted candle placed in the hand of a dead man gives no light to anyone but him who carries the hand. Cp. DEAD HAND.

The red hand, or bloody hand, in coat armour is the device of Ulster (see ULSTER), and is carried as a charge on the coats of arms of English and Irish baronets (not on those of Scotland or Nova Scotia). The privilege arose thus:—James I in 1611 created two hundred baronets on payment of £1,000 each to provide means for the settlement of Ulster, and from this connexion with Ulster they were awarded the badge of the "open red hand," up to that time borne by the O'Neills.

The "bloody hand" is also borne privately by a few families; its presence is generally connected with some traditional tale of blood.

In all instances, however, it is nothing but a heraldic charge or a badge with no personal significance whatever. Cp. BLOODY HAND.

Hand gallop. A slow and easy gallop, in which the horse is kept well in hand.

Hand paper. A particular sort of paper well known in the Record Office, and so called from its water-mark, which goes back to the 15th century.

A bird in hand. See BIRD.

An empty hand is no lure for a hawk. You must not expect to receive anything without giving a return.

A note of hand. A promise to pay made in writing and duly signed.

An old hand at it. One who is experienced at it.

A poor hand. An unskilful one. "He is but a poor hand at it," i.e. he is not skilful at the work.

All hands. The nautical term for the whole of the crew.

It is believed on all hands. It is generally (or universally) believed.

At first or second hand. As the original (first) purchaser, owner, hearer, etc., or (second) as one deriving, learning, etc., through another party.

At hand. Conveniently near. "Near at hand," quite close by.

By hand. Without the aid of machinery or an intermediate agent. A letter "sent by hand" is one delivered by a personal messenger, not sent through the post. But a child "brought up by hand" is one reared on the bottle instead of being breast-fed.

By the hand of God. See ACT OF GOD.

Cap in hand. Suppliantly, humbly; as, "To come cap in hand." See CAP.

From hand to hand. From one person to another.

Hand in hand. In friendly fashion; unitedly.

Hand over hand. To go or to come up hand over hand, is to travel with great rapidity, as climbing a rope or a ladder, or as one vessel overtakes another. Sailors in hauling a rope put one hand over the other alternately as fast as they can. In French, Main sur main.

Hands up! The order given by captors when taking prisoners. The hands are to be held stretched high above the head to preclude any possibility of resistance or the use of revolvers, etc.

He is my right hand. My principal assistant, my best and most trustworthy man.

In hand. Under control, in possession; also, under progress.

In one's own hands. In one's sole control, ownership, management, responsibility, etc.

Kings have long hands. See KING.

Laying on of hands. See TO LAY HANDS ON, below.

Many hands make light work. An old proverb (given in Ray's Collection, 1742) enshrining the wisdom of a fair division of labour. The Romans had a similar saying, Multorum manibus magnum levatur onus, by the hands of many a great work is lightened.

Offhand. In a casual, uncerecermonious fashion, curt, rude; extempore.

Off one's hands. No longer under one's responsibilities. If something—or somebody—is left on one's hands one has to take entire responsibility.

On the other hand. A phrase used in the presentation of a case meaning "from that point of view," as opposed to the point of view already mentioned.

Out of hand. At once; done with, over.

We will proclaim you out of hand.

3 Henry VI, iv, 7.

And, were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

2 Henry IV, iii, 1.

Also with the meaning "beyond control"; as, "these children are quite out of hand."

The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world.
The line is from the poem "What Rules the World?" by the American poet, William Ross Wallace (1819-81):—

They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty sceptre
O'er lesser powers that be;
But a mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,
And the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

They are hand in glove. Inseparable companions, of like tastes and like affections. They fit each other like hand and glove.

To ask or give the hand of so-and-so. To ask or give her hand in marriage.

To bear a hand. To come and help.

To change hands. To pass from a possessor to someone else.

To come to hand. To be received; to come under one's notice.

To come to one's hand. It is easy to do.

To get one's hand in. To become familiar with the work in hand.

To get the upper hand. To obtain the mastery.

To give one's hand upon something. To take one's oath on it; to pledge one's honour to keep the promise.

To hand down to posterity. To leave for future generations.

To hand in one's checks. To die. An American phrase derived from poker and such games, where checks is American for counters. When one handed them in one had finished, was "cleaned out." Also, to pass in, or cash, one's checks.

To hand round. To pass from one person to another in a regular series.

To hand a sail. To take it in, to furl it.

To have a free hand. To be able to do as one thinks best without referring the matter to one's superiors; to be quite uncontrolled by outside influences.

To have a hand in the matter. To have a finger in the pie.

My hands are full. I am fully occupied; I have as much work to do as I can manage.

To kiss hands. See KISS.

To lay hands on. To apprehend; to lay hold of.

Lay hands on the villain.

Taming of the Shrew, v, 1.

In ecclesiastical use the laying on of hands, or imposition of hands, is the laying on, or the touch, as in signing the cross, of a bishop's hands in ordination or confirmation.

Among the Romans a hand laid on the head of a person indicated the right of property. Thus if a person laid claim to a slave, he laid his hand upon him in the presence of the prætor.

To lend a hand. To help; to give assistance.

To live from hand to mouth. To live without any provision for the morrow.

To play one's own hand. To look after Number One; to act entirely for one's own advantage.

To play into someone's hands. Unwittingly or carelessly to act so that the other party gets the best of it; to do just what will help him and not advance your own cause.

To serve someone hand and foot. To be at his beck and call; to be his slave.

To shake hands. To salute by giving a hand received into your own a shake; to bid adieu. Fortune and Antony part here; even here Do we shake hands.

Antony and Cleopatra, iv, 10.

The custom of shaking hands in confirmation of a bargain has been common to all nations and all ages. In feudal times the vassal put his hands in the hands of his overlord on taking the oath of fidelity and homage.

To strike hands. To make a contract, to become surety for another. See Prov. xvii, 18, and xxii, 26.

To take a hand. To play a part, especially in a game of cards, etc.

To take in hand. To undertake to do something; to take the charge of.

To take something off one's hands. To relieve one of something troublesome.

To wash one's hands of a thing. To have nothing to do with it after having been concerned in the matter; to abandon it entirely. The allusion is to Pilate's washing his hands at the trial of Jesus.

When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it. —Matt. xxvii, 24.

To win hands down. To be victor without the slightest difficulty. The allusion is to horseracing; if the jockey wins with his hands down it shows that he has not had to worry himself—he has had a “walk-over.”

With a heavy hand. Oppressively; without sparing.

It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the work of any hand.

King John, iv, 3.

With a high hand. See HIGH.

With clean hands. See CLEAN.

Handfasting. A “marriage on approval,” formerly in vogue on the Border. A fair was at one time held in Dumfriesshire, at which a young man was allowed to pick out a female companion to live with him. They lived together for twelve months, and if they both liked the arrangement were man and wife. This was called hand-fastening or hand-fastening.

This sort of contract was common among the Romans and Jews, and is not unusual in the East even now.

Handicap. A game at cards not unlike loo, but with this difference—the winner of one trick has to put in a double stake, the winner of two tricks a triple stake, and so on. Thus: if six persons are playing, and the general stake is 1s., and A gains three tricks, he gains 6s., and has to “hand i’ the cap” or pool 3s. for the next deal. Suppose A gains two tricks and B one, then A gains 4s. and B 2s., and A has to stake 3s. and B 2s. for the next deal.

In common parlance a handicap is a difficulty—physical or otherwise—under which a person labours; a short-sighted man is handicapped without his spectacles.

Handicap, in racing, is the adjudging of various weights to horses differing in age, power, or speed, in order to place them all, as far as possible, on an equality. In golf it is a certain number of strokes allowed to a player to allow him a reasonable chance of scoring par at any game. If two unequal players challenge each other at chess, the superior gives up a piece, and this is his handicap. So called from the custom of drawing lots out of a hat or cap.

The Winner's Handicap. The winning horses of previous races being pitted together are first handicapped according to their respective merits: the horse that has won three races has to carry a greater weight than the horse that has won only two, and this latter more than its competitor who is winner of a single race only.

Handirons. See ANDIRONS.

Handkerchief. To throw the handkerchief. In some children's games to throw or drop the handkerchief to a child is to signify that he or she is to run after the one who does it.

With handkerchief in one hand and sword in the other. Pretending to be sorry at a calamity, but prepared to make capital out of it.

Maria Theresa stands with the handkerchief in one hand, weeping for the woes of Poland, but with the sword in the other hand, ready to cut Poland in sections, and take her share. —CARLYLE: The Diamond Necklace, ch. iv.

Handle. A handle to one's name. Some title, as “lord,” “sir,” “doctor.”

To give a handle to . . . To give grounds for suspicion; as, “He certainly gave a handle to the rumour.”

To fly off the handle. To fly into a rage, or lose one's head, as the head of an axe might fly dangerously off its shaft.

Dead man's handle. A handle on the controller of an electric vehicle so designed that it cuts off the current and applies the brakes if the driver releases his pressure from illness or some other cause. <sup>15</sup>

Handsel (A.S. handselen, delivery into the hand). A gift for luck; earnest-money; the first money received in a day. Hence Handsel Monday, the first Monday of the year, when little gifts used to be given before our Boxing Day (q.v.) took its place. To “handsel a sword,” is to use it for the first time; to “handsel a coat,” to wear it for the first time, etc.

Handsome is as handsome does. It is one's actions that count, not merely one's appearance or promises. The proverb is in Ray's Collection (1742), and is also given by Goldsmith in The Vicar of Wakefield (ch. i).

To do the handsome towards one, to act handsomely. To be liberal, generous.

Handwriting on the Wall. An announcement of some coming calamity, or the imminent fulfilment of some doom. The allusion is to the handwriting on Belshazzar's palace wall announcing the loss of his kingdom (Dan. v.)

Hang. Hang it all! I'll be hanged! Exclamations of astonishment or annoyance; mild imprecations, a mincing form of "damned."

Hanged, drawn, and quartered. See DRAWN.

Hanging and wiving go by destiny. "If a man is doomed to be hanged, he will never be drowned." And "marriages are made in heaven," we are told. The proverb is given in Heywood's Collection (1546) as "Wedding's destiny and hanging likewise"; and Shakespeare has:—

The ancient saying is no heresy—

Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

Merchant of Venice, ii, 9.

If matrimony and hanging go

By dest'ny, why not whipping too?

BUTLER: Hudibras, Pt. ii, canto i, 839-44.

To get the hang of a thing. To understand the drift or connexion; to acquire the knack.

To hang about. To loaf, loiter. In America to hang around is more usual.

To hang back. To hesitate to proceed.

To hang by a thread. To be in a very precarious position. The allusion is to the sword of Damocles (q.v.).

To hang fire. To fail in an expected result. The allusion is to a gun or pistol which fails to go off.

To hang a jury. To reduce them to disagreement so that they cannot bring in a verdict.

To hang in the bell ropes. To have one's marriage postponed after the banns have been published at church.

To hang on. To cling to; to persevere; to be dependent on.

To hang on by the eyelids is to maintain one's position only with the greatest difficulty or by the slightest of holds.

Where do you hang out? Where are you living or lodging? The phrase may arise from the old custom of shopkeepers and others hanging a sign outside their residence and places of business. Inn signs and barbers' poles are among the few survivals of this custom.

"I say, old boy, where do you hang out?" Mr. Pickwick replied that he was at present suspended at the George and Vulture.—DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xxx.

Hangdog look. A guilty, shame-faced look.

Hanging Gardens of Babylon. A square garden (according to Diodorus Siculus), 400 ft. each way, rising in a series of terraces from the river in the northern part of Babylon, and provided with earth to a sufficient depth to accommodate trees of a great size. These famous gardens were one of the Seven Wonders of the World, and according to tradition were constructed by Nebuchadnezzar, to gratify his wife Amytis, who felt weary of the flat plains of Babylon, and longed for something to remind her of her native Median hills.

Hangmen and Executioners.

The best known to history are:—

BULL, the earliest hangman whose name survives (about 1593).

JOCK SUTHERLAND.

DERRICK, who cut off the head of Essex in 1601.

GREGORY BRANDON (about 1648), and ROBERT BRANDON, his son, who executed Charles I. These were known as "the two Gregories" (see GREGORIAN TREE).

SQUIRE DUN, mentioned in Hudibras (Pt. iii, c. 2).

JACK KETCH (1678) executed Lord Russell and the Duke of Monmouth. His name became a general term to denote a hangman.

ROSE, the butcher (1686).

EDWARD DENNIS (1780), introduced in Dickens's Barnaby Rudge.

THOMAS CHESHIRE, nicknamed "Old Cheese."

WILLIAM CALCRAFT (1800-79) was appointed official hangman in 1829 and was pensioned off in 1874.

WILLIAM MARWOOD (1820-83) is known in the profession for having invented the "long drop."

Of French executioners, the most celebrated are Capeluche, headsman of Paris during the terrible days of the Armagnacs and Burgundians; and the two brothers Sanson, who worked the guillotine during the first French Revolution.

The fee given to the executioner at Tyburn used to be 13½d., with 1½d. for the rope.

For half of thirteen-pence ha'penny wages

I would have cleared all the town cages,

And you should have been rid of all the stages

I and my gallows groan.

The Hangman's Last Will and Testament (Rump Song).

Noblemen who were to be beheaded were expected to give the executioner from £7 to £10 for cutting off their head; and it is still the case that any peer who comes to the halter can claim the privilege of being suspended by a silken rope.

Hangar. A short sword or dagger that hung from the girdle; also the girdle itself.

Men's swords in hangers hang fast by their side.—J. TAYLOR (1630).

Hankey Pankey. Jugglery, fraud. The word is probably a variation of Hocus Pocus.

Hansard. The printed official report of the proceedings and debates in the British Houses of Parliament, so called from Luke Hansard (1752-1828), who commenced the Journal of the House of Commons in 1774. In 1889 Hansard became a public company, and later the work was done by contract, the reports from 1895 to 1908 being supplied by The Times. Since then the debates have been reported by a government staff, the name Hansard being reintroduced in 1943.

Hanse Towns (hän'sè). The maritime cities of Germany, which belonged to the Hanseatic League (q.v.).

The Hanse towns of Lübeck, Bremen, and Hamburg are commonwealths even now (1877).—FREEMAN: General Sketch, ch. x, p. 174.

Hanseatic League (hänz'it'ik). The confederacy, first established in 1239, between certain cities of Northern Germany for their mutual prosperity and protection. The diet which used to be held every three years was called the Hansa (Old High German for Association), and the members of it Hansards. The league in its prosperity comprised eighty-five towns; it declined rapidly in the Thirty Years War; in 1669 only six cities were represented; and the last three members of the league (Hamburg, Lübeck, and Bremen) joined the German Customs Union in 1889.

Hansel; Hansel Monday. See HANSEL.

Hansom. A light two-wheeled cab, very popular in London before the introduction of taxicabs early in this century. It was invented in 1834 by J. Aloysius Hansom (1803-82), the architect of Birmingham Town Hall. The original vehicle had two very large wheels with sunk axle-trees and a seat for the driver by the side of the passenger. Subsequent improvements reduced the size of the wheels, placed the driver in a dicky at the back, and provided a pair of double doors in front of the passenger with sliding glass folding panels lowered from the roof by the driver.

Happy. Happy as a clam. See CLAM.

Happy dispatch. See HARA-KIRI.

Happy family. The name given in travelling menageries to a collection of all sorts of animals of different and antagonistic habits living together peaceably. It is now more generally associated with a children's card game.

Happy-go-lucky. Thoughtless, indifferent, care-free.

Happy is the nation that has no history. The old proverb says in other words what Gibbon remarked in the Decline and Fall, ch. iii:—

History is, indeed, little more than the register of the crimes, follies, and misfortunes of mankind.

Montesquieu said much the same:—

Heureux les peuples dont l'histoire est ennuyeux.

The Happy Valley. The home of the Prince of Abyssinia in Johnson's tale of Rasselas (1759). It was a Garden of Peace, completely isolated from the world, and replete with every luxury; but life there was so monotonous that the philosopher Imlac and the Prince Rasselas were glad to escape.

Bomb-happy. A phrase used in World War II to describe one in a state bordering on hysteria induced by bombing; the term arose from the fact that this hysteria often took the form of wild elation of spirits.

Hapsburg. See HABSBURG.

Hara-kiri (ha ra ki'ri) (Jap. hara, the belly, kiri to cut). A method of suicide by disembowelling practised by Japanese military officials, daimios, etc., when in serious disgrace or liable to be sentenced to death, or when their honour is irretrievably impugned. The first recorded instance of hara-kiri, or Happy Dispatch, as it is also called, is that of Tametomo, brother of Sutoku, an ex-Emperor in the 12th century, after a defeat at which most of his followers were slain.

Harbinger. One who looks out for lodgings, etc.; a courier; hence, a forerunner, a messenger. (O.H.Ger. hari, an army, bergan, to lodge.)

I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful

The hearing of my wife with your approach.

Macbeth, i, 4.

Hard. Hard and fast. Strict, unalterable. A "hard and fast rule" is one that must be rigidly adhered to and cannot be relaxed for anyone. Originally a nautical phrase, used of a ship run aground.

Hard-boiled, an expressive term for one who is toughened by experience, a person with no illusions or sentimentalities.

Hard by. Near. Hard here means close, pressed close together; hence firm or solid, in close proximity to.

Hard by a sheltering wood.

DAVID MALLEY: Edwin and Emma.

Hard cash. Money; especially actual money—as opposed to cheques or promises—"down on the nail"; formerly coin as distinguished from bank-notes.

Hard hit. Seriously damaged by monetary losses; as "He was hard hit in the slump after the war"; also, badly smitten with love.

Hard labour. Enforced labour added to the punishment of criminals receiving a sentence of six months or over. It used to consist largely of working the treadmill, stone-breaking, oakum picking, etc.

Hard lines. Hard terms; "rather rough treatment"; exacting. Lines here means "one's lot in life," as, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage" (Ps. xvi, 6), i.e. my lot is excellent.

Hard-shell Baptists. Baptists in Georgia (U.S.A.) who stuck to their principles and were impervious to any mellowing influence.

Hard tack, ship's biscuit, coarse, hard bread.

Hard of hearing. Unable to hear properly; rather deaf.

Hard up. Short of money. Originally a nautical phrase; when a vessel was hard put to it by stress of weather the order Hard up the helm! was given, and the tiller was put up as far as possible to windward so as to turn the ship's head away from the wind. So, when a man is "hard up" he has to weather the storm as best he may.

To go hard with. To fare ill with; usually followed by but, implying "unless so-and-so happens."

Speed: Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro.: It shall go hard but I'll prove it by another.

Two Gentlemen of Verona, i, 1.

Hards and Softs. Two schools of finance in the U.S.A. in the 19th century. The Hards followed Senator T. H. Benton (1782-1858) in favouring a currency of metal; the Softs favoured a paper currency.

Hardshell. A term used in American politics for an "out-and-outer," one prepared, and anxious, to "go the whole hog." In 1853 a hardshell in the Southern States was for the Execution of the Fugitive Slave law, while softshells were for the maintenance of national harmony at all costs.

Hardy. Brave or daring, hence the phrase, hardi comme un lion.

Among those who have been surnamed "The Hardy" are:—

William Douglas, defender of Berwick (d. 1302);

Philippe III of France (1245, 1270-85); and Philippe II, Duke of Burgundy (1342, 1363-82).

Hare. It is unlucky for a hare to cross your path, because witches were said to transform themselves into hares.

A witch is a kind of hare
And marks the weather
As the hare doth.

BEN JONSON: Sad Shepherd, ii, 2.

In the North, until comparatively recently, if a fisherman on his way to the boats chanced to meet a woman, parson, or hare, he turned back, being convinced that he would have no luck that day.

The superstitious is fond in observation, servile in fear. . . . This man dares not stirre forth till his breast be crossed, and his face sprinkled: if but an hare crosse him the way, he returns.—BP. HALL: Characters (1608).

According to mediæval "science," the hare was a most melancholy beast, and ate wild succory in the hope of curing itself; its flesh, of course, was supposed to generate melancholy in any who partook of it.

Fal.: 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib cat, or a lugged bear.

Prince.: Or an old lion, or a lover's lute.

Fal.: Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

Prince.: What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch? 1 Henry IV, i, 2.

Another superstition was that hares are sexless, or that they change their sex every year.

Snakes that cast their coats for new,

Cameleons that alter hue,

Hares that yearly sexes change.

FLETCHER: Faithful Shepherd, iii, 1.

And among the Hindus the hare is sacred to the moon because, as they affirm, the outline of a hare is distinctly visible in the full disk.

The Order of the Hare. An order of twelve knights traditionally said to have been created by Edward III in France, on an occasion when he thought that a great shouting raised by the French army heralded the onset of battle, but found afterwards it was on account of a hare running between the two armies.

The quaking hare, in Dryden's Hind and Panther, means the Quakers.

Among the timorous kind, the quaking hare

Professed neutrality, but would not swear.

Pt, i, 37, 38.

First catch your hare. See CATCH.

Mad as a March hare. Hares are unusually shy and wild in March, which is their rutting season.

Erasmus says "Mad as a marsh hare," and adds, "hares are wilder in marshes from the absence of hedges and cover."

The hare and the tortoise. An allusion to the well-known fable of the race between the hare and the tortoise, won by the latter; and the moral, "Slow and steady wins the race."

To hold with the hare and run with the hounds. To play a double and deceitful game, to be a traitor in the camp. To run with the hounds as if intent to catch the hare, all the while being the secret friend of poor Wat. In the American Civil War these double-dealers were called Copperheads (q.v.).

To kiss the hare's foot. To be too late for anything, to be a day after the fair. The hare has gone by, and left its footprint for you to salute. A similar phrase is To kiss the post.

Hare-brained. Mad as a March hare, giddy, foolhardy.

Let's leave this town; for they [the English] are hare-brained slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager.

1 Henry VI, i, 2.

Probably from this, in World War II, arose the term a hare to denote a baseless idea which, if pursued, would lead to nothing.

Harefoot. The surname given to Harold I, youngest son of Canute (1035-40).

Hare-lip. A cleft lip; so called from its resemblance to the upper lip of a hare. It was fabled to be caused at birth by an elf or malicious fairy.

This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet. He begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock. He . . . squints the eye and makes the hare-lip.—King Lear, iii, 4.

Hare-stone. Another form of Hoar-stone (q.v.).

Harem (hâr'em). The name given by Mohammedans to those apartments (and the occupants) which are appropriated exclusively to the female members of a family. The word is Arab. haram, from harama, be prohibited.

Harikiri. See HARA-KIRI.

Hark Back, To. To return to the subject. A call to the dogs in fox-hunting, when they have overrun the scent, "Hark [dogs] come back"; so "Hark for'ards!" "Hark away!" etc.

Harleian (har'lē'an). Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford (1661-1724) and his son Edward, the second earl (1689-1741) were great collectors of manuscripts, scarce tracts, etc. Their library was purchased by the nation in 1753 and deposited in the British Museum, and the Harleian MSS. are amongst its most valuable literary and historical possessions. The Harleian Miscellany (10 vols., first published 1744-46) contains reprints of nearly 700 tracts, etc., mostly of the 16th and 17th centuries; and since 1870 the Harleian Society has published numerous volumes of Registers, Herald's Visitations, and Pedigrees.

Harlem, New York City, was named after their home town of Haarlem by the early Dutch settlers. It is now the uptown section of New York and is the metropolis of the Negro population of the city.

Harlequin (har'le kwin). In the British pantomime, a mischievous fellow supposed to be invisible to all eyes but those of his faithful Columbine (q.v.). His office is to dance through the world and frustrate all the knavish tricks of the Clown, who is supposed to be in love with Columbine. He wears a tight-fitting spangled or parti-coloured dress and is usually masked. He derives from Arlecchino, a stock character of Italian comedy (like Pantaloon and Scaramouch), whose name was in origin probably that of a sprite or hobgoblin. One of the demons in Dante is named "Alichino," and another devil of mediæval demonology was "Hennequin."

The old Christmas pantomime or harlequinade is essentially a British entertainment, first introduced by John Weaver (1673-1760), a dancing-master of Shrewsbury, in 1702.

What Momus was of old to Jove

The same a harlequin is now.

The former was buffoon above,

The latter is a Punch below.

SWIFT: The Puppet Show.

The prince of Harlequins was John Rich (1681-1761).

Harlequin. So Charles Quint (1500-58) was called by François I of France.

Harlot. Popular etymology used to trace this word to Arlotta, mother of William the Conqueror, but it is O.Fr. herlot and Ital. arlotto, a base fellow, vagabond, and was formerly applied to males as well as females. Hence Chaucer speaks of "a sturdy harlot . . . that was her hostes man."

He was a gentil harlot, and a kinde;

A bettre felaw shulde man no wher finde.

Canterbury Tales, prol. 649.

The harlot king is quite beyond mine arm.

Winter's Tale, ii, 3.

The earliest sense of the word may have been "camp-follower," and if so it represents O.H. Ger. hari, war, and lotter (A.S. loddere), a beggar, wastrel.

Harm. Harm set, harm get. Those who lay traps for others get caught themselves. Haman was hanged on his own gallows. Our Lord says, "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. xxvi, 52).

Harmattan (har māt' ān). A wind which blows periodically from the interior parts of Africa towards the Atlantic. It prevails in December, January, and February, and is generally accompanied with fog, but is so dry as to wither vegetation and cause human skin to peel off.

Harmonia (har mō' ni ā). Harmonia's Necklace. An unlucky possession, something that brings evil to all who possess it. Harmonia was the daughter of Mars and Venus. On her marriage with King Cadmus, she received a necklace which proved fatal to all who possessed it. Cp. FATAL GIFTS.

On the same occasion Vulcan, to avenge the infidelity of her mother, made the bride a present of a robe dyed in all sorts of crimes, which infused wickedness and impiety into all her offspring. Cp. NESSUS. Both Harmonia and Cadmus, having suffered many misfortunes, and seen their children a sorrow to them, were changed into serpents.

Medea, in a fit of jealousy, sent Creusa a wedding robe, which burnt her to death.

Harmonious Blacksmith. The. The name given, after his death, to a well-known air by Handel. An ingenious story, but a complete and baseless fabrication, ascribed the origin of the tune to the hammering at his forge of a blacksmith William Powell (d. 1780), the ringing of whose hammer set Handel to work on it. Powell's tomb is still to be seen in the little churchyard of St. Lawrence at Whitchurch in Edgware.

Harmonists. A sect founded in Würtemberg by George and Frederick Rapp about 1780. They emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1815 (Indiana, later Pittsburg, Pa.). They are now extinct and little is known of their tenets, except that they held property in common and regarded marriage as a purely civil contract.

Harness. Out of harness. Not in practice, retired. A horse out of harness is one not at work.

To die in harness. To continue in one's work or occupation till death. The allusion is to a horse working in harness until it falls down dead, or to soldiers in armour or harness.

At least we'll die with harness on our back.

Macbeth, v. 5.

Harness cask. A large cask or tub with a rim cover, containing a supply of salt meat for immediate use. A nautical term.

Harness Prize. A prize founded at Cambridge in memory of William Harness (1790-1869), editor of a Life of Shakespeare, of the Plays of Massinger and Ford, etc., for the best essay connected with Shakespearean literature. Awarded every third year.

Haro (hā' rō). To cry out haro to anyone. To denounce his misdeeds, to follow him with hue and cry. "Ha rou" was the ancient Norman hue and cry, and the exclamation made by those who wanted assistance, their person or property being in danger.

In the Channel Isles, Haro! said to have been originally Ha! ho! à l'aide, mon prince! is a protest still in vogue when one's property is endangered, and is still a form of legal appeal. It is supposed to have been an appeal to Rollo, Duke of Normandy.

Haroun al Raschid (hā roon' āl rāsh' id). Calif of Bagdad, of the Abbasside line (763-809). The adventures and stories connected with him form a large part of the Arabian Nights Entertainments (q.v.).

Harp. The cognizance of Ireland. According to tradition, one of the early kings of Ireland was named David, and this king took the harp of the Psalmist as his badge. But King John, to distinguish his Irish coins from the English, had them marked with a triangle, either in allusion to St. Patrick's explanation of the Trinity, or to signify that he was king of England, Ireland, and France, and the harp may have originated from this. Henry VII was the first to adopt it as the Irish device, and James I to place it in the third quarter of the royal achievement of Great Britain.

To harp for ever on the same string. To reiterate, to return continually to one point or argument.

Still harping on my daughter.—Hamlet, ii, 1.

Harpagon (ar pā gong). A miser, the chief character in Molière's L'Avare, 1668.

Harpocrates (har pok' rā tēz). The Greek form of the Egyptian Heru-P-Khart (Horus the Child), who is figured as a youth with one finger pointing to his mouth. He was adopted by them as the god of silence.

I assured my mistress she might make herself perfectly easy on that score for I was the Harpocrates of trusty valets.—Gil Blas, iv, 2.

Harpsichord (harp' si kōrd). The most important of the stringed instruments with keyboards before the invention of the pianoforte. The strings are plucked by quills of leather plectra inserted in "jacks" or uprights, which are caused to pass the strings when the keys are depressed. The harpsichord was universally used in the 16th to 18th centuries. As a distinctive instrument and not merely a crude piano it has been reintroduced for the performance of music originally composed for it.

Harpy. In classical mythology, a winged monster with the head and breasts of a woman, very fierce, starved-looking, and loathsome, living in an atmosphere of filth and stench, and contaminating everything it came near. Homer mentions but one harpy, Hesiod gives two, and later writers three. Their names, Ocypeta (rapid), Celeno (blackness), and Aello (storm), indicate that these monsters were personifications of whirlwinds and storms.

A regular harpy. One who wants to appropriate everything; one who sponges on another without mercy.

I will . . . do you any embassy . . . rather than hold three words conference with this harpy.—Much Ado, ii, 1.

Harridan (hår' i dân). A haggard old beldame. So called from the Fr. haridelle, a worn-out jade of a horse.

Harrier (hår' i êr). A dog for hare-hunting, whence the name.

Harrington. A farthing. So called from John, 1st Lord Harrington (d. 1613), to whom James I granted a patent (1613) for making these coins of brass.

I will not bate a Harrington of the sum.
BEN JONSON: The Devil is an Ass, ii, 1.

Harris, Mrs. The fictitious crony of Sarah Gamp (q.v.), to whom the latter referred for the corroboration of all her statements (Martin Chuzzlewit).

Harry. By the Lord Harry. A mild imprecation, the person referred to being the devil.

By the Lord Harry, he says true.
CONGREVE: Old Bachelor, ii, 1.

Great Harry. See GREAT.

Old Harry. A familiar name for the devil; Old Scratch. Probably from the personal name (cp. Old Nick), but perhaps with some allusion to the word harry, meaning to plunder, harass, lay waste, from which comes the old harrow, as in the title of the 14th-century estrif, or miracle-play, The Harrowing of Hell.

To play Old Harry. To play the devil; to ruin, or seriously damage.

Hart. In Christian art, the emblem of solitude and purity of life. It was the attribute of St. Hubert, St. Julian, and St. Eustace. It was also the type of piety and religious aspiration (Ps. xlii, 1). CP. HIND.

Hart of grease. A hunter's phrase for a fat venison; a stag full of the pasture, called by Jaques "a fat and greasy citizen" (As You Like It, ii, 1).

Hart royal. A male red deer, when the crown of the antler has made its appearance, and the creature has been hunted by a king.

The White Hart, or Hind, with a golden chain, in public-house signs, is the badge of Richard II, which was worn by his adherents. It was adopted from his mother, Joan of Kent, whose cognizance it was.

Harum Scarum (hår' um skår' um). Giddy, hare-brained; or a person so constituted. From the old hare (cp. HARRY) to harass, and scare; perhaps with the additional allusion to the "madness of a March hare."

Who's there? I s'pose young harum-scarum.

Cambridge Facetiae: Collegian and Porter.

Haruspex (pl. haruspices). Officials among the Etruscans and ancient Romans who interpreted the will of the gods by inspecting the entrails of animals offered in sacrifice (O.Lat. haruga, a victim; specio, I inspect). Cato said, "I wonder how one haruspex can keep from laughing when he sees another."

Harvard University. The senior University in the U.S.A., situated at Cambridge, Mass., and founded in 1636 by the general court of the colony in Massachusetts Bay. In 1638 it was named after John Harvard (1607-1638), who had left to it his library and half his estate.

Harvest Moon. The full moon nearest the autumnal equinox, which rises for several days nearly at sunset, and at about the same time.

Hash. A mess, a muddle; as, "a pretty hash he made of it."

I'll soon settle his hash for him. I will soon smash him up; ruin his schemes; "cook his goose"; "put my finger in his pie"; "make mincemeat of him." Our slang is full of such phrases. See COOKING.

About earls as goes mad in their castles
And females what settles their hash.

G. R. SIMS, The Dagonet Ballads.

Hassan-Ben-Sabah (håss' än ben sa' ba). The Old Man of the Mountain, founder of the sect of the Assassins (q.v.).

Hassock. A footstool, properly one made of coarse grass (A.S. hassuc), or sedge (Welsh hesg).

Hassocks should be gotten in the fens, and laid at the foot of the said bank . . . where need required.
—DUGDALE: Imbanking, p. 322.

Hat. How Lord Kingsale acquired the right of wearing his hat in the royal presence is this: King John and Philip II of France agreed to settle a dispute respecting the duchy of Normandy by single combat. John de Courcy, conqueror of Ulster and founder of the Kingsale family, was the English champion, and no sooner appeared than the French champion put spurs to his horse and fled. The king asked the earl what reward should be given him, and he replied, "Titles and lands I want not, of these I have enough; but in remembrance of this day I beg the boon, for myself and successors, to remain covered in the presence of your highness and all future sovereigns of the realm." So runs the story.

The privilege was at one time more extensive; Motley informs us that all the Spanish grandees had the privilege of being covered in the presence of the reigning monarch; and to this day, in England, any peer of the realm has the right to sit in a court of justice with his hat on.

In the House of Commons, whilst a division is proceeding a member may speak on a point of order arising out of or during the division, but if he does so he must speak sitting and with his head covered.

It was a point of principle with the early Quakers not to remove the hat as a mark of respect but to remain covered, even in the presence of royalty. The story goes that on one occasion William Penn came into the room where Charles II was standing and kept his hat on; whereupon Charles removed his own hat. "Friend Charles," said Penn, "why dost thou uncover thy head?" "Friend Penn," answered Charles with a smile, "it is the custom here that only one person wears his hat in the king's presence."

A cockle hat. A pilgrim's hat. So called from the custom of putting cockle-shells upon their hats, to indicate their intention or performance of a pilgrimage.

How should I your true love know

From another one?

By his cockle-hat and staff

And by his sandal shoe.

Old Ballad: quoted in Hamlet, iv, 5.

Hat-trick. A cricket phrase for taking three wickets with three successive balls. A bowler who did this used to be entitled to a new hat at the expense of his club.

Hats and Caps. Two political factions of Sweden in the 18th century, the former favourable to France, and the latter to Russia. Carlyle says the latter were called Caps, meaning night-caps, because they were averse to action and war; but the fact is that the French partisans wore a French chapeau as their badge, and the Russian partisans wore a Russian cap.

A white hat. A white hat used to be emblematical of radical proclivities, because the Radical reformer, "Orator" Henry Hunt (1773-1835) wore one during the Wellington and Peel administration.

Street arabs used to accost a person wearing a white hat with the question, "Who stole the donkey?" and a companion would answer, "Him wi' the white hat on."

Knocked into a cocked hat. See COCKED.

Never wear a brown hat in Friesland. When at Rome do as Rome does. In Friesland (a province of the Netherlands) the inhabitants used to cover the head first with a knitted cap, a high silk skull-cap, a metal turban, and over all a huge flaunting bonnet. A traveller once passed through the province with a common brown wide-awake, and was hustled by the workmen, jeered at by the women, pelted by the boys, and sneered at by the magnates.

Pass around the hat. Gather subscriptions into a hat.

To eat one's hat. Indicative of strong emphasis. "I'd eat my hat first," "I'd be hanged first."

"If I knew as little of life as that, I'd eat my hat and swallow the buckle whole," said the clerical gentleman.—DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xlii.

To hang up one's hat in a house. To make oneself at home; to become one of the family.

You are only fit to wear a steeple-crowned hat. To be burnt as a heretic. The victims of the Inquisition were always decorated with such a headgear.

"Where did you get that hat?" a catchphrase in the early '90s, originating in J. J. Sullivan's comic song, sung in 1888, with the refrain:—

Where did you get that hat?

Where did you get that tile?

Isn't it a nobby one

And just the proper style.

Hatches. Put on the hatches. Figuratively, shut the door. (A.S. hæce, a gate; cp. haca, a bar or bolt.)

Under hatches. Very depressed; down in the world; also, dead and buried. The hatches of a ship are the coverings over the hatchways (or openings in the deck of a vessel) to allow of cargo, etc., being easily discharged.

For though his body's under hatches

His soul has gone aloft

These lines were inscribed on Dibdin's tombstone at St. Martin-in-the-Fields.

Hatchet. To bury the hatchet. See BURY.

To throw the hatchet. To exaggerate heavily, tell falsehoods. In allusion to an ancient game where hatchets were thrown at a mark, like quoits. It means the same as drawing the longbow (q.v.).

Hatto (hāt' ò). A 10th-century archbishop of Mainz, a noted statesman and councillor of Otho the Great, proverbial for his perfidy, who, according to tradition (preserved in the Magdeburg Centuries), was devoured by mice. The story says that in 970 there was a great famine in Germany, and Hatto, that there might be better store for the rich, assembled the poor in a barn, and burnt them to death, saying: "They are like mice, only good to devour the corn." By and by an army of mice came against the archbishop, who, to escape the plague, removed to a tower on the Rhine; but hither came the mouse-army by hundreds and thousands, and ate him up. The tower is still called Mouse-tower (q.v.).

Many similar legends, or versions of the same legend, are told of the mediæval Rhineland.

Count Graaf raised a tower in the midst of the Rhine, and if any boat attempted to evade payment of toll, the warders shot the crew with crossbows. One year a famine prevailed, and the count made a corner in wheat and "profiteered" grossly; but an army of rats, pressed by hunger, invaded his tower, and falling on the old baron, worried him to death and then devoured him.

Widerolf, bishop of Strasburg (in 997), was devoured by mice because he suppressed the convent of Seltzen, on the Rhine.

Bishop Adolf of Cologne was devoured by mice or rats in 1112.

Freierr von Güttingen collected the poor in a great barn, and burnt them to death; and being invaded by rats and mice, ran to his castle of Güttingen. The vermin, however, pursued him and ate him clean to the bones, after which his castle sank to the bottom of the lake, "where it may still be seen."

A similar tale is recorded in the chronicles of William of Mulsburg, Bk. ii; and cp. PIED PIPER.

Haussmannization. The pulling down of buildings, districts, etc., and the construction on the site of new streets and cities, as Baron Haussmann (1809-91) remodelled Paris. By 1868 he had saddled Paris with a debt of about £35,000,000, and two years later was dismissed from his office of Prefect of the Seine.

Hautville Coit. See HACKELL'S COIT.

Havelok the Dane (häv' lok). A hero of mediæval romance. He was the orphan son of Birkabegn, king of Denmark, was exposed at sea through the treachery of his guardians, and the raft drifted to the coast of Lincolnshire. Here a fisherman named Grim found the young prince, and brought him up as his own son. In due time he became king of Denmark and of part of England; Grim was suitably rewarded, and with the money founded the town of Grimsby (q.v.).

Haver-cakes. Oaten cakes (Scand. hafre; Ger. hafer, oats).

Haversack. Strictly speaking, a bag to carry oats in. See HAVER-CAKES. It now means any small canvas bag for rations, etc., slung from the shoulder; a gunner's leather-case for carrying charges.

Havock. An old military command to massacre without quarter. This cry was forbidden in the ninth year of Richard II on pain of death. In a 14th-century tract entitled The Office of the Constable and Mareschall in the Tyme of Werre (contained in the Black Book of the Admiralty), one of the chapters is, "The peyne of hym that crieth havock, and of them that followeth him"—Item si quis inventus fuerit qui clamorem inceperit qui vocatur havok.

Cry Havock, and let slip the dogs of war.

Julius Caesar, iii, 1.

Havre, Le (le avr). A contraction of Le havre (the haven, harbour) de notre Dame de grâce.

Hawcubites (haw' kū bitz). Street bullies in the reign of Queen Anne. It was their delight to molest and ill-treat the old watchmen, women, children, and feeble old men who chanced to be in the streets after sunset. The succession of these London pests after the Restoration was: The Muns, the Tityre Tus, the Hectors, the Scourers, the Nickers, then the Hawcubites (1711-14), and then the Mohocks—most dreaded of all.

From Mohock and from Hawcubite,

Good Lord deliver me,

Who wander through the streets at night,

Committing cruelty,

They slash our sons with bloody knives,

And on our daughters fall:

And, if they murder not our wives,

We have good luck withal.

The name Hawcubite is probably a combination of Mohawk and Jacobite.

Haw-haw, Lord. The name given (originally by a Fleet St. journalist) to William Joyce, who broadcast anti-British propaganda in English from Germany during World War II. He was hanged for treason in 1946.

B.D.—15

Hawk.

(1) Different parts of a hawk:

Arms. The legs from the thigh to the foot.

Beak. The upper and crooked part of the bill.

Beams. The long feathers of the wings

Clap. The nether part of the bill.

Feathers summed and unsummed. Feathers full or not full grown.

Flags. The next to the principals.

Glut. The slimy substance in the pannel.

Gorge. The crow or crop.

Haglurs. The spots on the feathers.

Mails. The breast feathers.

Nares. The two little holes on the top of the beak.

Pannel. The pipe next to the fundament.

Pendent feathers. Those behind the toes.

Petty singles. The toes.

Pounces. The claws.

Principal feathers. The two longest.

Sails. The wings.

Sear or sere. The yellow part under the eyes.

Train. The tail.

(2) Different sorts of hawk:

Gerfalcon. A Gerfalcon (esp. the Tercel, or male) is for a king.

Falcon or Tercel gentle. For a prince.

Falcon of the rock. For a duke.

Falcon peregrine. For an earl.

Bastard hawk. For a baron.

Sacre and a sacret. For a knight.

Lanare and Lanret. For a squire.

Merlin. For a lady.

Hoby. For a young man.

Goshawk. For a yeoman.

Tercel. For a poor man.

Sparrow-hawk. For a priest.

Musket. For a holy-water clerk.

Kestrel. For a knave or servant.

Dame Juliana Berners.

The "Sore-hawk" is a hawk of the first year: so called from the French, sor or sauve, brownish-yellow.

(3) The dress of a hawk:

Bewits. The leathers with the hawk-bells, buttoned to the bird's legs.

Creanse. A packthread or thin twine fastened to the leath in disciplining a hawk.

Hood. A cover for the head, to keep the hawk in the dark. A ruffier hood is a wide one, open behind. To unstrike the hood is to draw the strings so that the hood may be in readiness to be pulled off.

Jesses. The little straps by which the leath is fastened to the legs.

Leash. The leather thong for holding the hawk.

(4) Terms used in falconry:

Casting. Something given to a hawk to cleanse her gorge.

Cawking. Treading.

Cowering. When young hawks, in obedience to their elders, quiver and shake their wings.

Crabbing. Fighting with each other when they stand too near.

Hack. The place where a hawk's meat is laid.

Imping. Repairing a hawk's wing by engrafting a new feather.

Inke or Ink. The breast and neck of a bird that a hawk preys on.

Intermewing. The time of changing the coat.

Lure. A figure of a fowl made of leather and feathers.

Make. An old staunch hawk that sets an example to young ones.

Mantling. Stretching first one wing and then the other over the legs.

Mew. The place where hawks sit when moulting.

Muting. The dung of hawks.

Pelf or pill. What a hawk leaves of her prey.

Pelt. The dead body of a fowl killed by a hawk.

Perch. The resting-place of a hawk when off the falconer's wrist.

Plumage. Small feathers given to a hawk to make her cast.

Quarry. The fowl or game that a hawk flies at.

Rangle. Gravel given to a hawk to bring down her stomach.

Sharp set. Hungry.

Tiring. Giving a hawk a leg or wing of a fowl to pull at. The peregrine when full grown is called a blue-hawk.

The hawk was the symbol of Ra or Horus, the sun-god of the Egyptians.

See BIRDS (protected by superstitions).

I know a hawk from a handsaw (Hamlet, ii, 2). Handsaw is probably a corruption of hernshaw (a heron). I know a hawk from a heron, the bird of prey from the game flown at; I know one thing from another.

Neither hawk nor buzzard. Of doubtful social position—too good for the kitchen, and not good enough for the family; not hawks to be fondled and petted—the “tasselled gentlemen” of the days of falconry—nor yet buzzards—a dull kind of falcon synonymous with dunce or plebeian. “Neither flesh, fowl, nor good red herring.”

Hawker's News or “Piper's News.” News known to all the world. Un secret de polichinelle.

Hawk-eye. An inhabitant of the State of Iowa.

It was one of the names of Natty Bumppo in J. Fenimore Cooper's novels. See LEATHER-STOCKING.

Hawse-hole. He has crept through the hawse-hole, or He has come in at the hawse-hole. That is, he entered the service in the lowest grade; he rose from the ranks. A naval phrase. The hawse-hole of a ship is that through which the cable of the anchor runs.

Hawthorn. The symbol of “Good Hope” in the language of flowers, because it shows that winter is over and spring at hand. The Athenian girls used to crown themselves with hawthorn flowers at weddings, and the marriage-torch was made of hawthorn. The Romans considered it a charm against sorcery, and placed leaves of it on the cradles of newborn infants.

The hawthorn was chosen by Henry VII for his device, because the crown of Richard III was discovered in a hawthorn bush at Bosworth.

Hay, Hagh, or Haugh (all pron. hā). An enclosed estate; rich pasture-land, especially a royal park; as Bilhagh (Billa-haugh), Beskwood- or Bestwood-hay, Lindeby-hay, Welley-hay or Wel-hay. These were “special reserves” of game for royalty alone.

A bottle of hay. See BOTTLE.

Between hay and grass. Too late for one and too soon for the other.

Neither hay nor grass. That hobbledehc/ state when a youth is neither boy nor man.

Make hay while the sun shines. Strike while the iron is hot; take time by the forelock; one to-day is worth two to-morrows.

Hayseed. An American colloquial term for a countryman, a rustic.

Haywire. To go haywire is to run riot, to behave in an uncontrolled manner. This American phrase probably arises from the difficulty of handling the coils of wire used for binding bundles of hay; if such a coil is unfastened unskillfully it springs out in great loops that quickly become entangled and unmanageable.

Hay, Antic. The hay was an old English country dance, somewhat of the nature of a reel, with winding, sinuous movements around other dancers or bushes, etc., when danced in the open.

My men like satyrs grazing on the lawn

Shall with their goat feet dance the antic hay.

MARLOWE: Edward II, i, 1.

Haysguge. See ISAAC.

Hayward, an official in the old English village whose duty it was to look after the hedges and boundaries and impound any cattle found straying.

I haue an horne and be haywarde and ligen oute a nyghtes

And keep my corn in my croft fro pykers and theeves.

Piers Plowman (C), vi, 16.

Hazazel. The scapegoat. See AZAZEL.

Haze. To bully (first used at sea). “It is very expressive to a sailor, and means to punish by hardwork.” R. H. DANA: Two Years Before the Mast, 1840.

He Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Head. Cattle are counted by the head; labourers by hands, as “How many hands do you employ?”; soldiers by their arms, as “So many rifles, bayonets,” etc.; guests at dinner by the cover, as “Covers for ten,” etc.

Human beings are, in some circumstances, counted as “heads,” as, for instance, in contracting for meals the caterer will take the job at so much “a head”—i.e. for each person.

Better be the head of an ass than the tail of a horse. Better be foremost amongst commoners than the lowest of the aristocracy; “Better to reign in hell than serve in heav'n” (MILTON: Paradise Lost, i, 263).

Get your head shaved. You are a dotard. Go and get your head shaved like other lunatics. See BATH.

Thou thinkest that monarchs never can act ill,

Get thy head shaved, poor fool, or think so still.

PETER FINDAR: Ode Upon Ode.

Head and shoulders. A phrase of sundry shades of meaning. Thus “head and shoulders taller” means considerably taller; “to turn one out head and shoulders” means to drive one out forcibly and without ceremony.

Heads I win, tails you lose. Descriptive of a one-sided arrangement.

Heads or tails. Guess whether the coin tossed up will come down with head-side uppermost or not. The side not bearing the head has various devices, which are all included in the word tail, meaning opposite to the head. The ancient Romans used to play this game, but said, “Heads or ships.”

He has quite turned her head. He has so completely enchanted her that she is unable to take a reasonable view of the situation.

He has a head on his shoulders. He is a clever fellow, with brains in his head.

He has quite lost his head. He is so excited and confused that he does not know the right thing to do.

I can make neither head nor tail of it. I cannot understand it at all. A gambling phrase.

Off one's head. Deranged; delirious; extremely excited.

Over head and ears. See EAR.

To come to a head. To ripen, to reach a crisis. The allusion is to the ripening, or coming to a head, of a suppurating boil or ulcer.

To eat his head off. To cost more in food than he is worth; to do little or no work. The phrase comes from the stable.

To give one his head. To allow him complete freedom, let him go just as he pleases. Another "horsey" phrase.

To head off. To intercept; get ahead of and force to turn back.

To hit the nail on the head. To guess aright; to do the right thing. The allusion is obvious. The French say, Vous avez frappé au but (You have hit the mark); the Italians have the phrase, Avete dato in brocca (You have hit the pitcher), alluding to a game where a pitcher stood in the place of Aunt Sally (q.v.). The Lat. Rem acu tetigisti (You have touched the thing with a needle), refers to the custom of probing sores.

To keep one's head above water. To avoid bankruptcy.

To make head, or headway. To get on, to struggle effectually against something.

To take it into one's head. To conceive a notion.

Heady. Wilful; also, affecting the head, as "The wine or beer is heady."

Health. Drinking healths. This custom, of immemorial antiquity, William of Malmesbury says, took its rise from the death of young King Edward the Martyr (979), who was traitorously stabbed in the back while drinking a cup of wine presented to him by his mother Elfrida. According to Rabelais the giant, Gargamelle, was "the first inventor of the drinking of healths." He was an ancestor of Gargantua.

It was well known to the ancients. The Greeks handed the cup to the person toasted and said, "This to thee." Our holding out the wineglass is a relic of this Greek custom.

The Romans had a curious fashion of drinking the health of a mistress, which was to drink a bumper to each letter of her name. Hudibras satirizes this custom, which he calls "spelling names with beer-glasses" (ii, 1). In Plautus, we read of a man drinking to his mistress with these words: Bene vos, bene nos, bene te, bene me, bene nostrum etiam Stephanium (Here's to you, here's to us all, here's to thee, here's to me, here's to our dear —). (Stich. v, 4.) Martial, Ovid, Horace, etc., refer to the same custom.

The Saxons were great health-drinkers, and Geoffrey of Monmouth (Bk. vi, 12) says that Hengist invited King Vortigern to a banquet to see his new levies. After the meats were removed, Rowena, the beautiful daughter of Hengist, entered with a golden cup full of wine, and, making obeisance, said, "Lauerd kining, wacht heil" (Lord King, your health). The king then drank and replied, Drinc heil (Here's to you). See WASSAIL.

Heap. Struck all of a heap. Struck with astonishment.

Hear, hear! An exclamation used to call attention to the words of a speaker, usually with approbation. Until the late 17th century such approval was shown by a loud humming among the hearers, and "Hear him!" was used to silence interrupters and remind others of the duty of attending to what was being said. In the Parliament of 1689 the Whigs greeted every speech by one of their own party with shouts of "Hear, hear him!" to drown any Tory interjections, and from this the phrase grew to its present significance.

Hearse. Originally a framework shaped like an ancient harrow (O.Fr. herce, a harrow), holding candles and placed over a bier or coffin. These frames at a later period were covered with a canopy, and lastly were mounted on wheels and became the modern carriage for the dead.

Heart. In Christian art the heart is an attribute of St. Teresa.

The flaming heart is the symbol of charity, and an attribute of St. Augustine, denoting the fervency of his devotion. The heart of the Saviour is frequently so represented.

The Bleeding Heart. See BLEEDING.

A heart to heart talk. A confidential talk in private; generally one in which good advice is offered, or a warning or reprimand given.

After my own heart. Just what I like; in accordance with my wish.

Be of good heart. Cheer up.

From the bottom of one's heart. Fervently; with absolute sincerity.

His heart is in the right place. He is kind and sympathetic in spite, perhaps, of appearances. He is perfectly well disposed.

His heart sank into his boots. In Latin, Cor illi in genua decidit. In French, Avoir la peur au ventre. The last two phrases are very expressive: Fear makes the knees shake, and it gives one a stomach ache; but the English phrase suggests that his heart or spirits sank as low as possible short of absolutely deserting him.

His heart was in his mouth. That choky feeling in the throat which arises from fear, conscious guilt, shyness, etc.

In one's heart of heart. In the farthest, innermost, most secure recesses of one's heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart.

Hamlet, ii, 2.

The phrase is often heard as "heart of hearts," but this, as will be seen from Shakespeare's very clear reference to the "heart's core," is incorrect. Cp. also:—

Even the very middle of my heart

Is warmed.

Cymbeline, ii, 6.

Out of heart. Despondent; without sanguine hope.

Set your heart at rest. Be quite easy about the matter.

Take heart. Be of good courage. Moral courage at one time was supposed to reside in the heart, physical courage in the stomach, wisdom in the head, affection in the reins or kidneys, melancholy in the bile, spirit in the blood, etc.

To break one's heart. To waste away or die of disappointment. "Broken-hearted," hopelessly distressed. It is not impossible to die "of a broken heart," but it is never caused through grief.

To eat one's heart out. To brood over some trouble to such an extent that one wears oneself out with the worry of it; to suffer from hopeless disappointment in expectations.

To have at heart. To cherish as a great hope or desire; to be earnestly set on.

To learn by heart. See LEARN.

To lose one's heart to. To fall in love with somebody.

To take heart of grace. To pluck up courage; not to be disheartened or down-hearted when all seems to be going against one. This expression may be based on the promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee" (2 Cor. xii, 9); by this grace St. Paul says, "When I am weak then am I strong." Take grace into your heart, rely on God's grace for strength, with grace in your heart your feeble knees will be strengthened.

To set one's heart upon. Earnestly to desire it.

To take to heart. To feel deeply pained at something which has occurred; to appreciate fully the implications of.

To wear one's heart upon one's sleeve. To expose one's secret intentions to general notice; the reference being to the custom of tying your lady's favour to your sleeve, and thus exposing the secret of the heart. Iago says:—

When my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.
Othello, i, 6.

With all my heart, or with my whole heart and soul. With all the energy and enthusiasm of which I am capable.

With heart and hand. With enthusiastic energy.

Heartbreaker. A flirt. Also a particular kind of curl. A loose ringlet worn over the shoulders, or a curl over the temples.

Heart of Midlothian. The old jail, the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, taken down in 1817. Sir Walter Scott has a novel so entitled.

Heartsease (harts' ēz). The viola tricolor. It has a host of fancy names; as the "Butterfly flower," "Kiss me quick," a "Kiss behind the garden gate," "Love in idleness" (q.v.), "Pansy," "Three faces under one hood," the "Variegated violet," "Herba Trinitatis," etc.

Hearth Money. See CHIMNEY MONEY.

Heat. One course in a race; that part of a race run as "instalment" of the main event. One, two, or more heats make a race. A dead heat is a heat in which two or more competitors are tied for the first place.

Feigned Zeal, you saw, set out with speedier pace,
But the last heat Plain Dealing won the race.

DRYDEN: Albion and Albanus; Epilogue.

To turn the heat on. To subject to a severe cross-examination, to grill.

Heath Robinson is a phrase popularly applied to any fantastic but ingenious contraption—usually of bits of string and wood. In a number of amusing drawings in Punch and elsewhere W. Heath Robinson (1872-1944) invented the crazy inventors of such needlessly complicated devices to perform simple actions.

Heaven (A.S. heofon). The word properly denotes the abode of the Deity and His angels—"heaven is My throne" (Is. lxvi, 1, and Matt. v, 34)—but it is also used in the Bible and elsewhere for the air, the upper heights as "the fowls of heaven," "the dew of heaven," "the clouds of heaven"; "the cities are walled up to heaven" (Deut. i, 28); and a tower whose top should "reach unto heaven" (Gen. xi, 4); the starry firmament, as, "Let there be lights in the firmament of heaven" (Gen. i, 14).

In the Ptolemaic system (q.v.) the heavens were the successive spheres of space enclosing the central earth at different distances and revolving round it at different speeds. The first seven were those of the so-called Planets, viz. the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn; the eighth was the firmament of heaven containing all the fixed stars; the ninth was the crystalline sphere, invented by Hipparchus (2nd cent. B.C.), to account for the precession of the equinoxes. These were known as The Nine Heavens (see NINE SPHERES); the tenth—added much later—was the primum mobile.

The Seven Heavens (of the Mohammedans).

The first heaven is of pure silver, and here the stars, each with its angel warder, are hung out like lamps on golden chains. It is the abode of Adam and Eve.

The second heaven is of pure gold and is the domain of John the Baptist and Jesus.

The third heaven is of pearl, and is allotted to Joseph. Here Azrael, the angel of death, is stationed, and is for ever writing in a large book or blotting words out. The former are the names of persons born, the latter those of the newly dead.

The fourth heaven is of white gold, and is Enoch's. Here dwells the Angel of Tears, whose height is "500 days' journey," and he sheds ceaseless tears for the sins of man.

The fifth heaven is of silver and is Aaron's. Here dwells the Avenging Angel, who presides over elemental fire.

The sixth heaven is composed of ruby and garnet, and is presided over by Moses. Here dwells the Guardian Angel of heaven and earth, half-snow and half-fire.

The seventh heaven is formed of divine light beyond the power of tongue to describe, and is ruled by Abraham. Each inhabitant is bigger than the whole earth, and has 70,000 heads, each head 70,000 mouths, each mouth 70,000 tongues and each tongue speaks 70,000 languages, all for ever employed in chanting the praises of the Most High.

To be in the seventh heaven. Supremely happy. The Cabbalists maintained that there are seven heavens, each rising in happiness above the other, the seventh being the abode of God and the highest class of angels. See also PARADISE.

Heavside Layer. The name given to an ionised region of the upper atmosphere having a high degree of electrical conductivity. It is believed to exist about 60 miles above the earth and it reflects radio waves back to the earth, thus enabling reception round the curved surface of the globe. The name is taken from Oliver Heavside (1850-1925) who suggested its existence in 1901.

Heavy. Heavy man. In theatrical parlance, an actor who plays foil to the hero, such as the king in Hamlet; Iago is another "heavy man's" part as foil to Othello.

Heavy water is the name given to deuterium oxide, a liquid similar to ordinary water but about 10 per cent. denser. It is largely used in experiments in nuclear physics and its properties and possible uses are still being investigated.

Heavies, The. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Hebe (hē' bi). Goddess of youth, and cup-bearer to the celestial gods. She had the power of restoring the aged to youth and beauty (Greek mythology).

Wreathed smiles
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek.
MILTON: L'Allegro.

Hebron (heb' ron). In Dryden's Abraham and Achitophel (q.v.), in the first part stands for Holland, but in the second part for Scotland.

Hecate (hek' ā ti). One of the Titans of Greek mythology, and the only one that retained her power under the rule of Zeus. She was the daughter of Perses and Asteria, and became a deity of the lower world after taking part in the search for Proserpine. She taught witchcraft and sorcery, and was a goddess of the dead, and as she combined the attributes of, and became identified with, Selene, Artemis, and Persephone, she was represented as a triple goddess and was sometimes described as having three heads—one of a horse, one of a dog, and one of a lion. Her offerings consisted of dogs, honey, and black lambs, which were sacrificed to her at cross-roads. Shakespeare refers to the triple character of this goddess:

And we fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team.
Midsummer Night's Dream, v, 2.

Hecatomb (hek' ā tom). In Greek antiquities, a sacrifice consisting of a hundred head of oxen (hekaton, a hundred); hence, a large number. Keats speaks of "hecatombs of vows," Shelley of "hecatombs of broken hearts," etc.

It is said that Pythagoras, who, we know, would never take life, offered up 100 oxen to the gods when he discovered that the square of the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle equals the sum of the squares of the other two sides. This is the 47th proposition of Bk. i of "Euclid," called the Dulcarnon (q.v.).

Hector (hek' tōr). Eldest son of Priam, the noblest and most magnanimous of all the Trojan chieftains in Homer's Iliad. After holding out for ten years, he was slain by Achilles, who lashed him to his chariot, and dragged the dead body in triumph thrice round the walls of Troy. The Iliad concludes with the funeral obsequies of Hector and Patroclus.

In modern times his name has somewhat deteriorated, for it is used to-day for a swaggering bully, and "to hector" means to browbeat, bully, bluster.

The Hector of Germany. Joachim II, Elector of Brandenburg (1514-71).

You wear Hector's cloak. You are paid in your own coin for trying to deceive another. When Thomas Percy, Earl of Northumberland, in 1569, was routed, he hid himself in the house of Hector Armstrong, of Harlaw. This villain betrayed him for the reward offered, but never after did anything go well with him till at last he died a beggar on the roadside.

Hecuba (hek' ū ba). Second wife of Priam, and mother of nineteen children, including Hector. When Troy was taken by the Greeks she fell to the lot of Ulysses. She was afterwards metamorphosed into a dog, and threw herself into the sea. Her story has furnished a host of Greek tragedies.

I have heard my grandsire say full oft,
Extrernity of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy
Ran mad through sorrow.

Titus Andronicus, iv, 1.

Hedge. To hedge, in betting, is to protect oneself against loss by cross bets; to prevaricate. He [Godolphin] began to think . . . that he had betted too deep . . . and that it was time to hedge.—MACAULAY: England, vol. iv, ch. xvii.

The word is used attributively for persons of low origin, vagabonds who ply their trade in the open, under—or between—the hedges, etc.; hence for many low and mean things, as hedge-priest, a poor or vagabond parson; hedge-writer, a Grub Street author; hedge-marriage, a clandestine one, etc.; hedge-born swain, a person of mean, or illegitimate, birth (1 Henry VI, iv, 1); hedge-school, a school kept in the open air, at one time common in Ireland; etc.

To hedge-hop. Airmen's term for flying so low as almost to skim the tops of the hedges.

Hedonism. The doctrine of Aristippus, that pleasure or happiness is the chief good and chief end of man (Gr. hedone, pleasure).

Heebie-jeebies (hē' bi jē' biz), an American slang term descriptive of intense nervousness, the jitters.

Heel. In American slang usage a heel is a cad, a despicable fellow with no sense of decency or honour.

A healer is the hanger-on of a political boss.

Heeled, in Western U.S.A. means supplied with all necessities, particularly money and firearms.

Achilles' heel. See ACHILLES.

Down, or out at heels. In a sad plight, in decayed circumstances, like a beggar whose boots are worn out at the heels.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels,
King Lear, ii, 2.

To cool or kick one's heels. To be kept waiting a long time, especially after an appointment has been given one.

To lay by the heels. To render powerless. The allusion is to the stocks, in which vagrants and other petty offenders were confined by the ankles.

To lift up the heel against. To spurn, physically or figuratively; to treat with contumely or contempt; to oppose, to become an enemy.

Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted his heel against me.—Ps. xli, 9.

To show a clean or fair pair of heels. To abscond, run away and get clear.

To take to one's heels. To run off.

Bumpers all round, and no heel-taps. The bumpers are to be drained to the bottom of the glass.

Heep, Uriah. An abject toady and a malignant hypocrite, making great play of being "umble," but in the end falling a victim to his own malice.—DICKENS: David Copperfield.

Hegemony (he gem' o ni). The hegemony of nations. The leadership. (Gr. hegemonia, from ago, to lead.)

Hegira (hej' i ra, hē ji' ra) (Arab. hejira, the departure). The epoch of the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina when he was expelled by the magistrates, July 15th, 622. The Mohammedan calendar starts from this event.

Heimdall (hīm' dal). One of the gods of Scandinavian mythology, son of the nine virgins, daughters of Ægir, and in many attributes identical with Tiw.

Heimskringla (hīm skring' lá). An important collection of sixteen sagas containing an account of the history of Norway—sketched through the medium of biography—and a compendium of ancient Scandinavian mythology and poetry. It is probably by Snorri Sturluson (d. 1241). See EDDA.

Heir-apparent. The actual heir who will succeed if he outlive the present holder of the crown, estate, etc., as distinguished from the heir-presumptive, whose succession may be broken by the birth of someone nearer akin to the holder. Thus, in the time of Queen Victoria, the Princess Royal was heir-presumptive until the Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward VII, was born and became heir apparent. At the death of his predecessor the heir-apparent becomes heir-at-law.

Hel. The name in late Scandinavian mythology of the queen of the dead; also of her place of abode, which was the home of the spirits of those who had died in their beds as distinguished from Valhalla, the abode of heroes slain in battle.

Heldenbuch (hel' den buk) (Ger., Book of Heroes). The name given to the collection of songs, sagas, etc., recounting the traditions and myths of Dietrich of Bern. Much of it is ascribed to Wolfram von Eschenbach.

Helen. The type of female beauty. She was the daughter of Zeus and Leda, and wife of Menelaos, king of Sparta. She eloped with Paris, and thus brought about the siege and destruction of Troy.

For which men all the life they here enjoy

Still fight, as for the Helens of their Troy.

SIR FULKE GREVILLE, LORD BROOKE: Treatise of Humane Learning.

She moves a goddess and she looks a queen.

POPE: Homer's Iliad, iii.

St. Helen's fire. The St. Elmo's Fire, or Corposant (q.v.), occasionally seen on the masts of ships, etc. If the flame is single, foul weather is said to be at hand; but if two or more flames appear, the weather will improve. See CASTOR AND POLLUX.

Helena (hel' en à). The type of a lovely woman, patient and hopeful, strong in feeling, and sustained through trials by her enduring and heroic faith. (All's Well that Ends Well.)

Helena, St. Mother of Constantine the Great. She is represented in royal robes, wearing an imperial crown, because she was empress. Sometimes she carries in her hand a model of the Holy Sepulchre, an edifice raised by her in the East; sometimes she bears a large cross, typical of her alleged discovery of Our Lord's Cross (see Invention of the Cross, under Cross); sometimes she also bears the three nails by which the Saviour was affixed to the cross. She died about 328, and is commemorated on August 18th.

The island of St. Helena (săn' tá lē' nà) in the South Atlantic, discovered by the Portuguese on St. Helena's Day, 1501, was the place of exile of Napoleon from 1815 until his death in 1821.

Helicon (hel' i kon). The home of the Muses, a part of the Parnassus, a mountain range in Greece. It contained the fountains of Aganippe and Hippocrene, connected by "Helicon's harmonious stream." The name is used allusively of poetic inspiration.

From Helicon's harmonious springs

A thousand rills their mazy progress take:

The laughing flowers, that round them blow

Drink life and fragrance as they flow.

GRAY: The Progress of Poesy.

Helicopter (hel' i kop tēr). A flying-machine that can raise itself vertically by means of horizontally revolving propellers. The uses of these aircraft have not yet been fully explored and developed.

Heliopolis (hel i op' ō lis, hē' li op' ō lis), the City of the Sun, a Greek form of (1) Baalbek, in Syria; and (2) of An, in ancient Egypt, noted for its temple of Actis, which may be the Beth Shemesh, or Temple of the Sun, referred to in Jer. xliii, 13. It is now a pleasant residential suburb of Cairo.

Helios (hē' li os). The Greek sun-god, who rode to his palace in Colchis every night in a golden boat furnished with wings. He is called Hyperion by Homer, and, in later times, Apollo.

Heliotrope (hel' i ð trōp, hē' li ð trōp). Apollo loved Clytie (q.v.), but forsook her for her sister Leucothoe. On discovering this, Clytie pined away; and Apollo changed her at death to a flower, which, always turning towards the sun, is called heliotrope. (Gr. "turn-to-sun.")

The bloodstone, a greenish quartz with veins and spots of red, used to be called "heliotrope," the story being that if thrown into a bucket of water it turned the rays of the sun to blood-colour. This stone also had the power of rendering its bearer invisible.

No hope had they of device where to hide,
Or heliotrope to charm them out of view.

DANTE: Inferno, xxvi.

Hell. This word occurs twenty-one times in the Authorized Version of the New Testament. In nine instances the Greek word is Hades; in eight instances it is Gehenna; and in one it is Tartarus.

According to the Koran, Hell has seven portals leading into seven divisions (Surah xv, 44).

True Buddhism admits of no Hell, properly so called (cp. NIRVANA), but certain of the more superstitious acknowledge as many as 136 places of punishment after death, where the dead are sent according to their degree of demerit.

Classic authors tell us that the Inferno is encompassed by five rivers: Acheron, Cocytus, Styx, Phlegethon, and Lethe. Acheron, from the Gr. achos-reo, grief-flowing; Cocytus, from the Gr. kokuo, to weep, supposed to be a flood of tears; Styx, from the Gr. stugeo, to loathe; Phlegethon, from the Gr. phlego, to burn; and Lethe, from the Gr. lethe, oblivion. See also INFERNO.

Hell and chancery are always open. There's not much to choose between lawyers and the devil. An old saying, given in Fuller's Collection (1732).

Hell, Hull, and Halifax. See HULL.

Hell is paved with good intentions. This occurs as a saying of Dr. Johnson (Boswell's Life, ann. 1775), but it is a good deal older than his day. It is given by George Herbert (Jacula Prudentum) (1633) as "Hell is full of good meanings and wishes."

It was hell broken loose. Said of a state of anarchy or disorder.

Why, here you have the awfulest of crimes
For nothing! Hell broke loose on a butterfly!
A dragon born of rose-dew and the moon!

BROWNING: King and the Book, iv, 1601.

The road to hell is easy. Facilis descensus Averno. See AVERNUS.

The Vicar of Hell. See VICAR.

To give one hell. To make things very unpleasant for oneself.

To Hell or Connaught. This phrase, usually attributed to Cromwell, and common to the whole of Ireland, rose thus: during the Commonwealth all the native Irish were dispossessed of their lands in the other three provinces and ordered to settle in Connaught, under pain of death.

To lead apes in hell. See APE.

To ride hell for leather. To ride with the utmost speed, "all out."

To work, play, etc., like hell. To do it feverishly, with all the power at one's disposal.

Hell broth. A magical mixture prepared for evil purposes. (Macbeth iv, 1.)

Hell's Corner (World War II). The triangle of Kent about Dover, so called from its being both under fire from German cross-channel guns and the scene of much of the bitterest air fighting during the Battle of Britain, 1940.

Hell Gate. A dangerous passage between Great Barn Island and Long Island. The Dutch settlers of New York called it Hoellgat (whirling-gut), corrupted into Hell Gate. Flood Rock, its most dangerous reef, has been blown up.

Hellenes (hel' ēnz). "This word had in Palestine three several meanings: sometimes it designated the pagans; sometimes the Jews, speaking Greek and dwelling among the pagans; and sometimes proselytes of the gate, that is, men of pagan origin converted to Judaism, but not circumcised" (John vii, 35, xii, 20; Acts xiv, 1, xvii, 4, xviii, 4, xxi, 28). (Renan: Life of Jesus, xiv.)

The Greeks were called Hellenes, from Hellen, son of Deucalion and Pyrrha, their legendary ancestor; the name has descended to the modern Greeks, and their ruler is not "King of Greece," but "King of the Hellenes." The ancient Greeks called their country "Hellas"; it was the Romans who applied to it the name "Græcia," which, among the inhabitants themselves, referred only to Epirus.

Hellenic. The common dialect of the Greek writers after the age of Alexander. It was based on the Attic.

Hellenistic. The dialect of the Greek language used by the Jews. It was full of Oriental idioms and metaphors.

Hellenists. Those Jews who used the Greek or Hellenic language; also a Greek scholar.

Hellespont (hel' es pont). The "sea of Helle"; so called because Helle, the sister of Phryxus, was drowned there. She was fleeing with her brother through the air to Colchis on the golden ram to escape from Ino, her mother-in-law, who most cruelly oppressed her, but turning giddy, she fell into the sea. It is the ancient name of the Dardanelles and is celebrated in the legend of Hero and Leander (q.v.).

Helmet. The helmets of Saragossa were most in repute in the days of chivalry.

Close helmet. The complete head-piece, having in front two movable parts, which could be lifted up or let down at pleasure.

Visor. One of the movable parts; it was to look through.

Bever, or drinking-piece. One of the movable parts, which was lifted up when the wearer ate or drank. It comes from the old Italian verb bevere (to drink).

Morion. A low iron cap, worn only by infantry.

Mohammed's helmet. Mohammed wore a double helmet; the exterior one was called al mawashah (the wreathed garland).

The helmet of Perseus rendered the wearer invisible. This was the "helmet of Hades," which, with the winged sandals and magic wallet, he took from certain nymphs who held them in possession; but after he had slain Medusa he restored them again, and presented the Gorgon's head to Athene (Minerva), who placed it in the middle of her ægis.

The pointed helmet in the bas-reliefs from the earliest palace of Nimroud appears to have been the most ancient. . . . Several were discovered in the ruins. They were iron, and the rings which ornamented the lower part . . . were inlaid with copper.—LAYARD: Nineveh and its Remains, vol. ii, Pt. ii, ch. iv.

In heraldry, the helmet, resting on the chief of the shield, and bearing the crest, indicates rank.

Gold, with six bars, or with the visor raised (in full face), for royalty;

Steel, with gold bars, varying in number (in profile), for a nobleman;

Steel, without bars, and with visor open (in profile), for a knight or baronet;

Steel, with visor closed (in profile), for a squire or gentleman.

Helot (hel' ôt). A slave in ancient Sparta; hence, a slave or serf. The Spartans used to make a helot drunk as an object-lesson to the youths of the evils of intemperance. Dr. Johnson said of one of his old acquaintances:—

He is a man of good principles; and there would be no danger that a young gentleman should catch his manner; for it is so very bad, that it must be avoided. In that respect he would be like the drunken Helot.—Boswell's Life: ann. 1779.

Helter-skelter. Higgledy-piggledy; in hurry and confusion. A jingling expression, more or less imitating the clatter of swiftly moving feet; post-haste, as Shakespeare uses the expression (2 Henry IV, v, 3):—

Sir John I am thy Pistol and thy friend,
And helter-skelter have I rode to thee,
And tidings do I bring.

Helve. To throw the helve after the hatchet. To be reckless, to throw away what remains because your losses have been so great. The allusion is to the fable of the wood-cutter who lost the head of his axe in a river and threw the handle in after it.

Helvetia (hel vē' sha). Switzerland. So called from the Helvetii, a powerful Celtic people who dwelt thereabouts.

Hemp. When hempe is spun England is done. Lord Bacon says he heard the prophecy when he was a child, and he interpreted it thus: Hempe is composed of the initial letters of Henry, Edward, Mary, Philip, and Elizabeth. At the close of the last reign "England was done," for the sovereign no longer styled himself "King of England," but "King of Great Britain and Ireland." See NOTARIKON.

Hempen caudle, collar, etc. A hangman's rope.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet.—2 Henry VI, iv, 7.

Hempen fever. Death on the gallows, the rope being made of hemp.

Hempen widow. The widow of a man who has been hanged.

Hen. A grey hen. A stone bottle for holding liquor. Large and small pewter pots mixed together are called "hen and chickens."

A dirty leather wallet lay near the sleeper, . . . also a grey-hen which had contained some sort of strong liquor.—EMMA ROBINSON: Whitefrars, ch. viii.

A whistling maid and a crowing hen is fit for neither God nor men. A whistling maid means a witch, who whistles like the Lapland witches to call up the winds; they were supposed to be in league with the devil. The crowing of a hen was supposed to forebode a death. The usual interpretation is that masculine qualities in women are undesirable.

As fussy as a hen with one chick. Over-anxious about small matters; over-particular and fussy. A hen with one chick is for ever clucking it, and never leaves it in independence a single moment.

A hen on a hot griddle, a Scottish phrase descriptive of a restless person.

Hen and chickens. In Christian art this device is emblematical of God's providence. See Matt. xxiii, 37. See also GREY HEN above.

Hen-pecked. A man who tamely submits to the lectures and nagging of his wife is said to be "hen-pecked."

Tappit hen. See TAPPIT.

Henchman. A faithful follower. Originally a squire or attendant, especially one who looked after the horses (A.S. hengest, horse, and man).

I do but beg a little changeling boy
To be my henchman.

A Midsummer Night's Dream, ii, 1.

Hengist and Horsa. The semi-legendary leaders of the Jutes, who landed in England at Ebbsfleet, Kent, in 449. Horsa is said to have been slain at the battle of Aylesford, about 455, and Hengist to have ruled in Kent till his death in 488. Ger. hengst, a stallion, and Horsa is connected with our word horse. The two brothers may have received their names from the devices borne on their arms.

Henry Grâce de Dieu. See GREAT HARRY.

Hep, an American slang phrase of uncertain origin meaning "aware of, informed of, wise to."

Hep-cat, one who is fond of and moved by fast and noisy music.

Hephaestus (hē fes' tos). The Greek Vulcan.

Heptameron, The. A collection of Italian and mediæval stories written by—or at any rate ascribed to—Marguerite of Angoulême, Queen of Navarre (1492-1549), and published posthumously in 1558. They were supposed to have been related in seven days, hence the title (Gr. hepta, seven, hemera, day; cp. DECAMERON; HEXAMERON).

Heptarchy (Gr., seven governments). The Saxon Heptarchy was the division of England into seven parts, each of which had a separate ruler: as Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumbria. It flourished in various periods from the 6th to the 9th centuries under a Bretwalda (q.v.), but seldom consisted of exactly seven members, and the names and divisions were constantly changing.

Hera (hē' rà). The Greek Juno, the wife of Zeus. (The word means "chosen one," haireo.)

Heraldry. The herald (O.Fr. heralt, heraut) was an officer whose duty it was to proclaim war or peace, carry challenges to battle, and messages between sovereigns, etc.; nowadays war or peace is still proclaimed by the heralds, but their chief duty as court functionaries is to superintend state ceremonies such as coronations, installations, etc., and also to grant arms, trace genealogies, attend to matters of precedence, honours, etc.

Edward III appointed two heraldic kings-at-arms for south and north—Surroy and Norroy—in 1340. The English College of Heralds was incorporated by Richard III in 1483-84. It consists of three kings of arms, and four pursuivants, under the Earl Marshal, which office is hereditary in the line of the Dukes of Norfolk.

The three kings of arms are Garter (blue), Clarenceux, and Norroy (purple).

The six heralds are styled Somerset, Richmond, Lancaster, Windsor, Chester, and York.

The four pursuivants are Rouge Dragon, Blue Mantle, Portcullis, and Rouge Croix.

Garter King of Arms is so called from his special duty to attend at the solemnities of election, investiture, and installation of Knights of the Garter; he is Principal King of Arms for all England.

Clarenceux King of Arms. So called from the Duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV. His jurisdiction extends over England south of the Trent.

Norroy King of Arms has similar jurisdiction to Clarenceux, only on the north side of the Trent.

The "Bath King of Arms" is not a member of the Heralds' College, and is concerned only with the Order of the Bath.

The Scottish and Irish officers of Arms are, unlike those of England, directly under the Government, and are not connected with the Earl Marshal or Garter.

In Scotland the heraldic college consists of Lyon King of Arms, three heralds (Albany, Ross, and Rothesay), and three pursuivants (Garrick, March, and Unicorn).

In Ireland it consists of Ulster King of Arms, two heralds (Dublin and Cork), and one pursuivant (Athlone).

In Blazonry, the coat of arms represents the knight himself from whom the bearer is descended.

The shield represents his body, and the helmet his head.

The flourish is his mantle.

The motto is the ground or moral pretension on which he stands.

The supporters are the pages, designated by the emblems of bears, lions, and so on.

There are nine points on the shield or escutcheon, distinguished by the first nine letters of the alphabet—three at top, A, B, C; three down the middle, D, E, F; and three at the bottom, G, H, I. The first three are chiefs; the middle three are the collar point, fess point, and nombriel or navel point; the bottom three are the base points.

It should be noted that in heraldry the shield is taken as being held before the wearer; hence the dexter, or right side is the left side of the shield as it appears on paper.

The tinctures or colours used in heraldry are known by distinctive names, also sometimes by equivalents among the planets and precious stones. They are:—

Gold: or, Sol, topaz.

Silver: argent, Luna, pearl.

Red: gules, Mars, ruby.

Blue: azure, Jupiter, sapphire.

Black: sable, Saturn, diamond.

Green: vert, Venus, emerald.

Purple: purple, Mercury, amethyst.

Besides these there are the different furs, as ermine, vair, and their arrangements as ermineois, erminites, pean, potent, verry, etc.

Marshalling is the science of bringing together the arms of several families in one escutcheon.

The following are the main terms used in heraldry:—

Bend, a diagonal stripe.

Bordure, an edge of a different colour round the whole shield.

Chevron, a bent stripe, as worn by non-commissioned officers in the army, but the point upwards.

Cinquefoil, a five-petalled formalised flower.

Couchant, lying down.

Counter-passant, moving in opposite directions.

Couped, cut off straight at the stem or neck.

Coward, coué, with tail hanging between the legs.

Displayed, (of birds) with wings and talons outspread.

Dormant, sleeping.

Endorse, a very narrow vertical stripe, see Pale.

Erased, with nothing below the stem or neck, which ends roughly as opposed to the sharp edge of couped.

Fesse, a horizontal stripe across the middle of the shield.

File, a horizontal bar from which normally depend one or more smaller bars called labels.

Gardant, full-faced.

Hauriant, standing on its tail (of fishes).

Issuant, rising from the top or bottom of an ordinary.

Lodged, reposing (of stags, etc.).

Martlet, a swallow, with no feet.

Mullet, a star of a stated number of points.

Naïant, swimming (of fishes).

Nascent, rising out of the middle of an ordinary.

Pale, a wide vertical stripe down the centre of the shield.

Pallet, a narrow vertical stripe; see Pile.

Passant, walking, the face in profile (emblematic of resolution).

Passant gardant, walking, with full face (emblematic of resolution and prudence).

Passant regardant, walking and looking behind.

Pile, a narrow triangle.

Rampant, rearing, with face in profile (emblematic of magnanimity).

Rampant gardant, erect on the hind legs; full face (emblematic of prudence).

Rampant regardant, erect on the hind legs; side face looking behind (emblematic of circumspection).

Regardant, looking back (emblematic of circumspection).

Salient, springing (emblematic of valour).

Sejant, seated (emblematic of counsel).

Stantant, standing still.

Trippant, running (of stags, etc.).

Volant, flying.

Herb. Herb of grace. Rue is so called probably because (owing to its extreme bitterness) it is the symbol of repentance.

Here did she fall a tear; here in this place,

I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;

Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,

In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

Richard II, iii, 4.

Jeremy Taylor, quoting from the Flagellum Dæmonum, a form of exorcism by Father Jerome Mengus (used in exorcizing Martha Brosser in 1599), says:—

First, they are to try the devil by holy water, incense, sulphur, rue, which from thence, as we suppose, came to be called "herb of grace,"—and especially, St. John's wort, which therefore they call "devil's fight," with which if they cannot cast the devil out, yet they may do good to the patient.—A Disuasive from Popery, I, ii, 9 (1664).

Herba Sacra. The "divine weed," vervain, said by the old Romans to cure the bites of all rabid animals, to arrest the progress of venom, to cure the plague, to avert sorcery and witchcraft, to reconcile enemies, etc. So highly esteemed was it that feasts called Verbenalia were annually held in its honour. Heralds wore a wreath of vervain when they declared war; and the Druids held vervain in similar veneration.

Lift your boughs of vervain blue,

Dipt in cold September dew;

And dash the moisture, chaste and clear,

O'er the ground, and through the air,

Now the place is purged and pure.

W. MASON: Caractacus (1759).

Herb Trinity. The popular name for the pansy (q.v.), Viola tricolor; also called "Three-faces-under-a-hood"; the markings of the pansy account for both names. Cp. HEARTS-EASE.

Herculaneum (hĕr kŭ lă' niŭm), one of the ancient towns on the Bay of Naples destroyed in the eruption of A.D. 79. But whereas Pompeii was buried in ashes, Herculaneum was overwhelmed with molten lava and its remains have had to be hewn with difficulty from this rock. The architectural remains are inferior to those of Pompeii but the works of art are superior.

Hercules (hĕr' kŭ lĕz). A hero of ancient Greek myth, who was possessed of superhuman physical strength and vigour. He is represented as brawny, muscular, short-necked, and of huge proportions. The Pythian told him if he would serve Eurystheus for twelve years he should become immortal; accordingly he bound himself to the Argive king, who imposed upon him twelve tasks of great difficulty and danger:

(1) To slay the Nemean lion.

(2) To kill the Lernean hydra.

(3) To catch and retain the Arcadian stag.

(4) To destroy the Erymanthian boar.

(5) To cleanse the stables of King Augeas.

(6) To destroy the cannibal birds of the Lake Symphalis.

(7) To take captive the Cretan bull.

(8) To catch the horses of the Thracian Diomedes.

(9) To get possession of the girdle of Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons.

(10) To take captive the oxen of the monster Geryon.

(11) To get possession of the apples of the Hesperides.

(12) To bring up from the infernal regions the three-headed dog Cerberus.

After death Hercules took his place in the heavens as a constellation, and is still to be seen between Lyra and Corona Borealis.

The Attic Hercules. Theseus, who went about like Hercules, destroying robbers and achieving wondrous exploits.

The Farnese Hercules. A celebrated statue, copied by Glykon from an original by Lysippus, and now in the Farnese Palace, Rome. It exhibits the hero, exhausted by his toils, leaning upon his club; his left hand rests upon his back, and grasps one of the apples of the Hesperides.

Hercules' choice. Immortality the reward of toil in preference to pleasure. Xenophon tells us that when Hercules was a youth he was accosted by Virtue and Pleasure, and asked to choose between them. Pleasure promised him all carnal delights, but Virtue promised immortality. Hercules gave his hand to the latter, and, after a life of toil, was received amongst the gods.

Hercules' horse. Arion, given him by Adrastus. It had the power of speech, and its feet on the right side were those of a man.

Hercules' Pillars. See PILLARS.

Hercules Secundus. Commodus, the Roman Emperor (A.D. 180-92), gave himself this title. Dissipated and inordinately cruel, he claimed divine honours and caused himself to be worshipped as Hercules. It is said that he killed 100 lions in the amphitheatre, and that he slew over a thousand defenceless gladiators.

Herculean knot (hĕr kŭ lĕ' ān). A snaky complication on the rod or caduceus of Mercury, adopted by the Grecian brides as the fastening of their woollen girdles, which only the bridegroom was allowed to untie. As he did so he invoked Juno to render his marriage as fruitful as that of Hercules, whose numerous wives all had families. Amongst his wives were the fifty daughters of Thestius, all of whom conceived in one night. See KNOT.

Herefordshire Kindness. A good turn rendered for a good turn received. Fuller says the people of Herefordshire "drink back to him who drinks to them."

Heretic. From a Greek word meaning "one who chooses," hence heresy means simply "a choice." A heretic is one who chooses his own creed instead of adopting one set forth by authority.

The principal heretical sects of the first six centuries were:—

FIRST CENTURY: The Simonians (from Simon Magus), Cerinthians (Cerinthus), Ebionites (Ebion), and Nicolaitans (Nicholas, deacon of Antioch).

SECOND CENTURY: The Basilidians (Basilides), Carpocratians (Carpocrates), Valentinians (Valentinus), Gnostics (Knowing Ones), Nazarenes, Millenarians, Cainites (Cain), Sethians (Seth), Quartodecimans (who kept Easter on the fourteenth day of the first month), Cerdonians (Cerdon), Marcionites (Marcion), Montanists (Montanus), Alogians (who denied the "Word"), Arctotyrites (q.v.), and Angelics (who worshipped angels).

Tatianists belong to the 3rd or 4th century. The Tatian of the 2nd century was a Platonic philosopher who wrote Discourses in good Greek; Tatian the heretic lived in the 3rd or 4th century, and wrote very bad Greek. The two men were widely different in every respect, and the authority of the heretic for "four gospels" is of no worth.

THIRD CENTURY: The Patri-passians, Arabaci, Aquarians, Novatians, Origenists (followers of Origen), Melchisedechians (who believed Melchisedec was the Messiah), Sabellians (from Sabellius), and Manicheans (followers of Mani).

FOURTH CENTURY: The Arians (from Arius), Colluthians (Colluthus), Macedonians, Agnetae, Apollinarians (Apollinaris), Timotheans (Timothy, the apostle), Collyridians (who offered cakes to the Virgin Mary), Seleucians (Seleucius), Priscillians (Priscillian), Anthropomorphites (who ascribed to God a human form), Jovinianists (Jovinian), Messalians, and Bonosians (Bonosus).

FIFTH CENTURY: The Pelagians (Pelagius), Nestorians (Nestorius), Eutychiens (Eutychus), Theo-paschites (who said all the three persons of the Trinity suffered on the cross).

SIXTH CENTURY: The Predestinarians, Incorruptibilists (who maintained that the body of Christ was incorruptible), the new Agnoetae (who maintained that Christ did not know when the day-of judgment would take place), and the Monothelites (who maintained that Christ had but one will).

Heriot (her' i ôt). The ancient right of the lord of a manor to the best beast or chattel of a deceased copyhold tenant. The word is compounded of the Sax. here (army), geatwe (equipments), because originally it was military furniture, such as armour, arms, and horses paid to the lord of the fee.

Hermæ. See HERMES.

Hermaphrodite (her mǎf' rō dīt). A person or animal with indeterminate sexual organs, or with these organs being of both sexes; a flower containing both the male and female organs of reproduction. The word is derived from the fable of Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite. The nymph Salmacis became enamoured of him, and prayed that she might be so closely united that "the twain might become one flesh." Her prayer being heard, the nymph and boy became one body. (Ovid: Metamorphoses, iv, 347.)

Though hermaphroditism in human beings to the extent of the combination in one person of certain characteristics of the two sexes is not unknown, a true hermaphrodite is rare, and the so-called examples are almost invariably merely cases of the malformation of the reproductive organs.

The Jewish Talmud contains several references to hermaphrodites; they are recognized in English law, and an old French law allowed them great latitude. The ancient Athenians commanded that they should be put to death. The Hindus and Chinese enact that every hermaphrodite should choose one sex and keep to it. According to fable, all persons who bathed in the fountain Salmācis, in Caria, became hermaphrodites.

Hermes. The Greek Mercury, whose busts, known as Hermæ, were affixed to stone pillars and set up as boundary marks at street corners, and so on. The Romans used them also for garden decorations.

Among alchemists Hermes was the usual name for quicksilver or mercury (q.v.).

See Milton's Paradise Lost, iii, 603.

Hermetic Art or Philosophy. The art or science of alchemy; so called from Hermes Trismegistus (the Thrice Greatest Hermes), the name given by the Neo-Platonists to the Egyptian god Thoth, its hypothetical founder.

Hermetic books. Forty-two books fabled to have been written from the dictation of Hermes Trismegistus dealing with the life and thought of ancient Egypt. They state that the world was made out of fluid; that the soul is the union of light and life; that nothing is destructible; that the soul transmigrates; and that suffering is the result of motion.

Hermetic powder. A sympathetic powder, supposed to possess a healing influence, from a distance; so called by mediæval philosophers out of compliment to Hermes Trismegistus. (Sir Kenelm Digby: Discourse Concerning the Cure of Wounds by the Sympathetic Powder, 1644.)

By his side a pouch he wore

Replete with strange hermetic powder,

That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder.

BUTLER: Hudibras, i, 2.

Hermetically sealed. Closed securely; from sealing a vessel hermetically, i.e. as a chemist, a disciple of Hermes Trismegistus, would, by heating the neck of the vessel till it is soft, and then twisting it till the aperture is closed up.

Hermit. Peter the Hermit (1050-1115). Preacher of the first crusade, which he led as far as Asia Minor.

Hermit's Derby. One of the famous races in the history of the Turf, when Hermit, belonging to Henry Chaplin (1840-1923), later Viscount Chaplin, won the Derby of 1867 against all expectations, and the notorious Marquis of Hastings lost £300,000 in bets.

Herne the Hunter. See WILD HUNTSMAN.

Hero. No man is a hero to his valet. An old saying. Plutarch has the idea both in his De Iside and Regum et Imperatorum Apothegmata.

And Montaigne in his Essays (Bk. iii, ch. ii) amplifies the idea—

Tel a esté miraculeux au monde, auquel sa femme et son valet n'ont rien veu seulement de remarquable; peu d'hommes ont esté admirez par leur domestiques. (Such an one has been, as it were, miraculous in the world in whom his wife and valet have seen nothing even remarkable; few men have been admired by their servants).

Cp. the Latin saying frequently quoted by Bacon, Verior fama e domesticis emanat (Truer fame comes from one's servants), and Matt. xiii, 57—

A prophet is not without honour save in . . . his own house.

Heroic age. That age of a nation which comes between the purely mythical period and the historic. This is the age when the sons of the gods were said to take unto themselves the daughters of men, and the offspring partake of the twofold character.

Heroic size in sculpture denotes a stature superior to ordinary life, but not colossal.

Heroic verse. That verse in which epic poetry is generally written. In Greek and Latin it is hexameter verse, in English it is ten-syllable iambic verse, either in rhymes or not; in Italian it is the ottava rima. So called because it is employed to celebrate heroic exploits.

Hero and Leander. The old Greek tale is that Hero, a priestess of Venus, fell in love with Leander, who swam across the Hellespont every night to visit her. One night he was drowned, and heart-broken Hero drowned herself in the same sea. The story is told in one of the poems of Musæus, and in Marlowe and Chapman's Hero and Leander.

Lord Byron and Lieutenant Ekenhead repeated the experiment of Leander in 1810 and accomplished it in 1 hour 10 minutes. The distance, allowing for drifting, would be about four miles. In Don Juan Byron says of his hero:—

A better swimmer you could scarce see ever,
He could, perhaps, have pass'd the Hellespont,
As once (a feat on which ourselves we prided)
Leander, Mr. Ekenhead, and I did.

Canto, II, cv.

Herod (her' od). To out-herod Herod. To outdo in wickedness, violence, or rant, the worst of tyrants. Herod, who destroyed the babes of Bethlehem (Matt. ii, 16), was made (in the ancient mysteries) a ranting, roaring tyrant; the extravagance of his rant being the measure of his bloody-mindedness. Cp. PILATE.

Oh, it offends me to the soul to hear a robustious, periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings . . . it out-herods Herod.—Hamlet, iii, 2.

Herrenvolk (hår' en fôk), a German word, meaning broadly "master race," used in the Nazi philosophy to describe the superiority of the German peoples.

Herring. A shotten herring. One that has shot off or ejected its spawn, and hence is worthless.

Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt. If manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unchanged in England, and one of them is fat and grows old.—1 Henry IV, ii, 4.

Drawing a red herring across the path. Trying to divert attention from the main question by some side issue. A red herring (i.e. one dried, smoked, and salted) drawn across a fox's path destroys the scent and sets the dogs at fault.

Neither barrel the better herring. Much of a muchness; not a pin to choose between you; six of one and half a dozen of the other. The herrings of both barrels are so much alike that there is no choice whatever.

Neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring. Neither one thing nor another.

The Battle of the Herrings. A sortie made during the Hundred Years War (February 12th, 1429) by the men of Orléans, during the siege of their city, to intercept a supply of food being brought to the besiegers by the English under Sir John Fastolf. The English repulsed the onset, using barrels of herrings, which were among the supplies, as a defence; hence the name.

The king of the herrings. The Chimæra, or sea-ape, a cartilaginous fish which accompanies a shoal of herrings in their migrations.

Herring-bone (in building). Courses of stone laid angularly, thus: <<< <<<. Also applied to strutting placed between thin joists to increase their strength.

In needlework an embroidery stitch, or alternatively a kind of cross-stitch used to fasten down heavy material.

Herring-pond, The. A name humorously given to various dividing seas, especially to the Atlantic, which separates America from the British Isles. The English Channel, the North Sea, and the seas between Australasia and the United Kingdom are also so called.

"I'll send an account of the wonders I meet on the Great Herring Pond."—JOHN DUNTON: Letters from New England, 1686.

Hershey Bar (hēr' shi). In the U.S.A. a Hershey Bar is a trade-marked form of sweetmeat; in U.S. army slang the term was applied to the gold narrow bar worn by troops on the left sleeve to indicate that they had done six months' overseas service.

Hertha. See NERTHUS.

Hesperia (hes pēr' i à) (Gr., western). Italy was so called by the Greeks, because it was to them the "Western Land"; and afterwards the Romans, for a similar reason, transferred the name to Spain.

Hesperides (hes per' i dēz). Three sisters who guarded the golden apples which Hera received as a marriage gift. They were assisted by the dragon Ladon. Hercules, as the last of his "twelve labours," slew the dragon and carried some of the apples to Eurystheus.

Many poets call the place where these golden apples grew the "garden of the Hesperides." Shakespeare (Love's Labour's Lost, iv, 3) speaks of "climbing trees in the Hesperides." (See Comus, lines 402-5.)

Show thee the tree, leafed with refined gold,
Whereon the fearful dragon held his seat.
That watched the garden called Hesperides.
ROBERT GREENE: Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (1589).

Hesperus (hes' per ūs). The evening star, because it sets in the west. See HESPERIA.

Ere twice in muck and occidental damp
Moist Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp.
All's Well that Ends Well, ii, 1.

The Wreck of the Hesperus, a ballad once learned by every child at school, written by H. W. Longfellow in 1842, and based upon an actual disaster at sea.

Hessian. A coarse, strong cloth made from jute or hemp originally made in Hesse in Germany. Hessian boots were first worn by troops in Germany and became fashionable in England in the 19th century.

Hetman. A general or commander-in-chief. (Ger. hauptmann, chief man.) The chief of the Cossacks of the Don used to be so called. He was elected by the people, and the mode of choice was thus: The voters threw their fur caps at the candidate they voted for, and he who had the largest number of caps at his feet was the successful candidate. The last elected Hetman was Count Platoff (1812-14).

Hexameron (hek zām' er ōn). Six days taken as one continuous period; especially the six days of the Creation.

Hexameter (hek zām' e tēr). The metre in which the Greek and Latin epics were written, and which has been imitated in English in such poems as Longfellow's Evangeline, Clough's Bohrie, Kingsley's Andromeda (probably the best), etc.

The line consists, says Professor Saintsbury (Manual of English Prosody, iv, 1):—of six feet, dactyls or spondees at choice for the first four, but normally always a dactyl in the fifth and always a spondee in the sixth—the latter foot being by special licence sometimes allowed in the fifth also (in which case the line is called spondaic), but never a dactyl in the sixth. To this metre, and to the attempts to imitate it in English, the term should be strictly confined, and never applied to the Alexandrine or iambic trimeter.

Verse consisting of alternate hexameters and pentameters (q.v.) is known as elegiac (q.v.). Coleridge illustrates this in his:—
In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column;
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

The Authorized Version of the Bible furnishes a number of examples of "accidental" hexameter lines; the following are well known:—

How art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer son of the Morning.

Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?

God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of the trumpet.

Hiawatha. The Iroquois name of a hero of miraculous birth who came (under a variety of names) among the North American Indian tribes to bring peace and goodwill to man. In Longfellow's poem (1855) he is an Ojibway, son of Mudjekeewis (the west wind) and Wenonah. He represents the progress of civilization among the American Indians. He married Minnehaha "Laughing Water." When the white man landed and taught the Indians the faith of Jesus, Hiawatha exhorted them to receive the words of wisdom, to reverence the missionaries who had come so far to see them.

Hibernia (hī bēr' ni a). The Latin name for Ireland, and hence still used in poetry. It is a variant of the old Celtic Erin.

Hic Jacets. Tombstones, so called from the first two words of their Latin inscriptions: "Here lies . . ."

By the cold Hic Jacets of the dead.

TENNYSON: Idylls of the King (Vivien).

Hickathrift, Tom (hik' a thrift). A hero of nursery rhyme, fabled to have been a poor labourer in the time of the Conquest, of such enormous strength that, armed with an axletree and cartwheel only, he killed a giant who dwelt in a marsh at Tilney, Norfolk. He was knighted and made governor of Thanet.

Hickory. Hickory cloth. Cloth dyed with hickory juice.

Fumbling in the breast pocket of his hickory shirt
Bret Harte, 1891.

Hickory Mormons. Mormons who are only half-hearted adherents to the religion.

Old Hickory. General Andrew Jackson (1767-1845), President of the United States, 1829-37. He was first called "Tough," from his great powers of endurance, then "Tough as hickory," and lastly, "Old Hickory."

Hicksites. A sect of Quakers in the U.S.A. who seceded from the main body under the leadership of Elias Hicks in 1827.

Hidalgo (hi dāl' gō). The title in Spain of the lower nobility. The word is from Lat. filius de aliquo, son of someone, or, as we should say, the son of a "somebody." In Portuguese it is Fidalgo.

Hide of Land. The term applied in Anglo-Saxon times to a portion of land that was sufficient to support a family; usually from 60 to 100 acres, but no fixed number. A hide of good arable land was smaller than a hide of inferior quality.

Hieroglyphs (hī ēr ō glifs). The name applied to the picture characters which the Egyptians used in writing. The Egyptians called them, "words of the gods," and coming to us through the Greek, hierō means sacred, glyph, what is carved. For many years these inscribed symbols of beasts and birds, men and women, were undecipherable, but in 1822 a French archæologist, J. F. Champollion, pieced together an alphabet from the three-language inscription on the Rosetta Stone (q.v.) and from those small beginnings the decipherment of hieroglyphic inscriptions has enabled scholars to elucidate the whole history of Egyptian civilization.

Higgledy-piggledy. In great confusion; at sixes and sevens; perhaps with reference to a higgler or pedlar whose stores are all huddled together. Higgledy would then mean after the fashion of a higgler's basket, piggledy is a ricochet word suggested by this.

High. High-ball, the American term for a drink of whiskey diluted with water, soda-water or ginger ale and served in a tall glass with ice.

Highbinders. Gangsters in New York City in the first decade of the 19th century.

High-brow. A self-consciously cultured person; especially one who, in his own estimation at least, is intellectually superior. The terms low-brow and middle-brow have developed from this.

High Church. See CHURCH.

High days. Festivals. On high days and holidays. Here "high" means grand or great.

High falutin. Oratorical bombast, affected pomposity, tall talk. The word is perhaps a variant of high-flown.

High hand. With a high hand. Arrogantly. To carry things with a high hand in French would be: Faire une chose haut la main.

High Heels and Low Heels. The names of two factions in Swift's tale of Lilliput (Gulliver's Travels), satirizing the High and Low Church parties.

High Mass. See MASS.

High places. In the Authorized Version of the Scriptures this is a literal translation of the Hebrew bamah, but actually the word was applied to a tribal or village place of worship because such were usually on hilltops or rises in the ground. Such sites usually had a stèle, the seat of the local god, and a wooden pole, itself an object of worship and often translated in the Old Testament as a "grove." This worship of a local or tribal Baal was a relic of the ancient Canaanitish religion and was long anterior to the cult of Jahwe. It was denounced fiercely by the prophet Hosea as idolatry. Hezekiah removed the high places (2 Kings xviii, 4), so did Asa (2 Chron. xiv 3), Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xvii, 6), Josiah, and others. Cp. HILLS.

High seas. All the sea which is not the property of a particular country. The sea up to three miles out from the coast belongs to the country, and is called "territorial waters." High seas, like high-ways, means for public use. In both cases the word high means "chief," "principal." (Lat. altum, "the main sea"; altus, "high.")

High tea. A meal served about the usual teatime which includes besides tea, fish, cold meats, pastry, etc. It is common in Scotland and the North of England, and generally in agricultural communities.

A well understood "high tea" should have cold roast beef at the top of the table, a cold Yorkshire pie at the bottom, a mighty ham in the middle. The side dishes will comprise soured mackerel, pickled salmon (in due season), sausages and potatoes, etc., etc. Rivers of tea, coffee, and ale, with dry and buttered toast, sally-lunns, scones, muffins and crumpets, jams and marmalade.—Daily Telegraph, May 9th, 1893.

High words. Angry words.

Highgate. A North London suburb, so called from a gate set up there about 400 years ago to receive tolls for the bishop of London, when the old miry road from Gray's Inn Lane to Barnet was turned through the bishop's park. The village being perched on a hill explains the first part of the name.

Sworn at Highgate. A custom anciently prevailed at the public-houses in Highgate to administer a ludicrous oath to all travellers who stopped there. The party was sworn on a pair of horns fastened to a stick—

(1) Never to kiss the maid when he can kiss the mistress.

(2) Never to eat brown bread when he can get white.

(3) Never to drink small beer when he can get strong—unless he prefers it.

Highlands. That part of Scotland lying north of the line approximately Dumbarton to Stonehaven. Stirling is known as "the gateway to the Highlands"; in the wars between Scotland and England, possession of this strong point carried immense advantage.

Highland bail. Fists and cuffs; to escape the constable by knocking him down with the aid of a companion.

Highland Mary. The most shadowy of Robert Burns's sweethearts, but the one to whom he addressed some of his finest poetry, including "My Highland Lassie, O," "Highland Mary" ("Ye banks and braes and streams around the castle o' Montgomerie"), "Thou Ling'ring Star," and—perhaps—"Will ye go to the Indies, my Mary?"

She is said to have been a daughter of Archibald Campbell, a Clyde sailor, and to have died young about 1784 or 1786.

Highness. A title of honour (used with a possessive pronoun) given to royalties and a few others of exalted rank. In England the title Royal Highness was formerly given to the Sovereign, his consort, his sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, paternal uncles and aunts, grandsons and granddaughters being the children of sons, and great-grandchildren being the children of an eldest son of any Prince of Wales; but by the proclamation of June 17th, 1917 (when the style, the House of Windsor, was adopted), the title Royal Highness was confined in future to children of the Sovereign and to grandchildren in the male line.

James I was the first King of England to be styled "Your Royal Highness"; Oliver Cromwell and his wife were both called "Your Highness."

Serene Highness was a title of many of the members of the former German Imperial, Royal, and Ducal Houses.

Hijacker (hī' jāk ér). In American slang a bandit who preys on such criminals as bootleggers by robbing them of their ill-gotten booty; a parasite on rogues.

Hike. To hike is an old English dialect word meaning to walk a long distance; it is now used in the sense of going on a cross-country tramp organized by a club or undertaken by a smaller party of two or three.

To hitch-hike is to travel from one place to another by getting lifts from cars and lorries.

Hilary Term (hil' à ri), in the Law Courts, begins on the day after Plough Monday (q.v.) and ends the Wednesday before Easter. It is so called in honour of St. Hilary, whose day is January 13th.

Hildebrand (hil' de bränd). The Nestor of German romance. His story is told in the Hildebrandslied, an Old High German poem, and he also appears in the Nibelungenlied, Die rich von Bern, etc. Like Maugis among the heroes of Charlemagne, he was a magician as well as champion.

The name is, however, more commonly associated with the great pope St. Gregory VII (c. 1020-85) who was elected to the papal chair in 1073. He curbed the temporal power and reformed the Church from top to bottom, enforced celibacy among the clergy, put down simony, and promoted piety. His uncompromising forcefulness made him many enemies and gained him few friends. He was canonized in 1728, his feast day being May 25th.

Hildesheim (hil' des him). Legend relates that a monk of Hildesheim, an old city of Hanover, doubting how with God a thousand years could be as one day, listened to the singing of a bird in a wood, as he thought for three minutes, but found the time had been three hundred years. Longfellow introduced this tale in his Golden Legend, calling the monk Felix.

Hill. Hill-billy, an American phrase descriptive of a countryman from the hilly or mountainous districts. The hill-billy is a distinctive type, whose music and literature are being increasingly studied.

Hill folk. So Scott calls the Cameronian Scottish Covenanters, who met clandestinely among the hills. Sometimes the Covenanters generally are so called.

A class of beings in Scandinavian tradition between the elves and the human race were known as "hill folk" or "hill people." They were supposed to dwell in caves and small hills, and to be bent on receiving the benefits of man's redemption.

Hills. Prayers were offered on the tops of high hills, and temples built on "high places," from the notion that the gods could better hear prayers on such places, as they were nearer heaven. It will be remembered that Balak (Num. xxiii, xxiv) took Balaam to the top of Peor and other high places when Balaam wished to consult God. We often read of "idols on every high hill" (Ezek. vi, 13). Cp. HIGH PLACES.

Old as the hills. Very old indeed.

Hinc illæ lachrymæ (hink il ē lāk' ri mē) (Lat., "hence those tears." Terence, Andria, I, i, 99). This was the real offence; this was the true secret of the annoyance; the real source of the vexation.

Lady Loadstone: He keeps off all her suitors, keeps the portion.

Still in his hands; and will not part withal, On any terms.

Palate: Hinc illæ lachrymæ.

Thence flows the cause of the main grievance.

BEN JONSON: Magnetic Lady, i, 1.

Hind. Emblematic of St. Giles, because "a heaven-directed hind went daily to give him milk in the desert, near the mouth of the Rhone." Cp. HART.

The hind of Sertorius. Sertorius was invited by the Lusitanians to defend them against the Romans. He had a tame white hind, which he taught to follow him, and from which he pretended to receive the instructions of Diana. By this artifice, says Plutarch, he imposed on the superstition of the people.

The milk-white hind, in Dryden's Hind and the Panther, means the Roman Catholic Church, milk-white because "infallible." The panther, full of the spots of error, is the Church of England.

Without unspotted, innocent within,
She feared no danger, for she knew no sin.

Part i, 3, 4.

Hindustan (hin doo stan'). India; properly, the country watered by the river Indus, i.e. the country known by the ancients as "India." From Pers. hindu, water, stan, district or region. The suffix is common in the East, as Afghanistan, Baluchistan, Gulistan (the district of roses), Kafiristan (the country of the unbelievers), etc. See INDIA.

Hindustan Regiment. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Hinny. See MULE.

Hip. To have one on the hip. To have the mastery over him in a struggle.

"Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip" (Merchant of Venice); and again, "I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip" (Othello). The term is derived from a throw in wrestling.

In fine he doth apply one special drift,

Which was to get the pagan on the hip,

And having caught him right, he doth him lift

By nimble sleight, and in such wise doth trip,

That down he threw him.

SIR J. HARRINGTON: Orlando Furioso, XLVI, cxvii, 4.

To smite hip and thigh. To slay with great carnage. A Biblical phrase.

And he smote them hip and thigh with great slaughter.—Judges xv, 8.

Hipped. Melancholy, low-spirited, suffering from a "fit of the blues." The hip was formerly a common expression for morbid depression (now superseded by the pip); it is an abbreviation of hypochondria.

Hip! Hip! Hurrah! The old fanciful explanation of the origin of this cry is that hip is a notarikon (q.v.), composed of the initials Hierosolyma est Perdita, and that when the German knights headed a Jew-hunt in the Middle Ages, they ran shouting "Hip! Hip!" as much as to say "Jerusalem is destroyed."

Hurrah (q.v.) was derived from Slavonic hu-raj (to Paradise), so that Hip! hip! hurrah! would mean "Jerusalem is lost to the infidel, and we are on the road to Paradise." These etymons may be taken for what they are worth! The older English form of this cry was Huzza!

Hipper-switches. A dialect name for coarse willow withes. A hipper is a coarse osier used in basket-making, and an osier field is a hipperholm. A suburb of Halifax, Yorks, is called Hipperholme-with-Brighouse.

Hippo (hip' ō). Bishop of Hippo. A title by which St. Augustine (354-430) is sometimes designated. Hippo was a town in Numidia, N. Africa, near the modern Bona. It was destroyed by the Vandals in 430.

Hippocampus (hip' ō kām' pūs) (Gr. hippos, horse; kampos, sea monster). A seahorse, having the head and forequarters resembling those of a horse, with the tail and hindquarters of a fish or dolphin. It was the steed of Neptune (q.v.).

Hippocras (hip' ō krās). A cordial of the late Middle Ages and down to Stuart times made of Lisbon and Canary wines, bruised spices, and sugar; so called from being passed through Hippocrates' sleeve (q.v.).

When these [i.e. other wines] have had their course which nature yeeldeth, sundrie sorts of artificiall stuffe as ypocras and wormewood wine, must in like maner succeed in their turnes.—Harrison's Description of England, II, vi (1577).

Hippocrates (hip ok' rā tēz). A Greek physician who lived from c. 460-377 B.C., and is commonly called the Father of Medicine. He was member of the famous family of priest-physicians, the Asclepiadae, and was an acute and indefatigable observer, practising as both physician and surgeon. More than seventy of his essays are extant. In the Middle Ages he was called "Ypocras" or "Hippocras." Thus:

Well knew he the old Esculapius,
And Deiscordes, and eek Rufus,
Old Ypocras, Haly, and Galien.

CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales (Prologue, 431).

Hippocratean School. The "Dogmatic" school of medicine, founded by Hippocrates. See EMPIRICS.

Hippocrates' sleeve. A woollen bag of a square piece of flannel, having the opposite corners joined, so as to make it triangular. Used by chemists for straining syrups, decoctions, etc., and anciently by vintners, whence the name of Hippocras (q.v.).

Hippocratic oath. A code of ethics governing the profession and sworn to by physicians upon taking a doctor's degree. The oath relates particularly to the inviolability of secrecy concerning any communication made by a patient in the course of consultation, and enjoins the absolute integrity essential in dealing with problems arising from a patient's confession or revelation.

Hippocrène (hip' ō krēn) (Gr. hippos, horse; krēnē, fountain). The fountain of the Muses on Mount Helicon, produced by a stroke of the hoof of Pegasus; hence poetic inspiration.

O for a beaker full of the warm South.

Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrène,

With beaded bubbles winking at the brim

And purple-stained mouth;

That I might drink, and leave the world unseen.

KEATS: Ode to a Nightingale.

Hippodamia. See BRISEIS.

Hippogriff (hip' ō grif) (Gr. hippos, a horse; gryphos, a griffin). The winged horse, whose father was a griffin and mother a filly. A symbol of love (Ariosto: Orlando Furioso, iv, 18, 19).

So saying, he caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogriff, bore through the air sublime,
Over the wilderness and o'er the plain.

MILTON: Paradise Regained, iv, 541-3.

Hippolyta (hip ol' i tā). Queen of the Amazons, and daughter of Mars. Shakespeare has introduced the character in his A Midsummer Night's Dream, where he betroths her to Theseus, Duke of Athens. In classic fable it is her sister Antiope who married Theseus, although some writers justify Shakespeare's account. Hippolyta was famous for a girdle given her by her father, and it was one of the twelve labours of Hercules to possess himself of this prize.

Hippolytus (hip ol' i tūs). Son of Theseus, King of Athens. He was dragged to death by wild horses, and restored to life by Esculapius.

Hippomenes (hip om' en ēz). The name given in Æolian legend to the Greek prince who ran a race with Atalanta (q.v.) for her hand in marriage. He had three golden apples, which he dropped one by one, and which the lady stopped to pick up. By this delay she lost the race.

Hiram Abif (hī rām ā bif') is a central figure in the legend and ritual of Freemasonry. Under the name of Hiram he appears in II Chron. ii and iii, as the craftsman builder of Solomon's Temple; he must not be confused with Hiram King of Tyre, who supplied much of the material.

Hiren. A strumpet. She was a character in Greene's lost play (about 1594), The Turkish Mahomet and Hyren the Fair Greek, and is frequently referred to by Elizabethan dramatists. See 2 Henry IV, ii, 4, Dekker's Satiromastix IV, iii, Massinger's Old Law, IV, i, Chapman's Eastward Hoe, II, i, etc. The name is a corruption of the Greek "Irene."

Hiroshima (hī rō shē' mā), a Japanese army base and a city of 343,000 inhabitants, was the target of the first atomic bomb to be dropped in warfare, August 6th, 1945. The flash of the explosion was seen 170 miles away, and a column of black smoke rose over the city to a height of 40,000 feet. The entire business section of Hiroshima disappeared, 60,000 persons were killed, 100,000 injured, and twice that number made homeless.

Hispania (his pān' yā). Spain. So called from the Phœnician word Sapan, or Span, the skin of the marten (or perhaps rabbit), which was procured from Spain in great quantities.

Hispaniola (his pān yō' lā), the old name for the island of Haiti. When Columbus discovered the island on his first voyage, 1492, he named it Española, or Little Spain, which in the maps was Latinized as above. It was not until 1844, when the island was divided politically into Haiti and the Dominican Republic, that the old name completely disappeared.

History. The Father of History. Herodotus, the Greek historian (5th cent. B.C.). So called by Cicero.

The Father of Ecclesiastical History. Eusebius of Cæsarea (about 264-340).

Father of French History. André Duchesne (1584-1640).

Father of Historic Painting. Polygnotus of Thaos (fl. 463-435. B.C.)

Happy is the nation that has no history. See HAPPY.

Histrionic, pertaining to the drama or to theatrical matters, is from the Lat. histrion, a stage-player. History is quite another word, being the Greek historia, histor, a judge, allied to histamai, to know.

Hit. A great hit. A piece of good luck. From the game hit and miss, or the game of back-gammon, where "two hits equal a gammon."

Hitting on all six. Doing well, giving a fine performance. The phrase comes from motoring, where an engine which is running well is described as having the pistons in all six cylinders hitting perfectly.

To hit it off. To describe a thing tersely and epigrammatically; to make a sketch truthfully and quickly.

To hit it off together. To agree together, or suit each other.

To hit the nail on the head. See HEAD.

To make a hit. To meet with great approval; to succeed unexpectedly in an adventure or speculation.

Hitch. Hitch your wagon to a star. Aim high; don't be content with low aspirations. The phrase is from Emerson's essay Civilization. Young expressed much the same idea in his Night Thoughts (viii):—

Too low they build who build beneath the stars.

There is some hitch. Some impediment. A horse is said to have a hitch in his gait when he is lame.

To hitch. To get on smoothly; to fit in consistently; also, to harness: as, "You and I hitch on well together"; "These two accounts do not hitch in with each other."

To hitch-hike. See HIKE.

Hitlerism, a generic term for the whole doctrine and practice of Fascism, exemplified in the regime of Adolf Hitler (1889-1945).

Hittites built up one of the ancient civilizations of the world. Little is known of their origin; they first appear in eastern Asia Minor where their superior knowledge of implements and weapons of the early copper-age culture enabled them to master all their foes. They also bred and harnessed the horse—one of the earliest people to do so. The Hittites were well established by the 3rd millennium B.C.; they overturned the first dynasty of Babylon in 1925 B.C. and in one form or another flourished until about 700 B.C. when Carchemish, their main city fell to the Assyrians.

Hoarstone. A stone marking out the boundary of an estate, properly an old, grey, lichen-covered stone. They are also called "Hourstones" and (in Scotland) "Hare Stanes," and have been erroneously taken for Druidical remains.

Hob and nob. See HOB-NOB.

Hobbema (hob'e mā). Meindert Hobbema (1638-1709) was a Dutch landscape painter.

The English Hobbema. John Crome (1768-1821), "Old Crome," of Norwich, whose last words were, "O Hobbema, Hobbema, how I do love thee!"

The Scottish Hobbema. Patrick Nasmyth (born at Edinburgh, 1787, died 1831), the landscape painter, was so called.

Hobbinol (hob'i nol). The shepherd in Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar who sings in praise of Eliza, queen of shepherds (Queen Elizabeth). He typifies Spenser's friend and correspondent Gabriel Harvey (c. 1545-1630), the poet and writer.

Hobbiism. The principles of Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), author of Leviathan (1651). He taught that religion is a mere engine of state, and that man acts wholly on a consideration of self; even his benevolent acts spring from the pleasure he experiences in doing acts of kindness.

Hobbledehoy. A raw, awkward young fellow, neither man nor boy. The word is generally taken as being connected with hobble, in reference to an awkward, clumsy gait; but this is hardly borne out by the early forms of the word, which include such spellings as hobbard de hoy, habber de hoy, hobet a hoy, etc. The first syllable is probably hob, a clown, as seen in Hobbidance, Hobbinol, etc., and is connected with Robert or Robin, as in Robin Goodfellow. There is very little etymological support for the theory that would connect the word with hobby hawk.

The first seven yeeres bring up as a childe,

The next to learning, for waxing too wide.

The next keepe under sir hobbard de hoy,

The next a man, no longer a boy.

TUSSEY: Hundred Good Points (1573).

Hobblers or Hovellers. An old name for long-shoremen—especially on the Kentish coast—who acted as pilots although they were not licensed, and got their living by rendering casual assistance to vessels in distress, plundering wrecks, warning smugglers, etc.

The word was also applied to seafaring men whose duties were to reconnoitre, carry intelligence, harass stragglers, act as spies, intercept convoys, pursue fugitives, etc.

Hobblers were another description of cavalry more lightly armed, and taken from the class of men rated at 15 pounds and upwards.—LINGARD: History of England, vol. iv, ch. ii.

Hobble Skirts. This women's fashion of skirts so tight round the ankles that the wearer was impeded in walking—much as a horse is hobbled—was at its height in 1912 and was gone by 1914.

Hobby. A favourite pursuit; a personal pastime that interests or amuses one.

There are two words hobby, and they are apt to be confused. The earlier, meaning a medium-sized horse, is the M.E. hobyn (cp. Dobbin as a name for a horse), the later, a small species of falcon, is the O.F. hobé or hobet, from Lat. hobetus, a falcon. It is from the first that our "hobby," a pursuit, comes. It is through hobby-horse, a light frame of wickerwork, appropriately draped, in which someone performed ridiculous gambols in the old morris dances, and later applied to a child's plaything consisting of a stick across which he straddled, with a horse's head on one end.

To ride a hobby-horse was to play an infantile game of which one soon tired; and now implies to dwell to excess on a pet theory; the transition is shown in a sentence in one of Wesley's sermons (No. lxxxiii):—

Every one has (to use the cant term of the day) his hobby-horse!

Hobgoblin (hob gob' lin). An impish, ugly, and mischievous sprite, particularly Puck or Robin Goodfellow (q.v.). The word is a variant of Rob-Goblin—i.e. the goblin Robin, just as Hodge is the nickname of Roger.

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck.
A Midsummer Night's Dream, II, 1.

Hob-nob. A corruption of hab nab, meaning "have or not have," hence hit or miss, at random; and, secondarily, give or take, whence also an open defiance.

The citizens in their rage shot habbe or nabbe [hit or miss] at random.—HOLINSHED: History of Ireland.

He writes of the weather hab nab and as the toy takes him, chequers the year with foul and fair.—Quick Astrologer (1673).

He is a devil in private brawls . . . hob nob is his word, give 't or take 't.—Twelfth Night, III, 4.

Not of Jack Straw, with his rebellious crew,
That set king, realm and laws at hab or nab [defiance].
SIR J. HARRINGTON: Epigram, iv

To hobnob or hob and nob together. To be on intimate terms of good-fellowship, hold close and friendly conversation with, etc.; especially to drink together as cronies—probably with the meaning of "give and take."

"Have another glass!" "With you Hob and nob," returned the sergeant. "The top of mine to the foot of yours—the foot of yours to the top of mine—Ring once, ring twice—the best tune on the Musical Glasses! Your health."—DICKENS: Great Expectations, ch. v.

Hobo (hō' bō). Late-19th-century American for a tramp, vagrant.

Hobson's Choice. This or none. Thomas Hobson (c. 1544-1631) was a carrier and innkeeper at Cambridge who erected the handsome conduit there, and settled "seven lays" of pasture ground towards its maintenance. "He kept a stable of forty good mounts, always ready and fit for travelling; but when a man came for a horse he was led into the stable, where there was great choice, but he obliged him to take the horse which stood nearest to the stable door; so that every customer was alike well served, according to his chance, and every horse ridden with the same justice." (Spectator, No. 509.)

Milton wrote two epitaphs upon this eccentric character.

Hob's Pound. Difficulties, great embarrassment. To be in Hob's pound is to be in the pound of a hob or hobber—i.e. a fool or ne'er-do-well—paying for one's folly.

Hock. German white wine, so called from Hockheim, on the River Main. It used to be called hockamore.

Restored the fainting high and mighty
With brandy, wine, and aqua-vitæ;
And made 'em stoutly overcome
With Bacrack, Hockamore, and Mum.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, iii, 297.

The earlier English name was Rhenish.

There are several colloquial uses of this word hock. In American slang to hock is to pawn and a hock-shop a pawnbroker's.

Hock cart. The last cartload of harvest; probably connected with hockey.

The harvest swans and wenchens bound,
For joy, to see the hock cart crowned.

HERRICK: Hesperides, p. 114

Hockey cake. The cake given out to the harvesters when the hock cart (q.v.) reached home. Hockey is the old name in the eastern counties for the harvest-home feast.

Hock-day or Hock Tuesday. The second Tuesday after Easter Day, long held as a festival in England; it was the time for paying church dues, and landlords received an annual tribute called Hock-money, for allowing their tenants and serfs to commemorate it. Its origin is unknown; but the old idea that it commemorates the massacre of the Danes in 1002 does not seem to be tenable, as this took place in November.

Hoke Monday was for the men and Hock Tuesday for the women. On both days the men and women alternately, with great merriment, obstructed the public road with ropes, and pulled passengers to them, from whom they exacted money to be laid out in pious uses.—BRAND: Antiquities, vol. i, p. 187.

Hockey. A game of Indian origin in which each player has a hooked stick with which to strike the ball. Hockey is simply the diminutive of hook.

Hockley-i'-the-Hole. Public gardens near Clerkenwell Green, famous in Restoration times for bear- and bull-baiting, dog- and cock-fights, etc., and for its butchers. Pope called Colley Cibber—

This mess, tossed up of Hockley-hole and White's;
Where dukes and butchers join to wreathe my crown,
At once the bear and fiddle of the town.

Dunciad, I, 222.

Hocus Pocus (hō' kūs pō' kūs). The words formerly uttered by conjurers when performing a trick; hence the trick or deception itself, also the juggler himself.

The phrase dates from the early 17th century, and is the opening of a ridiculous string of mock Latin used by some well-known performer (Hocus pocus, toutus talontus, vade celerita jubes), the first two words of which may have been intended as a parody of Hoc est corpus, the words of consecration in the Mass, while the whole was reeled off merely to occupy the attention of the audience.

Our word hoax is probably a contraction of hocus pocus, which also supplies the verb to hocus, to cheat, bamboozle, tamper with.

Hodge. A familiar and slightly contemptuous name for a farm labourer or peasant; an abbreviated form of Roger, as Hob is of Robert or Robin.

Hodge-podge. A medley, a mixed dish of "bits and pieces all cooked together." The word is a corruption of hotch-pot (q.v.).

Hodmandod. See DODMAN.

Hoe-cake (U.S.A.). Flat cake originally baked on a hoe held over a coal fire.

Hog. Properly a male swine, castrated, and—as it is raised solely for slaughter—killed young. The origin of the word is not certain, but it may originally have referred to age more than to any specific animal. Thus, boars of the second year, sheep between the time of their being weaned and shorn, colts, and bullocks a year old, were all called hogs or hoggets, which name was specially applied to a sheep after its first shearing. A boar three years old is a "hog-steer."

In slang use a hog is a gluttonous, greedy, or unmannered person; motorists who, caring nothing for the rights or convenience of other travellers, drive in a selfish and reckless manner wanting the whole road to themselves are called road-hogs.

Hog in armour. A person of awkward manners dressed so fine that he cannot move easily; perhaps a corruption of "Hodge in armour." See HODGE.

Hog-shearing. Much ado about nothing. "It's great cry and little wool, as the Devil said when he sheared his hogs." See CRY.

To go the whole hog. To do the thing completely and thoroughly, without compromise or reservation; to go the whole way. William Cowper says (Hypocrisy Detected, 1779) that the Moslem divines sought to ascertain which part of the hog was forbidden as food by the Prophet. Unable to come to a decision, each thought excepted the portion of the meat he most preferred, and as the tastes of the worthy imams differed:

The conscience freed from every clog,
Mohammedans eat up the hog.

A more probable origin of the phrase is that a hog was old slang for a shilling—to go the whole hog was to spend the whole shilling at one go, to spare nothing.

Formerly, any small silver coin, a shilling or sixpence, or (in the U.S.A.) a ten-cent piece, was contemptuously styled a hog.

In U.S.A. the phrase came into popularity during Andrew Jackson's campaign for the Presidency, in 1828. Hence the expression whole-hogger, one who will see the thing through to the bitter end, and "damn the consequences." At the time of Joseph Chamberlain's agitation on behalf of Protection (1903, et seq.) those who advocated a complete tariff of protective duties regardless of possible reciprocity were called the whole-hoggers.

As independent as a hog on ice. Supremely confident, cocky, self-assured. A phrase common in the U.S.A. Its origin is unknown, though it may be Scottish, having some connexion with the hog used in curling. The phrase is discussed amusingly and in detail by Charles Earle Funk in his book A Hog on Ice.

To drive one's hogs to market. To snore very loudly.

To hear as a hog in harvest. In at one ear and out at the other; hear without paying attention. Giles Firmin says, "If you call hogs out of the harvest stubble, they will just lift up their heads to listen, and fall to their shack again." (Real Christian, 1670.)

You have brought your hogs to a fine market. You have made a pretty kettle of fish; said in derision when one's projects turn out ill.

To hog it, in English colloquial usage means to live in a rough, uncouth fashion amid crude surroundings; in American to hog it is to act selfishly and greedily, to grasp everything for oneself.

Hog and hominy (U.S.A.). Pork and maize, considered inferior food.

Hog-wallows. American prairie which has become a series of mounds and depressions through the alternate action of rain and drought.

Hogen Mogen (hō' gen mō' gen). Holland or the Netherlands; so called from Hooge en Mogende (high and mighty), the Dutch style of addressing the States-General.

But I have sent him for a token

To your low country Hogen-Mogen.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, 1, 1440.

Hogmanay (hog mā nā'). The name given in Scotland to the last day of the year, also to an entertainment or present given on that day. It is from the French, and probably represents the O.Fr. aiguillanneuf, which has been (somewhat doubtfully) explained as standing for au guy l'an neuf, "(good luck) to the mistletoe of the new year."

It is still the custom in parts of Scotland for persons to go from door to door on New Year's Eve asking in rude rhymes for cakes or money; and in Galloway the chief features are "taking the cream off the water," wonderful luck being attached to a draught thereof; and "the first foot" (q.v.) or giving something to drink to the first person who enters the house.

Hogni. See HAGEN.

Hogshead. A large cask containing approximately 52½ gallons; also, the measure of this, apart from the cask. The word dates from the 14th century and is composed of hog and head, and not of ox and hide, or of any of the other fancy etymologies that have been proposed. The reason for the name is obscure; but cp. the name of a Low German measure for beer, bullenkop, bull's head.

Hogs-Norton. A village in Oxfordshire, now called Hook Norton. I think you were born at Hogs-Norton. A reproof to an ill-mannered person. The place has been made famous over the radio by the English comedian Gillie Potter who described in erudite fashion a long series of unlikely events taking place in this village.

I think thou wast born at Hogs-Norton where piggis play upon the organs.—HOWELL: English Proverbs (1660).

Hoi Polloi (hoi pol' oi) (Gr., the many). The masses of the people, the majority.

If by the people you understand the multitude, the hoi polloi, 'tis no matter what they think; they are sometimes in the right, sometimes in the wrong; their judgment is a mere lottery.—DRYDEN: Essay on Dramatic Poesy (1668).

At the Universities the poll-men, i.e. those who take a degree without honours, are colloquially known as the hoi polloi.

Hoity-toity. A reduplicated word (like harum-scarum, mingle-mangle, hugger-mugger, etc.), probably formed from the obsolete verb hoit, to romp about noisily. It is used as an adjective, meaning "stuck up," haughty, or petulant; as a noun, meaning a good romp or frolic; and as an interjection expressing disapproval or contempt of one's airs, assumptions, etc.

"I do not speak on your account, Mrs. Honour" [said Mrs. Western's maid], "for you are a civilized young woman; and when you have seen a little more of the world, I should not be ashamed to walk with you in St. James Park." "Hoity toity!" cries Honour, "Madam is in her airs, I protest."—FIELDING: Tom Jones. Bk. vii, ch. viii.

See also the quotation from Selden given under CUSHION DANCE, where hoite-cum-foyte is used of rowdy behaviour.

Hokey-pokey (hō' ki pō' kī), the name given to cheap ice-cream as sold in the street. The name comes from hocus-pocus (q.v.) but the connexion is not obvious. Also a ludicrous dance popular during the 1940s in English dance-halls.

Hokum (hō' kum), an American colloquialism (also deriving from hocus-pocus) for any device employed to create a poignant effect or stimulate easy sentimentality.

Holborn. This London name, originally that of the northern portion of the Fleet stream, is not a corruption of Old Bourne, as Stow asserts, but of Holeburne, the burne or stream in the hole or hollow. It is spelt Holeburne in Domesday Book, i, 127a; and in documents connected with the nunnery of St. Mary, Clerkenwell (during the reign of Richard II).

To ride backwards up Holborn Hill. To go to be hanged. The way to Tyburn from Newgate was up Holborn Hill which led steeply from Farringdon Street to what is now Holborn Circus, and criminals used to sit or stand with their backs to the horse when drawn to the place of execution.

I shall live to see you ride up Holborn Hill.—CONGREVE: Love for Love.

The spanning of the valley by Holborn Viaduct (1867-69) did away with the old hill.

Hold. Hold hard! Stop; go easy; keep a firm hold, seat, or footing, as there is danger else of being overthrown. A caution given when a sudden change of vis inertiae is about to occur.

Hold off! Keep at a distance.

Hold the fort! Maintain your position at all costs. Immortalized as a phrase from its use by General Sherman, who signalled it to General Corse from the top of Kenesaw in 1864 during the American Civil War.

To cry hold. To give the order to stop; in the old tournaments, when the umpires wished to stop the contest they cried out "Hold!"

Lay on Macduff,
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"
Macbeth, v, 8.

To hold the candle to one, a candle to the devil. See CANDLE.

To hold forth. To speak in public; to harangue; to declaim. An author holds forth certain opinions or ideas in his book, i.e. exhibits them or holds them out to view. A speaker does the same in an oratorical display.

Hold your horses! Be patient, wait a moment; hold up for a while whatever you are doing.

To hold good. To be valid, or applicable. We say "such and such a proverb is very true, but it does not hold good in every case," i.e. it does not always apply.

To hold in. To restrain. The allusion is to horses reined up tightly.

To hold in esteem. To regard with esteem.

To hold on one's way. To proceed steadily; to go on without taking notice of interruptions or being delayed.

To hold one guilty. To adjudge or regard as guilty.

To hold one in hand or in play. To divert one's attention, or to amuse in order to get some advantage.

To hold one's own. To maintain one's own opinion, position, way, etc.

To hold one's tongue. To keep silence. In Coverdale's Bible (1535), where the Authorized Version has "But Jesus held his peace" (Matt. xxvi, 63) the reading is "Jesus helde his tongue."

To hold out. To endure, persist; not to succumb.

To hold over. To keep back, retain in reserve, defer.

To hold up. To stop, as a highwayman does, with the object of robbing. In this connexion the order, "Hold up your hands!" or "Hold 'em up!" means that the victim must hold them above his head to make sure that he is not reaching for a weapon.

To hold water. To bear close inspection; to endure a trial; generally used negatively, as "That statement of yours won't hold water," i.e. it will prove false as soon as it is examined. A vessel that will hold water is sound.

Holding the bag. In an awkward predicament, held responsible for faults committed by others.

Holdfast. A means by which something is clamped to another; a support.

Brag is a good dog, but Holdfast is a better. See BRAG.

Hole. A better 'ole. Any situation that is preferable to that occupied at present. The phrase dates from World War I when it originated from a drawing by the humorist Bruce Bairnsfather, depicting "Old Bill" taking cover in a wet and muddy shell-hole and rebutting the complaints of his companion with the remark "If you know a better 'ole, go to it."

Fox-hole. World War II. A phrase of U.S.A. origin for a small slit-trench to hold one man.

In a hole. In an awkward predicament; in a difficulty or a position from which it is not easy to extricate oneself.

It is a hole and corner business. There's something "fishy" about it—it is underhand, secret for a bad or shady purpose.

To make a hole in anything. To consume a considerable portion of it.

To pick holes in. To find fault with; properly, to cause some depreciation and then complain of it. The older phrase was to pick a hole in one's coat.

And shall such mob as thou, not worth a groat,
Dare pick a hole in such a great man's coat?

PETER PINDAR: Epistle to John Nichols.

Holger Danske (hol' ger dän' skè). The national hero of Denmark. See OGIER THE DANE.

Holiday. Give the boys a holiday. This custom of marking some specially noteworthy event is of great antiquity; it is said that Anaxagoras, on his death-bed, being asked what honour should be conferred upon him, replied, "Give the boys a holiday."

Holiday speeches. Fine or well-turned speeches or phrases; complimentary speeches. We have also "holiday manners," "holiday clothes," meaning the best we have.

With many holiday and lady terms
He questioned me.

1 Henry IV, i, 3.

Holidays of Obligation, days on which Catholics are bound to hear Mass and rest from servile works. They are: all Sundays, Christmas Day, the Circumcision (January 1st), the Epiphany (January 6th), Ascension Day (40th day after Easter Sunday), Corpus Christi (Thursday after Trinity Sunday), S.S. Peter and Paul (June 29th), the Assumption of the B.V.M. (August 15th), All Saints (November 1st), the Immaculate Conception (December 8th), St. Joseph (March 19th). The last two are not observed in England and Wales; Epiphany, Corpus Christi, St. Peter and Paul, and St. Joseph are not kept in the U.S.A.

Holland. The country gets its name from the well-wooded (holt, wood) land around Dordrecht, to which it was originally applied; the district in South Lincolnshire is called "Holland" from holl (adj.), lying in a hollow, i.e. low-lying land.

Holland, the cloth, is so called because it was originally manufactured in, and imported from, Holland; its full name was holland cloth. Hollands, or properly Hollands gin, is the Dut. Hollandsche geneveer.

Hollow. I beat him hollow. Completely, thoroughly. Hollow is, perhaps, here a corruption of wholly.

Holly. The custom of decking the interiors of churches and houses with holly at Christmastime is of great antiquity, and was probably employed by the early Christians at Rome in imitation of its use by the Romans in the great festival of the Saturnalia, which occurred at the same season of the year.

Hollyhock is the A.S. holihoc, the holy mallow, i.e. the marsh-mallow. It is a mistake to derive the second syllable from oak.

Holmes. See SHERLOCK HOLMES.

Holy. Holy Alliance. A league formed by Russia, Austria, and Prussia in 1815 to regulate the affairs of Europe after the fall of Napoleon "by the principles of Christian charity"—meaning that every endeavour would be made to stabilize the existing dynasties and to resist all change. It lasted until 1830, and was joined by all the European sovereigns except George III, the Sultan of Turkey and the Pope.

Holy Boys, The. The Royal Norfolk Regiment, the 9th Foot. The regimental badge is a figure of Britannia, and in the Peninsular War the Spaniards thought this was a representation of the Virgin Mary, hence the nickname. A detachment of the regiment buried Sir John Moore, at Corunna, in 1809, and in full dress all officers still wear a strip of mourning in his memory.

Holy City. That city which the religious consider most especially connected with their faith, thus:

Allahabad is the Holy City of the Moslems of India.
Benares of the Hindus.
Cuzco of the ancient Incas.
Fez of the Western Arabs.
Jerusalem of the Jews and Christians.
Kairwan, near Tunis contains the Okbar Mosque in which is the tomb of the prophet's barber.
Mecca and Medina as the places of the birth and burial of Mohammed.
Moscow and Kief of the Russians, the latter being the cradle of Christianity in Russia.

Holy Coat. See TRÈVES.

Holy Cross (or Holy Rood) Day. September 14th, the day of the Feast of the Exaltation of the Cross, called by the Anglo-Saxons "Rood-mass-day," commemorating the return of the true Cross to Jerusalem by the Emperor Heraclius in 627, after retaking it from the Persians who had carried it off thirteen years before.

It was on this day that the Jews in Rome used to be compelled to go to church, and listen to a sermon—a custom done away with about 1840 by Pope Gregory XVI. See Browning's Holy Cross Day (1855).

Holy Family. The infant Saviour and his attendants, as Joseph, Mary, Elizabeth, Anne the mother of Mary, and John the Baptist. All five figures are not always introduced in pictures of the "Holy Family."

Holy Ghost, The. The third Person of the Trinity, the Divine Spirit; represented in art as a dove.

The seven gifts of the Holy Ghost are: (1) counsel, (2) the fear of the Lord, (3) fortitude, (4) piety, (5) understanding, (6) wisdom, and (7) knowledge.

The Order of the Holy Ghost. A French order of knighthood (Ordre du Saint-Esprit), instituted by Henri III in 1578 to replace the Order of St. Michael. It was limited to 100 knights, and has not been revived since the revolution of 1830.

The Procession of the Holy Ghost. See FILOQUE.

Holy Isle. Lindisfarne, in the North Sea, about eight miles from Berwick-upon-Tweed. Chosen by St. Aidan in 635 as the head of this diocese, and (685-87) the see of St. Cuthbert, it is now in the diocese of Durham. The ruins of the old cathedral are still visible.

Ireland was called the Holy Island on account of its numerous saints.

Guernsey was so called in the 10th century in consequence of the great number of monks residing there.

Holy Land, The.

(1) Christians call Palestine the Holy Land, because it was the site of Christ's birth, ministry, and death.

(2) Mohammedans call Mecca the Holy Land, because Mohammed was born there.

(3) The Chinese Buddhists call India the Holy Land, because it was the native land of Sakya-muni, the Buddha (q.v.).

(4) The Greeks considered Elis as Holy Land, from the temple of Olympian Zeus and the sacred festival held there every four years.

Holy League, The. A combination formed by Pope Julius II in 1511 with Venice, Maximilian of Germany, Ferdinand III of Spain, and various Italian princes, to drive the French out of Italy.

Other leagues have been called by the same name, particularly that formed in the reign of Henri III of France (1576), under the auspices of Henri de Guise, "for the defence of the Holy Catholic Church against the encroachments of the reformers," i.e. for annihilating the Huguenots.

Holy Maid of Kent, The. Elizabeth Barton (c. 1506-34) who incited the Roman Catholics to resist the Reformation, and imagined that she acted under inspiration. Having announced the doom and speedy death of Henry VIII for his marriage with Anne Boleyn, she was hanged at Tyburn in 1534.

Holy Office, The. See INQUISITION.

Holy of Holies. The innermost apartment of the Jewish temple, in which the ark of the covenant was kept, and into which only the high priest was allowed to enter, and that but once a year on the Day of Atonement. Hence, a private apartment, a sanctum sanctorum (q.v.).

Holy Orders. See ORDERS.

Holy places. Places in which the chief events of our Saviour's life occurred, such as the sepulchre, Gethsemane, the supper-room, the Church of the Ascension, the tomb of the Virgin, and so on.

In 1852 . . . a dispute between Greek and Latin religions as to the custody of the holy places at Jerusalem, followed by the diplomatic rivalries of their respective patrons, Russia and France, produced a crisis.—MORLEY: Life of Gladstone, Bk. iv, ch. iii.

*Holy Roman Empire, The. The name given to the confederation of Central European States that subsisted, either in fact or in theory, from A.D. 800, when Charlemagne was crowned Emperor of the West, until 1806. It was first called "Holy" by Barbarossa, in allusion both to its reputed divine appointment, and to the inter-dependence of Empire and Church; it comprised the German-speaking peoples of Central Europe, and was ruled by an elected Emperor, who claimed to be the representative of the ancient Roman Emperors.

After the defeat of Austerlitz the Habsburg Emperor lost even the semblance of authority over the greater part of the Empire, and the constitution of this ancient estate ceased to exist even in name. At Napoleon's bidding Francis II published an Act (1806) declaring himself Emperor of Austria and abdicating from the throne of an outworn and dishonoured fiction—the Holy Roman Empire—which was justly stigmatized by a contemporary as being neither Holy, nor Roman, nor an Empire.

Holy Rood Day. See HOLY CROSS DAY.

Holy Thursday. An old name in England for Ascension Day (q.v.), i.e. the Thursday but one before Whitsun. By Roman Catholics and others Maundy Thursday (q.v.), i.e. the Thursday before Good Friday, is called "Holy Thursday." See also IN CÆNA DOMINI.

Holy Saturday. See HOLY WEEK.

Holy War. A war in which religious fanaticism plays, or purports to play, a considerable part. The Crusades, the Thirty Years War, the wars against the Albigenses, etc., were so called.

The Jehad or Holy War of the Moslems, is a call to the whole Islamic world to take arms against the Unbelievers.

John Bunyan's Holy War, published in 1682, tells the story of the assault of the armies of Satan against the citadel of Mansoul; despite many excellences it lacks the spontaneity and naivety of Pilgrim's Progress.

Holy Water. Water blessed by a priest or bishop for sacramental purposes. Its principal use is at the Asperges, or aspersing of the congregation before High Mass, but it is employed in nearly every blessing which the Church gives.

As the devil loves holy water. Not at all.

Holy water sprinkler. A military club of mediæval times, set with spikes. So called facetiously because it makes the blood to flow as water sprinkled by an aspergillum.

Holy Week. The last week in Lent. It begins on Palm Sunday; the fourth day is called "Spy Wednesday" (an allusion to Judas Iscariot's spying on Jesus preparatory to betraying him); the fifth is "Maundy Thursday" (q.v.); the sixth is "Good Friday"; and the last "Holy Saturday" or the "Great Sabbath."

Holy Week has been called Hebdomada Muta (Silent Week); Hebdomada Inofficiosa (Vacant Week); Hebdomada Penitentialis; Hebdomada Indulgentia; Hebdomada Luctuosa; Hebdomada Nigra; and Hebdomada Ultima.

Holy Writ. The Bible.

Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. Othello, iii, 3.

Homburg. A soft felt hat popularized by Edward VII. It was originally made in Homburg in Prussia where the King "took the waters."

Home. At home. At one's own house and prepared to receive visitors. An at home is a more or less informal reception for which arrangements have been made. To be at home to somebody is to be ready and willing to receive him; to be at home with a subject is to be familiar with it, quite conversant with it.

Home, sweet home. This popular English song first appeared in the opera Clari, the Maid of Milan (Covent Garden, 1823). The words were by John Howard Payne (an American), and the music by Sir Henry Bishop, who professed to have founded it on a Sicilian air.

Not at home. A familiar locution for "not prepared to receive visitors"—or the one who is applying for admission; it does not necessarily mean "away from home."

An old story, sometimes attributed to Swift, is that once when Scipio Nasica called on the poet Ennius, the servant said, "Ennius is not at home," but Nasica could see him plainly in the house. A few days later Ennius returned the visit, and Nasica called out, "Not at home." Ennius instantly recognized the voice, and remonstrated. "You are a nice fellow" (said Nasica); "why, I believed your slave, and you won't believe me."

One's long home. The grave.

Man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets.—Eccles. xii, 5.

To come home to one. To reach one's heart; to become thoroughly understood or realized.

I do now publish my Essays; which, of all my other works, have been most currant: For that, as it seems they come home, to Mens Business, and Bosomes.—BACON: Epistle Dedicatorie to the "Essays" (1625).

To come home to roost. Usually said of a lie, fault, hidden sin, etc., which eventually rebounds to the discomfiture of its originator.

To make oneself at home. To dispense with ceremony in another person's house, to act as though one were at home.

Who goes home? When the House of Commons breaks up at night the door-keeper asks this question of the members. In bygone days all members going in the direction of the Speaker's residence went in a body to see him safe home. The question is still asked, but is a mere relic of antiquity.

Home Rule, now a mere skeleton in the British political cupboard, was half a century ago a problem that called forth the fiercest passions. The Irish movement for constitutional self-government was to the forefront from 1870 until 1920. The Home Rulers formed a party in Parliament led by Isaac Butt (1813-79) and then by C. W. Parnell (1846-91). They were about 80 strong, kept themselves free from all political alliances or bonds and pursued a policy of obstruction. In 1885 W. E. Gladstone took up their cause, but his first Home Rule Bill (1886) was thrown out by the Commons; his second Bill (1893) was thrown out by the Lords and it was not until 1914 that a third Home Rule Bill was passed into law. The outbreak of World War I postponed the putting of the Act into operation; the Easter rising of 1916 and the growth of Sinn Féin made Home Rule, as such, a thing of the past, and Eire gained her independence by a new measure enacted by Parliament in 1920.

Homer (hō' mēr). The name given to the entirely unknown poet—or group of poets perhaps—to whom is assigned the authorship of the Iliad (q.v.) and the Odyssey (q.v.), the greatest monuments of ancient or modern epic poetry.

Some writers have considered Homer to have been a mythical figure, but modern scholarship tends to regard the epics as actually the work of a blind poet Homer who lived some time between 1200 and 850 B.C.

No doubt was ever entertained by the ancients respecting the personality of Homer. Pindar, Aristotle, Plato, and others, all assumed this fact; nor did they even doubt that the Iliad and Odyssey were the work of one mind.—R. W. BROWNE: Historical Classical Literature.

Homer's birthplace is unknown. The old rhyme, founded on an epigram preserved by Aulus Gellius, says:—

Seven cities warred for Homer being dead,
Who living had no roof to shroud his head.

HEYWOOD: Hierarchy of the Blessed Angels (1635). the "seven cities" being Smyrna, Rhodes, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, and Athens. See SCOT'S.

Among the many names and epithets that have been bestowed on him are Melesigenes the Man of Chios (see CHROS); the Blind Old Man; and Mæonides (q.v.). He is spoken of as Mæonius senex, and his poems as Mæonia charia or Mæonia carmina.

Milton has been called the English Homer, Ossian the Gaelic Homer, Plato the Homer of philosophers; Byron called Fielding the prose Homer of human nature; and Dryden (Essay on Dramatic Poesy) says:—

Shakespeare was the Homer, or father of our dramatic poets; Jonson was the Virgil, the pattern of elaborate writing; I admire him but I love Shakespeare.

The Casket Homer. An edition corrected by Aristotle, which Alexander the Great always carried about with him, and laid under his pillow at night with his sword. After the battle of Arbela, a golden casket richly studded with gems was found in the tent of Darius; and Alexander being asked to what purpose it should be assigned, replied, "There is but one thing in the world worthy of so costly a depository," saying which he placed therein his edition of Homer.

Homer a cure for the ague. See AGUE.

Homer sometimes nods. Even the best of us is liable to make mistakes. The line is from Horace's De Arte Poetica (359):—

Quandocumque bonus dormitat Homerus!

Verum operi longo fas est obrepere somnum.

(Sometimes good Homer himself even nods; but in so long a work it is allowable if there should be a drowsy interval or so.)

Homœopathy (hō mi op' à thī) (Gr. homoios pathos, like disease). The plan of curing a disease by minute doses of a medicine which would in healthy persons produce the disease. The theory was first formulated and practised by Samuel Hahnemann (1755-1843), a German physician.

Honey. An expression of endearment (with allusion to sweetness), formerly common, but now largely confined to the North of England.

Him thinketh verily that he may see
Noe's flood come waiving as the see
To drenchen Alisoun, his hony dere.

CHAUCER: Miller's Tale, 429.

Honeydew. A sweet substance found on the leaves of lime-trees and some other plants. Bees and ants are fond of it. It is probably the excretion of the aphids, and gets its popular name from its great sweetness coupled with its dew-like appearance.

Some framed faire lookes, glancing like evening lights,
Others sweet words, dropping like honny dew.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, II, v, 33.

Honeymoon. The first month after marriage, especially that part of it spent away from home. It appears to have been an ancient custom to drink a dilution of honey for thirty days after marriage—i.e. a moon's age, hence the name. Attila is said to have drunk so liberally of this potion that he died of suffocation in A.D. 453.

Honeysuckle. See MISNOMERS.

Hong Merchants. Those Chinese merchants who, under licence from the government of China, held the monopoly of trade with Europeans until 1842, when the restriction was abolished by the Treaty of Nanking. The Chinese applied the word hong to the foreign factories situated at Canton.

Honi soit qui mal y pense (on' ē swa kē māl ē pons). The motto of the Most Noble Order of the Garter (q.v.). The common rendering of the motto as "Evil be to him who evil thinks" has little meaning. A better rendering is, "Shame to him who thinks evil of it."

Honky-tonk (hong' ki tongk), an American slang term for a brothel, a disreputable nightclub or low roadhouse.

Honorificabilitudinitatibus (on ôr if i kâ 'bîl i tû' dîn i tât' i bûs). A made-up word on the Lat. honorificabilitudo, honourableness, which frequently occurs in Elizabethan plays as an instance of sesquipedalian pomposity.

Thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus.—SHAKESPEARE: Love's Labour's Lost, v, 1.

See LONG WORDS.

Honour. In feudal law, a superior seignior, on which other lordships or manors depended by the performance of customary services. At bridge, the honours are the five highest trump cards—ace, king, queen, knave, and ten.

An affair of honour. A dispute to be settled by a duel. Duels were generally provoked by offences against the arbitrary rules of etiquette, courtesy, or feeling, called the laws "of honour"; and, as these offences were not recognizable in the law courts, they were settled by private combat.

Crushed by his honours. The allusion is to the legend of the Roman damsel, Tarpeia, who agreed to open the gates of Rome to King Tattius, provided his soldiers would give her the ornaments which they wore on their arms. As they entered they threw their shields on her and crushed her, saying as they did so, "These are the ornaments worn by Sabines on their arms."

Draco, the Athenian legislator, was crushed to death in the theatre of Ægina, by the number of caps and cloaks showered on him by the audience, as a mark of their high appreciation of his merits. A similar story is told of the mad Emperor, Elagabalus (q.v.), who smothered the leading citizens of Rome with roses.

Debts of honour. Debts contracted by betting or gambling, so called because these debts cannot be enforced as such by law.

Honours of war. The privilege allowed to an enemy, on capitulation, of being permitted to retain his offensive arms. This is the highest honour a victor can pay a vanquished foe. Sometimes the troops so treated are allowed to march with all their arms, drums beating, and colours flying.

Laws of honour. Certain arbitrary rules which the fashionable world tacitly admits; they wholly regard deportment, and have nothing to do with moral offences. Breaches of this code are punished by expulsion or suspension from society, "sending to Coventry" (q.v.).

Legion of Honour. See LEGION.

Point of honour. An obligation which is binding because its violation would offend some conscientious scruple or notion of self-respect.

Word of honour. A gage which cannot be violated without placing the breaker of it beyond the pale of respectability and good society.

Honourable. A title of honour accorded in the United Kingdom to the younger sons of earls and the children of viscounts, of barons and life peers, to maids of honour, the Lord Provost of Glasgow, justices of the High Court except lords justices and justices of appeal. In the House of Commons one member speaks of another as "the honourable member for —". In U.S.A. honourable is a courtesy title applied to persons of distinction in legal or civic life. See also RIGHT HONOURABLE.

Honourable Artillery Company, a very ancient regiment in the British Army, having been founded by Henry VIII, in 1537, as the Guild of St. George. Since 1641 it has occupied its training ground near Bunhill Fields. In Tudor and Stuart days the officers for the Trained Bands of London were supplied by the H.A.C., in whose ranks Milton, Wren, and Samuel Pepys served at one time or another. It has the privilege of marching through the City with fixed bayonets.

In 1638 Robert Keayne, a member of the London company, founded the Ancient and Honourable Artillery Company of Boston, Mass., the oldest military unit in the U.S.A.

Hooch, an American slang term for whisky or crude raw spirits, often made surreptitiously or obtained illegally. The word comes from the Alaskan Indian hoochinoo, a crude distilled liquor.

Hood. The hood (or cowl) does not make the monk. It is a man's way of life, not what he professes to be, that really matters; from the Latin Cucullus non facit monachum.

Escalus: Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Lucio: Cucullus non facit monachum: honest in nothing, but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.—Measure for Measure, v, 1.

They should be good men; their affairs are righteous But all hoods make not monks.

Henry VIII, iii, 1.

The origin of the phrase is probably to be found in these lines from St. Anselm's Carmen de Contemptu Mundi (11th cent.):—

Non tonsura facit monachum, non horrida vestis;
Sed virtus animi, perpetuusque rigor.

Hood, Robin. See ROBIN HOOD.

Hoodlum (American slang). A rough hooligan. The word was originally confined to the particular variety native to San Francisco.

Hoodman Blind. Now called "Blindman's Buff."

What devil was't

That thus hath cozened you at hoodman blind?

Hamlet, iii, 4.

Hoo-doo, originating from Voodoo (q.v.), this term is applied to any person or object that is supposed to bring bad luck.

Hoo-ey, an exclamation of incredulity—nonsense! absurd!

Hook. Above your hook. Beyond your comprehension; beyond your mark. The allusion is perhaps to hat-pegs placed in rows, the higher rows being beyond the reach of small statures.

By hook or crook. Either rightfully or wrongfully; somehow; one way or another.

There is more than one attempted explanation of the phrase; it is probable, however, that it derives from an old manorial custom which authorized tenants to take as much firewood from the hedges, etc., as could be cut with a crook or bill-hook, and as much low timber as could be reached down from the boughs by a shepherd's crook.

Dynmure Wood was ever open and common to the . . . inhabitants of Bodmin . . . to bear away upon their backs a burden of lop, crop, hook, crook, and bag wood.—Bodmin Register (1525).

He is off the hooks. Done for, laid on the shelf, superseded, dead. The bent pieces of iron on which the hinges of a gate rest and turn are called hooks.

Hook, line, and sinker. To swallow a tale, hook, line, and sinker is to be extremely gullible, like the hungry fish that swallows not only the baited hook, but the lead weight and some of the line as well.

A hook-up is a radio term for an arrangement of wiring for extended transmission or reception; it is applied to a network of radio stations connected for the transmission of the same programme.

Hook it! Take your hook! Sling your hook! Be off! Be off about your business!

On one's own hook. On one's own responsibility or account. An angler's phrase.

With a hook at the end. "My assent is given with a hook at the end" means that it is given with a mental reservation. In some parts it is still the custom for a witness when he swears falsely to crook his finger into a sort of hook, and this is supposed sufficient to annul the perjury. It is a crooked oath, an oath "with a hook at the end." Cp. OVER THE LEFT, under LEFT.

Hookey Walker. See WALKER.

Hooky. To play hooky is to play truant, especially from school.

Hooligan. A violent young rough. The term originated in the last years of the 19th century from the name of one of this class. From it is derived the substantive hooliganism.

The original Hooligans were a spirited Irish family of that name whose proceedings enlivened the drab monotony of life in Southwark towards the end of the 19th century. The word is younger than the Australian larrikin, of doubtful origin, but older than Fr. apache. —ERNEST WEEKLEY: Romance of Words (1912).

Hooped Pots. Drinking pots at one time were marked with bands, or hoops, set at equal distances, so that when two or more drank from the same tankard no one should take more than his share. Jack Cade promises his followers that "seven halfpenny loaves shall be sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony to drink small beer." (2 Henry VI, iv, 2.)

I believe hoops in quart pots were invented to that end, that every man should take his hoope, and no more.—NASH: Pierce Penilesse (1592).

Hoosegow (hooz' gou), in American slang, a gaol. The word comes from the Mexican-Spanish juzgado, a court of justice.

Hoosier (hoo' zhér), an inhabitant of the State of Indiana, the Hoosier State. The origin of the name is now unknown, it is doubtless that of some forgotten local magnate or character.

Hop. To hop the twig. Usually, to die; but sometimes to run away from one's creditors, as a bird eludes a fowler.

There are numerous phrases to express the cessation of life; for example, "to kick the bucket"; "to lay down one's knife and fork"; "to peg out" (from cribbage); "to be snuffed out" (like a candle); "to throw up the sponge"; "to fall asleep"; "to enter Charon's boat"; "to join the majority"; and "to give up the ghost."

Hop-o'-my-Thumb. A pygmy or midget. The name has been given to several dwarfs, as well as being commonly used as a generic term. Tom Thumb in the well-known nursery tale is quite another character. He was the son of peasants, knighted by King Arthur, and killed by a spider.

Plaine friend, Hop-o'-my-Thumb, know you who we are?—Taming of a Shrew (Anon. 1594).

Hope. See PANDORA'S BOX.

Thomas Campbell (1777-1844) was known as The Bard of Hope, on account of his poem, "The Pleasures of Hope" (1799).

Hopkinsians (hop kin' zianz). A sect of Independent Calvinists who followed the teaching of Samuel Hopkins (1721-1803), a minister at Newport, Rhode Island, whose System of Divinity was published shortly before his death. The particular tenet of the system is that true holiness consists in disinterested benevolence, and that all sin is selfishness.

Horace. The Roman lyric poet, born 65 B.C., died 8 B.C.

Horace of England. George, Duke of Buckingham, preposterously declared Cowley to be the Pindar, Horace, and Virgil of England. Ben Jonson was nicknamed Horace by Dekker in the so-called "War of the Theatres."

Horace of France. Jean Macrinus or Salmon (1490-1557); and Pierre Jean de Béranger (1780-1857), also called the French Burns.

Horace of Spain. The brothers Luperco (1559-1613) and Bartolme Argensola (1562-1631).

Horn. Astolpho's horn. Logistilla gave Astolpho at parting a horn that had the virtue of being able to appal and put to flight the boldest knight or most savage beast. (ARISTO: Orlando Furioso, Bk. viii.)

Cape Horn. So named by Schouten, a Dutch mariner, who first doubled it (1616). He was a native of Hoorn, in north Holland, and named the cape after his native place.

The Horn gate. See DREAMS, GATES OF.

Horn of fidelity. Morgan le Fay sent a horn to King Arthur, which had the following "virtue":—"No lady could drink out of it who was not "to her husband true"; all others who attempted to drink were sure to spill what it contained. This horn was carried to King Mark, and "his queene with a hundred ladies more" tried the experiment, but only four managed to "drinke cleane." Ariosto's enchanted cup possessed a similar spell.

Horn of plenty. Amalthea's horn (q.v.), the cornucopia, an emblem of plenty.

Ceres is drawn with a ram's horn in her left arm, filled with fruits and flowers; sometimes they are being poured on the earth, and sometimes they are piled high in the horn as in a basket. Diodorus (iii, 68) says the horn is one from the head of the goat by which Jupiter was suckled.

King Horn. See under KING.

Moses' Horns. See MOSES.

Horn with horn or horn under horn. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or, in fact, all horned beasts that are allowed to run together on the same common.

My horn hath He exalted (1 Sam. ii, 10; Ps. lxxxix, 24, etc.). He has given me the victory, increased my sway. Thus, Lift not up your horn on high (Ps. lxxv, 5) means, do not behave scornfully, maliciously, or arrogantly. In these passages "horn" symbolizes power, and its exaltation signifies victory or deliverance. In Daniel's vision (Dan. vii) the "fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly," had ten horns, symbolical of its great might.

The horns of a dilemma. See DILEMMA.

To come (or be squeezed) out at the little end of the horn. To come off badly in some affair; get the worst of it; fail conspicuously.

To draw in one's horns. To retrench, to curtail one's expenditure; to retract, or mitigate, a pronounced opinion; to restrain pride. The allusion is to the snail.

To put to the horn. To denounce as a rebel, or pronounce a person an outlaw, for not answering to a summons. In Scotland the messenger-at-arms used to go to the Cross of Edinburgh and give three blasts with a horn before he proclaimed judgment of outlawry.

To the horns of the altar. Usque ad aras amicus. Your friend even to the horns of the altar—i.e. through thick and thin. In swearing, the ancient Romans held the horns of the altar, and one who did so in testimony of friendship could not break his oath without calling on himself the vengeance of the angry gods.

The altar in Solomon's temple had a projection at each of the four corners called "horns"; these were regarded as specially sacred, and probably typified the great might of God (cp. above).

To wear the horns. To be a cuckold. This old term is possibly connected with the chase. In the rutting season one stag selects several females, who constitute his harem, till another stag contests the prize with him. If beaten he is without associates till he finds a stag feebleer than himself, who is made to submit to similar terms. As stags are horned, and have their mates taken from them by their fellows, the application is palpable.

Another explanation (see N.E.D.) is that it is due to the practice formerly prevalent of planting or engrafting the spurs of a castrated cock on the root of the excised comb, where they grew and became horns, sometimes of several inches long.

In support of this it is noteworthy that hahnrei, the German equivalent for cuckold, originally signified a capon.

To make horns at. To thrust out the fist with the first and fourth fingers extended, the others doubled in. This ancient gesture, now more common in Latin countries than in England, was employed as an insult to the person at whom it was directed, as implying that he was a cuckold.

He would have laine withe the Countess of Nottinghame, making horns in derision at her husband the Lord High Admiral.—SIR E. PEYNTON: The Divine Catastrophe of the . . . House of Stuart, 1652.

To show one's horns. To let one's evil intentions appear. The allusion, like that in "to show the cloven hoof," is to the Devil—"Old Hornie."

To take the bull by the horns. See BULL.

Auld Hornie. The devil, so called in Scotland. The allusion is to the horns with which Satan is generally represented.

O thou! whatever title suits thee,
Auld Hornie, Satan, Nick, or Clootie.

BURNS: Address to the Deil.

Horn-book. A thin board of oak about nine inches long and five or six wide, on which were printed the alphabet, the nine digits, and sometimes the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Angelic Salutation. Horn-books were in use in elementary schools for the poor when books were scarce and expensive, and survived well into the 18th century. They had a handle, and were covered in front with a sheet of thin horn; the back was often ornamented with a rude sketch of St. George and the Dragon. See CHRISS-CROSS ROW.

Thee will I sing, in comely wainscot bound,
And golden verge inclosing thee around;
The faithful horn before, from age to age
Preserving thy invulnerable page;
Behind, thy patron saint in arms he shines,
With sword and lance to guard the sacred lines.

TICKELL: The Horn Book.
Their books of stature small they took in hand
Which with pellucid horn secured are
To save from finger wet the letters fair.

SHENSTONE: Schoolmistress.

Death and Doctor Hornbook. In this satire by Robert Burns "Doctor Hornbook" stands for John Wilson the apothecary, whom the poet met at the Tarbolton Masonic Lodge.

Horner, Little Jack. See JACK.

Hornpipe. The dance is so called because it used to be danced to the pih-corn or hornpipe, an instrument consisting of a pipe each end of which was made of horn. In his Dictionary Johnson mistakenly said that it was "danced commonly to a horn."

Hornswoggle, To. U.S.A. slang meaning to cheat. Variants are honeyfackle, honeyfogle.

Horoscope. The figure or diagram of the twelve houses of heaven, showing the positions of the planets at a given time. The horoscope is used by astrologers for calculating nativities and working out the answers to various horary questions. See HOUSES, ASTROLOGICAL. The word (Greek) means the "hour-scrutinized," because it is the disposition of the heavens at the exact hour of birth which is examined.

Hors de combat (ôr de kom' ba) (Fr., out of battle). Incapable of taking any further part in the fight.

He (i.e. Cobbett) levels his antagonists, he lays his friends low, and puts his own party hors de combat.—HAZLITT: Table Talk.

Hors d'œuvre (ôr dêvr) (Fr., outside the work). A relish served at the beginning of a dinner as a whet to the appetite, not as an integral part of the meal. In French the expression is also used in architecture for an outbuilding or outwork, and as a literary term for a digression or interpolated episode.

Horse. A dark horse. A horse whose merits as a racer are not known to the general public; hence, a person who keeps his true capabilities to himself till he can produce them to the best advantage.

A horse of another colour. A different affair altogether.

A nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse. Said of one who is determined not to take a hint, or to see a point; also used with the contrary meaning, viz. "I grasp your meaning, though you speak darkly of what you purpose; but mum's the word."

A one-horse show. See ONE.

As strong as a horse. Very strong. Horse is often used with intensive effect; as, to work, or to eat, like a horse.

A Trojan horse. A deception, a concealed danger. See WOODEN HORSE OF TROY.

Don't look a gift-horse in the mouth. See GIFT-HORSE.

Flogging the dead horse. Trying to revive interest in a subject out of date. Bright said that Earl Russell's Reform Bill (1867) was a "dead horse," and every attempt to create any enthusiasm in its favour was like "flogging the dead horse."

Hold your horses. Don't be in such a hurry; keep your temper.

Horse and foot. The cavalry and infantry; hence all one's forces; with all one's might.

Cook's son, duke's son, son of a belted earl, Forty thousand horse and foot going to Table Bay! RUDYARD KIPLING: The Absent Minded Beggar (1899).

I will win the horse or lose the saddle. Neck or nothing; double or quits. The story is that a man made the bet of a horse that another could not say the Lord's Prayer without a wandering thought. The bet was accepted, but before half-way through the person who accepted the bet looked up and said, "By the by, do you mean the saddle also?"

One man may steal a horse, while another may not look over the hedge. Some people are specially privileged, and can take liberties, or commit crimes, etc., with impunity, while others get punished for very trivial offences. An old proverb; given by Heywood (1546).

Riding the wooden horse. Being strapped to a wooden contrivance shaped something like a horse's back and flogged. An old form of military punishment.

Straight from the horse's mouth. Direct from the highest authority, which can not be questioned. The only certain way of discovering the age of a horse is by examining its lower jaw.

The grey mare is the better horse. See MARE.

They cannot draw (or set) horses together. They cannot agree together.

'Tis a good horse that never stumbles. Everyone makes mistakes sometimes; Homer sometimes nods.

To back the wrong horse. To make an error in judgment, and suffer for it. A phrase from the Turf. Speaking in the House of Lords (January 19th, 1897), Lord Salisbury said:—

I consider that both parties have been mistaken in their policy towards the Turkish Empire; they staked their money on the wrong horse at the time of the Crimean War.

To be on one's high horse, to ride the high horse. To be overbearing and arrogant; to give oneself airs. Formerly people of high rank rode on tall horses or chargers.

To ride on the horse with ten toes. To walk; to ride on Shanks's mare (q.v.).

To set the cart before the horse. See CART.

When the horse is stolen, lock the stable door. Said in derision when obvious precautions are taken after a loss or disaster. The French say, Après la mort, le médecin.

Working with a dead horse. Doing work which has been already paid for. Such work is a dead horse, because you can get no more out of it.

You can take a horse to the water but you cannot make him drink. There is always some point at which it is impossible to get an obstinate man to proceed farther in the desired direction. The proverb is an old one, and is found in Heywood (1846).

According to classical mythology, Poseidon (Neptune) created the horse; and, according to Virgil, the first person that drove a four-in-hand was Erichthonius.

A horse wins a kingdom. It is said that on the death of Smerdis (522 B.C.), the several competitors for the throne of Persia agreed that he should be king whose horse neighed first when they met on the day following. The groom of Darius showed his horse a mare on the place appointed, and as soon as it arrived at the spot on the following day the horse began to neigh, and won the crown for its master.

Directions for riding and driving.

Up a hill hurry not,
Down a hill flurry not,
On level ground spare him not.
On a Milestone near Richmond, Yorks.

Flesh-eating horses. The horses of Diomed, tyrant of Thrace (not Diomede, son of Tydeus) who fed his horses on the strangers who visited his kingdom. Hercules vanquished the tyrant, and gave the carcass to the horses to eat.

Like to the Thracian tyrant who, they say,
Unto his horses gave his guests for meat,
Till he himself was made their greedy prey,
And torn in pieces by Alcides great.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, V, viii, 31.

White horses. A poetic phrase for the white-capped breakers as they roll in from the sea.

The wild white horses play
Champ and chafe and toss in the spray.

M. ARNOLD: The Forsaken Merman.

O'Donohue's white horses. Waves which come on a windy day, crested with foam. The hero reappears every seventh year on May-day, and is seen gliding, to sweet but unearthly music, over the lakes of Killarney, on his favourite white horse. He is preceded by groups of fairies, who fling spring flowers in his path.

Moore has a poem on the subject in his Irish Melodies; it refers to a tradition that a young and beautiful girl became enamoured of O'Donohue, the visionary chieftain, and threw herself into the lake that he might carry her off for his bride.

Vale of White Horse. See WHITE HORSE.

The brazen horse. See CAMBUSCAN.

The fifteen points of a good horse—

A good horse sholde have three propyrtees of a man, three of a woman, three of a foxe, three of a hare, and three of an asse

Of a man. Bolde, prowde, and hardye.

Of a woman. Fayre-breasted, faire of haire, and easy to move.

Of a foxe. A fair taylle, short eers, with a good trotte.

Of a hare. A grate eye, a dry head, and well renynge.

Of an asse. A bygge chynn, a flat legge, and a good hoof.—Wynkyn de Worde (1496).

The Wooden Horse, a nickname for the scaffold, as also

A horse that was foaled of an acorn, as appears in Ray's Proverbs, 1678.

Famous Horses of Myth and History

In classical mythology the names given by various poets to the horses of Helios, the Sun, are:—

Actæon (effulgence); Æthon (fiery red); Amethea (no loiterer); Bronte (thunder); Erythreos (red producer); Lamos (shining like a lamp; one of the noontide horses); Phlegon (the burning one; noontide); and Purocis (fiery hot; also noontide).

Pluto's horses were: Abaster (away from the stars); Abatos (inaccessible); Arion (swift as an eagle); and Nonios; and Aurora's: Abraxas (q.v.), Eëos (dawn), and Phæthon (the shining one).

Alborak. See Borak, below.

Alfana ("mare"). Gradasso's horse, in Orlando Furioso.

Aquiline ("like an eagle"). Raymond's steed, bred on the banks of the Tagus. (Tasso: Jerusalem Delivered.)

Arion ("martial"). Hercules' horse, given to Adrastus. The horse of Neptune, brought out of the earth by striking it with his trident; its right feet were those of a man, it spoke with a human voice, and ran with incredible swiftness.

Arundel. The horse of Bevis of Hamtown, or Southampton. The word means "swift as a swallow" (Fr. hirondelle).

Baiardo (the same name as Bayard below). Rinaldo's horse, of a bright bay colour, once the property of Amadis of Gaul. According to tradition it is still alive, but flees at the approach of man, so that it can never be caught. (Orlando Furioso.)

Balios (Gr. "swift"). One of the horses given by Neptune to Peleus. It afterwards belonged to Achilles. Like Xanthos, its sire was the west wind, and its dam Swift-foot the harpy.

Barbary. See Roan Barbary.

Bavieca. The Cid's horse. He survived his master two years and a half, during which time no one was allowed to mount him; and when he died he was buried before the gate of the monastery at Valencia, and two elms were planted to mark the site.

Bayard ("bay coloured"). The horse of the four sons of Aymon, which grew larger or smaller as one or more of the four sons mounted it. According to tradition, one of the footprints may still be seen in the forest of Soignes, and another on a rock near Dinant.

Black Agnes. The palfrey of Mary Queen of Scots, given her by her brother Moray, and named after Agnes of Dunbar.

Black Bess. The famous mare ridden by the highwayman Dick Turpin, which, tradition says, carried him from London to York.

Black Saladin. Warwick's famous horse, which was coal-black. Its sire was Malech, and according to tradition, when the race of Malech failed, the race of Warwick would fail also. And it was so.

Borak (Al). The mare which conveyed Mohammed from earth to the seventh heaven. It was milk-white, had the wings of an eagle, and a human face, with horse's cheeks. Every pace she took was equal to the farthest range of human sight. The word is Arabic for "the lightning."

Brigadore or Brigliadore ("golden bridle"). Sir Guyon's horse, in Spenser's Faerie Queene (V, ii, etc.). It had a distinguishing black spot in its mouth, like a horseshoe.

Orlando's famous charger, second only to Bajardo in swiftness and wonderful power's, had the same name—Brigliadoro.

Bucephalus ("ox-head"). The celebrated charger of Alexander the Great. Alexander was the only person who could mount him, and he always knelt down to take up his master. He was thirty years old at death, and Alexander built a city for his mausoleum, which he called Bucephala.

Carmen. The Chevalier Bayard's horse, given him by the Duke of Lorraine. It was a Persian horse from Kerman or Carmen (Laristan).

Celer ("swift"). The horse of the Roman Emperor Verus. It was fed on almonds and raisins, covered with royal purple, and stalled in the imperial palace.

Cerus. The horse of Adrastus, swifter than the wind (Pausanias). The word means "fit."

Copenhagen. Wellington's charger at Waterloo. It died in 1835 at the age of twenty-seven.

Cp. Marengo.

Cyllaros. Named from Cylla, in Troas, a celebrated horse of Castor or Pollux.

Dapple. Sancho Panza's ass in Don Quixote. So called from its colour.

Dinos ("the marvel"). Diomed's horse.

Ethon ("fiery"). One of the horses of Hector.

Fadda. Mohammed's white mule.

Ferrant d'Espagne ("the Spanish traveller"). The horse of Oliver, one of Charlemagne's paladins.

Galathea ("cream-coloured"). One of Hector's horses.

Grani ("grey-coloured"). Siegfried's horse, of marvellous swiftness.

Grizzle. Dr. Syntax's horse, all skin and bone; in Combe's Tour of Dr. Syntax, etc. (1812).

Haizum. The horse of the archangel Gabriel. (Koran.)

Harpagus ("one that carries off rapidly"). One of the horses of Castor and Pollux.

Hippocampus. One of Neptune's horses. It had only two legs, the hinder quarter being that of a dragon or fish.

Hrimfaxi. The horse of Night, from whose bit fall the "rime-drops" which every night bedew the earth. (Scandinavian mythology.)

Incitatus ("spurred-on"). The horse of the Roman Emperor Caligula, made priest and consul. It had an ivory manger, and drank wine out of a golden pail.

Kantaka. The white horse of Prince Gautama, the Buddha (g.v.).

Lampon ("the bright one"). One of the horses of Diomed.

Lamri. King Arthur's mare. The word means "the curvetter."

Marengo. The white stallion which Napoleon rode at Waterloo. It is represented in Vernet's picture of Napoleon Crossing the Alps. Cp. COPENHAGEN.

Malech. See Black Saladin above.

Marocco. Banks's performing horse, famous in the late Elizabethan period, and frequently mentioned by the dramatists. Its shoes were of silver, and one of its exploits was to mount the steeple of old St. Paul's.

The Pale Horse. Death. Rev. vi, 8.

Pegasus ("born near the pege or source of the ocean"). The winged horse of Apollo and the Muses. Perseus rode him when he rescued Andromeda.

Phallas ("stallion"). The horse of Heraclius.

Phrenicos ("intelligent"). The horse of Hero of Syracuse, that won the Olympic prize for single horses in the seventy-third Olympiad.

Podarge ("swift-foot"). One of the horses of Hector.

Roan Barbary. The favourite horse of Richard II.

When Bolingbroke rode on Roan Barbary
That horse that thou so often hast bestrid.

Richard II, v, 5.

Rosabelle. The favourite palfrey of Mary Queen of Scots.

Rosinante ("formerly a hack"). Don Quixote's horse, all skin and bone.

Saladin. See Black Saladin above.

Savoy. The favourite black horse of Charles VIII of France; so called from the Duke of Savoy who gave it him. It had but one eye, and "was mean in stature."

Shibdz. The Persian Bucephalus, fleetest than the wind. It was the charger of Chosroes II of Persia.

Sleipnir. Odin's grey horse, which had eight legs and could traverse either land or sea. The horse typifies the wind which blows over land and water from eight principal points.

Sorrel. The horse of William III, which stumbled by catching his foot in a mole-heap. This accident ultimately caused the king's death. Sorrel, like Savoy, was blind of one eye, and "mean of stature."

Strymon. The horse immolated by Xerxes before he invaded Greece. Named from the river Strymon, in Thrace, from which vicinity it came.

Tachebrune. The horse of Ogier the Dane.

Trebizond. The grey horse of Guarinos, one of the French knights taken at Roncesvalles.

Vegliantino ("the little vigilant one"). The famous steed of Orlando, called in French romance Veillantif, Orlando there appearing as Roland.

White Surrey. The favourite horse of Richard III.

Saddle White Surrey for the field to-morrow.

Richard III, v, 3.

Xanthus ("golden-hued"). One of the horses of Achilles, who announced to the hero his approaching death when unjustly chidden by him. Its sire was Zephyros, and dam Podarge.

USED EMBLEMATICALLY.

In Christian art, the horse is held to represent courage and generosity. It is an attribute of St. Martin, St. Maurice, St. George, and St. Victor, all of whom are represented on horseback. St. Léon is represented on horseback, in pontifical robes, blessing the people.

In the catacombs, where the horse is a not uncommon emblem, it probably typifies the transitoriness of life. Sometimes a palm-wreath is placed above its head.

The inn-sign of The White Horse in its various forms comes from the heraldic device of the House of Hanover, a white horse courant. During the reigns of the two first Georges a number of country inns and taverns exchanged their Stuart signs of Royal Oak, Rose, etc., to emblems better fitting the new times and dynasty.

Horse-chestnut. In his Herball (1597) Gerard tells us that the tree is so called—

For that the people of the East countries do with the fruit thereof cure their horses of the cough . . . and such like diseases.

Another explanation is that when a slip is cut off obliquely close to a joint, it presents a miniature of a horse's hock and foot, shoe and nails. (Cp. HORSE-VETCH.) But the use of horse-tributively to denote something that is inferior, coarse, or unrefined, is quite common.

Horse Latitudes. A region of calms between 30° and 35° North; perhaps so called because sailing-ships carrying horses to America or the West Indies were often obliged to lighten the vessel by casting them overboard when becalmed in these latitudes.

Horse-laugh. A coarse, vulgar laugh.

He plays rough pranks . . . and has a big horse-laugh in him when there is a fop to be roasted.—CARLYLE: Frederick the Great, vol. i, Bk. iv, ch. ii.

Horse-leech. A type of insatiable voracity; founded on the blood-sucking habits of the worm, and the well-known passage in the Bible:—

The horseleech hath two daughters, crying Give, give.—Prov. xxx, 15.

John Marbeck, the commentator, in 1581, explains the “two daughters”—that is, two forks in her tongue, which he heere calleth her two daughters, whereby she sucketh the bloud, and is never satiate.

Go and tell that to the horse marines! Said in derision to the teller of some unbelievable yarn or specially “tall” story. The point of the jest is that no such force exists; the Royal Marines are confined to artillery and infantry, and naturally do not include cavalry. To belong to the “Horse Marines” means to be an awkward lubberly recruit. Cp. MARINE.

Horse-milliner. One who makes up and supplies decorations for horses; hence a horse-soldier more fit for the toilet than the battlefield. The expression was used by Chatterton in his Excellent Balade of Charitie (Rowley Poems), and Scott revived it.

Horse-play. Rough play.

Horse-power. The standard theoretical unit of rate of work, equal to the raising of 33,000 lb. one foot high in one minute. This was fixed by Watt, who, when experimenting to find some settled way of indicating the power exerted by his steam-engine, found that a strong dray horse working at a gin for eight hours a day averaged 22,000 foot-pounds per minute. He increased this by 50 per cent., and this, ever since, has been 1 horse-power.

Horse sense. Practical common sense; the term originated in western U.S.A.

It is lucky to pick up a horseshoe. This is from the old notion that a horseshoe nailed to the house door was a protection against witches. Lord Nelson had one nailed to the mast of the ship Victory.

The legend is that the devil one day asked St. Dunstan, who was noted for his skill in shoeing horses, to shoe his “single hoof.” Dunstan, knowing who his customer was, tied him tightly to the wall and proceeded with his job, but purposely put the devil to so much pain that he roared for mercy. Dunstan at last consented to release his captive on condition that he would never enter a place where he saw a horseshoe displayed.

Straws laid across my path retard;

The horseshoes nailed, each threshold's guard.

GAY: Fable xxvii, Pt. 1.

In 1251 Walter le Brun, farrier, in the Strand, London, was to have a piece of land in the parish of St. Clements, to place there a forge, for which he was to pay the parish six horseshoes, which rent was paid to the Exchequer every year, and was for some centuries rendered to the Exchequer by the Lord Mayor and citizens of London, to whom subsequently the piece of ground was granted.

Horse-vetch. The vetch which has pods shaped like a horseshoe; sometimes called the “horseshoe vetch.” Cp. HORSE CHESTNUT.

Horse-wrangler, a Western American term for a breaker-in and herder of horses.

Hortus Siccus (hōr' tus sik' us) (Lat., a dry garden). A collection of plants dried and arranged in a book.

Horus (hōr' ūs). One of the major gods of the ancient Egyptians, a blending of Horus the Elder, the sun-god (corresponding to the Greek Apollo), and Horus the Child (see HARPOCRATES), the son of Osiris and Isis. He was represented in hieroglyphics by a hawk, which bird was sacred to him, or as a hawk-headed man; and his emblem was the winged sun-disk. In many of the myths he is hardly distinguishable from Ra.

Hospital (Lat. hospitale, hospitium, from hospes, a guest). Originally a hospice, or hostel for the reception of pilgrims, the word came to be applied to a charitable institution for the aged and infirm (as in Greenwich Hospital, Chelsea Hospital), to similar institutions for the education of the young (as in Christ's Hospital), and so, finally, to its present usual sense, a place where the sick and wounded are cared for, and where medical students gain their experience in the treatment of disease, etc. The words hostel and hotel are “doublets” of hospital. Another common variation is hospice.

Hospitallers (hos' pit ál erz). First applied to those whose duty it was to provide hospitium (lodging and entertainment) for pilgrims. The most noted institution of the kind was at Jerusalem, which gave its name to an order called the Knights Hospitallers, or the Knights of St. John at Jerusalem; afterwards they were styled the Knights of Rhodes, and then Knights of Malta (q.v.), the island of Rhodes and Malta being conferred on them at different times.

The first crusade . . . led to the establishment of the Christian kingdom of Jerusalem, in 1099. The chief strength of the kingdom lay in the two orders of military monks—the Templars and the Hospitallers or Knights of St. John.—FREEMAN: General Sketch, ch. xi.

The Grand Priory of the Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in the British Realm (with headquarters at St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell) is not connected with the ancient Order. It received a Royal Charter of Incorporation in 1888, and a supplemental charter (empowering the Grand Prior to establish Priors in any part of the British Dominions) in 1907, and it exists for the purpose of carrying on ambulance and other charitable work.

At the beginning of World War II the St. John Ambulance Brigade combined with the British Red Cross Society to form a war organization to carry out the work of both bodies in connexion with the war; this did not affect the status or independence of either body in matters unconnected with hostilities, and it ceased with the war.

Host. The consecrated bread of the Eucharist is so called in the Latin Church because it is regarded as a real victim consisting of flesh, blood, and spirit, offered up in sacrifice; so called from hostia, the Latin word for a lamb when offered up in sacrifice (a larger animal was victima). At the Benediction it is exposed for adoration or carried in procession in a transparent vessel called a "monstrance."

The elevation of the Host. The celebrant lifting up the consecrated wafers above his head, that the people may see the paten and adore the Host while his back is turned to the congregation.

Host as an army, a multitude. At the breaking up of the Roman Empire the first duty of every subject was to follow his lord into the field, and the proclamation was bannire in hostem (to order out against the foe), which soon came to signify "to order out for military service," and hostem facere came to mean "to perform military service." Hostis (military service) next came to mean the army that went against the foe, whence this word host. Host, one who entertains guests, is from Lat. hospes, a guest.

To reckon without your host. To reckon from your own standpoint only; not to take into consideration what the other man may do or think.

Found in few minutes, to his cost,
He did but count without his host.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, iii, 22.

Hostler or Ostler (os' lèr), nowadays the man who looks after the horses of travellers at an inn, was originally the innkeeper, hostelier, keeper of an hostelry, himself. The so-called derivation of ostler from oat-stealer is merely a joke.

Hot. A phrase used in jazz music to describe a piece played with great spirit; when the players are carried away by the music they "get hot."

Hot air. Empty talk, boasting, threats, etc.; bombast. Hence, a hot-air merchant, one whose "vaporizings" are "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing"; a declamatory windbag.

Hot and hot. Hot dishes served in succession at a meal.

Hot cockles. A Christmas game. One blindfolded knelt down, and being struck had to guess who gave the blow.

Thus poets passing time away,
Like children at hot-cockles play. (1653.)

Hot cross buns. See BUN.

Hot-foot. With speed; fast.

Hot-pot. A dish of mutton or beef with sliced potatoes cooked in an oven in a tight-lidded pot. A favourite dish in the North of England.

Hot stuff. Formerly said of a girl or woman who indulged in violent flirtations often carried beyond the limits of good behaviour.

I'll make this place too hot to hold him. I'll "show him up," or otherwise make this so unpleasant and disagreeable for him that he will not be able to stand it.

I'll give it him hot and strong. I'll rate him most soundly and severely. To get it hot, to get severe punishment.

Like hot cakes. Very rapidly; as in "The goods sold like hot cakes."

Not so hot, a slang phrase meaning not so good, not very satisfactory.

To blow hot and cold. See BLOW.

To get into hot water. To get into difficulties, or in a state of trouble and anxiety.

Hotch-pot. This word is used with the same significance as hotch-potch (q.v.), but it also has a legal use, which descends from Norman times in England, and is, apparently, the earlier. It meant the amalgamating of landed property that had belonged to a person dying intestate for the purpose of dividing the whole between the heirs in equal, or legal, shares.

It was also applied to such cases as the following:—

Suppose a father has advanced money to one child, at his death this child receives such sum as, added to the loan, will make his share equal to that of the other members of the family. If not content, he must bring into hotch-pot the money that was advanced, and the whole is then divided amongst all the children according to the terms of the will.

Hotch-potch (Fr. hochepot; hocher, to shake together, and pot). A hodge-podge (q.v.); a mixed dish; a confused mixture or jumble; a thick broth containing meat and vegetables.

Hotspur. A fiery person who has no control over his temper. Harry Percy (1364-1403), son of the first Earl of Northumberland (see 1 Henry IV), was so called. The 14th Earl of Derby (1799-1869) several times Prime Minister, was sometimes called the "Hotspur of debate," though he was more generally known as the "Rupert of debate."

Hound. To hound a person is to persecute him, or rather to set on persons to annoy him, as hounds are let from the slips at a hare or stag.

Hour. A bad quarter of an hour. See QUART D'HEURE.

At the eleventh hour. Just in time not to be too late; only just in time to obtain some benefit. The allusion is to the parable of labourers hired for the vineyard (Matt. xx).

My hour is not yet come. The time for action has not yet arrived; properly, the hour of my death is not yet fully come. The allusion is to the belief that the hour of one's death is pre-ordained.

When Jesus knew that his hour was come.—John xiii, 1.

In an evil hour. Acting under an unfortunate impulse. In astrology we have our lucky and unlucky hours.

In the small hours of the morning. One, two, and three, after midnight.

To keep good hours. To return home early every night; to go to bed betimes. Also, to be punctual in attending to one's work.

Hour (hoo' ri). One of the black-eyed damsels of the Mohammedan Paradise, possessed of perpetual youth and beauty, whose virginity is renewable at pleasure; hence, in English use, any dark-eyed and attractive beauty.

Every believer will have seventy-two of these hours in Paradise, and, according to the Koran, his intercourse with them will be fruitful or otherwise, according to his wish. If an offspring is desired, it will grow to full estate in an hour.

House. A house of call. Some house, frequently a public-house, that one makes a point of visiting or using regularly; a house where workers in a particular trade meet when out of employment, and where they may be engaged.

A house of correction. A jail governed by a keeper. Originally it was a place where vagrants were made to work, and offenders were kept in ward for the correction of small offences.

House of office, a Stuart term for a privy.

House to house. Performed at every house, one after another; as, "a house-to-house canvass."

Like a house afire. Very rapidly. The phrase alludes to the rapidity with which the old wooden houses with their straw-thatched roofs, were burned down once they caught fire.

The House. A familiar name for Christ Church, Oxford, the London Stock Exchange, and the deliberative bodies in various forms of government:

House of Lords, the peers of the United Kingdom.

House of Commons, the elected representatives of the British people, and those of Canada.

House of Representatives, the lower legislative chamber in U.S.A., Australia, New Zealand.

House of Assembly, South Africa.

The House of . . . denotes a royal or noble family with the ancestors and branches, as the House of Windsor (the British Royal Family), the House of Stuart, the House of Brunswick, etc.; also a commercial establishment or firm as the House of Tellson, the banking firm in Dickens's Tale of Two Cities, the House of Cassell, the publishers, etc.

The House of God. Not solely a church, or a temple made with hands, but any place sanctified by God's presence. Thus, Jacob in the wilderness, where he saw the ladder set up leading from earth to heaven, said, "This is none but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven" (Gen. xxviii, 17).

The House that Jack built. There are numerous similar glomerations. For example, the Hebrew parable of The Two Zuzim. The summation runs thus:—

10. This is Yavah who vanquished
  9. Death which killed
  8. The butcher which slew
  7. The ox which drank
  6. The water which quenched
  5. The fire which burnt
  4. The stick which beat
  3. The dog which worried
  2. The cat which killed
  1. The kid which my father bought for two zuzim.
- (A zuzim was about a farthing.)

To bring down the house. See BRING.

To cry or proclaim from the house-top. To announce something in the most public manner possible. Jewish houses had flat roofs. Here the ancient Jews used to assemble for gossip; here, too, not infrequently, they slept; and here some of their festivals were held. From the housetops the rising of the sun was proclaimed, and public announcements were made.

That which ye have spoken [whispered] in the ear . . . shall be proclaimed upon the housetops.—Luke xii, 3.

To eat one out of house and home. See EAT.

To keep house. To maintain an establishment. "To go into housekeeping" is to start a private establishment.

To keep a good house. To supply a bountiful table.

To keep open house. To give free entertainment to all who choose to come.

To throw the house out of the windows. To throw all things into confusion from exuberance of spirit.

House-bote. A term in old law denoting the amount of wood that a tenant is allowed to take from the land for repairs to the dwelling and for fuel. Bote is A.S. profit, compensation. See BOOT.

House-leek. Grown formerly on house-roofs, from the notion that it warded off lightning, fever, and evil spirits, Charlemagne made an edict that every one of his subjects should have house-leek, or "Jove's beard," as it is also called, on his roof. The words are, Et habet quisque supra domum suam Jovis barbam.

If the herb house-leek or syngreen do grow on the housetop, the same house is never stricken with lightning or thunder.—THOMAS HILL: Natural and Artificiall Conclusions (16th cent.).

Houses, Astrological. In judicial astrology the whole heaven is divided into twelve portions by means of great circles crossing the north and south points of the horizon, through which the heavenly bodies pass every twenty-four hours. Each of these divisions is called a house; and in casting a horoscope (q.v.) the whole is divided into two parts (beginning from the east), six above and six below the horizon. The eastern ones are called the ascendant, because they are about to rise; the other six are the descendant, because they have already passed the zenith. The twelve houses each have their special functions—(1) the house of life; (2) fortune and riches; (3) brethren; (4) parents and relatives; (5) children; (6) health; (7) marriage; (8) death; (9) religion; (10) dignities; (11) friends and benefactors; (12) enemies.

Three houses were assigned to each of the four ages of the person whose horoscope was to be cast, and his lot in life was governed by the ascendancy or descendancy of these at the various periods, and by the stars which ruled in the particular "houses."

Household, The. Specifically, the immediate members of the Royal Family but more particularly the retinue of court officials, servants, and attendants attached to the sovereign's and other royal households. The principal officials of the sovereign's household are the Lord Chamberlain, Lord Steward, Master of the Horse, Treasurer of the Household, all of whom are personally appointed. The higher members of the Household in Scotland are mostly hereditary.

Household gods. The Lares and Penates (q.v.), who presided over the dwellings and domestic concerns of the ancient Romans; hence, in modern use, the valued possessions of home, all those things that go to endear it to one.

Bearing a nation with all its household gods into exile.
LONGFELLOW: Evangeline.

Household Troops. Those troops whose special duty it is to attend the sovereign. In time of war they can be used overseas with the King's permission. They consist of the Household Cavalry (1 and 2 Life Guards, ca. 1650, Royal Horse Guards or Blues, 1661) which in 1939-45 mustered two armoured car Regiments, and the Brigade of Guards (five Regiments of Foot Guards: Grenadier, 1660, Coldstream, 1660, Scots 1641, Irish 1902, and Welsh Guards, 1915).

Housel (hou' zel). To give the Sacrament (A.S. husel; connected with Goth. *huns*l. sacrifice). Cp. UNANELED.

Children were christened, and men houseled and assouled through all the land, except such as were in the bill of excommunication by name expressed.—
HOLINSHED: Chronicle.

Houssain (hu sãn'). Brother of Prince Ahmed in one of the Arabian Nights stories. He possessed a piece of carpet or tapestry of such wonderful power that he had only to sit upon it, and it would transport him in a moment to any place to which he desired to go.

Houyhnhnms (whinims, or whinhims). A race of horses endowed with reason and all the finer characteristics of man, introduced with caustically satirical effect by Swift in his Gulliver's Travels. The name was the author's invention, coined in imitation of the "whinny" of a horse.

Nay, would kind Jove my organ so dispose

To hymn harmonious Houyhnhnms through the nose

I'd call thee Houhnhnm, that high-sounding name;

Thy children's noses all should twang the same.

POPE: Mary Gulliver to Capt. Lemuel Gulliver; an Epistle.

Howard. The female Howard. Mrs Elizabeth Fry (1780-1845), the Quaker philanthropist and worker in prisons. In 1813 she paid her first visit to Newgate Prison; the horror of the conditions prevailing there determined her to devote herself to improving the lot of the prisoners, especially the females. In 1817 she formed an association for their improvement, and extended her interests to Continental prisons. She was called The Female Howard in allusion to John Howard (1726-90) who is celebrated for his exertions on behalf of prison reform and for the success which attended his efforts. He visited prisons not only in the United Kingdom and Ireland, but all over the Continent, and in 1777 published The State of Prisons in England and Wales, etc.

The radiant path that Howard trod to Heaven.

BLOOMFIELD: Farmer's Boy; Autumn.

B.D.—16

Howdie or Howdy. The Scottish word for a midwife.

When skirlin weanies see the light,
Thou maks the gossips clatter bright;
How fumbling cuifs their dearies slight;
Wae worth the namel!

Nae howdie gets a social night,
Or plack frae them.
BURNS: Scotch Drink.

Howleglass. An old form of Owlglass. See EULENSPIEGEL.

Hoyle. According to Hoyle. According to the best usage, or the highest authority. Edmond Hoyle, who wrote in 1742 A Short Treatise on the Game of Whist, was for many years quoted as an authority in all disputes over games of whist.

Hrimfaxi. See HORSE.

Hub. The nave of a wheel; a boss; the centre of any form of activity.

In the U.S.A. The Hub is Boston, Mass.

Boston State-house is the hub of the solar system —
HOLMES: Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, ch. vi, p. 143.

Up to the hub. Fully, entirely, as far as possible. If a cart sinks in the mud up to the hub, it can sink no lower; if a man is thrust through with a sword up to the hub, the entire sword has passed through him; and if a quoit strikes the hub, it is not possible to do better.

Hubba Hubba. An exclamation of enthusiasm of American origin which came into wide prevalence during World War II. Like all such expressions its origin is obscure, though it has been ingeniously traced back to an old English expression: "Hubba—a cry given to warn fishermen of the approach of pilchards."

Hubert, St. Patron saint of huntsmen (d. 727). He was the son of Bertrand, Duc d'Aquitaine, and cousin of King Pepin. Hubert was so fond of the chase that he neglected his religious duties for his favourite amusement, till one day a stag bearing a crucifix menaced him with eternal perdition unless he reformed. Upon this he entered the cloister, became in time Bishop of Liège, and the apostle of Ardennes and Brabant. Those who were descended of his race were supposed to possess the power of curing the bite of mad dogs.

In art he is represented as a bishop with a miniature stag resting on the book in his hand, or as a huntsman kneeling to the miraculous crucifix borne by the stag. His feast day is November 3rd.

Hudibras (hū'di brās). A satirical poem in three parts and nine cantos (published 1663-78) by Samuel Butler, so named from its hero, who is said to be a caricature of Sir Samuel Luke, a patron of Butler. The Grub Street Journal (1731) maintains it was Colonel Rolle, of Devonshire, with whom the poet lodged for some time, and adds that the name is derived from Hugh de Bras, the patron saint of the county. Hudibras represents the Presbyterian party, and his squire the Independents.

'Tis sung there is a valiant Mameluke,

In foreign land yeclaped—
BUTLER: Hudibras, i, 1.

Zachary Grey's notes to Hudibras seem to prove conclusively that Sir Samuel Luke is referred to—a not too-honest man of doubtful loyalties.

There are two characters of this name in Spenser's Faerie Queene: (1) the lover of Elissa (II, ii), typifying rashness, and (2) a legendary king of Britain (II, x, 25).

Hudson, Jeffrey (1619-82). The famous dwarf, at one time page to Queen Henrietta Maria, who caused him to be served up in a pie one day when Charles I was at dinner. When he was thirty years old he was 18 in. high, but he later reached 3 ft. 6 in. or 3 ft. 9 in. He was a captain of horse in the Civil War; and afterwards was captured by pirates and sold as a slave in Barbary, but managed to escape. His portrait by Van Dyck is in the National Portrait Gallery, London.

Hue and Cry. The old legal name for the official outcry made when calling for assistance "with horn and with voice," in the pursuit of a criminal escaping from justice (O.Fr. huer, to shout). Persons failing to respond when the "hue and cry" was raised were liable to penalties; hence, a clamour or outcry, a cry of alarm.

But now by this, with noyse of late upore,

The hue and cry was rayssed all about.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, VI, xi, 46.

Hug. To hug the shore. In the case of a ship, to keep as close to the shore as is compatible with the vessel's safety.

To hug the wind. To keep a ship close hauled.

Hugger-mugger. One of a large class of reduplicated words (i.e. namby-pamby, skimble-skamble, flip-flap, etc.) of uncertain origin, but probably an extension of hug. Clandestinely, secretly; also, in an untidy, disorderly manner.

The king in Hamlet says of Polonius: "We have done but greenly in hugger-mugger to inter him"—i.e. to smuggle him into the grave clandestinely and without ceremony.

North, in his Plutarch, says: "Antonius thought that his body should be honourably buried, and not in hugger-mugger" (clandestinely).

Ralpho says:—

While I, in hugger-mugger hid,

Have noted all they said and did.

BUTLER: Hudibras, iii, 3.

In modern speech we say—He lives in a hugger-mugger sort of way; the rooms were all hugger-mugger (disorderly).

Hugh of Lincoln. It was said that the Jews in 1255 stole a boy of 8 years old named Hugh, whom they tortured for ten days and then crucified or drowned in a well. Eighteen of the richest Jews of Lincoln were hanged for taking part in this affair, and more would have been put to death had it not been for the intercession of the Franciscans; the boy was buried in state. This is the subject of The Prioress's Tale of Chaucer, and it is given in Alphonsus of Lincoln (1459), etc. In Rymer's Fœdera are several documents relating to this event. Cp. WILLIAM OF NORWICH.

Huguenot (hū' ge not). The French Protestants (Calvinists) of the 16th and 17th centuries. The name was first applied to the revolutionaries of Geneva by the adherents of the Duke of Savoy, about 1560, and is probably an adaptation of the Ger. eidenossen, confederates.

Philippe de Mornay (1549-1623), the great supporter of the French Protestants, was nicknamed "the Huguenot Pope."

Huitzilopochtli. See MEXITL.

Hulda (hūl' da). The old German goddess of marriage and fecundity, who sent bridegrooms to maidens and children to the married. The name means "the Benignant."

Hulda is making her bed. It snows.

Hulking. A great hulking fellow. A great overgrown one. A hulk is a large, unwieldy ship, or the body of a superannuated one, that looks very clumsy as it lies ashore. Shakespeare says—referring to Falstaff:—

Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John

Is prisoner to your son.—2 Henry IV, i, 1.

Hulks, The, or Ship Prisons were old dismasted men-of-war anchored in the Thames and off Portsmouth, used to house prisoners awaiting transportation. The principal Hulks, stationed off Woolwich, were the Warrior, which accommodated 480 convicts employed in the dockyard, and the Justitia with an equal number of men employed in the arsenal. An impression of the Hulks is given in the opening chapters of Great Expectations.

Hull, Hell, and Halifax. An old beggars' and vagabonds' "prayer," quoted by Taylor, the Water Poet (early 17th cent.), was:

From Hull, Hell, and Halifax,

Good Lord, deliver us.

"Hell" was probably the least feared as being farthest from them; Hull was to be avoided because it was so well governed that beggars had little chance of getting anything without doing hard labour for it; and Halifax, because anyone caught stealing cloth in that town was beheaded without further ado.

Hullabaloo (hūl á bā loo'). Uproar. The word is fairly modern (middle of the 17th cent.); it is of uncertain origin, but is probably a reduplicated word formed on holloa! or hullo! Cp. HURLY-BURLY.

Hulled (U.S.A.). Made a prisoner after capitulating, from the surrender of General Hull at Detroit, August 16th, 1812.

Hulsean Lectures (hūl' sē ān). Instituted by the Rev. John Hulse (1708-90), of Cheshire, in 1777. Some four or six sermons on Christian evidences are preached annually at Great St. Mary's, Cambridge, by the Hulsean Lecturer, who, till 1860, was entitled the Christian Advocate. Hulse also bequeathed estates to the University as an endowment for a Hulsean Professor of Divinity, and for certain Hulsean prizes.

Hum and Haw, To. To hesitate to give a positive answer; to hesitate in making a speech. To introduce hum and haw between words which ought to follow each other freely.

Huma (hū' mā). A fabulous Oriental bird which never alights, but is always on the wing. It is said that every head which it overshadows will wear a crown. The bird suspended over the throne of Tippoo Sahib at Seringapatam represented this poetical fancy.

Humanitarians (hũ măn i tăr i ănz). A name that used to be given to certain Arian heretics who believed that Jesus Christ was only man. The disciples of St. Simon were so called also, because they maintained the perfectibility of human nature without the aid of grace.

Nowadays the term is usually applied to philanthropists whose object is the welfare of humanity at large.

Humanities or Humanity Studies. Grammar, rhetoric, and poetry, with Greek and Latin (literæ humaniores); in contradistinction to divinity (literæ divinæ).

The humanities . . . is used to designate those studies which are considered the most specially adapted for training . . . true humanity in every man. —TRENCH: Study of Words, Lect. iii.

A degree, L.H.D., Litterarum Humaniorum Doctor (Doctor of Humane Letters), is given at some of the American universities.

Humanity Martin. Richard Martin (1754-1834) one of the founders of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He secured the passage of several laws making cruelty to certain animals illegal.

Humber. The legendary king of the Huns who are fabled to have invaded Britain about 1000 B.C.; he was defeated in a great battle by Lothine, and his body was cast into the river Abus, which was forthwith renamed the Humber. (Geoffrey of Monmouth.)

Their chieftain Humber named was aright
Unto the mighty streame him to betake,
Where he an end of battell and of life did make.
SPENSER: Faerie Queene, II, x, 16.

Humble. Humble bee. A corruption of the Ger. hummel bee, the buzzing bee. Sometimes called the Dumble-dor. Also Bumble-bee, from its booming drone.

Humble cow. A cow without horns.

To eat humble pie. To come down from a position you have assumed; to be obliged to take "a lower room." Here "humble" is a pun on umble, the umbles being the heart, liver, and entrails of the deer, the huntsman's perquisites. When the lord and his household dined the venison pasty was served on the dais, but the umbles were made into a pie for the huntsman and his fellows, who took the lower seats.

Humbug. A hoax or imposition; also (as verb) to hoax, cajole, impose upon. The word is of unknown origin, but was new in the middle of the 18th century, and the Earl of Orrery, writing in the Connoisseur in 1754, called it a—
New-coined expression, which is only to be found in the nonsensical vocabulary and sounds absurd and disagreeable whenever it is pronounced.

Humhum. (U.S.A.) A thin cambric material.

Humming Ale. Strong liquor that froths well, and causes a humming in the head of the drinker.

Let us fortify our stomachs with a slice or two of hung beef, and a horn or so of humming stingo.—PIERCE EGAN: Tom and Jerry, ch. vii.

Hummums (hũm' ūmz). The hotel of this name in Covent Garden is on the site of an old bathing establishment founded there about 1631; so called from the Pers. humoun (a sweating or Turkish bath). For many years after the Restoration the Hummums was a fashionable resort. In 1708 it was kept by one Small; the rates were 5s. for a single person, or 4s. each for parties of two or more.

"Now," says my friend, "we are so near I'll carry you to see the Hummums . . . and if you will pay your club towards eight shillings we'll go in and sweat."—NED WARD: The London Spy.

Humour. As good humour, ill or bad humour. etc. According to an ancient theory, there are four principal humours in the body: phlegm, blood, choler, and black bile. As any one of these predominates it determines the temper of the mind and body; hence the expressions sanguine, choleric, phlegmatic, and melancholic humours. A just balance made a good compound called "good humour"; a preponderance of any one of the four made a bad compound called an ill or evil humour. See Ben Jonson's Every Man Out of His Humour (Prologue).

Humpback. The. Geronimo Amelunghi, Il Gobbo di Pisa, an Italian burlesque poet of the mid-16th century.

Andrea Solario, the Italian painter, Del Gobbo (1470-1527).

Humphrey. To dine with Duke Humphrey. To have no dinner to go to. Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, son of Henry IV, the "Good Duke Humphrey" (see under Good), was renowned for his hospitality. At death it was reported that a monument would be erected to him in St. Paul's but his body was interred at St. Albans. The tomb of Sir John Beauchamp (d. 1358), on the south side of the nave of old St. Paul's, was popularly supposed to be that of the Duke; and when the promenaders left for dinner, the poor stay-behinds who had no dinner to go to, or who feared to leave the precincts of the cathedral because, once outside they could be arrested for debt, used to say to the gay sparks who asked if they were going, that they would "dine with Duke Humphrey" that day.

The expression used to be very common; and a similar one was To sup with Sir Thomas Gresham, the Exchange built by Sir Thomas being a common lounge.

Though little coin thy purseless pocket line,
Yet with great company thou art taken up;
For often with Duke Humphrey thou dost dine,
And often with Sir Thomas Gresham sup.
HAYMAN: Quodlibet (Epigram on a Loafer), 1628.

Humpty Dumpty. A little deformed dwarf, "humpty" and "dumpty." There used to be a drink of this name, composed of ale boiled with brandy; and it is also applied—in allusion to the old nursery rhyme—to an egg, and to anything that is, or may be, irretrievably shattered.

Hunch, a colloquial term—originally American—for a premonition, a shrewd guess.

Hundred. An English county division dating from pre-Conquest times, and supposed to be so called either because it comprised exactly one hundred hides of land, or one hundred families, grouped together for civil and military purposes, these families being collectively responsible to the authorities in case of crime within the "hundred."

Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, and Durham were divided into "wards" (q.v.).

Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, and Notts, into "wapentakes" (q.v.). Yorkshire has also three special divisions called "ridings" (q.v.).

Kent was divided into five "lathes" (q.v.), with subordinate hundreds.

Sussex into six "rapes" (q.v.), with subordinate hundreds.

Great, or long hundreds. Six score, a hundred and twenty.

Hero of the hundred fights. Conn, a legendary Irish king, was so called by O'Gríve, the bard of O'Neil: "Conn, of the hundred fights, sleeps in his grass-grown tomb." The epithet has also been applied to Nelson, Wellington, and other famous commanders.

Hundreds and thousands. A name given by sweet-stuff-sellers to almost any very tiny comfits.

It will be all the same a hundred years hence. An exclamation of resignation—it doesn't much matter what happens. It is an old saying, and occurs in Ray's Collection, 1742. A similar one is:—

A thousand pounds and a bottle of hay
Is all one thing at Doom's-day.—Ray.

Not a hundred miles off. An indirect way of saying in this very neighbourhood, or very spot. The phrase is employed when it would be indiscreet or dangerous to refer more directly to the person or place hinted at.

The Chiltern Hundreds. See CHILTERN.

The Hundred Days. The days between March 20th, 1815, when Napoleon reached the Tuileries, after his escape from Elba, and June 28th, the date of the second restoration of Louis XVIII. These hundred days were noted for five things:

The additional Act to the constitutions of the empire,

April 22;

The Coalition;

The Champ de Mai, June 1;

The battle of Waterloo, June 18;

The second abdication of Napoleon in favour of his son, June 22.

Napoleon left Elba February 26th; landed near Cannes March 1st, entered Paris March 20th, and signed his abdication June 22nd.

The address of the prefect of Paris to Louis XVIII on his second restoration begins: "A hundred days, sire, have elapsed since the fatal moment when your Majesty was forced to quit your capital in the midst of tears." This is the origin of the phrase.

The Hundred-eyed. Argus, in Greek and Latin fable. Juno appointed him guardian of Io (the cow), but Jupiter caused him to be put to death; whereupon Juno transplanted his eyes into the tail of her peacock.

The Hundred-handed. Three of the sons of Uranus, viz. Ægeon or Briareus, Kottos, and Gyges or Gyes. After the war between Zeus and the Titans, when the latter were overcome and hurled into Tartarus, the Hundred-handed ones were set to keep watch and ward over them.

Sometimes Cerberus (q.v.) is so called, because from his three necks sprang writhing snakes instead of hair.

The Hundred Years War. The long series of wars between France and England, beginning in the reign of Edward III, 1337, and ending in that of Henry VI, 1453.

The first battle was a naval action off Sluys, and the last the fight at Castillon. It originated in English claims to the French Crown and resulted in the English being expelled from the whole of France, except Calais.

Hungary Water. Made of rosemary flowers and spirit, said to be so called because the receipt was given by a hermit to a Queen of Hungary.

Hungry. Hungry dogs will eat dirty puddings. See DOG.

There are many common similes expressive of hunger, among which are—hungry as a hawk, a hunter, a church mouse (cp. POOR), a dog. James Thomson (Seasons: Winter) has "Hungry as the grave," and Oliver Wendell Holmes "Hungry as the chap that said a turkey was too much for one, not enough for two."

The Hungry Forties. A term applied to the period prior to the repeal of the Corn Laws by Sir Robert Peel in 1846, when, owing to the high price of food, distress was very common among the poor.

Hunks. An old hunks. A screw, a hard, selfish, mean fellow. The term appears in late Elizabethan times—when it was a name commonly given to performing bears—and probably has its origin in some unknown person of cross (cp. "Cross as a bear") or miserly character.

Hunky, Hunky dory (hūng' ki, hūng' ki dōr' i), American slang for all's right, satisfactory.

Hunt. Like Hunt's dog, he would neither go to church nor stay at home. A Shropshire saying. The story is that one Hunt, a labouring man, kept a mastiff, which, on being shut up while his master went to church, howled and barked so as to disturb the whole congregation; whereupon Hunt thought he would take him to church the next Sunday, but the dog positively refused to enter. The proverb is applied to a self-willed person, who will neither be led nor driven.

Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Hunter. Characters in Pickwick Papers who hunt up the celebrities, or "lions," to grace their parties and bring them renown and reputation.

The hunter's moon. The month or moon following the "harvest moon" (q.v.). Hunting does not begin until after harvest.

The mighty hunter. Nimrod is so called (Gen. x, 9). The meaning seems to be a conqueror. Jeremiah says, "I [the Lord] will send for many hunters [warriors], and they shall hunt [chase] them [the Jews] from every mountain . . . and out of the holes of the rocks" (xvi, 16).

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began—

A mighty hunter, and his prey was man.

POPE: Windsor Castle.

Hunters and Runners of classic renown:—

ACASTUS, who took part in the famous Caledonian hunt (a wild boar).

ACTÆON, the famous huntsman who was transformed by Diana into a stag, because he chanced to see her bathing.

ADONIS, beloved by Venus, slain by a wild boar while hunting.

ADRASTUS, who was saved at the siege of Thebes by the speed of his horse ARION, given him by Hercules. ATALANTA, who promised to marry the man who could outstrip her in running.

CAMILLA, the swiftest-footed of all the companions of Diana.

LADAS, the swiftest-footed of all the runners of Alexander the Great.

MELEAGER, who took part in the great Calydonian boar-hunt.

ORION, the great and famous hunter, changed into the constellation, so conspicuous in November.

PHEDIPPIDES, who ran 135 miles in two days.

• He who hunts two hares leaves one and loses the other. No one can do well or properly two things at once, he "falls between two stools." "No man can serve two masters."

Like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin
And both neglect.—Hamlet, iii, 3.

Hunting the goulk, snark, etc. See these words.

To hunt with the bounds and run with the hare. See HARE.

Huntingdonians. Members of "the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion," a sect of Calvinistic Methodists founded in 1748 by Selina, widow of the ninth Earl of Huntingdon, and George Whitefield, who had become her chaplain. The churches founded by the Countess, numbering some 38, are mostly affiliated with the Congregational Union.

Hurdy-gurdy. A stringed musical instrument, like a rude guitar, the music of which is produced by the friction of a rosined wheel on the strings, which are stopped by means of keys. It had nothing whatever to do with the modern barrel-organ or piano-organ of the streets.

Hurlo-Thrumbo. A ridiculous burlesque, which in 1729-30 had an extraordinary run at the Haymarket theatre. So great was its popularity that a club called "The Hurlo-Thrumbo Society" was formed. The author was Samuel Johnson (1691-1773), a half-mad dancing master, who put this motto on the title-page when the burlesque was printed:—

Ye sons of fire, read my Hurlo-Thrumbo,
Turn it betwixt your finger and your thumb,
And being quite undone, be quite struck dumb.

Hurly-burly. Uproar, tumult, especially of battle. A reduplication of hurly. Cp. HULLA-BALOO.

Now day began to break, and the army to fall again into good order, and all the hurly-burly to cease.—North's Plutarch, Antonius (1579).

When the hurly-burly's done,
When the battle's lost and won.

The Witches, in Macbeth, i, 1.

In the Garden of Eloquence (1577) the word is given as a specimen of onomatopoeia.

Hurra's Nest (U.S.A.). A mess up, tangle—a phrase of nautical origin.

Hurrah. A later (17th cent.) form of the earlier huzza, an imitative sound expressing joy, enthusiasm, pleasure at victory, etc. The word may be connected with the Low Ger. hurra, in which case it was probably introduced by soldiers about the time of the Thirty Years War.

The Norman battle-cry was "Ha Rollo!" or "Ha Rou!"

Hurricane (hūr' i kán). An 18th-century term for a large private party or rout; so called from its hurry, bustle, and noise. Cp. DRUM.

There is a squeeze, a fuss, a drum, a rout, and lastly a hurricane, when the whole house is full from top to bottom.—Mrs. Barbauld (1779).

The word is West Indian, and was introduced through Spanish; it means a very violent storm of wind.

Hurry. An imitative word, probably connected with hurl (as in hurly-burly), which first appears in Shakespeare:—

She spied the hunted boar,
Whose frothy mouth . . .
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither.
Venus and Adonis, 904.

Don't hurry, Hopkins. A satirical reproof to those who are not prompt in their payments. It is said that one Hopkins, of Kentucky, gave a creditor a promissory note on which was this memorandum, "The said Hopkins is not to be hurried in paying the above."

Husband. The word is Anglo-Saxon, from hus, house, and Old Norse bondi, a freeholder or yeoman, from bua, to dwell; hence the word is literally, a house-owner in his capacity as head of the household, and so came to be applied to a man joined to a woman in marriage, who was, naturally, the head of his household. When Sir John Paston, writing to his mother in 1475, said:—
I purpose to leeffe alle heer, and come home to you and be your hisbonde and balyf, he was proposing to come and manage her household for her. We use the word in the same sense in such phrases as To husband one's resources.

Similarly a ship's husband is an official responsible for seeing that all the equipment, etc., necessary for going to sea is placed on board a ship before sailing, that all the regulations relating to the voyage are fulfilled, and that the captain is sufficiently furnished with money, etc., for carrying on business when in foreign or other ports.

Thomas Tusser was in error when he derived the word from "houseband," as in the following distich:—

The name of the husband, what is it to say?
Of wife and of house-hold the band and the stay.
Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry (1557).

Husbandry is merely the occupation of the (original) husband, i.e. the management of the household and what pertains thereto; it became restricted later to farm-management, and the husband became the husbandman.

I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house.

Merchant of Venice, iii, 4.

Hush. Hush-bush, a term that came into use in World War I to describe very secret operations, designs, or inventions.

Hush-money. Money given as a bribe for silence or "hushing" a matter up.

Hushai (hūsh' ī). In Dryden's Abalom and Achitophel (q.v.) is Laurence Hyde, Earl of Rochester (1641-1711).

Husking, Husking-bee, Husking-frolic. Corn-husking. In N. America in the 18th century this was a gathering for husking Indian corn, which frequently ended in a brawl.

Husky. In American usage this word is applied to a big, burly, strong man. As an abbreviation for the word Eskimo it is the name used for an Eskimo sledge dog.

Hussar (hu' zar'). An Hungarian word (huszar), which is ultimately from the same Greek word that gives us our corsair. It was applied in the time of Matthias Corvinus (mid-15th cent.), to a body of light horsemen, and was hence adopted in various European armies to denote light cavalry.

Hussites (hüs' itz). Followers of John Huss, the Bohemian reformer, in the 15th century. Cp. BETHLEMITES.

Hussy (hüz' i). Nowadays a word of contempt implying an ill-behaved girl, a "jade" or "minx," it is no other than the honourable appellation housewife (pron. "hussif"). Just as wench has come down in the world, so has hussy been degraded.

Hustings (hüs' tingz). An Anglo-Saxon word, meaning originally the immediate council of the king, from hus, house (i.e. the royal house), and thing, assembly: the hus-thing was the assembly of the house as apart from the thing, the general assembly of the people. London has still its Court of Hustings, which is held by the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, Recorder, and Aldermen to consider gifts offered to the City; this was formerly the supreme court (common pleas, probate, etc.) of the City. The hustings of elections were, previous to the Ballot Act of 1872, the platforms from which candidates made their election addresses, etc.; hence to be beaten at the hustings means to lose at an election.

A realistic impression of the old hustings at a Parliamentary election is given in Pickwick Papers (xiii).

Hutin (oo' tan). Louis le Hutin. Louis X (1289, 1314-16) was so nicknamed. It means "the quarreller," "the stubborn or headstrong one," and it is uncertain why the name was given to this insignificant king of France.

Hutkin. A word in some dialects for a cover for a sore finger, made by cutting off the finger of an old glove; called also, a hut, hutch, and hutchkin.

Huzza! An exclamation of joy or applause; the forerunner of Hurrah! (q.v.). The word has no etymology, being merely an extension of an involuntary vocable, such as Chut! or Pshaw!

Hyacinth (hi' á sinth). According to Greek fable, the son of Amyclas, a Spartan king. The lad was beloved by Apollo and Zephyr, and as he preferred the sun-god, Zephyr drove Apollo's quoit at his head, and killed him. The blood became a flower, and the petals are inscribed with the signature A I, meaning woe. (Virgil: Eclogues, iii, 106).

The hyacinth bewrays the doleful "A I,"
And culls the tribute of Apollo's sigh.
Still on its bloom the mournful flower retains
The lovely blue that dyed the stripling's veins.
CAMOENS: Lusiad, ix.

Hyades (hi' á dëz) (Gr. hœin, to rain). Seven nymphs placed among the stars, in the constellation Taurus, which threaten rain when they rise with the sun. The fable is that they wept the death of their brother Hyas so bitterly that Zeus, out of compassion, took them to heaven.

The seaman sees the Hyades
Gather an army of Cimmerian clouds . . .
All-fearful folds his sails, and sounds the main,
Lifting his prayers to the heavens for aid
Against the terror of the winds and waves.

MARLOWE: I Tamburlaine, III, ii.

Hybla (hib' la). A city and mountain in Sicily, famous for its honey. Cp. HYMETTUS.

For your words, they rob the Hybla bees
And leave them honeyless.

Ant.: Not stingless too.

Bru.: O, yes, and soundless too;

For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony,

And very wisely threat before you sting.

Julius Cæsar, v, 1.

Hydra (hi' drâ). A monster of the Lernean marshes, in Argolis. It has nine heads, and it was one of the twelve labours of Hercules to kill it. As soon as he struck off one of its heads, two shot up in its place; hence hydra-headed applies to a difficulty which goes on increasing as it is combated.

Hyena (hi ē' nâ). Held in veneration by the ancient Egyptians, it is fabled that a certain stone, called the "hyænia," is found in the eye of the creature, and Pliny asserts (Nat. Hist., xxxvii, 60) that when placed under the tongue it imparts the gift of prophecy.

The skillful Lapidarists of Germany affirm that this beast hath a stone in his eye (or rather his head) called Hyæna or Hyænius.—TOPSELL: Four-footed Beasts (1607).

Hygeia (hi jë' â). Goddess of health in Greek mythology, and the daughter of Æsculapius (q.v.). Her symbol was a serpent drinking from a cup in her hand.

Hyksos (hik' sos). A line of six or more foreign rulers over Egypt, known as the Shepherd Kings, who reigned for about 250 years between the XIIIth and XVIIIth Dynasties, i.e. about 2000 B.C. It is uncertain whence they came, who they were, what they did, or whither they went; they left little in the way of records or monuments, and practically all that is known of them is the (historically speaking) very unsatisfactory notice gleaned by Josephus from Manetho.

The exact nationality of the Hyksos is still a matter of dispute. All we know for certainty is that they came from Asia, and they brought with them in their train vast numbers of Semites.—SAYCE: Races of the Old Testament (1891).

Hylas (hi' lās). A boy beloved by Hercules, carried off by the nymphs while drawing water from a fountain in Mysia.

Hymen (hi' men). Properly, a marriage song of the ancient Greeks; later personified as the god of marriage, represented as a youth carrying a torch and veil—a more mature Eros, or Cupid.

Hymettus (hi met' ūs). A mountain in Attica, famous for its honey. Cp. HYBLA.

There, flowery hill, Hymettus, with the sound
Of bees' industrious murmur, oft invites
To studious musing.

MILTON: Paradise Regained, IV, 247.

Hymnus Eucharisticus. See EUCCHARIST.

Hyperbole (hī pār' bō lī). The rhetorical figure of speech which consists of exaggeration or extravagance in statement for the purpose of giving effect but not intended to be taken au pied de la lettre—e.g. "the waves were mountains high."

Hyperboles are of two kinds; either such as are employed in description, or such as are suggested by the warmth of passion.—LINDLEY MURRAY: English Grammar, I, p. 510.

Hyberboreans (hī pār' bōr' i ānz). A happy people of early Greek legend, who were supposed to dwell on the other side of the spot where the North Wind has its birth, and therefore to enjoy perpetual warmth and sunshine. They were said to be the oldest of the human race, the most virtuous, and the most happy; to dwell for some thousand years under a cloudless sky, in fields yielding double harvests, and in the enjoyment of perpetual Spring.

Later fable held that they had not an atmosphere like our own, but one consisting wholly of feathers. Both Herodotus and Pliny mention this fiction, which they say was suggested by the quantity of snow observed to fall in those regions. (Herodotus, iv, 31.)

Hyperion (hī pār' i on). In Greek mythology, one of the Titans, son of Uranus and Ge, and father of Helios, Selene, and Eos (the Sun, Moon, and Dawn). The name is sometimes given by poets to the sun itself, but not by Keats in his wonderful "poetical fragment" of this name (1820).

Hypermnestra (hī pār' nes' trā). Wife of Lynceus and the only one of the fifty daughters of Danaos who did not murder her husband on their bridal night. See DANAIDES.

Hypnotism (hip' nō tizm). The art of producing trance-sleep, or the state of being hypnotized. Dr. James Braid of Manchester gave it this name (1843), after first having called it neuro-hypnotism, an inducing to sleep of the nerves (Gr.).

The method, discovered by Mr. Braid, of producing this state . . . appropriately designated . . . hypnotism consists in the maintenance of a fixed gaze for several minutes . . . on a bright object placed somewhat above [the line of sight], at so short a distance [as to produce pain].—CARPENTER: Principles of Mental Physiology, II, 1.

Hypochondria (hī pō kon' dri ā) (Gr. hypo, chondros, under the cartilage—i.e. the spaces on each side of the epigastric region). A morbid depression of spirits for which there is no known or defined cause, so called because it was supposed to be caused by some derangement in these parts, which were held to be the seat of melancholy.

Hypocrite (hip' ō krit). Prince of hypocrites. Tiberius Cæsar (42 B.C., A.D. 14 to 37) was so called because he affected a great regard for decency, but indulged in the most detestable lust and cruelty.

Abdallah Ibn Obba and his partisans were called The Hypocrites by Mohammed, because they feigned to be friends, but were in reality foes.

Hypocrites' Isle. See CHANEPH.

Hypodorian Mode. See ÆOLIAN.

Hypostatic Union (hī pō stāt' ik). The union of the three Persons in the Trinity; also the union of the Divine and Human in Christ. The hypostasis (Gr. hypo, under, stasis, standing, hence foundation, essence) is the personal existence as distinguished from both nature and substance.

Hyson (hi' son). One of the varieties of Chinese green tea; so called from hei-ch'un, bright spring. Young hyson, a still better variety, is Yu-ch'ien, before the rains, meaning that the leaf is picked before the commencement of the rainy season.

Hyssop (his' ōp). David says (Ps. li, 7): "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean." The reference is to the custom of ceremonially sprinkling the unclean with a bunch of hyssop (marjorum or the thorny caper) dipped in water in which had been mixed the ashes of a red heifer. This was done as they left the Court of the Gentiles to enter the Court of the Women (Numb. xix, 17, 18).

Hysteron Proteron (his' tēr on prō' tēr on), from the Greek meaning "hinder foremost," is a term used in logic and rhetoric to describe a figure of speech in which the word that should come last is placed first, or the second of two consecutive propositions is stated first, e.g. "Let us die, and rush into the midst of the fray."

I

I. The ninth letter of the alphabet, also of the futhorc (q.v.), representing the Greek iota and Semitic yod. The written (and printed) i and j were for long interchangeable; it was only in the 19th century that in dictionaries, etc., they were treated as separate letters (in Johnson's Dictionary, for instance, iambic comes between iamb and jangle), and hence in many series—such as the signatures of sheets in a book, hall-marks on plate, etc.—either I or J is omitted. Cp. U.

The dot on the small i is not originally part of the letter, but was introduced about the 11th century as a diacritic in cases where two i's came together (e.g. filii) to distinguish between these and u.

To dot the i's and cross the t's. To be meticulous, particularly about things of apparently little consequence, to clinch an agreement.

Iambic (ī ām' bik). An iamb, or iambus, is a metrical foot consisting of a short syllable followed by a long one, as away, deduce, or an unaccented followed by an accented, as be gone! Iambic verse is verse based on iambs, as, for instance, the Alexandrine measure, which consists of six iambuses:—

I think the thoughts you think; and if I have the knack
Of fitting thoughts to words, you peradventure lack.
Envy me not the chance, yourselves more fortunate!
BROWNING: Fifine at the Fair, lxxv.

Father of Iambic verse, Archilochos of Paros (fl. c. 700 B.C.).

Ianthé (i ǎn' thi), a Cretan girl who, as told in Ovid's Metamorphoses, ix, 5, married Iphus, who had been transformed for the purpose, from a girl into a young man. The Ianthé to whom Lord Byron dedicated his Childe Harold, was Lady Charlotte Harley, born 1801, and only eleven years old at the time. Shelley gave the name to his infant daughter.

Iapetus (i ǎp' é tos). Son of Uranus and Ge, father of Atlas, Prometheus, Epimetheus, and Menœtus, and ancestor of the human race, hence called genus Iapeti, the progeny of Iapetus.

Iberia (i bër' i á), Spain; the country of the Iberus, the ancient name of the river Ebro. The Iberians were the prehistoric, non-Aryan inhabitants of the peninsula, probably of African origin. The Spanish Basques are their nearest modern representatives.

Iberia's Pilot. Christopher Columbus (1446?-1507).

Launched with Iberia's pilot from the steep,
To worlds unknown, and isles beyond the deep.
CAMPBELL: The Pleasures of Hope, ii.

Ibid. (ib' id). A contraction of Lat. ibidem, in the same place.

Ibis (i' bis). A sacred bird of the ancient Egyptians, specially connected with the god Thoth, who in the guise of an Ibis escaped the pursuit of Typhon. Its white plumage symbolized the light of the sun, and its black neck the shadow of the moon, its body a heart, and its legs a triangle. It was said that it drank only the purest of water, and that the bird was so fond of Egypt that it would pine to death if transported elsewhere. The practical reason for the protecuon of the Ibis—for it was a crime to kill it—was that it devoured crocodiles' eggs, serpents and all sorts of noxious reptiles and insects. Cp. ICHNEUMON.

Iblis. See EBLIS.

Ibrahim (ib' rá him). The Abraham of the Koran.

Icarius (i kár' i ūs). In Greek legend an Athenian who was taught the cultivation of the vine by Dionysus (Bacchus). He was slain by some peasants who had become intoxicated with wine he had given them, and who thought they had been poisoned. They buried the body under a tree; his daughter Erigone, searching for her father, was directed to the spot by the howling of his dog Mœra, and when she discovered the body she hanged herself for grief. Icarus became the constellation Boötes, Erigone the constellation Virgo, and Mœra the star Procyon, which rises in July, a little before the dog-star.

Icarus (ik' á rus). Son of Dædalus (q.v.). He flew with his father from Crete; but the sun melted the wax with which his wings were fastened on, and he fell into the sea. Those waters of the Ægean were thenceforward called the Icarian Sea.

Ice. Ice age. There have been several glacial epochs, but what is commonly known by that name was the earlier part of the existing geological period, the Pleistocene, when a considerable portion of the northern hemisphere was overwhelmed by ice caps or ice sheets. Ice covered large areas of north-western Europe, Canada, and the U.S.A., and as it melted the included stones were spread out in vast sheets of irregular deposits. Man was contemporary with at least the latter periods of the Ice Age, his remains having been found in England and France together with the mammoth and reindeer in beds earlier than the last glacial deposits. Science has as yet found no satisfactory explanation of the causes of the Ice Age.

A sword of ice-brook temper. Of the very best quality. The Spaniards used to plunge their swords and other weapons, while hot from the forge, into the brook Salo [Xalon], near Bilbilis, in Celtiberia, to harden them. The water of this brook is very cold.

It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook temper

Othello, v, 2.

Ice Saints or Frost Saints. Those saints whose days fall in what is called "the black-thorn winter"—that is, the second week in May (between 11 and 14). Some give only three days, but whether 11, 12, 13 or 12, 13, 14 is not agreed. May 11th is the day of St. Mamertus, May 12th of St. Pancras, May 13th of St. Servatius, and May 14th of St. Boniface.

The ice-blink. The name given by mariners to a luminous appearance of the sky, caused by the reflection of light from ice. If the sky is dark or brown, the navigator may be sure that there is water; if it is white, rosy, or orange-coloured, he may be certain there is ice. The former is called a "water sky," the latter an "ice sky."

The Danish name for the great ice-cliffs of Greenland is "The Ice-blink."

To break the ice. To broach a disagreeable subject; to open the way, take the first step, make the plunge

[We] An' if you break the ice, and do this feat. . .
Will not so graceless be, to be ingrate.

Taming of the Shrew, i, 2.

To skate over thin ice. To take unnecessary risks, especially in conversation or argument; to touch on dangerous subjects very lightly.

Iceberg. A mass of ice, broken from a glacier which ends in the sea, and floated about the ocean by the currents. The magnitude of some icebergs is considerable. One seen off the Cape of Good Hope was two miles in circumference, and a hundred and fifty feet high. For every cubic foot above water there must be at least eight cubic feet below; their weight must be enormous, and the danger to shipping—witness the Titanic disaster of April, 1912—is very great.

Iceland Dogs. Shaggy, white dogs, once great favourites as lap-dogs. Shakespeare mentions them in Henry V, where he makes Pistol call Nym in contempt a "prick-eared cur of Iceland."

Iceland dogges curled and rough all over, which, by reason of the length of their heire make shoue neither of face nor of body.—FLEMING: Of English Dogges (1576).

Iceni. See WARRIOR QUEEN.

Ich Dien (ik dën). According to a Welsh tradition, Edward I promised to provide Wales with a prince "who could speak no word of English," and when his second son Edward (afterwards Edward II) was born at Carnarvon he presented him to the assembly, saying in Welsh Eich dyn (behold the man). The words are actually German, meaning "I serve," and are erroneously said to have been adopted as the Prince of Wales's motto by the Black Prince, together with the three white ostrich plumes, from John, King of Bohemia, who fell at the Battle of Crecy, 1346.

Ichabod (ik' a bod). A son of Phinehas, born just after the death of his father and grandfather (1 Sam. iv, 21). The name (Heb. I-kab-hoth) means "where is the glory?" It is usually popularly translated by "the glory has departed."

Ichneumon (ik nū' mon). A weasel-like animal (also called "Pharaoh's rat") found in Egypt and venerated by the ancient Egyptians because, like the ibis (q.v.), it feeds on serpents, mice, and other vermin, and is especially fond of crocodiles' eggs. According to legend, it steals into the mouths of crocodiles when they gape, and eats out their bowels. The name is Greek, and means "one who tracks, or traces out."

Ichor (i' kôr). In classical mythology, the colourless blood of the gods. (Gr., juice.)

[St. Peter] patter'd with his keys at a great rate,
And sweated through his apostolic skin:
Of course his perspiration was but ichor,
Or some such other spiritual liquor.

BYRON: Vision of Judgment, xxv.

Ichthus (ik' thús). Greek for "fish," which in primitive times was used as a symbol of Christ because the word is formed of the initial letters *I*esous *C*hristos, *T*Heou *U*ios, *S*oter, *J*esus Christ, Son of God, Saviour. This notarica is found on many seals, rings, urns, and tombstones belonging to the early times of Christianity, and was supposed to be a "charm" of mystical efficacy.

Icknield Street, or Way. One of the principal of the old "Roman" roads in Britain. It crossed the country from Norfolk to Cornwall, and large parts of it date from pre-Roman times.

Its name of the Icknield Way connects this road with the Iceni, whom the Romans found settled in our Norfolk and Suffolk, and points back to days in which this tribe stood supreme in south east Britain.—J. R. GREEN: Making of England, ch. iiii.

Icon or Ikon (i' kon), from the Greek eikon, an image or likeness, is a representation in the form of painting, low-relief sculpture or mosaic of some sacred personage in the Eastern Church. Excepting the face and hands, the whole is often covered with an embossed metal plaque representing the figure and drapery. Icons are greatly venerated by the Russian peasantry.

Icon Basilike. See EIKON BASILIKE.

Iconoclasts (Gr., "image breakers"). Reformers who rose in the Eastern Church in the 8th century, and were specially opposed to the employment of pictures, statues, emblems, and all visible representations of sacred objects. The crusade against these things began in 726 with the Emperor Leo III (the Isaurian), and continued for one hundred and twenty years under Constantine Copronymus, Leo the Armenian, Theophilus, and other Byzantine Emperors, who are known as the Iconoclast Emperors.

Id, in Freudian psychology is the whole reservoir of impulsive reactions that forms the mind, of which the ego is a superficial layer. It is the totality of impulses or instincts comprising the true unconscious mind.

Ideal Republics. See COMMONWEALTHS.

Idealism. Subjective idealism, taught by Fichte (1762-1814), supposes the object (say a tree) and the image of it on the mind are one. Or rather, that there is no object outside the mental idea.

Objective idealism, taught by Schelling (1775-1854), supposes that the tree and the image thereof on the mind are distinct from each other.

Absolute idealism, taught by Hegel (1770-1831), supposes there is no such thing as phenomena; that mind, through the senses, creates its own world. In fact, that there is no real, but all is ideal.

Personal idealism, as expounded by William James (1842-1910), lays special emphasis on the authority of the will and the initiative of the self in experience, as opposed to the tendency of absolute idealism to minimize the working of the individual soul.

Idealists. They may be divided into two distinct sections—

(1) Those who follow Plato, who taught that before creation there existed certain types or ideal models, of which ideas created objects are the visible images, Malebranche, Kant, Schelling, Hegel, etc., were of this school.

(2) Those who maintain that all phenomena are only subjective—that is, mental cognizances only within ourselves, and what we see and what we hear are only brain impressions. Of this school were Berkeley, Hume, Fichte, and many others.

Ides (idz). In the Roman calendar the 15th of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of all the other months; always eight days after the Nones.

Beware the Ides of March. Said as a warning of impending and certain danger. The allusion is the warning received by Julius Cæsar before his assassination:—

Furthermore, there was a certain soothsayer that had given Cæsar warning long time afore, to take heed of the day of the Ides of March (which is the fifteenth of the month), for on that day he should be in great danger. That day being come, Cæsar going into the Senate-house and speaking merrily unto the soothsayer, told him, "The Ides of March be come"; "So be they," softly answered the soothsayer, "but yet are they not past."—PLUTARCH: Julius Cæsar (North's trans.).

See also Julius Cæsar, i, 2, iiii, 1, etc.

Idiot. Originally—in Greece—a private person, one not engaged in any public office, hence an uneducated, ignorant person. Jeremy Taylor says, "Humility is a duty in great ones, as well as in idiots" (private persons). The Greeks have the expressions, "a priest or an idiot"

(layman), "a poet or an idiot" (prose-writer). In 1 Cor. xiv, 16, where the Authorized Version has "how shall he who occupieth the place of the unlearned say Amen . . . ?" Wyclif's version reads ". . . who fillith the place of an idyot, how schal he seie amen . . . ?"

Idle Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Ido (ē' dō), an international language invented by Louis Couturat in 1907. It was a modification of Esperanto—indeed, the name is Esperanto for "offspring"—but was said to be simpler and free of many of the defects of that language.

Idomeneus (i dom' in ūs). King of Crete, an ally of the Greeks at Troy. After the city was burnt he made a vow to sacrifice whatever he first encountered, if the gods granted him a safe return to his kingdom. It was his own son that he first met; he offered him up to fulfil his vow, but a plague followed, and the king was banished from Crete as a murderer. (Iliad.) Cp. IPHIGENIA.

Iduna or Idum (i dū' nā, i dūn'). In Scandinavian mythology, daughter of the dwarf Svold, and wife of Bragi. She was guardian of the golden apples which the gods tasted as often as they wished to renew their youth.

Ifreet. See AFREET.

Ifs and Ans.

If ifs and ans
Were pots and pans
Where would be the tinker?

An old-fashioned jingle to describe wishful thinking. The "ans"—often erroneously written "ands"—is merely the old "an" for "if."

Igerna. See IGRAINE.

Ignatius, St. (ig nā' shūs). According to tradition, St. Ignatius was the little child whom our Saviour set in the midst of His disciples for their example. He was a convert of St. John the Evangelist, was consecrated Bishop of Antioch by St. Peter, and is said to have been thrown to the beasts in the amphitheatre by Trajan, about 107. He is commemorated on February 1st, and is represented in art accompanied by lions, or chained and exposed to them, in allusion to his martyrdom.

Father Ignatius. The Rev. Joseph Leycester Lyne (1837-1908), a deacon of the Church of England, who founded a pseudo-Benedictine monastery at Llanthony, N. Wales. He was an eloquent preacher, but his ritualistic practices brought him into conflict with his ecclesiastical superiors. He was never ordained priest in the Anglican Church but secured an irregular ordination through a dissident priest of an Oriental rite.

The Hon. and Rev. Geo. Spencer (1799-1864), a clergyman of the Church of England who joined the Roman communion, and became Superior of the English province of the Congregation of Passionists, was also known as "Father Ignatius."

St. Ignatius Loyola. See LOYOLA.

Ignis Fatuus (ig' nis fāt' ū ūs). The "Will o' the wisp" or "Friar's lantern" (q.v.), a flame-like phosphorescence flitting over marshy ground (due to the spontaneous combustion of gases from decaying vegetable matter), and deluding people who attempt to follow it: hence, any delusive aim or object, or some Utopian scheme that is utterly impracticable. The name means "a foolish fire"; it is also called "Jack o' Lantern," "Spunkie," "Walking Fire," and "Fair Maid of Ireland."

When thou rankest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money.—1 Henry IV. iii, 3.

According to a Russian superstition, these wandering fires are the spirits of still-born children which flit between heaven and the Inferno.

Ignoramus (ig nōr ā' mus). One who ignores the knowledge of something; one really unacquainted with it. It is an ancient law term. The grand jury used to write Ignoramus on the back of indictments "not found" or not to be sent into court. Hence ignore.

Ignorantines (ig nōr ān' tīnz). A name given to the Brothers of Charity, or Brethren of Saint Jean-de-Dieu, an order of Augustinian mendicants founded in 1495 in Portugal by John of Monte Major (d. 1550) to minister to the sick poor, and introduced into France by Marie de' Medici.

It was also given later, to a religious association founded by the Abbé de la Salle in 1724 in France, for educating gratuitously the children of the poor.

Igraine (i grān). Wife of Gorlois (q.v.), Duke of Tintagel, in Cornwall, and mother of King Arthur. His father, Uther Pendragon, married Igraine thirteen days after her husband was slain.

Iguanodon (i gwān' ō don), one of the dinosaurs; a land reptile from 15 ft. to 25 ft. long with a small head, heavy jaws set with teeth like those of the modern iguana, and flexible lips. The creature supported itself on its two hind legs and powerful tail, its front limbs being comparatively small.

Ihram (i rām). The ceremonial garb of Mohammedan pilgrims to Mecca; also, the ceremony of assuming it.

We prepared to perform the ceremony of Al-Ihram (assuming the pilgrim garb) . . . we donned the attire, which is nothing but two new cotton cloths, each six feet long by three and a half broad, white with narrow red stripes and fringes. . . . One of these stripes, technically armed the Rida, is thrown over the back, and, exposing the arm and shoulder, is knotted at the right side in the style of Wishah. The Izar is wrapped round the loins from waist to knee, and, knotted or tucked in at the middle, supports itself.—BURTON: Pilgrimage to Al-Madinah and Mecca, xxvi.

I.H.S.—i.e. the Greek ΙΗΣ, meaning ΙΗΣους (Jesus), the long e (H) being mistaken for a capital H, and the dash perverted into a cross. The letters being thus obtained, St. Bernardine of Siena, in 1347, applied them to Jesus Hominum Salvator (Jesus, the Saviour of men), another application being In hac salus (safety in this i.e. the Cross).

Iliad (il' i ād) (Gr. Ilias, gen. Iliados, the land of Ilium). The tale of the siege of Troy, or Ilium, an epic poem attributed to Homer (q.v.), in twenty-four books. Menelaus, King of Sparta, received as his guest Paris, a son of Priam,

King of Troy, who ran away with Helen, wife of Menelaus. Menelaus induced the Greeks to lay siege to Troy to avenge the perfidy, and the siege lasted ten years. The poem begins in the tenth year with a quarrel between Agamemnon, King of Mycenæ and commander-in-chief of the allied Greeks, and Achilles, the hero who had retired from the army in ill temper. The Trojans now prevail, and Achilles sends his friend Patroclus to oppose them, but Patroclus is slain. Achilles, in a desperate rage, rushes into the battle, and slays Hector, the commander of the Trojan army. The poem ends with the funeral rites of Hector.

An Iliad of woes. A number of evils falling one after another; there is scarce a calamity in the whole catalogue of human ills that finds not mention in the Iliad.

Demosthenes used the phrase (Ilias kakon), and it was adopted by Cicero (Ilias malorum) in his Ad Atticum, viii, 11.

It opens another Iliad of woes to Europe.

BURKE: On a Regicide Peace, ii.

The Iliad in a nutshell. See NUTSHELL.

The French Iliad. The Romance of the Rose (see ROSE) has been so called. Similarly, the Nibelungenlied (q.v.) and the Lusiad (q.v.) have been called respectively the German and Portuguese Iliad.

Ilk (A.S. ilca, the same). Only used—correctly—in the phrase of that ilk, when the surname of the person spoken of is the same as the name of his estate; Bethune of that ilk means "Bethune of Bethune." It is a mistake to use the phrase "All that ilk" to signify all of that name or family.

Illegitimates. An old Australian slang phrase applied to early settlers who came to the country voluntarily, and not for "legal" reasons—i.e. as convicts.

Illinois. Originally the name of a confederacy of North American Indian tribes who were allied to the French. Illini means "man," and the French substituted their plural termination -ois for the Indian -uk.

Illinois nut. The pecan.

III May-day. See EVIL MAY-DAY.

Ill-starred. Unlucky; fated to be unfortunate. Othello says of Desdemona, "O ill-starred wench!" The allusion is to the astrological dogma that the stars influence the fortunes of mankind.

Illuminated Doctor. Raymond Lully (1254-1315), the Spanish scholastic philosopher; also Johann Tauler (1294-1361), the German mystic.

Illuminati. The baptised were at one time so called, because a lighted candle was given them to hold as a symbol that they were illuminated by the Holy Ghost.

The name has been given to, or adopted by, several sects and secret societies professing to have superior enlightenment, especially to a republican society of deists, founded by Adam Weishaupt (1748-1830) at Ingoldstadt in Bavaria in 1776, having for its object the establishment of a religion consistent with "sound reason."

Among others to whom the name has been applied are the Hesychasts; the Alombrados, a Spanish sect founded about 1575 by the Carmelite, Catherine de Jesus, and John of Willelundo, the members of which rejected the sacraments; the French Guerinists; the Rosicrucians (q.v.); and in the U.S.A. to the Jeffersonians, and (by them) to the Prince-tonians and opponents of Freemasonry.

Illuminator, The. The surname given to St. Gregory of Armenia (257-331), the apostle of Christianity among the Armenians.

Illustrious, The.

Albert V, Duke and second Emperor of Austria (1398-1439).

Nicomedes II of Bithynia (d. 89 B.C.).

Ptolemy V, King of Egypt, Epiphanes (210, 205-181 B.C.).

Jam-shid (Jam the Illustrious), nephew of Tah Omurs, fifth king of the Paisadian dynasty of Persia (about 840-800 B.C.).

Kien-long, fourth of the Manchu dynasty of China (1709-99).

Ilokano (ē lō ka' nō), an Indonesian language spoken in Luzon; but the term is also in use since World War II to describe a sort of lingua franca composed of Malay, English, and Spanish, common in the Philippines and adjacent islands of Malaysia.

Image-breakers, The. See ICONOCLASTS.

Imaum or Imam (i' mām, i mām'). A member of the priestly body of the Mohammedans. He recites the prayers and leads the devotions of the congregation. The Sultan of Turkey as "head of the Moslems" was an Imaum, and the title is also given to the Sultan of Muscat and to the heads of the four orthodox Moslem sects. The word means teacher or guide. Cp. ULEMA.

Imbrocata (im bro ka' ta) (Ital.). An old fencing term for a thrust over the arm.

If your enemy be cunning and skilful, never stand about giving any foine or imbrocata, but this thrust or stoccata alone, neither it also [never attempt] unless you be sure to hit him.—SAVILO: Practise of the Duello (1595).

Imbroglia (im brō lyō) (Ital.). A complicated plot; a misunderstanding of a complicated nature.

Immaculate Conception. This dogma, that the Virgin Mary was conceived without original sin, was first broached by St. Bernard, was stoutly maintained by Duns Scotus and his disciples, but was not declared by the Roman Catholic Church to be an article of faith till 1854. It was proclaimed by Pius IX in the bull Ineffabilis Deus in these words:—

That the most blessed Virgin Mary, in the first moment of her conception, by a special grace and privilege of Almighty God, in virtue of the merits of Christ, was preserved immaculate from all stain of original sin.

The Feast of the Immaculate Conception is celebrated on December 8th, and is a holiday of obligation (q.v.).

Immolate (im' ō lāt). To sacrifice; literally, "put meal on one" (Lat. immolare, to sprinkle with meal). The reference is to the ancient Roman custom of sprinkling wine and fragments of the sacred cake (mola salsa) on the head of a victim to be offered in sacrifice.

Immortal. The Immortal. Yōng-Tching (1723-36), third of the Manchu dynasty of China, assumed the title.

The Immortal Tinker. John Bunyan (1628-88), a tinker by trade.

The Immortals. The forty members of the French Academy; also the name given to a body of 10,000 foot-soldiers, which constituted the bodyguard of the ancient Persian kings, and to other highly trained troops.

In the British Army the 76th Foot were called "The Immortals," because so many were wounded, but not killed, in India (1788-1806). This regiment, with the old 33rd, now forms the two battalions of the West Riding regiment.

Imp. A graft (A.S. imþian), a shoot; hence offspring, and a child. In hawking, "to imp a feather" was to engraft or add a new feather for a broken one. The needles employed for the purpose were called "imping needles."

The noun "imp," child, did not formerly connote mischievousness as it now does; Thomas Cromwell, writing to Henry VIII, speaks of "that noble imp your son."

Let us pray for . . . the king's most excellent majesty and for . . . his beloved son Edward, our prince, that most angelic imp.—Pathway to prayer.

Milton calls the serpent "fittest imp of fraud" (Paradise Lost, ix, 89).

Lincoln Imp. See LINCOLN.

Impanation (im pā nā shon). The Lutheran dogma that the body and soul of Christ are infused into the eucharistic elements after consecration; and that the bread and wine are united with the body and soul of Christ in much the same way as the body and soul of man are united. The word means putting into the bread.

Imperial. From the Lat. imperialis, imperium, the word really means anything to do with an empire or emperor. Following are some of its special and particular applications:—

A standard size of printing paper measuring between 22 × 30 in. and 22 × 32 in. Also of writing paper measuring 22 × 30 in.

In Russia there used to be current a gold coin, value 15 roubles, called an "imperial."

A tuft of hair on the chin, all the rest of the beard and all the whiskers being shaved off. So called from the Emperor Napoleon III (1808-73), who set the fashion.

Imperial Conference. The origin of this goes back to Queen Victoria's Jubilee (1887) when the prime ministers of the various dominions were in London and met together to confer. Similar conferences were held in 1897, 1902, 1907, 1911, and since World War I it has met every few years in London or elsewhere.

Imperial Institute. A building erected in S. Kensington to commemorate the jubilee of Queen Victoria (1887) and opened in 1893. The name is also used for the Society which has its headquarters therein, the object of which is to assist in the development of the resources of the British Empire by arranging exhibitions and disseminating information.

The Imperial Service Order was instituted by Edward VII in 1902 for Civil Servants with long and meritorious records.

Imperialism, coming from the Latin imperium is applied in modern times to the belief in the expansion and development of an empire, more especially the British Empire. It came into use in the latter part of the 19th century, since when the word has gradually come to acquire a somewhat derogatory meaning, suggestive of jingoism.

Imposition. A task given in schools, etc., as a punishment. The word is taken from the verb impose, as the task is imposed. In the sense of a deception it means to "put a trick on a person," hence, the expression "to put on one," etc.

Imposition of hands. The bishop laying his hand on persons confirmed or ordained (Acts vi, viii, xix). See TO LAY HANDS ON under HAND.

Impossibilities (phrases).

Gathering grapes from thistles.
Fetching water in a sieve.
Washing a blackamoor white.
Catching wind in cabbage nets.
Flaying eels by the tail.
Making cheese of chalk.
Squaring the circle.
Turning base metal into gold.
Making a silk purse of a sow's ear.
(And hundreds more).

Impressionist. An important school in the history of painting. As the name implies, it desired to capture the impression of colour of transitory and volatile nature rather than its form. The first phase—the study of light—was headed by Edouard Manet (1832-83); the second, which specialized in "peinture claire"—an endeavour to eliminate grey and black from the palette and achieve the effects of light by dabs of pure juxtaposed colour—by Claude Monet (1840-1926).

Imprimatur (im pri mā' tūr). An official licence to print a book, especially a licence from the ecclesiastical authorities of the Catholic Church, or—where censorship exists—from the official censor. The word is the 3rd sing. pres. subj. of Lat. imprimere, "let it be printed."

What advantage is it to be a man, over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only escaped the ferula, to come under the fescue of an Imprimatur? If serious and elaborate writings, as if they were no more than the theme of a grammar-lad under his pedagogue, must not be uttered without the cursory eyes of a temporizing and extemporizing licenser?—MILTON: Areopagitica.

Impropriation. Profits of ecclesiastical property in the hands of a layman, who is called the impropriator. Appropriation is the term used when the profits of a benefice are in the hands of a college or spiritual corporation.

In Cœna Domini (in chā' na dom' i ni) (Lat., At the Lord's Supper). The papal bull published annually on Maundy Thursday (the Feast of the Lord's Supper) from the 14th century to 1770, fulminating curses and excommunications against all heretics and against all temporal powers and others who wronged the Church by taxing the clergy, levying on ecclesiastical lands, appealing to a general council, etc. It was added to and altered from time to time, and its ecclesiastical, as apart from its political, anathemas are included in the Apostolicæ Sedis, issued by Pius IX in 1869.

In commendam (in kom en' dām) (Lat., in trust). The holding of church preferment for a time, on the recommendation of the Crown, till a suitable person can be provided. Thus a benefice-holder who has become a bishop and is allowed to hold his living for a time is said to hold it in commendam.

In esse (in es' i). In actual existence (Lat. esse, to be), as opposed to in posse, in potentiality. Thus a living child is "in esse," but before birth is only "in posse."

In extenso (in eks ten' sō) (Lat.). At full length, word for word, without abridgment.

In extremis (in eks trē' mis) (Lat.). At the very point of death; in articulo mortis.

In flagrante delicto (in flā grān' te de lik' to). Red-handed; in the very fact (Lat., while the offence is flagrant).

In forma pauperis (in fōr' ma paw' pēris) (Lat.). In the character of a pauper. For many centuries in England persons without money or the means of obtaining it have been allowed to sue in the courts in forma pauperis, when the fees are remitted and the suitor is supplied gratis with the necessary legal advice, counsel, etc.

In gremio legis (in grē' mi ō lē' jis) (Lat.). Under the protection of (literally, at the breast of) the law.

In loco parentis (in lō' kō pa ren' tis). (Lat.). In the position of being in a parent's place.

In medias res (in mē' di ās rēs) (Lat.). In the middle of the subject. In novels and epic poetry, the author generally begins in medias res, and explains the preceding events as the tale unfolds. In history, on the other hand, the author begins ab ovo (q.v.).

In memoriam (in me mōr' iām) (Lat.). In memory of.

In partibus (in par' ti būs) (Lat.). A "bishop in partibus" was a bishop in any country, Christian or otherwise, whose title was from some old see fallen away from the Catholic faith. The full phrase was in partibus infidelium, in the regions of infidels, and the title was generally conferred on a Church dignitary without an actual see. Many of the sees having now again a considerable Christian population, Pope Leo XIII, in 1882, abolished the designation and substituted that of "titular" bishop or see.

In petto (in pet' ō) (Ital.). Held in reserve, kept back, something done privately, and not announced to the general public. (Lat. in pectore, in the breast.)

Cardinals in petto. Cardinals chosen by the Pope, but not yet publicly announced. Their names are in pectore (of the Pope).

In posse. See IN ESSE.

In propria persona (in prop' ri a pēr sō' nā) (Lat.). Personally, and not by deputy or agents.

In re (in rē) (Lat.). In the matter of; on the subject of; as In re Jones v. Robinson. But in rem, against the property or thing referred to.

In situ (in sī' tū) (Lat.). In its original place. I at first mistook it for a rock in situ, and took out my compass to observe the direction of its cleavage.—DARWIN: Voyage in the Beagle, ix.

In statu quo (in stāt' ū kwō) or In statu quo ante (Lat.). In the condition things were before the change took place. Thus, two nations arming for war may agree to lay down arms on condition that all things be restored to the same state as they were before they took up arms.

In toto (in tō' tō) (Lat.). Entirely, altogether.

In vacuo (in vāk' ū ō) (Lat.). In a vacuum—i.e. in a space from which, nominally all, and really almost all, the air has been taken away.

In vino veritas (Lat.). See VINO.

In-and-In. A game for three, played with four dice, once extremely common, and frequently alluded to. "In" is a throw of doubles, "in-and-in" a throw of double doubles, which sweeps the board.

I have seen . . . three persons sit down at twelve-penny In and In, and each draw forty shillings a-piece.—Nigger Nicked (1668: Harl. Misc., II).

Inaugurate. To install into some office with appropriate ceremonies, to open or introduce formally. From Lat. inaugurare, which meant first to take omens from the flight of birds by augury (q.v.), and then to consecrate or install after taking such omens.

Inbreed. See BAKER'S DOZEN.

Inca (ing' kā). A king or royal prince of the ancient Peruvians. Of this dynasty Manco Capac was the founder (c. A.D. 1240) and Atahualpa, murdered by the Spaniards in 1533, the last. The Inca Empire covered a wide area extending from Quito southwards into northern Chile, and from the Pacific seaboard to beyond the Andes, a region over 2,000 miles long and 500 miles wide, with its capital at Cuzco. The Incas were skilful agriculturists, and maintained an enlightened social and economic regime that has not been seen in S. America since their time.

The Inca was a war-chief, elected by the Council to carry out its decision.—BRINTON: The American Race (South American Tribes), pt. i, ch. ii, p. 211.

Inchcape Rock. A rocky reef (also known as the Bell Rock) about 12 miles from Arbroath in the North Sea (Inch or Innis means island). It is dangerous for navigators, and therefore the abbot of Arbroath, or "Aberbrothok," fixed a bell on a float, which gave notice to sailors of its whereabouts. Southey's ballad tells how Ralph the Rover, a sea pirate, cut the bell from the float, and was wrecked on his return home on the very rock.

A similar tale is told of St. Gwen's bell, in Pembrokeshire. In the chapel was a silver bell, which was stolen one summer evening by pirates, but no sooner had the boat put to sea than it was wrecked. The silver bell was carried by sea-nymphs to the brink of a well, and whenever the stone of that well is struck the bell is heard to moan.

Incog.—i.e. Incognito (in kog' ni tō) (Ital.). Under an assumed name or title. When a royal person travels, and does not wish to be treated with royal ceremony, he assumes some inferior title for the nonce, and travels incog.

Income Tax. From the days of the Revolution of 1688 English statesmen have taken steps in one direction or another to introduce a tax on incomes. The first workable tax of this nature was devised by William Pitt, in 1799, to finance the war with France. A tax of 10 per cent. was put on all incomes over £200, with a modified charge for those between that sum and £60, beneath which all were exempt. This tax was dropped in 1802 but the next year a new Income Tax was introduced on practically the same system of schedules, etc., as is still in force. Though aiming at only 5 per cent. of the income, this tax yielded as much as the earlier tax. The new tax was dropped in 1815, but it was renewed by Peel in 1842, with an exemption limit of £150 (in 1853 lowered to £100) at a rate varying between 6d. and 8d. in the £. In 1874-75 this sank so low as 2d. in the £. In the South African war the Income Tax rose to 1s.; in World War I to 6s. and in World War II to 10s. Since World War I a surtax has been charged in addition to the standard rate of Income Tax on incomes over £2,000.

In 1944 a system of Pay As You Earn (P.A.Y.E.) was introduced which facilitated the payment and collection of Income Tax by making the employer deduct the tax from the employee's wages.

Incorruptible, The. Robespierre. See SEA-GREEN.

Incubus (ing' kū búś). A nightmare, anything that weighs heavily on the mind. In mediæval times it denoted an evil spirit who was supposed to consort with women in their sleep. (Lat. incubo, nightmare, from incubare, to lie on.)

Merlin was the son of no mortal father, but of an Incubus; one of a class of beings not absolutely wicked, but far from good, who inhabit the regions of the air.—BULLFINCH: Age of Chivalry, pt. 1, ch. iii.

Indenture (in den' chûr). A written contract, especially one between an apprentice and his master; so called because the identical documents held by each party had their edges indented in such a manner that they would fit precisely into each other.

Independence Day. July 4th, which is kept as a national holiday in the United States of America, because the declaration by the American States, declaring the colonies free and independent and absolved from all allegiance to Great Britain, was signed on that day (1776).

Index. The "Roman Index" includes the Index Librorum Prohibitorum and the Index Expurgatorius. The former contains a list of such books as are absolutely forbidden to be read by Catholics. The latter contains such books as are forbidden till certain parts are omitted or amended. Rules for the guidance of the compilers were formulated by the Council of Trent (1563), and the first Index was published under Pius IV in 1564. The lists are made out by a board of cardinals (Congregation of the Index). Besides the Protestant Bibles, and the works of such schismatics as Arius and Calvin, we find in the lists the following well-known names:—

Of English authors: Addison, Bacon, Chaucer, Gibbon, Goldsmith, Hallam, Andrew Lang, Locke, J. S. Mill, Milton, Robertson, Whately, etc., and even some children's tales.

Of French authors: Arnauld, Descartes, Dumas, Fenelon, Hugo, Malebranche, Montaigne, Pascal, Renan, Taine, Voltaire, etc.

Of Italian authors: Dante, d'Annunzio, Guicciardini, Sismondi.

India. The independence of India was created by a Bill introduced on July 4th, 1947 and given the Royal Assent on the 19th of the same month. On August 15th British India became two dominions—India and Pakistan, the first mainly Hindu and the second almost entirely Moslem. Each has its own legislature and Governor General. Each independent state was left to decide for itself to which of the two dominions it would belong.

India is so named from Indus (the river), in Sanskrit Sindhu, in Persic Hindu (the water). Hindustan is the stan or "country" of the river Hindus.

India paper. A creamy-coloured printing-paper originally made in China and Japan from vegetable fibre, and used for taking off the finest proofs of engraved plates; hence India proof, the proof of an engraving on India paper, before lettering.

The India paper (or Oxford India paper) used for printing Bibles and high-class "thin paper" and "pocket" editions, is a very thin, tough, and opaque imitation of this.

Indian. American Indians. When Columbus landed on one of the Bahamas he thought that he had reached India, and in this belief gave the natives the name of Indians. Nowadays, in order to avoid ambiguity, the American Indians are known by ethnologists as Amerinds.

Indian Congress Party. This was founded in 1885 by A. O. Hume, with the object of consolidating union between England and India. It split on points of principle in 1907 and in 1920 became a vehicle for the dissemination of Gandhi's views and teachings. In 1927 Congress demanded independence as the goal of India, and to this end it strove until the goal was reached.

Indian drug or weed, The. Tobacco. Here the reference is, of course, to the West Indies.

His breath compounded of strong English beer,
And th' Indian drug, would suffer none come neere.

TAYLOR, the Water Poet (1630).

Indian file. One after the other, singly. The American Indians, when they go on an expedition, march one by one. The one behind carefully steps in the footprints of the one before, and the last man of the file is supposed to obliterate the footprints. Thus, neither the track nor the number of invaders can be traced.

Indian sugar. West Indian maple sugar.

Indian summer. The autumnal summer, occurring as a rule in the early part of October. It is often the finest and mildest part of the whole year, especially in North America.

The gilding of the Indian summer mellowed the pastures far and wide. The russet woods stood ripe to be stript, but were yet full of leaf. The purple of heath-bloom, faded but not withered, tinged the hills. . . . Fieldhead gardens bore the seal of gentle decay; . . . its time of flowers and even of fruit was over.—C. BRONTË: Shirley, ch. xxvii.

Indirect Taxation is the levying of a tax on commercial goods, etc., in such a way that the consumer pays both for the article and the tax.

Indo-European, a term invented by Thomas Young the Egyptologist in 1813 and later adopted by scientists to describe the race and language from which the main Indian and European peoples sprang. Anthropologists have devoted to the subject much study as yet inconclusive; philologists have classified the Indo-European languages in such broad groups as Greek; Latin; Celtic; Teutonic; Sanskrit and Iranian; Armenian; Slavonic; Albanian.

Indonesia (in dô nê' zhâ), a term that includes the islands of the Malay Archipelago and such islands as Sumatra, Java, Borneo, the Celebes, the Lesser Sunda Islands, the Moluccas, the Philippines.

Induction (Lat., the act of leading in). When a clergyman is inducted to a living he is led to the church door, and the ring which forms the handle is placed in his hand. The door being opened, he is next led into the church, and the fact is announced to the parish by tolling the bell.

Indulgence. In Catholic theology the remission before God of the temporal punishment due for those sins of which the guilt has been forgiven in the sacrament of Penance. The competent ecclesiastical authority grants such indulgences out of the Treasury of the Church (q.v.); they are either plenary or partial; partial remitting a part only of such punishment due for sin at any given moment, the proportion being expressed in terms of time (e.g. thirty days, seven years). The precise meaning of these terms has never been defined, but they date back to the ancient penitential discipline of the Church. In the Middle Ages indulgences were of high commercial value, and it was the sale of them that first roused the ire of Luther and prepared the way for the Reformation.

The Declaration of Indulgence. The proclamation of James II in 1687 which annulled religious tests and the penal laws against Roman Catholics and Dissenters. The refusal of certain ecclesiastics to read this in their churches led to the Trial of the Seven Bishops.

Industrial Revolution is the term applied to the social and economic changes that took place in Britain from the late 18th to the mid-19th century, when the introduction of machinery in manufacture and railways for transport entirely revolutionized the methods of living and the location of industries throughout the country.

Ineffable. See AFFABLE.

Inexpressibles. A euphemism for trousers—also known as unmentionables—in use in the 19th century. This absurdity is attributed to the satirical poet Peter Pindar, the pen-name of John Wolcott (1738-1819) who used it in a biting lampoon on the dandy Prince Regent (George IV).

Infallibility. The doctrine that the Pope, when speaking ex cathedra (q.v.) on a question of faith or morals, is free from error did not become an accepted dogma of the Church until the Vatican Council of 1870. The promulgation of the dogma, after having been agreed to by the council (many members dissenting or abstaining from voting), was publicly read by Pius IX at St. Peter's.

Infallibility does not involve inspiration or universal inerrability; the Pope does not originate new doctrines infallibly, his infallibility preserves him from making errors in defining truths of doctrines or morals.

Infant. Literally, one who is unable to speak (Lat. infans, ultimately from in, negative, and fari, to speak. Cp. INFAMOUS above). Used as a synonym of "childe," as in Childe Harold (q.v.), meaning a knight or youth of gentle birth, the word was once of common occurrence. Thus, as in the following passage, Spenser frequently refers to Prince Arthur in this way:—

The Infant harkened wisely to her tale,
And wondered much at Cupid's judg'ment wise.
Faerie Queene, VI, viii, 25.

Infanta. Any princess of the blood royal, except an heiress of the crown, was so called in Spain and in Portugal.

Infante. All the sons of the sovereigns of Spain bore this title, as did those of Portugal, except the crown prince, who was called in Spain the Prince of Asturias.

Infantry. Foot soldiers. This is the same word as infant (q.v.); it is the Italian infanteria, a foot soldier, from infanta, a youth; hence, one who is too inexperienced to serve in the cavalry.

Inferiority Complex. A psycho-analytical term for a complex resulting from a sense of inferiority dating from childhood. Over-compensation for that feeling produces, it is suggested, an exaggerated or even abnormal desire for success, power, and accomplishment, and frequently a conceited and pushing attitude.

Infernal Column. So the corps of Latour d'Auvergne (1743-1800)—"the first Grenadier of France"—was called, from its terrible charges with the bayonet.

The same name—Colonnes infernales—was given, because of their brutality, to the twelve bodies of republican troops which "pacified" La Vendée in 1793, under General Thurreau.

Inferno (in fêr' nô). We have Dante's notion of the infernal regions in his Inferno; Homer's in the Odyssey, Bk. xi; Virgil's in the Aeneid, Bk. vi; Spenser's in the Faerie Queene, Bk. ii, canto 7; Ariosto's in Orlando Furioso, Bk. xvii; Tasso's in Jerusalem Delivered, Bk. iv.; Milton's in Paradise Lost; Fénelon's in Télémaque, Bk. xviii; and Beckford's in his romance of Vathek. See HELL; HADES.

Informer. Readers of Pickwick Papers and other novels of the period will find references to police informers. Before the organization of the police and detective forces a thriving trade used to be driven by a certain class of persons who frequented the streets and public places on the look-out for anyone committing minor illegal acts, which they reported to the authorities for a small fee.

Infra dig. Not befitting one's position and Public character. Short for Lat. infra dignitatem, beneath (one's) dignity.

Infralapsarian. The same as a SUBLAPSARIAN (q.v.).

Ingoldshy (ing' göldz bi). The pseudonym of the Rev. Richard Harris Barham (1788-1845), as author of the Ingoldshy Legends, which appeared in Bentley's Miscellany and the New Monthly Magazine, and later (1840 and 1847) in book form.

Ingrain Colours. See KNAVE IN GRAIN under GRAIN.

Inhibition, in psychology, is an unconscious force forbidding what would otherwise be an impulse or urge.

Injunction. A writ forbidding a person to encroach on another's privileges; as, to sell a book which is only a colourable copy of another author's book; or to infringe a patent; or to perform a play based on a novel without permission of the novelist; or to publish a book the rights of which are reserved. Injunctions are of two sorts—temporary and perpetual. The first is limited "till the coming on of the defendant's answer"; the latter is based on the merits of the case, and is of perpetual force.

Ink. From Lat. encaustum (Gr. enkaustos, burnt in), the name given to the purple fluid used by the Roman emperors for writing with.

Inkhorn terms. A common term in Elizabethan times for pedantic expressions which smell of the lamp. The inkhorn was the receptacle for ink which pedants and pedagogues wore fastened to the clothing.

I know them that thinke rhetorique to stand, whole upon darke wordes, and hee that can catch an ynke horne terme by the taile, him they coumpt to be a fine Englishman.—WILSON: Arte of Rhetorique (1553).

Shakespeare uses the phrase, an "Inkhorn mate" (1 Henry VI, iii, 1).

Ink-slinger (U.S.A., ink-jerker). A contemptuous name for a writer, especially for a newspaper journalist.

Inn. The word is Anglo-Saxon, and meant originally an ordinary dwelling-house, residence, or lodging. Hence Clifford's Inn, once the mansion of De Clifford; Lincoln's Inn, the abode of the Earls of Lincoln; Gray's Inn, that of the Lords Gray, etc.

Now, whenas Phœbus, with his fiery waine,
Unto his inne began to draw apace.

SPENSER: Fæerie Queene, VI, iii, 29.

Inns of Court. The four voluntary societies which have the exclusive right of calling to the English Bar. They are all in London, and are the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn. Each is governed by a board of benchers. See BAR; BENCHER.

Innings. He has had a long, or a good innings. A good long run of luck. An innings in cricket is the time that the eleven or an individual is having its turn batting at the wicket.

Inniskillings. The 5th and 6th Dragoon Guards. The former was raised by the 12th Earl of Shrewsbury for James II in 1685. The latter was raised by Sir Albert Conyngham for the defence of Enniskillen in the cause of William III; it was named the 6th Dragoons in 1751. In 1922 the two regiments were amalgamated as the 5th, and granted the title "Royal" in commemoration of George V's silver jubilee.

This cavalry regiment must not be confounded with the Inniskillings or Old 27th Foot, now called the "1st battalion of the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers," which is a foot regiment.

Innocent, An. An idiot or born fool was formerly so called. Cp. BENET.

Although he be in body deformed, in minde foolish, an innocent borne, a begger by misfortune, yet doth he deserve a better than thy selfe.—LYLY: Euphues (1579).

The Feast of the Holy Innocents. The 28th December, to commemorate Herod's massacre of the children of Bethlehem under two years old, with the design of cutting off the infant Jesus (Matt. ii, 16). It used to be the custom on Holy Innocents' Day, or Childermas, to whip the children—and even adults—"that the memory of Herod's murder of the Innocents might stick the closer," and this practice forms the plot of several old tales in the Decameron and elsewhere.

The massacre of the innocents. The name facetiously given in parliamentary circles (with an allusion to the above) to Bills that are left over at the end of a session for lack of time to deal with them.

Innuendo (in ū en' dō). An implied or covert hint of blame, a suggestion that one dare not make openly, so it is made indirectly, as by a nod; originally a law term, meaning the person nodded to or indirectly referred to (Lat., innuo, to nod to).

Ino. See LEUCOTHEA.

Inoculation. Originally, the horticultural practice of grafting a bud (Lat., oculus) into an inferior plant, in order to produce flowers or fruits of better quality; hence, introducing into the body infectious matter which produces a mild form of the disease against which this treatment is counted on to render one immune.

Inquisition. A court instituted to inquire into offences against the Roman Catholic religion, and fully established by Gregory IX in 1229. Torture, as a means of extracting recantations or evidence, was first authorized by Innocent IV in 1252, and those found guilty were handed over to the secular arm to be dealt with according to the secular laws of the land. The Inquisition was generally administered by the Dominicans, from which Order came the notorious Torquemada (1420-98), who was Inquisitor-General 1483-94. It was most active in southern Europe, particularly in Spain, where it flourished from 1237 to 1820. It was suppressed in France in 1772. The Inquisition now known as the Holy Office occupies itself with the protection of faith and morals and among other activities examines and, where it considers necessary, prohibits books dangerous to the faithful.

Insane Root, The. A plant which is not positively identified, but which was probably henbane or hemlock, supposed to deprive of his senses anyone who took it. Banquo says of the witches:—

Were such things here as we do speak about?
Or have we eaten on the insane root
That takes the reason prisoner? Macbeth, i, 3.

There were many plants to which similar properties were, rightly or wrongly, attributed, such as the mandrake, belladonna (deadly nightshade), poppy, etc.; and cp. MOLY.

Inscription (on coins). See LEGEND.

Inspired Idiot, The. Oliver Goldsmith (1728-1774) was so called by Horace Walpole.

Institutes. A digest of the elements of a subject, especially of law. The most celebrated is the Institutes of Justinian, completed in A.D. 533 at the order of the Emperor. It was based on the earlier Institutes of Gaius, and was intended as an introduction to the Pandects (q.v.). Other Institutes are those of Florentius, Callistratus, Paulus, Ulpian, and Marcin.

Instructions to the Committee. A means empowering a Committee of the House of Commons to do what it would not otherwise be empowered to do.

An "Instruction" must be supplementary and auxiliary to the Bill under consideration.

It must fall within the general scope and framework of the Bill in question.

It must not form the substance of a distinct measure.

Insulin (in' su lin), a specific discovered by Sir F. G. Banting (1891-1941). It is extracted from the pancreatic glands of oxen and its function is to reduce the sugar in the blood; for this reason it is used in the treatment of diabetes.

Insult. Literally, to leap on (the prostrate body of a foe); hence, to treat with contumely (Lat. insultare, saltus, a leap). Terence says, Insultare fores calcibus (Eunuchus, ii, 2, 54). It will be remembered that the priests of Baal, to show their indignation against their gods, "leaped upon the altar which they had made" (1 Kings xviii, 26). Cp. DESULTORY.

Intaglio (in ta' lyō) (Ital.). A design cut into a gem, like a crest or initials in a stamp. The design does not stand out in relief, as in a cameo (q.v.), but is hollowed in.

Intelligence Quotient, commonly abbreviated to I.Q., is the ratio, expressed as a percentage, of a person's mental age to his actual age, the former being the age for which he scores 100 per cent. when tested by the Binet or some similar system. The Binet Tests consist in testing a child's intelligence by asking standard questions adapted to the intelligence of a normal child of that age.

Intelligentsia (in tel i jen' si ā). A Russian term for the educated and cultured classes, which has acquired in English a somewhat derogatory sense.

Inter alia (in' ter ā lyā) (Lat.). Among other things or matters.

Intercalary (in tēr kāl' ā ri) (Lat. inter, between, calare, to proclaim solemnly). An intercalary day is a day thrust in between two others, as February 29th in leap year; so called because, among the Romans, this was a subject for solemn proclamation. Cp. CALEND.

Interdict (in' tēr dikt). In the Roman Catholic Church an interdict is a sentence of excommunication directed against a place and/or its inhabitants; if the place only is under the interdict the sacraments cannot be administered there, burials with religious ceremonies are prohibited, and all church communion is in abeyance. The most remarkable instances are:—

586. The Bishop of Bayeux laid an interdict on all the churches of Rouen, in consequence of the murder of the Bishop Prétextat.

1081. Poland was laid under an interdict by Gregory VII, because Boleslas II had murdered Stanislaus at the altar.

1180. Scotland was put under a similar ban by Pope Alexander III.

1200. France was interdicted by Innocent III, because Philippe Auguste refused to marry Engelburge, who had been betrothed to him.

1209. England was under similar sentence for six years (Innocent III), in the reign of King John.

Interest (Lat. interesse, to be a concern to). The interest on money is the sum which a borrower agrees to pay a lender for its use. Simple interest is interest on the principal, or money lent, only; compound interest is interest on the principal plus the interest as it accrues.

In an interesting condition. Said of a woman who is expecting to become a mother. The phrase came into use in the 18th century.

Interim of Augsburg. See AUGSBURG.

Interlard (Fr.). Originally to "lard" meat, i.e. to put strips of fat between layers of lean meat; hence, metaphorically, to mix irrelevant matter with the solid part of a discourse. Thus we say, "To interlard with oaths," to "interlard with compliments," etc.

They interlard their native drinks with choice
Of strongest brandy. PHILIPS: Cider ii.

Interloper. One who "runs" between traders and upsets their business by interfering with their actual or supposed rights. The word came into English through the Dutch trade in the 16th century, and the lope is a dialect form of leap confused with Dut. loopen, to run (as in elope).

Interpellation. The equivalent in the French Chamber to "moving the adjournment" in our House of Commons. It is an interruption to the order of the day by asking a Minister some question of importance the subject of which would come under his department. From Lat. interpellare, to interrupt by speaking, literally, to drive between.

Interpreter, Mr. The Holy Spirit personified, in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.

Interrex (in' tēr reks) (Lat.). A person appointed to hold the office of king during a temporary vacancy.

Intrigue (in trēg'). From the Latin tricae, trifles, whence the verb intrico, to entangle. In its more common use the word means an underhand plot, a piece of crafty manoeuvring, or a liaison. Within the 20th century, however, it has come to be used as a transitive verb meaning to rouse the interest of, to awaken curiosity; as one may talk of an intriguing play, or a situation that intrigued one. In the 17th and 18th centuries this connotation was not at all rare.

Introvert. The psychological term for an introspective person who instinctively seeks to alter his conception of external realities to make them correspond more closely with his own desires. An introvert is interested mainly in his own mental processes and in the way in which he is regarded by others; he is thus retiring in manner and usually shy.

Invalides (an' vâ léd). Hôtel des Invalides. The great institution founded by Louis XIV at Paris in 1670 for disabled and superannuated soldiers. It contains large numbers of military trophies, statues, paintings, etc., and a museum of artillery and mediæval and renaissance armour.

The central feature of the church of the Invalides is the tomb of Napoleon, whose body was brought hither from St. Helena in 1840. Close by are the tombs of his son, the Duke of Reichstadt (L'Aiglon) and Marshal Foch (1851-1929). Others buried there are Marshal Turenne (1611-75); General Bertrand (1773-1844); Marshals Duroc (1772-1813) and Grouchy (1766-1847); General Kléber (1753-1800); Joseph Bonaparte, King of Naples and Spain (1768-1844); and Jerome Bonaparte, King of Westphalia (1784-1860).

Inventions. The following are some of the most important inventions in the history of civilized man. No date can be given to the most useful invention of all, that of the wheel (involving the use of rollers and pulleys) for in Europe and Asia Minor it dates back to prehistoric times. Yet in America and in early Egypt the pulley was unknown.

Lever and screw: Archimedes (c. 287-212, B.C.)

Printing: from movable type, China, A.D. 1041; in Europe, 1440.

Gunpowder (in the Western world): the monk Berthold Schwartz, 1313.

Logarithms: J. Napier, 1614; J. Burgi, 1620.

Steam engine: Piston, Newcomen, 1698.

Condenser, Watt, 1769.

Locomotive, Trevethick, 1804.

Turbine, Parsons, 1884.

Spinning jenny: Arkwright, 1769.

Gas illumination: Murdoch, 1792.

Electricity: Leyden Jar, 1745

Electro-magnetic induction, Faraday, 1831.

Steel: Bessemer process, 1856.

Anæsthetics: Humphrey Davy, 1799.

Chloroform, Simpson, 1847.

Wireless: receiving and transmitting apparatus, Marconi, 1895.

Internal combustion engine: Gottlieb, 1883.

Aeroplane: Wright Brothers, 1903.

Radiography: Röntgen Rays, 1895.

Photography: J. N. Niepce, 1817, Daguerre, 1839.

Atomic energy: splitting of the atom by Cockroft and Walton, 1932.

Invention of the Cross. See CROSS.

Inventors. A curious instance of the sin of invention is mentioned in the Bridge of Allan Reporter, February, 1803:—

It is told of Mr. Ferguson's grandfather, that he invented a pair of fanners for cleaning grain, and for this proof of superior ingenuity he was summoned before the Kirk Session, and reproved for trying to place the handiwork of man above the time-honoured practice of cleaning the grain on windy days, when the current was blowing briskly through the open doors of the barn.

It is extraordinary how many inventors have been "hoist with their own petard"; the following list—in which some entries will no doubt be found that belong to the realm of fable—is by no means complete:—

Bastille. Hugues Aubriot, Provost of Paris, who built the Bastille, was the first person confined therein. The charge against him was heresy.

Brazen Bull. Perillos of Athens made a brazen bull for Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigento, intended for the execution of criminals, who were shut up in the bull, fires being lighted below the belly. Phalaris admired the invention, and tested it on Perillos himself, who was the first person baked to death in the horrible monster.

Cannon. Thomas Montacute, 4th Earl of Salisbury was the first to use cannon, and was the first Englishman killed by a cannon ball, at Tourelles, 1428.

Catherine Wheel. The inventor of St. Catherine's Wheel, a diabolical machine consisting of four wheels turning different ways, and each wheel armed with saws, knives, and teeth, was killed by his own machine; for when St. Catherine was bound on the wheel, she fell off, and the machine flew to pieces. One of the pieces struck the inventor, and other pieces struck several of the men employed to work it, all of whom were killed. (Metaphrases.)

Eddystone. Henry Winstanley erected the first Eddystone lighthouse. It was a wooden polygon, 100 feet high, on a stone base; but it was washed away by a storm in 1703, and the architect perished in his own edifice.

Gallows and Gibbet. We are told in the book of Esther that Haman devised a gallows 50 cubits high on which to hang Mordecai, by way of commencing the extirpation of the Jews; but the favourite of Ahasuerus was himself hanged thereon. We have a repetition of this incident in the case of Enguerrand de Marigni, Minister of Finance to Philippe the Fair, who was hung on the gibbet which he had caused to be erected at Montfaucon for the execution of certain felons; and four of his successors in office underwent the same fate.

Guillotine. J. B. V. Guillotin, M.D., of Lyons, was guillotined, but it is an error to credit him with the invention of the instrument. The inventor was Dr. Joseph Agnace Guillotin.

Iron Cage. The Bishop of Verdun, who invented the Iron Cage, too small to allow the person confined in it to stand upright or lie at full length, was the first to be shut up in one; and Cardinal La Balue, who recommended them to Louis XI, was himself confined in one for ten years.

Iron Shroud. Ludovico Sforza, who invented the Iron Shroud, was the first to suffer death by this horrible torture.

Maiden. The Regent Morton of Scotland, who invented the Maiden (q.v.), was the first to be beheaded thereby.

Ostracism. Clisthenes introduced the custom of Ostracism (q.v.), and was the first to be banished thereby.

The Perrière was a piece of mediæval artillery for throwing stones of 3,000 lb. in weight; and the inventor fell a victim to his own invention by the accidental discharge of a perrière against a wall.

Sanctuary. Eutropius induced the Emperor Arcadius to abolish the benefit of sanctuary; but a few days afterwards he committed some offence and fled for safety to the nearest church. St. Chrysostom told him he had fallen into his own net, and he was put to death. (Life of St. Chrysostom.)

Turret-ship. Cowper Coles, inventor of the Turret-ship, perished in the Captain off Finisterre September 7th, 1870.

Witch-finding. Matthew Hopkins, the witch-finder, was himself tried by his own tests, and put to death as a wizard in 1647.

Investiture. The ceremonial clothing (Lat. vestire, to clothe) or investing of an official, dignitary, sovereign, etc., with the special robes or insignia of his office. Thus, a pair of gloves is given to a Freemason in France; a cap is given to a graduate; a crown, etc., to a sovereign, etc.; and a crosier and ring are placed in the hands of a church dignitary on his induction into the office of bishop.

In the 11th and 12th centuries the kings of Europe and the popes were perpetually at variance about the right of investiture; the question was, did the right of appointing to vacant bishoprics and other ecclesiastical dignities belong to the spiritual or to the temporal power, the pope or the king? The Emperor Henry V relinquished his claim in 1111, but his action was not followed by the other European sovereigns.

Invincible Doctor. William of Occam (d. 1347), or Ockham (a village in Surrey), Franciscan friar and scholastic philosopher. He was also called Doctor Singularis, and Princeps Nominalium, for he was the reviver of nominalism.

Invincibles, The Irish. A Fenian secret society founded in Dublin in 1881 with the object of doing away with the English "tyranny" and killing the "tyrants." Members of this society were responsible for the Phoenix Park murders in 1882.

Invisible Empire. See KU KLUX KLAN.

Invisibility, according to fable, might be obtained in a multitude of ways. For example:—

Aberich's cloak, "Tarnkappe," which Siegfried got possession of, rendered him invisible. (Nibelungenlied.)

A dead hand. It was believed that a candle placed in a dead man's hand gives no light to any but those who use it. See HAND.

The helmet of Perseus and the helmet that Pluto gave to the Cyclops (Orci Galea) both rendered the wearers invisible.

Jack the Giant-killer had a cloak of invisibility as well as a cap of knowledge.

Otnit's ring. The ring of Otnit, King of Lombardy, according to the Heldenbuch, possessed a similar charm.

Reynard's wonderful ring had three colours, one of which (green) caused the wearer to become invisible. (Reynard the Fox, q.v.)

See also FERN SEED; GYGES' RING; HELIO-TROPE.

The Druids were supposed to possess the power of making themselves invisible by producing a magic mist; and this spell, the faeth fiadha, appears in the stories of St. Patrick and other early British saints.

Invulnerability. There are many fabulous instances of this having been acquired. According to ancient Greek legend, a dip in the river Styx rendered Achilles invulnerable, and Medea rendered Jason, with whom she had fallen in love, proof against wounds and fire by anointing him with the Promethean unguent.

Siegfried was rendered invulnerable by anointing his body with dragon's blood. (Nibelungenlied.)

Ionian Mode (i ō' ni ān). A species of mediæval church music in the key of C major, in imitation of the ancient Greek mode so called. It was the last of the "authentic" church modes, and corresponded to the modern major diatonic scale. Cp. GREGORIAN.

Ionic (i on' ik). Ionic Architecture. So called from Ionia, where it took its rise. The capitals are decorated with volutes, and the cornice with dentils. The shaft is fluted; the entablature either plain or embellished.

The people of Ionia formed their order of architecture on the model of a young woman dressed in her hair, and of an easy, elegant shape; whereas the Doric had been formed on the model of a robust, strong man.—Vitruvius.

Ionic School. The school of philosophy that arose in Ionia in the 6th century B.C., and which formed the starting-point of the whole of Greek philosophy. It included Thales, Anaximander, Anaximenes, Heraclitus, and Anaxagoras; and the great advance they made was the recognition that matter, motion, and physical causation were themselves manifestations of the Absolute Reality. They also tried to show that all created things spring from one universal physical cause; Thales said it was water, Anaximenes thought it was air, Anaxagoras that it was atoms, Heraclitus maintained that it was fire or caloric while Anaximander insisted that the elements of all things are eternal, for ex nihilo nihil fit.

Iota. See I; JOT.

IOU, i.e. "I owe you." The memorandum of a debt given by the borrower to the lender. It requires no stamp unless it specifies a day of payment, when it becomes a bill, and must be stamped.

Iphigenia (if i jen ē' a, if i je nī' à). In classical legend, the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. One account says that her father, having offended Artemis by killing her favourite stag, vowed to sacrifice to the angry goddess the most beautiful thing that came into his possession in the next twelve months; this was an infant daughter. The father deferred the sacrifice till the fleet of the combined Greeks that was proceeding to Troy reached Aulis and Iphigenia had grown to womanhood. The Calchas told him that the fleet would be wind-bound till he had fulfilled his vow; accordingly the king prepared to sacrifice his daughter, but Artemis at the last moment snatched her from the altar and carried her to heaven, substituting a hind in her place. Euripides, Æschylus, and Sophocles all wrote tragedies on Iphigenia. Cp. IDOMENEUS.

Ipse dixit (ip' se diks' it) (Lat., he himself said so). A mere assertion, wholly unsupported. "It is his ipse dixit," implies that there is no guarantee that what he says is so.

Ipso facto (Lat., by the very fact). Irrespective of all external considerations of right or wrong; absolutely. It sometimes means the act itself carries the consequences (as excommunication without the actual sentence being pronounced).

By burning the Pope's bull, Luther ipso facto [by the very deed itself] denied the Pope's supremacy. Heresy carries excommunication ipso facto.

I.R.A. The Irish Republican Army, which opposed the Crown forces, the Royal Irish Constabulary, the "Black and Tans," etc., in the rebellion that preceded the grant of dominion status in 1921.

Irak (ē rāk'). The name given at different times to varying portions of Mesopotamia (q.v.), Babylonia, and the surrounding country. It is now the official name of that portion of the country ruled by the king of Irak with his capital at Bagdad.

Iram (ē rām'). An enchanted garden of old Persian legend, planted by the mythological king Shaddad, and for centuries sunk deep in the sands of Arabia. See JAMSHID.

Iran (ē ran'), since March, 1935, the official Persian name of modern Persia, though in 1949 it was announced that foreigners might use the name of Persia. The Iranian languages, including Zend and Old Persian, form a branch of the great Indo-European family.

I.R.B. Irish Republican Brotherhood, the Fenians of the 1860s, etc.

Ireland. Called by the natives Erin, i.e. Erinnis, or Iar-innis (west island).

By the Welsh, Yfer-den (west valley).

By Apuleius, Hibernia, which is Iernia, a corruption of Iar-inni-a.

By Juvenal (ii, 260), Juverna or Juberna, the same as Ierna or Iernia.

By Claudian, Ouernia, the same.

By moderns, Ireland, which is Iar-en-land (land of the west).

After many struggles throughout the 19th century Ireland was given Home Rule (q.v.) in 1914, though the Act was not put into operation until 1920. After much unrest the country was divided into Eire and Northern Ireland in 1921, the former being a sovereign democratic State with a constitution (remodelled in 1937), while Northern Ireland consisting of the counties of Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry and Tyrone, and the boroughs of Belfast and Londonderry, remains an integral part of the British Empire, with a parliament of its own, returning 12 members to the House of Commons in Westminster.

The fair maid of Ireland. Ignis fatuus (q.v.).

He had read in former times of a Going Fire, called "Ignis Fatuus," the fire of destiny, by some, "Will with the Wisp," or "Jack with the Lantern"; and likewise, by some simple country people, "The Fair Maid of Ireland," which used to lead wandering travellers out of their way.—The Seven Champions of Christendom, i, 7.

The three great saints of Ireland. St. Patrick, St. Columba, and St. Bridget.

Ireland Scholarships. Four scholarships of £30 a year in the University of Oxford, founded by Dr. John Ireland (1761-1842), Dean of Westminster, in 1825, for Latin and Greek. They are tenable for four years. He also founded an "Exegetical Professorship" of £800 a year.

Iris (I' ris). Goddess of the rainbow, or the rainbow itself. In classical mythology she is called the messenger of the gods when they intended discord, and the rainbow is the bridge or road led down from heaven for her accommodation. When the gods meant peace they sent Mercury.

I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.

2 Henry VI, iii, 2.

Besides being poetically applied to the rainbow the name, in English, is given to the coloured membrane surrounding the pupil of the eye, and to a family of plants (Iridacæ) having large, bright-coloured flowers and tuberous roots.

Iron. The Iron Age. An archaeological term denoting the cultural phase conditioned by the discovery of the use of iron for edged tools, weapons, etc. Iron was known as a curiosity by the builders of the pyramids, but it was not until 1000 B.C. that iron-working became general in the Mediterranean basin. Its gradual development from the bronze age precursors is traceable at Hallstatt, and its fuller development at La Tene; these places give their names to the first and second periods of the early Iron Age.

The era between the death of Charlemagne and the close of the Carolingian dynasty (728-987) is sometimes so called from its almost ceaseless wars. It is sometimes called the leaden age for its worthlessness, and the dark age for its barrenness of learned men. See also AGE.

Iron-arm. François de la Noue (1531-91), the Huguenot soldier, Bras de Fer, was so called. Fierabras (q.v.) is another form of the same.

Iron Chancellor. the name given to Prince Bismarck (1815-98), the great statesman who created the German Empire.

The Iron Cross. A Prussian military decoration (an iron Maltese cross, edged with silver). It was instituted by Frederick William III in 1813 during the struggle against Napoleon, and was remodelled by William I in 1870, with three grades, in civil and military divisions. In World War I some 3,000,000 Iron Crosses were awarded; there are no figures for World War II.

The Iron Crown of Lombardy. See CROWN.

Iron Curtain. A phrase used to describe the almost impenetrable secrecy with which all happenings in the U.S.S.R. or countries dominated by Russia are concealed from the rest of the world. The phrase was first used by Count Schwerin von Krosigk, the German statesman, in 1945.

The Iron Duke. The Duke of Wellington (1769-1852) was so called from his iron will.

The iron entered into his soul. When anguish or annoyance is felt most keenly. The phrase arose in a mistranslation from the Hebrew of Psalm cv, 18, which appeared in the Vulgate and was copied in some of the earlier English translations, and is perpetuated in the Prayer Book version, though it was corrected in the Authorized Version. The Hebrew says "his person entered into the iron" (i.e. he was laid in irons); but Coverdale and some others—following the Vulgate—have "They hurte his fete in the stockes, the yron pearced his herte."

Iron-hand or the Iron-handed. Goetz von Berlichingen (about 1480-1562), a German baron, who lost his right hand and had one made of iron to supply its place. Some accounts say that it was lost at the siege of Landshut, others that it was struck off in consequence of his having disregarded a law prohibiting duels.

Iron Gates. The narrowing of the Danube between Orsova and Turnu Severin in S.W. Rumania. It is about 2 miles long, with great rapids and an island in mid-stream. Between 1890 and 1900 a navigable way was made.

Iron Guard. The title adopted by the Fascist party in Rumania.

The iron horse. The railway locomotive.

The Iron Maiden of Nuremberg. A medieval instrument of torture used in Germany for "heretics," traitors, parricides, etc. It was a box big enough to admit a man, with folding-doors, the whole studded with sharp iron spikes. When the doors were closed on him these spikes were forced into the body of the victim, who was left there to die in horrible torture.

Iron-man. An American colloquialism for a dollar.

Man in the iron mask. See MASK.

Iron rations. Bully beef; tinned meat. Also emergency rations (q.v.).

Shooting-iron. Slang for a small firearm, especially a pistol or revolver.

To rule with a rod of iron. To rule tyrannically.

Ironside. Edmund II (about 989-1016), King of the West Saxons from April to November, 1016, was so called, from his iron armour.

Nestor Ironside. Sir Richard Steele assumed the name in The Guardian.

Ironsides. The soldiers that served under Cromwell were so called, especially after the battle of Marston Moor (1644), where they displayed an iron resolution. The name had first been applied only to a special regiment of stalwarts.

Iron-tooth. Frederick II, Elector of Brandenburg (1440-1470).

Too many irons in the fire. More affairs in hand than you can properly attend to. The allusion is to a smithy where the smith has a number of irons heating to red heat.

In irons. In fetters. A square-rigged sailing vessel is said to be in irons when the yards are so braced that some sails being full of wind and others aback, the vessel is temporarily unmanageable.

Strike while the iron is hot. Don't miss a good opportunity; seize time by the forelock; make hay while the sun shines.

Irony (i' rŏn i). A dissembling (Gr. eirōn, a dissembler, eirōneia); hence, subtle sarcasm, language having a meaning different from the ostensible one but understood correctly by the initiated. Socratic irony is an assumption of ignorance, as a means of leading on and eventually confuting an opponent.

The irony of fate. A strange fatality which has brought about something quite the reverse of what might have been expected.

By the irony of fate the Ten Hours Bill was carried in the very session when Lord Ashley, having changed his views on the Corn Laws, felt it his duty to resign his seat in Parliament.—The Leisure Hour, 1887.

Iroquois (ir' ō kwa). The name given by the French to the five (later six) confederate tribes of North American Indians, viz. the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, Senecas, and sixth the Tuscaroras, added in 1712, forming "The Six Nations of the Iroquois Confederacy."

Irredentism (ir rē dent' izm). The name of a movement in Italy which aimed at delivering all Italian-speaking peoples from foreign rule. The party cry was "Italia Irredenta" (unredeemed Italy), and the party came into existence soon after the formation of the kingdom of Italy in 1860, when Venetia, Rome, and certain other territories were still under foreign rule. By 1920 most of the Irredentist demands had been met.

Irrefragable Doctor. Alexander of Hales (d. 1245), an English Franciscan, author of Summa Theologiae.

Irresistible. Alexander the Great went to consult the Delphic oracle before he started on his expedition against Persia. He chanced, however, to arrive on a day when no responses were made. Nothing daunted, he went in search of the Pythia, and when she refused to attend, took her to the temple by force. "Son," said the priestess, "thou art irresistible." "Enough," cried Alexander; "I accept your words as an answer."

Irus (i' rus). The beggar of gigantic stature, who waited on the suitors of Penelope. Ulysses, on his return, felled him to the ground with a single blow, and flung his corpse out of doors.

Poorer than Irus. A Greek proverb, adopted by the Romans and the French, alluding to the beggar referred to above.

Irvingites. Members of the Catholic Apostolic Church founded about 1829 by Edward Irving, a Presbyterian minister and a friend of the Carlyles. Irving claimed to revive the college of the Apostles, and established a complex hierarchy with such symbolical titles as "Angel," "Prophet," etc. In their early days they claimed to have manifested the gift of tongues.

Isaac. A hedge-sparrow; a dialect form of haysugge, or haysuck, an obsolete name for the bird (used by Chaucer). The name meant a sucker (small thing) that lived in a hay or hedge; a corruption of Chaucer's word, heisugge.

Isabelle. The colour so called is the yellow of soiled calico. A yellow-dun horse is, in France, un cheval isabelle. According to Isaac D'Israeli (Curiosities of Literature) Isabel of Austria, daughter of Philip II, at the siege of Ostend vowed not to change her linen till the place was taken. As the siege lasted three years, we may suppose that it was somewhat soiled by three years' wear.

Another story, equally unwarranted, attaches it to Isabella of Castile, who, we are told, made a vow to the Virgin not to change her linen till Granada fell into her hands.

There is, however, no reason for accepting these very fanciful derivations. The word appears in an extant list of Queen Elizabeth's clothes of July, 1600 ("one rounde gowne of Isabella-colour satten").

Isaiah (i'zī' à). Great controversy has raged round the ascribed author of this book. It seems certain that he was a man of rank and influence, between 735 B.C. and the invasion of Sennacherib in 701. His great task was to warn the Hebrews of the impending Assyrian invasion and recall them to the true worship of Jahveh. In its English version the book of Isaiah contains some of the finest writing in the language.

Isebras or Isumbras, Sir (i' zen bräs). A hero of mediæval romance (including, as usual, visits to the Holy Land and the slaughter of thousands of "Saracens"), first proud and presumptuous, when he was visited by all sorts of punishments; afterwards, penitent and humble, his afflictions were turned into blessings. It was in this latter stage that he one day carried on his horse two children of a poor woodman across a ford.

Isult. See YSOLDE.

Ishbosheth (ish bō' sheth), in Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, is meant for Richard Cromwell. His father, Oliver, is Saul.

The actual Ishbosheth (man of shame) was the son of Saul, who was proclaimed King of Israel at his father's death (see 2 Sam. iv), and was almost immediately superseded by David.

Ishtar (ish' tar). The Babylonian goddess of love and war (Gr. Asarte), corresponding to the Phœnician Ashtoreth (q.v.), except that while the latter was identified with the moon Ishtar was more frequently identified with the planet Venus. She was the wife of Bel.

Isiac Tablet (i.e. tablet of Isis). A spurious Egyptian monument sold by a soldier to Cardinal Bembo in 1527, and preserved at Turin. It is of copper, and on it are represented most of the Egyptian deities in the mysteries of Isis. It was said to have been found at the siege of Rome in 1525.

Isidorian Decretals. See DECRETALS.

Isinglass (i' zing glas). A corruption of the Dutch huyzenblas, a sturgeon's bladder (Ger. hausen, sturgeon): it is prepared from the bladders and sounds of sturgeon, and was introduced from Holland in the 16th century.

Isis (i' sis). The principal goddess of ancient Egypt, sister and wife of Osiris, and mother of Horus. She was identified with the moon (Osiris being a sun-god), and the cow was sacred to her, its horns representing the crescent moon.

Her chief temples were at Abydos, Busiris, and Philæ; she is represented as a queen, her head being surmounted by horns and the solar disk or by the double crown. Proclus mentions a statue of her which bore the inscription—

I am that which is, has been, and shall be. My veil no one has lifted. The fruit I bore was the Sun—hence to lift the veil of Isis is to pierce to the heart of a great mystery.

She was identified with Io, Aphrodite, and others by the Greeks; with Selene, Ceres, Venus, Juno, etc., by the Romans; and the Phœnicians confused her with Ashtoreth. Her worship as a nature goddess was very popular among the later Greeks and with the Romans of republican times. Milton, in Paradise Lost (l. 478), places her among the fallen angels.

Isis, River. See THAMES.

Islam (iz lam'). The Mohammedan religion, the whole body of Mohammedans, the true Mohammedan faith. The Moslems say every child is born in Islam, and would continue in the true faith if not led astray. The word means resignation or submission to the will of God.

Islam consists of five duties:—

- (1) Bearing witness that there is but one God.
- (2) Reciting daily prayers.
- (3) Giving the appointed and legal alms.
- (5) Observing the Ramazan (a month's fast).
- (5) Making a pilgrimage to Mecca at least once in a lifetime.

Islands of the Blest. See FORTUNATE ISLANDS.

Isle of Dogs. A peninsula on the left bank of the Thames between the Limehouse and Blackwall reaches, opposite Greenwich. It is said to be so called because it was here that Edward III kept his greyhounds; but another explanation is that it is a corruption of Isle of Ducks, from the number of wild fowl anciently inhabiting the marshes.

Ismene. In Greek legend, daughter of Œdipus and Jocasta. Antigone was buried alive by the order of King Creon, for burying her brother Polynices, slain in combat by his brother Eteocles. Ismene declared that she had aided her sister, and requested to be allowed to share the same punishment.

Isocrates (i sok' rà tēz), was one of the great orators of Athens and was distinguished as a teacher of eloquence. He died 338 B.C.

The French Isocrates. Esprit Fléchier (1632-1710), Bishop of Nîmes, specially famous for his funeral orations.

Isolationism. A nationalistic philosophy opposed to political co-operation with any other nation or group of nations; the term is especially applied to a school of thought in U.S.A. which repudiates any foreign alliances, friendships, connexions or commitments.

Israel (iz rāl), in Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.), stands for England.

Israfil (is' rā fel). The angel of music of the Mohammedans. He possesses the most melodious voice of all God's creatures, and is to sound the Resurrection Trump which will ravish the ears of the saints in paradise. Israfil, Gabriel, and Michael were the three angels that, according to the Koran, warned Abraham of Sodom's destruction.

In Heaven a spirit doth dwell

Whose heart-strings are a lute;

None sing so wildly well

As the angel Israfil,

And the giddy Stars (so legends tell),

Ceasing their hymns, attend the spell

Of his voice, all mute. E. A. POE: Israfil.

Issachar (is' ā kar), in Dryden's satire of Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.), means Thomas Thynne (1648-82), of Longleat, known as "Tom of Ten Thousand."

Issachar's ears. Ass's ears. The allusion is to Gen. xlix, 14: "Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens."

Is't possible that you, whose ears

Are of the tribe of Issachar's . . .

Should yet be deaf against a noise

So roaring as the public voice?

SAMUEL BUTLER: Hudibras to Sidrophel.

Issei (ē' sā). A Japanese word meaning "first born" or "first generation," applied to a person of Japanese ancestry, born in Japan, but taking up residence in U.S.A., though retaining allegiance to Japan. A Japanese born in U.S.A. and loyal to that country is called a Nisei.

Issue. The point of law in debate or in question. "At issue," under dispute.

To join issue. To take opposite views of a question, or opposite sides in a suit.

To join issues. To leave a suit to the decision of the court because the parties interested cannot agree.

Istar. See ISHTAR.

Isthmian Games (is' mi ān). Games consisting of chariot races, running, wrestling, boxing, etc., held by the ancient Greeks in the Isthmus of Corinth every alternate spring, the first and third of each Olympiad. Epsom races, and other big sporting events, have been called our "Isthmian games" in allusion to these.

Istanbul (is tān bul') the name by which old Constantinople, until 1923 the capital of the Turkish Empire, is now known.

Isumbras. See ISENBRAS.

It. I'm it! I'm a person of some importance.

In for it. About "to catch it"; on the point of being in trouble.

In such phrases as this, and as to come it strong, to rough it, etc., it is the definite object of the transitive or intransitive verb.

It, is used in U.S.A. as "He" is in England to denote the child who must catch the others at tag, or find them at hide-and-seek. The word was also used at one time as a humorous euphemism for sex appeal.

Its. One of the words by the use of which Chatterton betrayed his forgeries. He wrote in a poem purporting to be the work of a 15th-century priest, "Life and its goods I scorn," but the word was not in use till more than two centuries later than his supposed time, it (hit) and his being the possessive case.

For love and devocioun towards god also bath it infancie and it bath it comyng forward in groweth of age.—Udal's Erasmus: Luke, vii (1548).

Learning hath his infancie, when it is but beginning and almost childish; then his youth . . . then his strength of yeares . . . and lastly, his old age.—BACON: Essays; of Vicissitude of Things (1625).

Its does not occur in any play of Shakespeare published in his lifetime, but there is one instance in the First Folio of 1623 (Measure for Measure 1, 2), as well as nine instances of it's. Nor does its occur in the Authorized Version of the Bible (1611), the one instance of it in modern editions (Lev. xxv, 5) having been substituted for it in the Bible printed for Hills and Field in 1660.

Italian hand. I see his fine Italian hand in this may be said of a picture in which the beholder can discern the work of a particular artist through certain characteristics of his which appear. Or it may be remarked of an intrigue, in which the characteristics of a particular plotter are apparent. The Italian hand was originally the cancelleresca type of handwriting, used by the Apostolic Secretaries, and distinguishable by its grace and fineness from the Gothic styles of Northern Europe.

Italic. Pertaining to Italy, especially ancient Italy and the parts other than Rome.

Italic type or italics (the type in which the letters, instead of being erect—as in roman—slope from left to right, thus) was first used by Aldo Manuzio in 1501 in an edition of Virgil, and was dedicated by him to Italy—hence its name. It has been said that italic type was based on the beautiful handwriting of the poet Petrarch. Francesco of Bologna cast it.

The words italicized in the Bible have no corresponding words in the original. The translators supplied these words to render the sense of the passage more full and clear.

Italic School of Philosophy. The Pythagorean (6th cent. B.C.), so called because Pythagoras taught in Italy.

Italic version. An early Latin version of the Bible, prepared from the Septuagint. It preceded the Vulgate, or the version by St. Jerome.

Itch, To. Properly, to have an irritation of the skin which gives one a desire to scratch the part affected; hence, figuratively, to feel a constant teasing desire for something. The figure of speech enters into many phrases; as, to itch or to have an itch for gold, to have a longing desire for wealth; an itching palm means the same:—

Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemned to have an itching palm.

Julius Caesar, iv, 3.

Similarly, to have itching ears, is to be very desirous for news or novelty:—

The time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts.—2 Tim. iv, 3 (R.V.).

To have an itching foot is to have a craving for travel.

And My fingers itch to be at him means, "I am longing to give him a sound thrashing."

It was formerly a popular idea that the itching of various parts foretold various occurrences; for instance, if your right palm itched you were going to receive money, the itching of the left eye betokened grief, and of the right pleasure:—

My right eye itches now, so I shall see

My love. Theocritus, i, 37.

Itching of the lips of course foretold that they were shortly to kiss or be kissed; of the nose, that strangers were at hand:—

We shall ha' guests to-day

... My nose itches so.

DEKKER: Honest Whore.

And the thumb, that evil approaches

By the pricking of my thumbs,

Something evil this way comes.

SHAKESPEARE: Macbeth, iv, i.

Ithuriel (ith ū' rī ēl). The angel who, with Zephon (q.v.), was, in Milton's Paradise Lost, commissioned by Gabriel to search for Satan, after he had effected his entrance into Paradise. The name is Rabbinical, and means "the discovery of God."

Ithuriel and Zephon, with winged speed
Search through this garden; leave unsearched no nook.

Paradise Lost, Bk. iv, 788.

He was armed with a spear, the slightest touch of which exposed deceit.

Him [i.e. Satan], thus intent Ithuriel with his spear

Touched lightly; for no falsehood can endure

Touch of celestial temper, but returns

Of force to its own likeness. Paradise Lost, iv, 810.

Itinerary. The account of a route followed by a traveller. The itinerary of Antoninus marks out all the main roads of the Roman Empire, and the stations of the Roman army. The Itinerary of Peutinger (Tabula Peutingeriana) is also an invaluable document of ancient geography, executed A.D. 383, in the reign of Theodosius the Great, and hence called sometimes the Theodosian Table.

Ivan (i' vān). The Russian form of John, called Juan in Spain, Giovanni in Italian.

Ivan the Terrible. Ivan IV of Russia (1530, 1533-84), infamous for his cruelties, but a man of great energy. He first adopted the title of Tsar.

Ivanhoe (i' vān hō). Sir Walter Scott took the name of his hero from the village of Ivanhoe, or Ivinghoe, in Bucks; a line in an old rhymed proverb—"Tring, Wing, and Ivanhoe"—attracted his attention.

Ivanovitch (ē vān' ō vich). The Russian impersonation of the Russians as a people, as John Bull is of the English,

Ivory. Ivory Gate. See DREAMS, GATES OF.

Ivory shoulder. See PELOPS.

Ivory tower. A place of refuge from the world and its strivings and posturings. The phrase is a symbol first used by Sainte-Beuve as un tour d'ivoire.

Ivories. Teeth; also dice, keys of the piano, billiard balls, dominoes, etc.

Ivy (A.S., ifig). Dedicated to Bacchus from the notion that it is a preventive of drunkenness. But whether the Dionysian ivy is the same plant as that which we call ivy is doubtful, as it was famous for its golden berries, and was termed chryso-carpos. An ivy wreath was the prize of the Isthmian games, until it was superseded by a pine garland.

In Christian symbolism ivy typifies the everlasting life, from its remaining continually green.

Like an owl in an ivy-bush. See OWL.

I.W.W., initials of Industrial Workers of the World, an international industrial union founded in Chicago in 1905. After World War I it fell to pieces.

Ixion. In Greek legend, a king of the Lapithæ who was bound to a revolving wheel of fire in the Infernal regions, either for his impious presumption in trying to imitate the thunder of heaven, or for boasting of the favours of Hera, Zeus having sent a cloud to him in the form of Hera, and the cloud having become by him the mother of the Centaurs (q.v.).

J

J. The tenth letter of the alphabet; a modern letter, only differentiated from I (q.v.), the consonantal functions of which it took, in the 17th century, and not completely separated till the 19th. There is no roman J or j in the 1611 Authorized Version of the Bible. In the Roman system of numeration it was (and in medical prescriptions still is) used in place of i as the final figure in a series—iiij, vij, etc., for iii, vii.

Jabberwocky (jāb'er wok' i), the eponymous central figure of a strange, almost gibberish poem in Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking-glass. It contains many significant "portmanteau words," as subsequently explained to Alice by Humpty Dumpty.

Jachin and Boaz (jā' kin, bō' āz). The two great bronze pillars set up by Solomon at the entrance of his Temple—Jachin being the right-handed (southern) pillar, and the name probably expressing permanence, immovability, and Boaz being the left-hand (northern) pillar typifying the Lord of all strength. See 1 Kings vii, 21; Ezek. xl, 49.

Jack. A personal name, probably a diminutive of John, but confused with the French Jacques (q.v.).

A good Jack makes a good Jill. A good husband makes a good wife, a good master makes a good servant. Jack, a generic name for man, husband, or master; and Jill for a woman. See JACKEROO.

Before you can say Jack Robinson. Immediately. Grose says that the saying had its birth from a very volatile gentleman of that name, who used to pay flying visits to his neighbours, and was no sooner announced than he was off again; Halliwell says (Archaic Dictionary, 1846):—

The following lines from "an old play" are elsewhere given as the original phrase—

A warke it ys as easie to be done

As t'ys to saye Jacke! robys on.

But the "old play" has never been identified, and both these accounts are palpably ben trovato. The phrase was in use in the 18th century, and is to be found in Fanny Burney's Evelina (1778), II, xxxvii.

"Before you could say Jack Robinson" was the refrain of an immensely popular song sung by Thomas Hudson at the Cyder Cellars in the early 19th century.

Every Jack shall have his Jill. Every man shall have a wife of his own.

Jack shall have his Jill,

Nought shall go ill;

The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be well. Midsummer Night's Dream, iii, 2.

Every man Jack of them. All without exception, even the most insignificant. Shakespeare uses the word in the same sense in Cymbeline, ii, 1—"Every Jack-slave hath his bellyful of fighting."

Jack Drum's Entertainment. See DRUM.

Jack of all trades and master of none. One who can turn his hand to anything is not usually an expert in any one branch. Jack of all trades is a contemptuous expression—more grandiloquently he is a sciolist.

Jack's as good as his master. An old proverb (like "When Adam delved and Eve span"; see ADAM) indicating the equality of man. It was the wise Agur (see Proverbs, xxx, 22) who placed "a servant when he reigneth" as the first of the four things that the earth cannot bear.

To be upon their jacks. To have the advantage over one. The reference is to the jack, or jerkin, a coat of mail quilted with stout leather.

To make one's jack. To be successful. The allusion is to the jack in games, such as bowls.

To play the Jack. To play the rogue, the knave. To deceive or lead astray like Jack-o'-lantern, or ignis fatuus.

—your fairy, which you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack with us.—Tempest, iv, 1.

Cheap jack. See CHEAP.

Cousin Jack. See COUSIN.

Jack Adams. A fool.

Jack-a-dandy. A term of endearment for a smart, bright little fellow;

Smart she is, and handy, O!

Sweet as sugar-candy, O! . . .

And I'm her Jack-a-dandy, O!

Jack-a-dandy is also rhyming-slang for brandy.

Jack-a-dreams. See JOHN-A-DREAMS.

Jack-a-Lent. A kind of Aunt Sally which was thrown at in Lent; hence, a puppet, a sheepish booby. Shakespeare says: "You little Jack-a-Lent, have you been true to us?" (Merry Wives, ii, 3).

Thou, that when last thou wert put out of service, Travell'dst to Hampstead Heath on an Ash Wednesday

Where thou didst stand six weeks the Jack of Lent, For boys to hurl, three throws a penny, at thee, To make thee a purse.

BEN JONSON: Tale of a Tub, IV, iii.

Jack among the maids. A favourite with the ladies; a ladies' man.

Jackanapes. A pert, vulgar, apish little fellow; a prig. Jackanapes must, however, have been in use before it became a nickname, and it is uncertain whether the -napes is connected originally with ape or with Naples, Jackanapes being a Jack (monkey) of (imported from) Naples, just as fustian-a-napes was fustian from Naples. There is an early 15th-century record of monkeys being sent to England from Italy; and by the 16th century, at all events, Jackanapes was in use as a proper name for a tame ape.

I will teach a scurvy jackanape priest to meddle or make.—Merry Wives of Windsor, i, 4.

Jack-a-Napes. The nickname of William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, who was beheaded at sea (off Dover), possibly at the instigation of the Duke of York (1450). The name was given to him on account of his device, the clog and chain of an ape, which was also the cause of another of his names—"Ape-clogge."

Jackass. An unmitigated fool.

Jack-at-a-pinch. One who lends a hand in an emergency; a clergyman, for instance, who has no cure, but officiates for a fee in any church where his assistance is required.

Jack Brag. See BRAG.

Jackdaw. A prating nuisance.

Jack-knife. Phrases from the similitude of a jack-knife in which the big blade doubles up into the handle.

(i) In logging, where two logs jam end to end and hold up the rest;

(ii) In swimming a form of fancy dive.

Jack-pot. In poker, a pot which cannot be opened until a player has a pair of jacks, or better.

Jack Pudding. A buffoon, a mountebank; perhaps originally one who performed tricks, such as swallowing a certain number of yards of black pudding.

Jack Rice. An Australian race-horse once noted for his performance over the hurdles; hence to have a roll Jack Rice couldn't jump over is to have a lot of money.

Jack-sauce. An insolent sauce-box, "the worst Jack of the pack."

Jackstones. A game played with six small stones or specially shaped pieces of metal, and a rubber ball.

Jackstraws. The American name for the game of spillikins.

Jack-in-office. A conceited official or upstart, who presumes on his appointment to give himself airs.

Jack-in-the-green. A youth or boy who moves about concealed by a wicker framework covered with leaves and boughs as part of the chimney-sweeps' revels on May Day. An old English custom now dead.

Jack of both sides. One who tries to favour two antagonistic parties, either from fear or for profit.

Jack out of office. One no longer in office; one dismissed from his employment.

I am left out; for me nothing remains,
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office.
1 Henry VI, i, 1.

Jack is applied to animals and plants: usually with reference to the male sex, smallness, or inferiority.

Jackass, Jack-baker (a kind of owl), Jack or dog fox, Jack hare, Jack rat, Jack shark, Jack snipe; a young pike is called a Jack, so also were the male birds used in falconry.

Jack-in-the hedge, Jack-go-to-bed-at-noon, Jack-jump-about, and Jack-in-the-bush, are names of various common wild flowers. Jack-in-the-pulpit, a North American woodland plant, Arisaema triphyllum, with an upright club-shaped spike, or spadix within an over-arching green or purple sheath.

Jack-curlew. The whimbrel, a small species of curlew.

Jack-in-a-bottle. The long-tailed tit-mouse, or bottle-tit; so called from the shape of its nest.

Jack-rabbit. A large prairie-hare of North America; shortened from Jackass-rabbit, a name given to it on account of its very long ears and legs.

Jack Amend-All. One of the nicknames given to Jack Cade (killed 1450), the leader of "Cade's Rebellion." He promised to remedy all abuses.

Jack and the Beanstalk. A nursery tale found among all sorts of races from Icelanders to Zulus.

Jack and Jill. It has been suggested that the well-known nursery rhyme is a relic of a Norse myth, the two children are said to have been kidnapped by the moon while drawing water, and they are still to be seen with the bucket hanging from a pole resting on their shoulders.

An otherwise unknown comedy Jack and Jill is mentioned in the Revels Accounts as having been played at court in 1567-8. Jill, or Gill, is an abbreviation of Gillian, for Juliana.

Jack the Giant-killer. The hero of this old nursery tale owed much of his success to his four marvellous possessions—an invisible coat, a cap of wisdom, shoes of swiftness, and a resistless sword. When he put on his coat no eye could see him; when he had his shoes on no one could overtake him; his sword would cut through everything; and when his cap was on he knew everything he required to know. The story is given by Walter Map (and later by Geoffrey of Monmouth), who obtained it in the early 13th century from a French chronicle.

Jack Horner. A very fanciful explanation of the old nursery rhyme "Little Jack Horner" is that Jack was steward to the Abbot of Glastonbury at the time of the Dissolution of the Monasteries, and that he, by a subterfuge, became possessed of the deeds of the Manor of Mells, which is in the neighbourhood and which is still owned by his descendants of the same name. Some say that these deeds with others were sent to Henry VIII concealed, for safety, in a pasty; that "Jack Horner" was the bearer; and that on the way, he lifted the crust and extracted this "plum."

Jack Ketch. A hangman and executioner, notorious for his barbarity, who was appointed about 1663 and died in 1686. He was the executioner of William, Lord Russell, for his share in the Rye House Plot (1683) and of Monmouth (1685). In 1686 he was turned out of office for insulting one of the sheriffs, and was succeeded by a butcher named Rose. Rose, however, was himself hanged within four months, whereupon Ketch was reinstated. As early as 1678 his name had appeared in a ballad, and by 1702 it was associated with the Punch and Judy puppet-play, which had recently been introduced from Italy.

Ketch the executioner, a wretch who had butchered many brave and noble victims, and whose name has, during a century and a half, been vulgarly given to all who have succeeded him in his odious office.—MACAULAY: History of England, vol. 1, ch. V.

Jack of Newbury. John Winchcombe alias Smallwood (d. 1520), a wealthy clothier in the reign of Henry VIII. He was the hero of many chap-books, and is said to have kept 100 looms in his own house at Newbury, while legend relates that he equipped at his own expense 100 to 200 of his men to aid the king against the Scots in Flodden Field.

Jack the Ripper. An unknown person who committed a series of murders on prostitutes in the East End of London in 1888-89. He gave himself the name, and the mystery surrounding his crimes made it very widely known.

The first murder was April 2nd, 1888; the next was August 7th; the third was August 31st, the fourth was September 8th; the fifth was September 30th, when two women were murdered; the sixth was November 9th; the seventh was December 20th, in a builder's yard; the eighth was July 17th, 1889, at Whitechapel; the ninth was September 17th.

Jack Straw. The name (or nickname) of one of the leaders in the Peasants' Revolt of 1381. There is an allusion to him in Chaucer's Nun's Prologue (1386), and the name soon came to signify a man of straw, a worthless sort of person.

It shall be but the weight of a strawe, or the weight of Jack Strawe more.—THOS. NASH: Nashe's Lenten Stuffe (1598).

Jacky Howe (Austr.). A short-sleeved shirt worn by shearers, called after Jack Howe, whose 320 sheep sheared in eight hours—a feat performed in Queensland about 1900—still holds the world's record.

Jack-snip. A botching tailor.

Jack Sprat. A dwarf; as if sprats were dwarf mackerels. Children, by a similar metaphor, are called small fry.

Jack Tar. A common sailor, whose hands and clothes are tarred by the ship's tackling.

Jack-o'-lantern. A will-o'-the-wisp. See IGNIS FATUUS.

Jack Drum. See DRUM.

Jack Frost. The personification of frost or frosty weather.

Jack-in-the-box. A toy consisting of a box out of which, when the lid is raised, a figure springs.

Jack in the cellar. Old slang for an unborn child: a translation of the Dutch expression for the same Hans in kelder.

Jack of cards. The knave or servant of the king and queen of the same suit.

Jack o' the bowl. The brownie or house spirit of Switzerland; so called from the custom of placing for him every night on the roof of the cowhouse a bowl of fresh sweet cream. The contents are sure to disappear before morning.

Jackey. A monkey. Cp. JACKANAPES above.

Yellow jack. The yellow fever.

A very large number of appliances and parts of appliances are called by this name; such as the jack, bottle-jack, or roasting-jack, used for turning the meat when roasting before an open fire; the jack used for lifting heavy weights; the rough stool or wooden horse used for sawing timber on; etc. Other instances of this use are:—

Boot-jack. An instrument for drawing off boots.

Jack-block. A block attached to the top-gallant-tie of a ship.

Jack-in-the-basket. The cap or basket on the top of a pole to indicate the place of a sand-bank at sea, etc.

Jack-o'-the clock or clock-house. The figure which, in some old public clocks, comes out to strike the hours on the bell.

Strike like Jack o' the clock-house, never but in season.—WM. STRODE: Floating Island (1655).

King Richard: Well, but what's o'clock?

Buckingham: Upon the stroke of ten.

K.R.:

Well, let it strike.

B.: Why let it strike?

K.R.: Because that, like a jack, thou keep'st the stroke

Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.

Richard III, iv, 2.

Jack-roll. The cylinder round which the rope of a well coils.

Jack-screw. A large screw rotating in a threaded socket, used for lifting heavy weights.

Lifting-jack. A machine for lifting the axle-tree of a vehicle when the wheels are cleaned or the tires require attention.

Smoke-jack. An apparatus in a chimney-flue for turning a spit. It is made to revolve by the upward current of smoke and air.

The JACK is also applied to the small flag flown at the bow in ships (cp. UNION JACK); a small drinking vessel made of waxed leather, the large one being called a black jack (q.v.), and to an inferior kind of armour consisting of a leather surcoat worn over the hauberk, from the 14th to the 17th century. It was formed by overlapping pieces of steel fastened by one edge upon canvas, coated over with cloth or velvet, and was worn by the peasantry of the English borders in their skirmishes with moss-troopers, etc. North, in his translation of Plutarch (1579; Life of Crassus), applies the word to the armour of the Parthians:—

For himself [i.e. Crassus] and his men with weak and light staves, brake upon them that were armed with curaces of steel, or stiff leather jacks.

And the "jack" at bowls is so called because it is very small in comparison with the bowls themselves.

A Jack and a half-jack. Counters resembling a sovereign and a half-sovereign; used at gaming-tables.

Jack boots. Cumbrous boots of thick leather worn by fishermen, cavalrymen, etc.

Jack of Dover. Some unidentified eatable mentioned by Chaucer in the Cook's Prologue. "Our host," addressing the cook, says:—

Now telle on, Roger, loke that it be good;
For many a pastee hastow laten blood,
And many a Jakke of Dover hastow sold
That hath been twyes hoot and twyes cold.

Professor Skeat says that this is "probably a pie that had been cooked more than once"; another suggestion is that it means some sea-fish (cp. JOHN DORY); while another is that it is the heel-taps of bottles of wine collected into a jack, and, by being served to customers, made to "do over" (Dover) again!

Jack plane, Jack saw. A plane or saw to do rough work before the finer instruments are used.

Jack rafter. A rafter in a hipped roof, shorter than a full-sized one.

Jack rib. An inferior rib in an arch, being shorter than the rest.

Jack timbers. Timbers in a building shorter than the rest.

Jack towel. A long towel hung on a roller.

Jackal. A toady. One who does the dirty work of another. It was once thought that the jackals hunted in troops to provide the lion with prey, hence they were called the "lion's providers." No doubt the lion will at times avail himself of the jackal's assistance by appropriating prey started by these "hunters," but it would be folly to suppose that the jackal acted on the principle of vos non vobis. See LION'S PROVIDER.

Jackeroo, a name used in Australia in the first half of the 19th century to describe a young Englishman newly arrived to learn farming. It was said by some to be derived from the Queensland ichaceroo, the shrike, noted for its garrulity. Later the name was applied simply to a station hand. Jilleroo, a feminine adaptation of Jackeroo, used for land girls in Australia during World War II.

Jacket. Diminutive of jack, a surcoat (whence the armour).

The skin of a potato is called its "jacket." Potatoes brought to table unpeeled are said to be "with their jackets on."

To dust one's jacket, or to give one a good jacketing. See DUST.

Jacksonian Professor. The professor of natural and experimental philosophy at Cambridge. The professorship was founded in 1782 by the Rev. Richard Jackson (1700-82), a fellow of Trinity.

Jacob. Jacob's ladder. The ladder seen by the patriarch Jacob in a vision (Gen. xxviii, 12). Jacob is, on this account, a cant name for a ladder, and steep and high flights of steps going up cliffs, etc., are often called Jacob's ladders, as is a flaw in a stocking where only the weft threads are left, giving a ladder-like appearance. There is a garden flower also so called.

Jacob's staff. A pilgrim's staff; from the Apostle James (Lat. Jacobus), who is usually represented with a staff and scallop shell.

As he had travelled many a summer's day
Through boiling sands of Arabia and Ynd;
And in his hand a Jacob's staff to stay
His weary limbs upon.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, Bk. i, canto vi, 32-35.

Also the name of an obsolete instrument for taking heights and distances.

Reach then a soaring quill, that I may write
As with a Jacob's staff to take her height.

CLEVELAND: The Hecatombs to his Mistress.

Jacob's stone. The Coronation Stone (see SCONE) is sometimes so called, because of the legend that it was on this stone that Jacob's head rested when he had the vision of the angels ascending and descending the ladder (Gen. xxviii, 11).

Jacobins. The Dominicans were so called in France from the "Rue St. Jacques," Paris, where they first established themselves in 1219; and the French Revolutionary club (known as the "Society of Friends of the Constitution" when founded at Versailles in 1789) took the name because, on their removal to Paris, they met in the hall of an ex-convent of Jacobins, in the Rue St. Honoré. The Jacobins were at first constitutional monarchists, with Mirabeau as one of their leading members. After the king's flight to Varennes in 1791 there was a schism in the party and the main body became extreme republicans, swayed by Robespierre, St. Just, Marat, and Couthon. During the Terror they had unrivalled power, but the fall of Robespierre in 1794 brought their reign to an end and in November of that year the club was suppressed. Their badge was the Phrygian Cap of Liberty.

Jacobites (jāk' ō bītz). The supporters of the right of James II and his descendants to the throne of Great Britain and Ireland. They came into existence after the flight of James II in 1688, and were strong in Scotland and the North of England. They were responsible for two risings, in 1715 and 1745, the latter marking the virtual end of Jacobitism as a political force. The last male descendant of James II, Henry Cardinal of York, died in 1807; a certain number of sentimental adherents to the lost cause are still to be found here and there.

Jacobites. An Oriental sect of Monophysites, so called from Jacobus Baradaeus, Bishop of Edessa, in Syria, in the 6th century. The Jacobite Church comprises three Patriarchates, viz., those of Alexandria, Antioch, and Armenia.

Jacobus (jā kō' bus). The unofficial name of a gold coin of the value of from 20s. to 24s., struck in the reign of James I.

Jacquard Loom (jāk' ard). So called from Jos. Marie Jacquard (1752-1834), of Lyons, its inventor. It is a machine for weaving figures upon silks and muslins.

Jacques (zhak) (Fr.). A generic name for the poor artisan class in France (see JACQUERIE, LA, below), so called from the jaque, a rough kind of waistcoat, sleeved, and coming almost to the knees, that they used to wear.

Jacques, il me faut troubler ton somme;

Dans le village, un gros husrier

Rude et court, suivi du messier

C'est pour l'impôt, las! mon pauvre homme,

Lève-toi, Jacques, lève-toi,

Voici venir l'huissier du roi.

Béranger (1831).

Jacquerie, La (zhāk' e rē). An insurrection of the peasantry of France in 1358, excited by the oppressions of the privileged classes and Charles the Bad of Navarre, while King John II was a prisoner in England; so called from Jacques, or Jacques Bonhomme, the generic name given to the French peasantry. They banded together, fortified themselves and declared war to the death against every gentleman in France, but in six weeks some 12,000 of the insurgents were cut down, and the rebellion suppressed with the greatest determination.

Jactitation of Marriage. A false assertion by a person of being married to another. This is actionable. Jactitation means literally "a throwing out," and here means "to utter," i.e. "to throw out publicly." The term comes from the old Canon Law.

Jade. The fact that in mediæval times this ornamental stone was supposed, if applied to the side, to act as a preservative against colic is enshrined in its name, for jade is from the Spanish pedra de ijada, stone of the side; and its other name, nephrite, is from Gr. nephros, kidney. Among the North American Indians it is still worn as an amulet against the bite of venomous snakes, and to cure the gravel, epilepsy, etc.

Jade. A worthless horse. An old woman (used in contempt). A young woman (not necessarily contemptuous).

Jagganath. See JUGGERNAUT.

Jahveh. See JEHOVAH.

Jains. A sect of dissenters from Hinduism of great antiquity, its known history going back beyond 477 B.C. Its differences from Hinduism are theological and too abstruse for expression in brief. Jains being largely traders the sect is wealthy though comparatively small in size and influence.

Jalopy (jāl ō' pi or jāl ōp' i), an American colloquial term for an old, decrepit automobile.

Jam. Used in a slang way for something really nice, especially if unexpected; something delightful, tip-top.

There must have been a charming climate in Paradise and [the] connubial bliss [there] . . . was real jam.—SAM SLICK: Human Nature.

Money for jam. Money (or money's worth) for nothing; an unexpected bit of luck.

Jam session. A meeting of jazz musicians improvising spontaneously, without rehearsal. Jamboree (jām bō rē'), originally meaning a noisy merry-making, this word is now more usually applied to a large rally of Boy Scouts, usually of an international scope.

Jambres. See JANNES.

James. A sovereign; a jacobus (q.v.); also called a "jimmy." Half a jimmy is half a sovereign.

James, St. The Apostle St. James the Great is the patron saint of Spain. Legend states that after his death in Palestine his body was placed in a boat with sails set, and that next day it reached the Spanish coast; at Padron, near Compostella, they used to show a huge stone as the veritable boat. According to another legend, it was the relics of St. James that were miraculously conveyed to Spain in a ship of marble from Jerusalem, where he was bishop. A knight saw the ship sailing into port, his horse took fright, and plunged with its rider into the sea. The knight saved himself by "boarding the marble vessel," but his clothes were found to be entirely covered with scallop shells.

The saint's body was discovered in 840 by divine revelation to Bishop Theodomirus, and a church was built at Compostella for its shrine.

St. James is commemorated on July 25th, and is represented in art sometimes with the sword by which he was beheaded, and sometimes attired as a pilgrim, with his cloak covered with shells.

St. James the Less. His attribute is a fuller's club, in allusion to the instrument by which he was put to death after having been precipitated from the summit of the temple at Jerusalem in A.D. 62. He is commemorated on May 1st. Less means the shorter of stature.

The Court of St. James's. The British court, to which foreign ambassadors are officially accredited. St. James's Palace, Pall Mall, stands on the site of a 12th-century leper hospital dedicated to St. James the Less. The Palace was a royal residence from 1698 until 1837, and since then has been used for levees and drawing-rooms.

Jameson Raid, a coup d'état attempted in S. Africa by Dr. L. S. Jameson in 1895. With the connivance of Cecil Rhodes he organized a force of some 500 men to invade the Transvaal simultaneously with a rising of Uitlanders in Johannesburg. Jameson crossed the Bechuanaland border but was met by a Boer force at Doornkop and compelled to surrender. The Boers handed the invaders over to the British authorities and Jameson and others were tried for treason and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

Jamshid (jām shid'). In Persian legend, the fourth king of the Pishdadian Dynasty, i.e. the earliest, who is fabled to have reigned for 700 years and to have had the Deevs, or Genii, as his slaves. He possessed a seven-ringed golden cup, typical of the seven heavens, the seven planets, the seven seas, etc., which was full of the elixir of life; it was hidden by the genii and was said to have been discovered while digging the foundations of Persepolis.

Iram indeed is gone with all his rose,
And Jamshyd's Sev'n-ring'd Cup where no one knows.

FITZGERALD: Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyám.

Jane. A small Genoese silver coin; so called from Fr. Genes, Genoa.

Because I could not give her many a jane.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, III, vii, 58.

In American slang a jane is a derogatory term for a woman. She is also the heroine of a strip cartoon by Petty, that began in the London Daily Mirror during the 1930s—a great favourite with the British armed forces in World War II.

Janissaries or Janizaries (jān' i sār iz) (Turk. yeni-ischeri, new corps). A celebrated militia of the Ottoman Empire, raised by Orchan in 1326, originally, and for some centuries, compulsorily recruited from the Christian subjects of the Sultan. It was blessed by Hadji Becktash, a saint, who cut off a sleeve of his fur mantle and gave it to the captain. The captain put the sleeve on his head, and from this circumstance arose the fur cap worn by these foot-guards. In 1826, having become too formidable to the state, they were abolished after a massacre in which many thousands of the Janissaries perished.

Jannes and Jambres (jān' ēz, jām' brēz). The names under which St. Paul (2 Tim. iii, 8) referred to the two magicians of Pharaoh who imitated some of the miracles of Moses (Exod. vii). The names are not mentioned in the Old Testament, but they appear in the Targums and other rabbinical writings, where tradition has it that they were sons of Balaam, and that they perished either in the crossing of the Red Sea, or in the tumult after the worship of the golden calf.

Jansenists (jān' sen istis). A sect of Christians, who held the doctrines of Cornelius Jansen, (1585-1638), Bishop of Ypres. Jansen professed to have formulated the teaching of Augustine, which resembled Calvinism in many respects. He taught the doctrines of "irresistible grace," "original sin," and the "utter helplessness of the natural man to turn to God." Louis XIV took part against them, and they were put down by Pope Clement XI, in 1705, in the famous bull Unigenitus (q.v.).

Januarius, St. (jān ū ār' i ūs). The patron saint of Naples, a bishop of Benevento who was martyred during the Diocletian persecution, 304. He is commemorated on September 19th, and his head and two vials of his blood are preserved in the cathedral at Naples. This congealed blood is said to liquefy several times a year.

January. The month dedicated by the Romans to Janus (q.v.), who presided over the entrance to the year and, having two faces, could look back to the year past and forward on the current year.

The Dutch used to call this month Lauw-maand (frosty-month); the Saxons, Wulf-monath, because wolves were very troublesome then from the great scarcity of food. After the introduction of Christianity, the name was changed to Se aftera geola (the after-yule); it was also called Forma monath (first month). In the French Republican calendar it was called Nivose (snow-month, December 20th to January 20th).

It's a case of January and May. Said when an old man marries a young girl. The allusion is to the Merchant's Tale in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, in which May, a lovely girl, married January, a Lombard baron sixty years of age.

Janus (jā' nūs). The ancient Roman deity who kept the gate of heaven; hence the guardian of gates and doors. He was represented with two faces, one in front and one behind, and the doors of his temple in Rome were thrown open in times of war and closed in times of peace. The name is used allusively both with reference to the double-facedness and to war. Thus Milton says of the Cherubim:—

Four faces each
Had, like a double Janus.
Paradise Lost, xi, 129.

And Tennyson—

State-policy and church-policy are conjoint,
But Janus-faces looking diverse ways.
Queen Mary, III, ii.

While Dante says of the Roman eagle that it—composed the world to such a peace,
That of his temple Janus barr'd the door.
Paradiso, vi, 83 (Cary's tr.).

Japanese Vellum. An extremely costly hand-beaten Japanese paper manufactured from the inner bark of the mulberry tree.

Japhetic. An adjective sometimes applied to the Aryan family.

The Indo-European family of languages as known by various designations. Some style it Japhetic, as if it appertained to the descendants of the patriarch Japheth [son of Noah]; as the Semitic tongues [appertain] to the descendants of Shem.—WHITNEY: Languages, etc., lect. v.

Jarkman. Sixteenth-century slang for an Abram-man (q.v.), especially one who was able to forge passes, licences, etc. Jark was rogues' cant for a seal, whence also a licence of the Bethlehem Hospital to beg.

Jarnac. Coup de Jarnac. A treacherous and unexpected attack; so called from Guy Chabot, Sieur de Jarnac, who, in a duel with La Châteigneraine, on July 10th, 1547, in the presence of Henri II, first "hamstrung" his opponent and then, when he was helpless, slew him.

Jarndyce v. Jarndyce (jarn dīs'). An interminable Chancery suit, in Bleak House. Dickens probably founded his story on the long drawn-out Chancery suit of Jennens v. Jennens, which related to property in Nacton, Suffolk, belonging to an intestate miser who died in 1798. The case was only finally concluded more than eighty years after its start.

Jarvey. Old slang for a hackney-coach driver; from the personal name Jarvis, with a possible allusion to St. Gervaise, whose symbol in art is a whip.

I pity them ere Jarvies a sitting on their boxes all night and waiting for the nob's what is dancing.—DISRAELI: Sybil, V, vii (1845).

Jason (jā' sôn). The hero of Greek legend who led the Argonauts (q.v.) in the quest for the Golden Fleece. He was the son of Æson, king of Iolus, was brought up by the centaur, Chiron, and when he demanded his kingdom from his half-brother, Pelias, who had deprived him of it, was told he could have it in return for the Golden Fleece. Jason thereupon gathered together the chief heroes of Greece and set sail in the Argo. After many tests and trials he, through the help of Medea (q.v.), was successful. He married Medea, but later deserted her, and, according to one account, he killed himself with grief, according to another was crushed to death by the keel of his old ship, Argo, while resting beneath it.

Jaundice (Fr. jaune, yellow). A jaundiced eye. A prejudiced eye which sees only faults. It was a popular belief that to the eye of a person who had the jaundice everything looked of a yellow tinge.

All seems infected that th' infected spy,
As all seems yellow to the jaundiced eye.
POPE: Essay on Criticism, ii, 359.

Javan (jā' vān). In the Bible the collective name of the Greeks (Is. lxvi, 19, and Ezek. xxvii, 13 and elsewhere), who were supposed to be descended from Javan, the son of Japheth (Gen. x, 2).

Jaw. To jaw, to annoy with words, to jabber, wrangle, or abuse.

A break-jaw word; a jaw-breaker. A very long word, or one hard to pronounce.

Pi jaw. A contemptuous term for pious talk, or for an ostentatiously pious or goody-goody person.

Jay. Old slang for a frivolous person, a wanton. This jay of Italy . . . hath betrayed him.—Cymbeline, iii, 4.

Jay hawk. In older American slang, a bandit.

Jaywalker. One who crosses a street regardless of traffic regulations.

Jazey. A wig; a corruption of Jersey, and so called because they used to be made of Jersey flax and fine wool.

Jazz (jāz). The folk-music of the American Negro. Originating in the cotton-fields, it was developed in New Orleans and thence spread up the Mississippi in the river boats to Chicago. Now world-wide, this type of music, originally and sometimes still the expression of a naturally musical people, is too often confused with insipid dance tunes. One of its earliest exponents was "Jelly Roll" Morton who introduced the Blues. Buddy Bolden, the great trumpet-player, was playing in New Orleans in the 1880s. The music started up the river in 1915, and in March, 1916, Bert Kelly's "Jazz Band" (the first to be so called) was engaged by the Boosters' Club, of Chicago, scored an immediate success, and started jazz on its conquering career.

The origin of the name is uncertain. One account is that it is an adaptation of the name of one Razz, who was a band conductor in New Orleans about 1904; another that it has long been a common word to the Negro and on the Barbary coast, and means simply "to mess 'em up and slap it on thick," and another that it was the spontaneous production of a brain-wave on the part of Bert Kelly.

Je ne sais quoi (zhe ne sā kwa) (Fr., I know not what). An indescribable something; as "There was a je ne sais quoi about him which made us dislike him at first sight."

Jeames (jēmz). A flunkey. The Morning Post used sometimes to be so called, because of its never failing solicitude for the flunkey-employing classes and its flunkey-like attitude towards them.

Thackeray wrote Jeames's Diary (published in Punch), of which Jeames de la Pluche—a "super" flunkey—was the hero.

Jean Crapaud. A Frenchman. See CRAPAUD.

Jedwood Justice. Putting an obnoxious person to death first, and trying him afterwards. This sort of justice was dealt to moss-troopers. Same as Jedburgh justice, Jeddart justice. We have also "Cupar justice" and "Abingdon law."

Jedwood justice—hang in haste and try at leisure.—SCOTT: Fair Maid of Perth, ch. xxiii.

Jeep (jēp). A small all-purpose car developed by the U.S.A. during World War II. Its 4-wheel drive and high and low gear-boxes gave it astonishing cross-country performances. Its value to the Allied armed forces was inestimable. The experimental models were called Beeps, Peeps and Blitz Buggies, but the name Jeep had been coined and had stuck by early 1941.

Jehennam. See JAHANNAM.

Jehovah (je hō' vā). The name JEHOVAH itself is an instance of the extreme sanctity with which the name of God was invested, for this is a disguised form of the name. This word JHVH, the sacred tetragrammaton (q.v.), was too sacred to use, so the scribes added the vowels of Adonai, thereby indicating that the reader was to say Adonai instead of JHVH. At the time of the Renaissance these vowels and consonants were taken for the sacred name itself and hence Jehovah or Yahwe.

Jehovistic. See ELOHISTIC.

Jehovah's Witnesses. a sect of religious pacifists who refuse to acknowledge the authority of the State when it crosses their religious views or doctrines.

Jehu (jē' hū). A coachman, especially one who drives at a rattling pace.

The watchman told, saying, . . . The driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.—2 Kings ix, 20.

Jekyll (jek' il). Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Two phases of one man. Jekyll is the "would do good," Hyde is "the evil that is present." The phrase comes from R. L. Stevenson's The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, first published in 1886.

Jellyby. Mrs. (jel' i bi). The type of the enthusiastic, unthinking philanthropist who forgets that charity should begin at home. Dickens, Bleak House.

Jemmy (the diminutive or pet form of James). Slang for a number of different things, as a burglar's crowbar; a sheep's head, boiled or baked, said to be so called from the tradition that James IV of Scotland breakfasted on a sheep's head just before the battle of Flodden Field (September 9th, 1513); also, a greatcoat; and—as an adjective—spruce, dandified. See JEMMY JESSAMY.

She presently returned with a pot of porter and a dish of sheep's heads; which gave occasion to several pleasant witticisms on the part of Mr. Sikes, founded upon the singular coincidence of jemmies, being a cant name, common to them, and also to an ingenious instrument much used in his profession.—DICKENS: Oliver Twist, ch. xx.

Jemmy Dawson. See DAWSON.

Jemmy Jessamy. A Jack-a-dandy; a lady's fondling, "sweet as sugar-candy."

This was very different language to that she had been in the habit of hearing from her Jemmy Jessamy adorers.—THACKERAY: Barry Lyndon, ch. xiii.

Jemmy O'Goblin. Slang for a sovereign. Cp. JAMES.

Jenkins's Ear. The name given to an incident that helped largely to bring about the war between England and Spain in 1739 that eventually developed into the War of the Spanish Succession. Captain Robert Jenkins, skipper of the brig Rebecca was homeward bound from the West Indies when he was attacked by a Spanish guarda costa off Havana on 9th April, 1731. The Spaniards plundered his ship and ended by cutting off one of Jenkins's ears. On reaching London Jenkins carried his complaint (and his severed ear in a leather case) to the king and demanded reparation. At the time little notice was taken of the incident, but some years later, in 1738, the matter was brought up again, Jenkins and his ear were examined by a committee of the House of Commons and his case became an added grievance to the many others that culminated in war.

Jenny Wren. The sweetheart of Robin Redbreast in the old nursery rhyme.

Robin promised Jenny, if she would be his wife, she should "feed on cherry-pie and drink currant-wine"; and he says:—

"I'll dress you like a goldfinch,
Or any peacock gay;
So, dearest Jen, if you'll be mine,
Let us appoint the day."

Jenny replies:—

"Cherry-pie is very nice,
And so is currant wine;
But I must wear my plain brown gown
And never go too fine."

Jeofail (jē' fāl). The old legal term for an error, omission, or oversight in proceedings at law. The word is the Anglo-Fr. jeo fail, O.Fr. je faille, I am at fault. There were several statutes of Jeofail for the remedy of slips or mistakes.

Jeopardy (jep' ar dī). Hazard, danger. It originally signified an even chance, hence an uncertain chance, something hazardous. It has since been extended to mean exposure to the risk of death, loss, or injury. The word is French in derivation—jeu, game; parti, divided.

Jeremiah (jer e mī' ā). The British Jeremiah. Gibbon so calls Gildas (fl. 6th cent.), author of Lamentations over the Destruction of Britain.

Jeremiad (jer e mī' ād). A pitiful tale, a tale of woe to produce compassion; so called from the "Lamentations" of the prophet Jeremiah.

Jericho (jer' i kō). Used in a number of phrases for the sake of giving verbal definition to some altogether indefinite place. The reason for fixing on this particular town is possibly to be found in 2 Sam. x, 5, and 1 Chron. xix, 5.

Go to Jericho. A euphemistic turn of phrase for "Go and hang yourself," or something more offensive still.

Gone to Jericho. No one knows where.

I wish you were at Jericho. Anywhere out of my way.

Jerked Beef. "Jerked" is here a corruption of Peruvian charqui, meat cut into strips and dried in the sun.

Jerkin. A short coat or jacket, formerly made of leather; a close waistcoat.

A plague of opinion, one may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.—Troilus and Cressida, iii, 3.

Jerkwater. An early American term for a small train on a branch railway line.

Jeroboam (jer ō bō' am). A very large wine bottle or flagon, so called in allusion to the "mighty man of valour" who "made Israel to sin" (1 Kings xi, 28, xiv, 16). Its capacity is not very definite; some say it is from ten to twelve quarts, but the more usual allowance is eight. A magnum = 2 quart bottles; a tappit hen = 2 magnums; a jeroboam = 2 tappit hens; and a rehoboam = 2 jeroboams or 16 quart bottles. See these names, and cp. JORUM.

Jerome, St. (jer' ōm). A father of the Western Church, and translator of the Vulgate (q.v.). He was born about 340, and died at Bethlehem in 420. He is generally represented as an aged man in a cardinal's dress, writing or studying, with a lion seated beside him. His feast is kept on September 30th.

Jerónimo (jè ron' imō). The chief character in the Spanish Tragedy by Thomas Kyd (acted about 1590). On finding his application to the king ill-timed, he says to himself, "Go by, Jerónimo," which tickled the fancy of the audience so that it became for a time a street jest, and was introduced into many contemporary plays, as in Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew (Induction), Jonson's Every Man in his Humour (I, v), Dekker's Shoemaker's Holiday (II, i), etc. See also GERONIMO.

Jerrican. (World War II). A 4½-gallon petrol or water container which would stand rough handling and stack easily, developed by the Germans for the Afrika Korps. Borrowed by the British in Libya (hence its name), it became the standard unit of fuel replenishment throughout the Allied armies.

Jerry. In World War I this was an army nickname for a German, or Germans collectively.

Jerry-built. Unsubstantial. A "jerry-builder" is a speculative builder who runs up cheap, unsubstantial houses, using materials of the commonest kind. The name is probably in some way connected with Jeremiah.

Jerry Diddler. See DIDDLE.

Jerry-shop, or Tom and Jerry shop. A low-class beerhouse. Probably the Tom and Jerry was a public-house sign when Pierce Egan's

Life in London (1821), in which these are leading characters, was popular.

Jerrymander. See GERRYMANDER.

Jerry Twitcher. See TWITCHER.

Jersey is Cæsar's-ey—i.e. Cæsar's island, so called in honour of Julius Cæsar. In U.S.A. Jersey is often used to indicate the State of New Jersey.

Jerusalem. Julian the Apostate, the Roman Emperor (d. 363), with the intention of pleasing the Jews and humbling the Christians, said that he would rebuild the temple and city, but was mortally wounded before the foundation was laid, and his work set at naught by "an earthquake, a whirlwind, or a fiery eruption" (see Gibbon's Decline and Fall, ch. xxiii).

Much has been made of this by early Christian writers, who dwell on the prohibition and curse pronounced against those who should attempt to rebuild the city, and the fate of Julian is pointed out as an example of Divine wrath.

Jerusalem, in Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.), means London (Pt. i, v. 86, etc.).

The New Jerusalem. The paradise of Christians, in allusion to Rev. xxi.

Jerusalem artichoke. Jerusalem is here a corruption of Ital. Girasole. Girasole is the sunflower, which this vegetable resembles both in leaf and stem.

Jerusalem Chamber. The Chapter-house of Westminster Abbey. Henry IV died there, March 20th, 1413.

If hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem.

2 Henry IV, iv, 5.

Pope Sylvester II was told the same thing, and he died as he was saying Mass in a church so called. (Bacon; Tusculum.)

The Lower House of Convocation usually meets in the Jerusalem Chamber.

Jerusalem Cross. A cross potent. See POTENT.

Jerusalem Delivered. An Italian epic poem in twenty books, by Torquato Tasso (1544-95). It was published in 1581, and was translated into English by Edward Fairfax in 1600. It tells the story of the First Crusade and the capture of Jerusalem by Godfrey of Bouillon, 1099.

Jess (through Fr. from Lat. jactus, a cast, throw). A short strap of leather tied about the legs of a hawk to hold it on the fist. Hence, metaphorically, a bond of affection, etc.

If I prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings.
Pd whistle her off. Othello, iii, 3.

Jessamy Bride. The fancy name given by Goldsmith to Mary Horneck when he fell in love with her in 1769. Cp. JEMMY JESSAMY.

Jesse, or Jesse Tree (jes' i). A genealogical tree, usually represented as a vine or as a large brass candlestick with many branches, tracing the ancestry of Christ, called a "rod out of the stem of Jesse" (Is. xi, 1). Jesse is himself sometimes represented in a recumbent position with the vine rising out of his loins; hence a stained-glass window representing him thus with a tree shooting from him containing the pedigree of Jesus is called a Jesse window.

Jesters. See COURT FOOLS, under FOOLS.

Jesuit (jez' ū it). The popular name of members of the Society of Jesus, founded by St. Ignatius Loyola in 1533, who, when asked what name he would give his order, replied, "We are a little battalion of Jesus." The order was founded to combat the Reformation and to propagate the faith among the heathen, but through its discipline, organization, and methods of secrecy, it acquired such political power that it came into conflict with both the civil and religious authorities; it was driven from France in 1594, from England in 1579, from Venice in 1607, from Spain in 1767, from Naples in 1768; in 1773 it was altogether suppressed by Pope Clement XIV, but was revived in 1814.

Owing to the casuistical principles maintained by many of its leaders and attributed to the order as a whole the name Jesuit has acquired a very opprobrious signification in both Protestant and Roman Catholic countries, and a Jesuit, or Jesuitical person means (secondarily) a deceiver, prevaricator, one who "lies like truth," or palters in a double sense, that "keeps the word of promise to our ear, and breaks it to our hope."

Jesuit's bark. See PERUVIAN.

Jesus Paper. Paper of large size (about 28½ in. by 21½) chiefly used for engravings. Originally it was stamped with the initials I.H.S.

Jetsam or Jetson (jet' sām). Goods cast into the sea to lighten a ship (Fr. jeter, to cast out). See FLOTSAM; LIGAN.

Jettatura (yet ā too' rā). The Italian phrase for the evil eye, a superstition that certain persons have the power, by looking at one, to cast a malevolent spell. This can be countered only by various gestures, chief among which is the extending of the clenched fist with the index and little fingers stuck out like horns. The superstition and all connected with it is of extreme antiquity.

Jeu d'esprit (je des prē) (Fr.). A witticism.

Jeu de mot (je de mō) (Fr.). A pun; a play on some word or phrase.

Jeunesse Dorée (je nes' dōr ā) (Fr.). The "gilded youth" of a nation; that is, the rich and fashionable young unmarried men.

There were three of the jeunesse dorée, and, as such, were pretty well known to the ladies who promenaded the grand circle.—T. TERREL: Lady Delmar, ix.

Jew. In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.) the Jews stand for those English who were loyal to Charles II, called David.

Jews born with tails. See RABOIN.

Rich as a Jew. This expression arose in the Middle Ages, when Jews were almost the only money-lenders, and were certainly the most wealthy of the people.

Jew's-harp. It is not known how or why this very simple musical instrument got its name (known from the 16th cent.); it has no special connexion with the Jews, and is not like a harp.

B.D.—17

It was called by Bacon jeutrompe, by Beaumont and Fletcher, jew-trump, and in Hakluyt's Voyages (1595), jew's-harp.

Jew's ear. A fungus that grows on the Judas-tree (q.v.); its name is due to a mis-translation of its Latin name, Auricula Jude, i.e. Judas's ear.

Jew's myrtle. Butcher's broom is so called, from the popular notion that it formed the crown of thorns placed by the Jews on the Saviour's head.

Worth a Jew's-eye. According to fable, this expression arose from the custom of torturing Jews to extort money from them. The expedient of King John is well known; he demanded 10,000 marks of a rich Jew of Bristol; the Hebrew resisted, but the tyrant ordered that one of his teeth should be tugged out every day till the money was forthcoming. In seven days the sufferer gave in, and John jestingly observed, "A Jew's eye may be a quick ransom, but Jew's teeth give the richer harvest."

Launcelot, in the Merchant of Venice, ii, 5, puns upon this phrase when he says to Jessica:—

There will come a Christian by
Will be worth a Jewess' eye.

Jewels have (or had) in the popular belief special significations in various ways. For instance, each month was supposed to be under the influence of some precious stone—

January	.. Garnet	.. Constancy.
February	.. Amethyst	.. Sincerity.
March	.. Bloodstone	.. Courage.
April	.. Diamond	.. Innocence.
May	.. Emerald	.. Success in love.
June	.. Agate	.. Health and long life.
July	.. Cornelian	.. Content.
August	.. Sardonyx	.. Conjugal fidelity.
September	.. Sapphire	.. Antidote to madness.
October	.. Opal	.. Hope.
November	.. Topaz	.. Fidelity.
December	.. Turquoise	.. Prosperity.

The signs of the zodiac were represented by—

Aries	.. Ruby.	Libra	.. Jacinth.
Taurus	.. Topaz.	Scorpio	.. Agate.
Gemini	.. Carbuncle.	Sagittarius	.. Amethyst.
Cancer	.. Emerald.	Capricornus	.. Beryl.
Leo	.. Sapphire.	Aquarius	.. Onyx.
Virgo	.. Diamond.	Pisces	.. Jasper.

And among heralds and astrologists jewels represented special tinctures or planets, as the topaz "or" (gold), and Sol, the sun; the pearl or crystal, "argent" (silver), and the moon; the ruby, "gules" (red), and the planet Mars; the sapphire, "azure" (blue), and Jupiter; the diamond, "sable" (black), and Saturn; the emerald, "vert" (green), and Venus; the amethyst "purpure" (purple), and Mercury.

These are my jewels! See TREASURES.

Jezebel (jez' é bēl). A painted Jezebel. A flaunting woman of bold spirit but loose morals; so called from Jezebel, wife of Ahab, King of Israel (see 2 Kings, ix, 31).

Jezreelites (jez' rē litz). A small sect, with headquarters at Gillingham, Kent, believing that Christ redeemed only souls, and that the body is saved by belief in the Law. It was founded in 1876 by James White (1840-85), who had been a private in the Army, and took the name James Jershom Jezreel. They are also called the "New and Later House of Israel." their object is to be numbered among the 144,000 (see Rev. vii, 4) who at the Last Judgment will be endowed with immortal bodies.

Jib. A triangular sail borne in front of the foremast. It has the bowsprit for a base in small vessels, and the jib-boom in larger ones, and exerts an important effect, when the wind is abeam, in throwing the ship's head to leeward. The jib-boom is an extension of the bowsprit by the addition of a spar projecting beyond it. Sometimes the boom is further extended by another spar called the flying jib-boom. The jib-topsail is a light sail flying from the extreme forward end of the flying jib-boom, and set about half-way between the mast and the boom.

The cut of his jib. A sailor's phrase, meaning the expression of a person's face. Sailors recognize vessels at sea by the cut of the jibs, and in certain dialects the jib means the lower lip. Thus, to hang the jib is to look ill-tempered, or annoyed.

To jib. To start aside, to back out; a "jibbing horse" is one that is easily startled. It is probably from the sea-term, to gybe, i.e. to change tacks by bearing away before the wind.

Jiffy. In a jiffy. In a minute; in a brace of shakes; before you can say "Jack Robinson." The origin of the word is unknown, but it is met with as early as the late 18th century.

Jig, from gigue. A short piece of music much in vogue in olden times, of a very lively character, either six-eight or twelve-eight time, and used for dance-tunes. It consists of two parts, each of eight bars. Also the dance itself. You jig, you amble, and you lisp.—Hamlet, iii, 1.

The jig is up. Your trickery is discovered. "Jig" was old slang for a joke or trick.

Jiggery. An American slang term for a dance-hall.

Jiggery-pokery. Fraud, "wangling" of accounts, etc.

Jigot (jig' ot). A Scots term for a leg of mutton or lamb. It is the French gigot, and is one of the Scots words arising from the close connexion between the two countries in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Jill. A generic name for a lass, a sweetheart. See JACK and JILL under JACK.

Jilleroo. See JACKAROO.

Jim Crow. A popular Negro song and dance of last century; introduced by T. D. Rice, the original "nigger minstrel," at Washington in 1835, and brought to the Adelphi, London, in the following year. A renegade or turncoat was called a "Jim Crow," from the burden of the song:—

Wheel about and turn about
And do jis so,
Ebery time I wheel about
I jump Jim Crow.

Jim Crow cars. Railway coaches set apart for the sole use of Negroes.

Jim Crow regulations. Any rules which prohibit Negroes from associating with or enjoying the same privileges as white people.

Jimmie's or the St. James's (later the Piccadilly Hotel) was a famous, rowdy, fast-going restaurant in the last half of the 19th century; it figures in many society and London novels and memoirs. In it was to be found any night of the week everything that was blasé, bella-donna'd and often beautiful in the lower strata of female Bohemianism. Its proximity to Vine Street police station was not infrequently a matter of congratulation to the authorities.

Jimmy Woodser (Austr.). A solitary drinker. In Victoria a solitary drinker goes Ballarat. Jimmy Warder is an habitual drunk who goes about cadging drinks where he can.

Jingo (jing' gō). A word from the unmeaning jargon of the 17th-century conjurers (cp. HOCUS-FOCUS), probably substituted for God, in the same way as Gosh, Golly etc., are. In Motteux's translation of Rabelais (1694), where the original reads par Dieu (Bk. iv, lvi), the English rendering is "By jingo"; but there is a possibility that the word is Basque Jinko or Jainko, God, and was introduced by sailors.

Hey, Jingo! What the de'il's the matter?

Do mermaids swim in Dartford water?

SWIFT: Acidon or The Original Horn Fawn.

The modern meaning of the word, a blustering so-called "patriot" who is itching to go to war on the slightest provocation—a Chauvinist in France—is from a music-hall song by G. W. Hunt, which was popular in 1878 when the country was supposed to be on the verge of intervening in the Russo-Turkish War on behalf of the Turks:—

We don't want to fight; but, by Jingo, if we do,
We've got the ships, we've got the men, and got the money too.

The Russophobes became known as the Jingoes, and a noisy, war-mongering policy has been labelled Jingoism ever since.

Jinks (jingks). High jinks. The present use of the phrase expresses the idea of pranks, fun, and jollity.

The frolicsome company had begun to practise the ancient and now forgotten pastime of High Jinks. The game was played in several different ways. Most frequently the dice were thrown by the company, and those upon whom the lot fell were obliged to assume and maintain for a time a certain fictitious character, or to repeat a certain number of fescennine verses in a particular order. If they departed from the character assigned . . . they incurred forfeits, which were compounded by swallowing an additional bumper.—SCOTT: Guy Mannering, xxxvi.

Jinn (jin). Demons of Arabian mythology, according to fable created from fire two thousand years before Adam was made of earth, and said to be governed by a race of kings named Suleyman, one of whom "built the pyramids." Their chief abode is the mountain Kâf, and they assume the forms of serpents, dogs, cats, monsters, or even human beings, and become invisible at pleasure. The evil jin are hideously ugly, but the good are exquisitely beautiful. The word is plural; its singular is jinnée.

Jinx (jingks). A colloquial term in U.S.A. for a person or thing supposed to bring ill luck.

Jitney (jit' ni). An American term for an automobile plying for hire or hired to carry passengers. The name comes from the slang word for a five-cent piece—a jitney—as this was the fare originally charged for each passenger.

Jitters. An American phrase for nervousness, apprehensiveness; hence jittery is nervous, jumpy.

Jitterbug is one whose responses to the rhythm of swing music take the form of violent and unexpected dance movements, making him (or her) dance in an unpredictable, often acrobatic fashion.

Jujitsu, Jujitsu (joo jit' soo). The Japanese art of self-defence. It is based on leverage applied to the assailant's limbs which are forced into unnatural positions, called locks, to which there is no key; the victim must either give in or have the limb broken. The neck, body and hip joints are all susceptible to such attack, the spine can be injured and the hips dislocated.

Jive. A canting name for the liveliest and debased forms of jazz music, largely accomplished by uninspired improvisations of short phrases. The adepts have developed a vocabulary of their own, known as jive-talk.

Joachim, St. (jo' a kim). The father of the Virgin Mary. Generally represented as an old man carrying in a basket two turtles, in allusion to the offering made for the purification of his daughter. His wife was St. Anne.

Joan, Pope. A supposed female "pope" between Leo IV and Benedict III in the 9th century. She is said to have been born in England and educated at Cologne, passing under the name of Joannes Anglicus. Blondel, a Calvinist, wrote a book in 1640 to prove that no such person ever occupied the papal chair; but at least a hundred and fifty authors between the 13th and 17th centuries repeat the tale as an historic fact. Döllinger critically examined the question in 1868, but the entire mythic quality of the legend has long been recognized.

Job (jōb). The personification of poverty and patience, in allusion to the patriarch whose history is given in the Bible.

I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient.—2 Henry IV, i, 2.

In the Koran Job's wife is said to have been either Rahmeh, daughter of Ephraim, son of Joseph, or Makhir, daughter of Manasses; and the tradition is recorded that Job, at the command of God, struck the earth with his foot from the dunghill where he lay, and instantly there welled up a spring of water with which his wife washed his sores, and they were miraculously healed.

Job's comforter. One who means to sympathize with you in your grief, but says that you brought it on yourself; thus in reality adding weight to your sorrow.

Job's post. A bringer of bad news.

Job's pound. Bridewell; prison.

As poor as Job's turkey. An expression invented by "Sam Slick" (Thomas Chandler Haliburton) an early 19th-century American humorous writer, to denote someone even poorer than Job.

Jobation. A scolding; so called from the patriarch Job.

Jobation . . . means a long, dreary homily, and has reference to the tedious rebukes inflicted on the patriarch Job by his too obliging friends.—G. A. SALA: (Echoes), Sept. 6th, 1884.

Job (jōb). A piece of chance work; a public work or office not for the public benefit, but for the profit of the person employed; a misfortune, an untoward event; a "jab"; also, among printers, all kinds of work not included in the term "book-work" or newspapers.

A bad job. An unfortunate happening; a bad speculation.

A job lot. A lot of miscellaneous goods.

A ministerial job. Sheridan says:—"Whenever any emolument, profit, salary, or honour is conferred on any person not deserving it—that is a job; if from private friendship, personal attachment, or any view except the interest of the public, anyone is appointed to any public office . . . that is a job."

No cheek is known to blush, or heart to throb,
Save when they lose a question or a job.

POPE: Essay on Criticism, i, 104.

Jobber. One who does small jobs; one who buys from merchants to sell to retailers; a middle-man. A "stock-jobber" is a member of the Stock Exchange who acts as an intermediary between buying and selling stockbrokers; only a jobber can actually buy and sell shares in the Stock Exchange itself. The relationship between the jobber and the broker is much the same as that between the wholesaler and the retailer in trade.

Jock. Popular nickname for a Scotsman.

Jockey. Properly, "a little Jack" (q.v.). So in Scotch, "Ilka Jeanie has her Jockie."

All fellows, Jockey and the laird (man and master). (Scots proverb.)

To jockey. To deceive in trade; to cheat; to indulge in sharp practice.

Jockey of Norfolk. Sir John Howard (c. 1430-85), the first Howard to be Duke of Norfolk, and a firm adherent of Richard III. On the night before the battle of Bosworth, where he was slain, he found in his tent the warning couplet:

Jockey of Norfolk, be not too bold,
For Dickon thy master, is bought and sold.

Joe. The American equivalent of the British "Tommy," an enlisted soldier. The full phrase is G.I. Joe, the initials standing for "Government Issue," as stamped on all U.S.A. military equipment.

Joe in Australian usage was formerly a term of the greatest insult. Charles Joseph Latrobe was governor of Victoria in 1851 and set the police to checking up every gold-miner to see that he had a licence. Hence "Joe!" was a warning cry at the approach of the Law.

Joe Miller. See MILLER.

Joey. A groat; so called from Joseph Hume (1777-1855), M.P. for Kilkenny at the time, who, about 1835, strongly recommended the coinage of groats for the sake of paying short cab-fares, etc.

In Australia a young kangaroo is called a joey.

Jog. Jog away; jog off; jog on. Get away; be off; keep moving. Shakespeare uses the word shog in the same sense—as, “Will you shog off?” (Henry V, ii, 1); and again in the same play, “Shall we shog?” (ii, 3). Beaumont and Fletcher use the same expression in The Coxcomb—“Come, prithee, let us shog off.” In the Morte d'Arthur we have another variety—“He shokkes in sharply” (rushes in). The words are connected with shock, and shake.

Jog on a little faster, prithee,
I'll take a nap and then be wi' thee.

R. LLOYD: The Hare and the Tortoise.

Give his memory a jog. Remind him of something.

Jog-trot. A slow but regular pace.

Joggis or Jogges. See JOUGS.

John. The English form of Lat. and Gr. Johannes, from Heb. Jochanan, meaning “God is gracious.” The feminine form, Johanna, or Joanna, is nearer the original. The French equivalent of “John” is Jean (formerly Jehan), the Italian Giovanni, Russian Ivan, Gaelic Ian, Irish, Sean or Shaun, German Johann or Johannes, which is contracted to Jan, Jahn, and Hans.

For many centuries John has been one of the most popular of masculine names in England—probably because it is that of St. John the Evangelist, St. John the Baptist and many other saints.

There have been twenty-three Popes of this name, nearly all of whom were bad, unfortunate, or mere nonentities; England has had one King John (also unfortunate). The most famous “Johns” of history are probably John of Gaunt (1340-99), the fourth son of Edward III, and Don John of Austria (1547-78), illegitimate son of the Emperor Charles V, celebrated as a military leader, for his naval victory over the Turks at Lepanto (1571), and as Governor of the Netherlands.

The principal SAINTS of the name are:—

St. John the Evangelist or the Divine. His day is December 27th, and he is usually represented bearing a chalice from which a serpent issues, in allusion to his driving the poison from a cup presented to him to drink. Tradition says that he took the Virgin Mary to Ephesus after the Crucifixion, that in the persecution of Domitian (96) he was plunged into a cauldron of boiling oil, but was delivered unharmed, and was afterwards banished to the isle of Patmos (where he is said to have written the Book of Revelation), but shortly returned to Ephesus, where he died.

St. John the Baptist. Patron saint of missionaries, because he was sent “to prepare the way of the Lord.” His day is June 24th, and he is represented in a coat of sheepskin (in allusion to his life in the desert), either holding a rude wooden cross, with a pennon bearing the words, Ecce Agnus Dei, or with a book on which a lamb is seated; or holding in his right hand a lamb surrounded by a halo, and bearing a cross on the right foot.

St. John of Beverley. Bishop of Hexham, and later of York (d. 721), his name formed the war-cry of the English in the border warfare of the Middle Ages. It was he who ordained the Venerable Bede. He was canonized in 1037. He is commemorated on May 7th.

St. John Chrysostom, who was bishop of Constantinople from 398 till he was deposed by the Arians in 403. Four years later he was slain by his enemies in Pontus. His day is January 27th.

St. John of the Cross. Founder of the Discalced Carmelites (1568). A friend and co-worker with St. Teresa in the reform of the Carmelites, he is now better known for his mystical writings The Dark Night of the Soul, Spiritual Canticles, etc. St. John of the Cross was one of the greatest mystics the Christian Church has known. He died in 1591 and was canonized in 1726, his feast day being November 24th.

St. John Damascene. One of the Fathers of the Church. He was born at Damascus, opposed the Iconoclasts (q.v.), and died about 770. He is commemorated on March 27th.

St. John of Nepumuk. Patron Saint of Bohemia, a priest who was drowned in 1393 by order of the brutal Wenceslaus IV, partly because he tried to restrain the licentiousness of the king, partly because he refused to reveal to him the confessions of the queen. Nepumuk, or Nepomuk is the French né, born, and Pomuk, the village of his birth. His day is May 16th.

John-a-Dreams. A stupid, dreamy fellow, always in a brown study and half asleep.

Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing. Hamlet, ii, 2.

John-a-Droynes. An Elizabethan term for a country bumpkin. There is a foolish character in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra (1578), who, being seized by informers, stands dazed, and suffers himself to be quietly cheated out of his money. In Superbiae Flagellum, by John Taylor, the Water Poet (1621), we read of “Jack and Jill, and John a Drones his issue,” the meaning evidently being “the rag, tag, and bobtail.”

John Anderson, my Jo. Burns's well-known poem is founded on an 18th-century song which, in its turn, was a parody of a mid-16th century anti-Roman Catholic song in ridicule of the Sacraments of the Church. The whole is given in the Percy Folio MS. The first verse is:—

John Anderson, my Jo, cum in as ye gae by,
And ye sall get a sheip's heid weel baken in a pye;
Weel baken in a pye, and the haggis in a pat:
John Anderson, my Jo, cum in, and ye's get that.

Jo is an old Scottish word for a sweetheart.

John-a-Nokes and John-a-Stiles. Names formerly given, instead of the very impersonal “A and B,” to fictitious persons in an imaginary action at law: hence either name may stand for “just anybody.” Cp. DOE.

Poets gve names to men they write of, which argueth a conceite of an actual truth, and so, not being true; proves a falsehood. And doth the Lawyer lye then, when under the names of John a stile and John a nokes, hee puts his case?—SIR PHILIP SIDNEY: An Apologie for Poetrie (1595).

John Audley. See AUDLEY.

John Brown (1800-59). An American abolitionist who led a body of men to free Negro slaves at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, October 16th, 1859. The famous Union song of the Civil War, "John Brown's Body," made him a legend.

John Bull. The national nickname for an Englishman, represented as a bluff, kind-hearted, bull-headed farmer. The character is from Dr. John Arbuthnot's satire The History of John Bull, which was originally published in 1712 as Law in a Bottomless Pit. "John Bull" is the Englishman, the Frenchman is termed Lewis Baboon, the Dutchman Nicholas Frog, etc.

John Chinaman. A Chinaman or the Chinese as a people.

John Company. The old Honourable East India Company. It is said that "John" is a perversion of "Hon."; no doubt Hon., like Hans, may be equal to John, but probably "John Company" is allied to the familiar "John Bull."

By 1765 the Company had become the official administrators of Bengal. Pitt's India Act of 1784 instituted a dual control between the Company and Parliament, but after the Indian Mutiny of 1857 the government of India was transferred to the Crown, and the East India Company was abolished in 1858.

John Doe. See DOE.

John dory (dôr 'i). A golden yellow fish, the Zeus faber, common in the Mediterranean and round the south-western coasts of England. Its name was dory (Fr. dorée, golden) long before the John was added; this was probably a humorous amplification—from the name of some real or imaginary person—with, perhaps, a side allusion to Fr., jaune, yellow.

There is a tradition that it was from this fish (but see HADDOCK) that St. Peter took the stater or shekel. Hence it is called in French le poisson de St. Pierre, and in Gascon, the golden or sacred cock, meaning St. Peter's cock. Like the haddock, it has an oval black spot on each side, said to be the finger-marks of St. Peter, when he held the fish to extract the coin.

John Drum's Entertainment. See DRUM.

John in the Wad. Another name for the will-o'-the-wisp. See IGNIS FATUUS.

To wait for John Long, the carrier. To wait a long time; to wait for John, who keeps us a long time.

John o' Groat's. The story is that John o' Groat (or Jan Groot) came with his two brothers from Holland in the reign of James IV of Scotland, and purchased lands on the extreme north-eastern coast of Scotland. In time the o' Groats increased, and there came to be eight families of the name. They met regularly once a year in the house built by the founder, but on one occasion a question of precedence arose, and John o' Groat promised them the next time they came he would contrive to satisfy them all. Accordingly he built an eight-sided room, with a door to each side, and placed an octagonal table therein. This building went ever after with the name of John o' Groat's House; its site is the Berubium of Ptolemy, in the vicinity of Duncansby Head.

From John o' Groat's to the Land's End. From Dan to Beersheba, from one end of Great Britain to the other.

John Roberts. Obsolete slang for a very large tankard, supposed to hold enough drink for any ordinary drinker to last through Saturday and Sunday. This measure was introduced into Wales in 1886 to compensate toppers for the Sunday closing, and derived its name from John Roberts, M.P., author of the Sunday Closing Act.

John Tamson's man. A henpecked husband; one ordered here, there, and everywhere. Tamson—i.e. spiritless, a Tame-son.

John with the Leadon Sword. John of Lancaster, Duke of Bedford (1389-1435), third son of Henry IV, who acted as regent in France from 1422 to 1429, was so called by Earl Douglas.

Johnny. A superfine, dandified youth, was known as a Johnny in the latter part of last century, but from earlier times it has been applied indiscriminately to the British bourgeois. Byron, February 23rd, 1824, writes to Murray his publisher respecting an earthquake:—

If you had but seen the English Johnnies, who had never been out of a cockney workshop before . . . [running away . . .].

Johnny-cake. An American name for a cake made of maize-meal, formerly much esteemed as a delicacy. It is said to be a corruption of journey-cake.

Johnny Raw. A nervous novice, a newly enlisted soldier; an adult apprentice in the ship trade.

Johnny Reb. In the American Civil War a Federal name for a Confederate soldier—from the Northern point of view, a rebel.

Joint, in U.S.A. slang originally meant a sordid place where illicit spirits could be bought and drunk, opium smoked, etc. From that it has come to be applied, disparagingly, to any place of common resort, restaurant, etc.

To case a joint. To inspect a place with a view to committing robbery there.

Jolly. A sailor's nickname for a marine, a militiaman being a tame jolly.

To stand and be still to the Birkenhead drill is a damn tough bullet to chew, An' they done it, the Jollies,—'Er Majesty's Jollies—soldier an' sailor too!

KIPLING: Soldier an' Sailor Too.

The noun is also slang for a man who bids at auction with no intention of buying, but merely to force up the price.

As an adjective and adverb, jolly frequently has an intensive, approving, or ironical effect:—

All was jolly quiet at Ephesus before St. Paul came thither.—JOHN TRAPP: Commentary (1656).

'Tis likely you'll prove a jolly surly groom.

Taming of the Shrew, iii, 2.

Jolly-boat. A small boat usually hoisted at the stern of a ship. Jolly here is probably connected with the Danish jolle, Dut. jol, and our yawl.

A jolly dog. A bon vivant; a jovial fellow.

The jolly god. Bacchus. The Bible speaks of wine which "maketh glad the heart of man."

A jolly good fellow. A very social and popular person. When toasts are drunk "with musical honours" the chorus usually is—

For he's a jolly good fellow [three times].

And so say all of us,

With a hip, hip, hip, hooray!

The Jolly Roger. See ROGER.

Jonathan. Collective term for the people of the U.S.A., equivalent to the British John Bull.

Brother Jonathan. See BROTHER.

Jonathan's. A noted coffee-house in Change Alley, described in the Tailor as the general mart of stock-jobbers.

Yesterday the brokers and others . . . came to a resolution that [the new building] instead of being called "New Jonathan's," should be called "The Stock Exchange." . . . The brokers then collected sixpence each, and christened the house with punch.—Newspaper par. (July 15, 1773).

Jonathan's arrows. They were shot to give warning, and not to hurt. (1 Sam. xx, 36.)

Jones, Davy, See DAVY.

Jongleur (zhong' gler). A mediæval minstrel who recited verses, while accompanying himself on a musical instrument. Jongleurs formed a branch of the Troubadours—a force which permeated culture throughout Europe. Petrarch compared the function of the Jongleur in the spread of literature and education to that of the book-publisher.

Jordan (jôr' dân). A name anciently given to a pot used by alchemists and doctors, then transferred to a chamber-pot. The word is thought to have been originally Jordan-bottle, i.e. a bottle in which pilgrims and crusaders brought back water from the River Jordan.

Why, they will allow us ne'er a Jordan, and then we leak in the chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.—1 Henry IV, ii, 1.

Jordan almond. Here Jordan has nothing to do with the river (cp. JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE), but is a corruption of Fr. jardin, garden. The Jordan almond is a fine variety which comes chiefly from Malaga.

Jordan passed. Death over. The Jordan separated the wilderness [of the world] from the Promised Land, and thus came to be regarded almost as the Christian "Styx" (q.v.).

Jorum. A large drinking-bowl, intended specially for punch. The name is thought to be connected with King Joram (cp. JEROBOAM), who "brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass" (2 Sam. viii, 10).

Josaphat. An Indian prince converted by the hermit Barlaam. See BARLAAM and JOSAPHAT.

Joseph. One not to be seduced from his continency by the severest temptation is sometimes so called. The reference is to Joseph in Potiphar's house (Gen. xxxix). cp. BELLEROPHON.

A great-coat used to be known by the same name, in allusion to Joseph, who left his garment, or upper coat, behind him.

Joseph, St. Husband of the Virgin Mary, and the reputed father of Jesus. He is patron saint of carpenters, because he was of that craft.

In art Joseph is represented as an aged man with a budding staff in his hand. His day is March 19th.

Joseph of Arimathea. The rich Jew, probably a member of the Sanhedrin, who believed in Christ but feared to confess it, and, after the Crucifixion, begged the body of the Saviour and deposited it in his own tomb (see Matt. xxvii, 57-60, Mark xv, 42). Legend relates that he was imprisoned for 42 years, during which time he was kept alive miraculously by the Holy Grail (see GRAIL), and that on his release by Vespasian, about 63 A.D., he brought the Grail and the spear with which Longinus wounded the crucified Saviour, to Britain, and there founded the abbey of Glastonbury (q.v.), whence he commenced the conversion of Britain.

The origin of these legends is to be found in a group of apocryphal writings of which the Evangelium Nicodemi is the chief; these were worked upon at Glastonbury between the 8th and 11th centuries, were further embellished by Robert de Borron in the 13th, the latter version (by way of Walter Map) being woven by Malory into his Morte d'Arthur.

Josh. An American slang term meaning to chaff, to banter or tease.

Joshua tree. The Yucca brevifolia, a spiky-leaved tree growing in the desert areas of the south-western regions of the U.S.A. and in Mexico.

Joss. An idol or house-god of the Chinese; every family has its joss. A temple is called a joss-house, and a joss-stick is a stick of scented wood which is burnt as incense in a joss-house.

Jot. A very little, the least quantity possible. The iota [i] (see I) is the smallest letter of the Greek alphabet, called the Lacedæmonian letter.

Heaven and erthe shal soner passe away then one iote of goddis worde shal passe unfulfilled.—Geo. Joy: An Apology to W. Tindale (1535).

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood.

Merchant of Venice, iv, 1.

Jot or tittle. A tiny amount. The jot is i or iota, and the tittle, from Lat. titulus, is the mark, or dot over the i.

Jotunheim (jō' tūn him). Giant land. The home or region of the Scandinavian giants or Jotunn.

Jougs (joogz). The Scottish pillory, or, more properly, an iron ring or collar fastened by a short chain to a wall, and used as a pillory. Jamieson says, "They punish delinquents, making them stand in 'jogges,' as they call their pillories."

Jourdain, Monsieur. The type of the bourgeois placed by wealth in the ranks of gentlemen, who makes himself ridiculous by his endeavours to acquire their accomplishments. He is chiefly remembered from the delight he felt when he discovered that whereas some men wrote poetry, he had been speaking prose all his life without knowing it. The character is from Molière's comedy Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (1670).

Journal (O.Fr., from Lat. diurnalis, diurnal, dies, a day).

Applied to newspapers, the word strictly means a daily paper; but the extension of the term to weekly and other periodicals is sanctioned by custom.

Journey-weight. The weight of certain parcels of gold and silver in the mint. A journey of gold is fifteen pounds troy, which was coined into 701 sovereigns, or double that number of half-sovereigns. A journey of silver is sixty pounds troy, which, before the alteration in the silver coinage (1920), was coined into 3,960 shillings. So called because this weight of coin was at one time esteemed a day's mintage (Fr. journée).

Jove (jōv). Another name of Jupiter (q.v.), the later being Jovis pater, father Jove. The Titans made war against Jove, and tried to dethrone him.

Milton, in Paradise Lost, makes Jove one of the fallen angels (i, 512).

Jovial (jō' vi al). Merry and sociable, like those born under the planet Jupiter, which astrologers considered the happiest of the natal stars. Our jovial star reigned at his birth.

Cymbeline, v, 4.

Joy. The seven joys of the Virgin. See MARY.

Joy-ride. A ride in a motor-car, especially when it is driven fast and somewhat recklessly and more particularly still when it is done without the owner's knowledge or permission.

Joy stick. The control column of an aeroplane or glider, which is linked to the elevators and ailerons to control them.

Joyeuse (zhwa' yerz). A name given to more than one sword famous in romance, but especially to Charlemagne's, which bore the inscription Decem praeceptorum custos Carolus, and was buried with him.

Joyeuse Garde or Garde-Joyeuse. The estate given by King Arthur to Sir Launcelot of the Lake for defending the Queen's honour against Sir Mador. It is supposed to have been at Berwick-on-Tweed, but the Arthurian topography is all very indefinite.

Juan Fernandez. See ROBINSON CRUSOE.

Jubilate (joo bi la' ti). Latin for "Cry aloud," is the name given to two Psalms which begin with this word in the Vulgate version. In the English psalter they are Psalms lxvi and c; in the Vulgate lxxv and xcix respectively.

Jubilate Sunday is the third Sunday after Easter, when the introit begins with two verses of the former of the above psalms.

Jubilee. In Jewish history the year of jubilee was every fiftieth year, which was held sacred in commemoration of the deliverance from Egypt. In this year the fields were allowed to lie fallow, land that had passed out of the possession of those to whom it originally belonged was restored to them, and all who had been obliged to let themselves out for hire were released from bondage. The year of jubilee was proclaimed with trumpets of ram's horn, and takes its name from jobil, a ram's horn. (See Lev. xxv, 11-34, 39-54; and xxvii, 16-24).

Hence any fiftieth anniversary, especially one kept with great rejoicings, is called a Jubilee, and the name has been applied to other outbursts of joy or seasons of festivity, such as the Shakespeare Jubilee, which was held at Stratford-on-Avon in September, 1769, and the Protestant Jubilee, celebrated in Germany in 1617 at the centenary of the Reformation.

King George III held a Jubilee on October 25th, 1809, that being the day before he commenced the fiftieth year of his reign; and Queen Victoria celebrated hers on June 21st, 1887, two days after she had completed her fiftieth year on the throne. Ten years later Queen Victoria kept her Diamond Jubilee as a thanksgiving for sixty years of queenhood, and a reign the length of which exceeded that of any of her predecessors. The only other English monarchs to have Jubilees were Henry III (who reigned for 56 years and 6 weeks), and Edward III (51 years and nearly 5 months). On May 6th, 1935, George V celebrated the Silver Jubilee (twenty-five years) of his accession to the throne.

In the Catholic Church Pope Boniface VIII instituted a Jubilee or Holy Year in 1300 for the purpose of granting indulgences, and ordered it to be observed every hundred years. Clement VI reduced the interval to fifty years, Urban IV to thirty, Sixtus IV to the present interval of twenty-five. There was a Jubilee in 1950. It is only on the occasion of a Jubilee that the Porta Santa (Holy Door) in St. Peter's, Rome, is opened.

Jubilee Juggins. A nickname given to Ernest Benzon, a foolish and wealthy young man about Town who squandered a fortune on horse-racing about the time of Queen Victoria's Jubilee (1887).

Judas. Judas Iscariot, who betrayed his Master.

Judas kiss. A deceitful act of courtesy or simulated affection. Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss (Matt. xxvi, 49).

So Judas kissed his Master,
And cried, "All hail!" whenas he meant all harm.
3 Henry VI, v, 7.

Judas slits or holes. The peep-holes in a prison door, through which the guard looks into the cell to see if all is right; when not in use, the holes are covered up.

Judas tree. A leguminous tree of southern Europe (Cercis siliquastrum) which flowers before the leaves appear, so called because of a Greek tradition that it was upon one of these trees that Judas Iscariot hanged himself. But see ELDER-TREE, which is also sometimes called by the same name. See also MARSIGLIO.

Judas-coloured hair. Fiery red. In the Middle Ages Judas Iscariot was represented with red hair and beard, as also was Cain.

His very hair is of the dissembling colour, something browner than Judas's.—As You Like It, ii, 4.

Jude, St. Represented in art with a club or staff, and a carpenter's square, in allusion to his trade. His day is celebrated with that of St. Simon on October 28th.

Judge. Judge's black cap. See BLACK CAP.

Judges' robes. In the criminal courts, where the judges represent the sovereign, they appear in full court dress, and wear a scarlet robe; but in nisi prius courts the judge sits merely to balance the law between civilians, and therefore appears in his judicial undress, or violet gown.

Judge Lynch. In the U.S.A., a lynching, or the personification of lynch law.

Judica Sunday (joo' di ká). The fifth Sunday after Lent (also known as Passion Sunday) is so called from the first word of the Introit, Judica me, Deus, Judge me, O Lord. (Ps. xliii).

Judicial Committee. A committee of the Privy Council and the final court of appeal in the British Empire, except in Great Britain itself. Constituted by an Act of 1833, it hears appeals from the courts of law throughout the Empire; the members being the Lord Chancellor and persons who hold or have held high judicial office in Great Britain or the Overseas Dominions. They do not deliver a judgment but state that they will advise His Majesty to allow or disallow an appeal.

Judicium Crucis (jū dis' i um kroo' sis). A form of ordeal which consisted in stretching out the arms before a cross, till one party could hold out no longer, and lost his cause. It is said that a bishop of Paris and abbot of St. Denis appealed to this judgment in a dispute they had about the patronage of a monastery; each of the disputants selected a man to represent him, and the man selected by the bishop gave in, so that the award was given in favour of the abbot.

Jug or Stone Jug. A prison. It is curious that Gr. keramos, potter's earth and anything made with it, as a jug, also meant a prison or dungeon. See JOUGS.

Jug-band. A jazz band in the Deep South, in which one of the players blew a trombone or cornet into a large whiskey jug, so producing a deep resonant beat.

Jugged hare. Hare stewed in a jug or jar.

To be jugged. To be put in prison.

Juggernaut or Jagganath. A Hindu god, "Lord of the World," having his temple at Puri, in Orissa. The legend, as told in the Ayeen-Akbery, is that a learned Brahman was sent to look out a site for a temple. The Brahman wandered about for many days, and then saw a crow dive into the water; he then washed and made obeisance to the element. This was selected as the site of the temple. While the temple was a-building the king, Indica Dhumna, had a prophetic dream, telling him that the true form of Vishnu should be revealed to him in the morning. When the king went to see the temple he beheld a log of wood in the water, and this log he accepted as the realization of his dream, enshrining it in the temple.

Jagganath is regarded as the remover of sin. His image is on view three days in the year: the first day is the Bathing Festival, when the god is washed; he is then supposed to have a cold for ten days, at the end of which he is again brought out and taken in his car to the nearest temple; a week later the car is pulled back amid the rejoicings of the multitude at his recovery. It was on the final day that fanatical devotees used to throw themselves to be crushed beneath the wheels of the enormous, decorated machine, in the idea that they would thus obtain immediate admission to Paradise. Hence the phrase the car of Juggernaut is used of customs, institutions, etc., beneath which people are ruthlessly and unnecessarily crushed.

Juggins. See JUBILEE JUGGINS.

Juggler (Lat. joculator, a player). In the Middle Ages, jugglers accompanied the minstrels and troubadours, and added to their musical talents sleight of hand, antics, and feats of prowess to amuse the company assembled. In time the music was dropped, and tricks became the staple of wandering performers.

Juke Box. An American term for a gramophone or automatic musical box that plays a selection of pieces when a coin is inserted.

Julep. A long drink flavoured with mint; a great favourite in the Southern States of the U.S.A.

Julian. Pertaining to Julius Cæsar (100-44 B.C.), particularly with reference to the Calendar (i.e. the "Old Style") instituted by him in 46 B.C. (the Julian Year consisting of 365½ days), which was in general use in Western Europe until it was corrected by Gregory XIII in 1582, in England until 1752, and until 1918 in use in Russia. To allow for the odd quarter day Cæsar ordained that every fourth year should contain 366 days, the additional day being introduced after the 6th of the calends of March, i.e. February 24th. Cæsar also divided the months into the number of days they at present contain, and July (q.v.) is named in his honour.

Julian, St. Patron saint of travellers and of hospitality, looked upon in the Middle Ages as the epicure of saints. Thus, after telling us that the Franklyn was "Epicurus owne sone," Chaucer says:—

An householdere, and that a greet was he;
Seint Julian he was in his contree.

Canterbury Tales: Prologue, 339.

In art he is represented as accompanied by a stag in allusion to his early career as a hunter; and either receiving the poor and afflicted, or ferrying travellers across a river.

Julium Sidus (joo' li ùm sí' dus). The comet which appeared at the death of Julius Cæsar, and which in court flattery was called the apotheosis of the murdered man.

Jullien's Concerts were features of the London season from 1840 until the middle 50s. Louis Antoine Jullien (1812-60) came to London from Paris in 1840 and began a series of summer concerts at Drury Lane, and two years later winter concerts at which the best artists were engaged to perform and sing classical music. He invented the promenade concert, and though much derided for his eccentric methods of conducting and his often garish ways of advertising, he undoubtedly raised the level of musical appreciation in London.

July. The seventh month, named by Mark Antony, in honour of Julius Cæsar, who was born in it. It was previously called Quintilis, as it was the fifth month of the Roman year; its Anglo-Saxon name was litha se æfterra (lithe, mild).

The old Dutch name for it was Hooy-maand (hay-month); the old Saxon, Mædd-monath (because the cattle were turned into the meadows to feed), and Lida æfeyr (the second mild or genial month). In the French Republican calendar it was called Messidor (harvest-month, June 19th to July 18th).

Until the late 18th century, July was accented on the first syllable; why the change took place no one seems to know.

Her lips were red; and one was thin,
Compar'd to that was next her chin
(Some bee had stung it newly):
But, Dick, her eyes so guard her face,
I durst no more upon them gaze
Than on the sun in July.

SUCKLING: Ballad Upon a Wedding (1646).

And even as late as 1798 Wordsworth wrote:—

In March, December, and in July,
'Tis all the same with Harry Gill;
The neighbours tell, and tell you truly,
His teeth they chatter, chatter still.

Goody Blake and Harry Gill.

Jumbo. The name of an exceptionally large African elephant which, after giving rides to many thousands of children in the London Zoo, was sold, in 1882, to Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth. He weighed 6½ tons. He was accidentally killed by a railway engine in 1885, but his name is still synonymous with the idea of an elephant in children's minds.

Jump. To fit or unite with like a graft; as, our inventions meet and jump in one. Hence exactly, precisely.

Good advice is easily followed when it jumps with our own . . . inclinations.—LOCKHART: Sir Walter Scott, ch. x.

In jazz when the music is of an exciting and lively tempo it is said to jump.

To jump a claim. An expression from the miners' camps, meaning to seize somebody else's "claim," i.e. his diggings, in his absence and work it oneself; or, to take his mine by force; hence, to annex property by stealing a march on the owner.

To jump at an offer. To accept eagerly.

To jump over the broomstick. To marry in an informal way. A "brom" is the bit of a bride; to "jump the brom" is to skip over the marriage restraint, and "broomstick" is a mere corruption.

To jump the gun. To start ahead of time, as a nervous competitor in a race, who starts before the gun is fired.

Jumping-off place. The edge of the earth, from which one leaped into nothingness. Applied by American pioneers to any remote, desolate spot.

Counter-jumper. See COUNTER.

Jumper. Originally a coarse canvas or hard-material sort of shirt reaching to the hips, and worn by sailors and other heavy labourers. The use of the word for the woollen garment worn by women is of fairly recent growth. It is from the obsolete jump, a short coat worn by men two hundred years ago, connected with Fr. jupe, and jupon, a petticoat.

June. The sixth month, named from the Roman Junius gens. Ovid says, Junius a juvenum nomine dictus. (Fasti, v, 78.)

The old Dutch name was Zomer-maand (summer-month); the old Saxon, Sere-monath (dry-month), and Lida-erra (joy time). In the French Republican calendar the month was called Prairial (meadow-month, May 20th to June 18th).

June marriages lucky. "Good to the man and happy to the maid." This is an old Roman superstition. The festival of Juno moneta was held on the calends of June, and Juno was the great guardian of women from birth to death.

Junius (jōō' nī ūs). The Letters of Junius are a series of anonymous letters, the authorship of which has never been finally settled, which appeared in the London Public Advertiser from November 21st, 1768, to January 21st, 1772, and were directed against Sir William Draper, the Duke of Grafton, and the Ministers generally. The author himself said, "I am the sole depositary of my secret, and it shall die with me"; they were probably by Sir Philip Francis (1740-1818). Mr. Pitt told Lord Aberdeen that he knew who wrote them, and that it was not Francis; and Edmund Burke, his brother William, Earl Temple, Charles Lloyd, and John Roberts (clerks at the Treasury), John Wilkes, Dr. Butler, Bishop of Hereford, Lord George Sackville, and even Gibbon are among those to whom they have been credited. The following extract from Letter LXVII, addressed to the Duke of Grafton, may be taken as a specimen of the literary and vitrolric excellence of the Letters of Junius:

The unhappy baronet [Sir Jas. Lowther] has no friends even among those who resemble him. You, my Lord, are not yet reduced to so deplorable a state of dereliction. Every villain in the kingdom is your friend; and, in compliment to such amity, I think you should suffer your dismal countenance to clear up. Besides, my Lord, I am a little anxious for the consistency of your character. You violate your own rules of decorum, when you do not insult the man whom you have betrayed.

Junk. Salt meat supplied to vessels for long voyages (cp. HARNESS CASK), so called because it is hard and tough as old rope-ends, which may have got the name junk from the rush-like shore plant, Juncus maritimus. Junk is often called "salt horse." The word is more usually applied to cast-off broken things, valueless odds and ends of lumber.

Junk shop. A shop where such stuff is sold.

Junker (yūng' ker). A landowner of East Prussia. The junker families provided the greatest proportion of regular army officers, and hence the name has become identified with the worst elements of German militarism. He gives himself the airs of a demi-god walking the pavement—civilians and their wives swept into the gutter; they have no right to stand in the way of the great Prussian Junker. . . . The Prussian Junker is the road hog of Europe. Small nationalities in his way hurled to the roadside, bleeding and broken; women and children crushed under the wheels of his cruel car; Britain ordered out of his road.—D. LLOYD GEORGE.

Junket (jung' ket). Curdled cream with spice, etc.; any dainty. So called because it was originally made in a rush basket (Ital. giuncata, from Lat. juncus, a rush).

You know there wants no junkets at the feast.

Taming of the Shrew, ii, 2.

Junketing. Feasting, merrymaking.

But great is song

Used to great ends . . . for song

Is due unto freedom, force and growth

Of spirit than to junketing and love.

TENNYSON: Princess, Pt. iv.

Juno (joo' nō). In Roman mythology the "venerable ox-eyed" wife of Jupiter, and queen of heaven. She is identified with the Greek Hera, was the special protectress of marriage and of woman, and was represented as a war goddess.

Junonian Bird. The peacock, dedicated to the goddess-queen.

Junta (jūn' tā). In Spain a council or legislative assembly other than the Cortes (q.v.), which may be summoned either for the whole country, for one of its separate parts, or for some special object only. The most famous was that called together by Napoleon in 1808.

I had also audience of the King, to whom I deliver'd two Memorials since, in His Majesty's name of Great Britain, that a particular Junta of some of the Council of State and War might be appointed to determine the business.—Howell's Letters, Bk. i, sect. iii, 10 (Madrid, Jan. 5th, 1622).

Junto. In English history, the name given to a faction that included Wharton, Russell, Lord-Keeper Somers, Charles Montague, and several other men of mark, who ruled the Whigs in the reign of William III and exercised a very great influence over the nation. The word is a corruption of junta (q.v.).

Jupiter (joo' pi ter). The supreme deity of Roman mythology, corresponding to the Greek Zeus (see Jove), son of Cronos, or Saturn (whom he dethroned) and Rhea. He was the special protector of Rome, and as Jupiter Capitolinus—his temple being on the Capitoline Hill—presided over the Roman games. He determined the course of all human affairs and made known the future to man through signs in the heavens, the flight of birds (see AUGURY), etc.

As Jupiter was lord of heaven and prince of light, white was the colour sacred to him; hence among the mediæval alchemists Jupiter designated tin. In heraldry Jupiter stands for azure, the blue of the heavens.

His statue by Phidias (taken to Constantinople by Theodosius I and there destroyed by fire in A.D. 475) was one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

Jupiter Scapin. A nickname of Napoleon Bonaparte, given him by the Abbé de Pradt. Scapin is a valet famous for his knavish tricks, in Molière's comedy of Les Fourberies de Scapin.

Jupiter tonans (the thundering Jupiter). A complimentary nickname given to the London Times about the middle of the 19th century.

Jupiter's beard. House leek. Supposed to be a charm against evil spirits and lightning. Hence grown at one time very generally on the thatch of houses.

Jurassic Rocks (joo rās' ik). The group of limestone rocks embracing the strata between the top of the Rhætic Beds and the base of the Purbeckian Rocks, thus including the Lias and Oolites. So named from the Swiss Jura, where they are typically developed.

Jury mast. A temporary mast, a spar used for the nonce when the mast has been carried away. The origin of the term is unknown; it has been in use for certainly over three hundred years.

"Jury" has been humorously tacked on to other nouns, giving to the word a makeshift or temporary significance. e.g. Jury-leg, a wooden leg.

Jus. Latin for law.

Jus civile (Lat.). Civil law.

Jus divinum (Lat.). Divine law.

Jus gentium (Lat.). International law.

Jus mariti (Lat.). The right of the husband to the wife's property.

Just, The. Among rulers and others who have been given this surname are:—

Aristides, the Athenian (d. 468 B.C.).

Baharam, styled Shah Endeb, fifth of the Sassanidæ (276-96).

Casimir II, King of Poland (1117, 1177-94).

Ferdinand I, King of Aragon (1373, 1412-16).

Haroun al-Raschid. The most renowned of the Abbasside califs, and the hero of several of the Arabian Nights stories (765, 786-808).

James II, King of Aragon (1261-1327).

Khosru or Chosroes I of Persia (531-79), called by the Arabs Malk al Adel (the Just King).

Pedro I of Portugal (1320, 1357-67).

Juste milieu (zhust mē lye) (Fr.). The golden mean.

The Church of England is the juste milieu.

LADY BLOOMFIELD: Reminiscences, II, p. 18 (1883).

Justice. See JEDWOOD JUSTICE.

Justices in Eyre. See EYRE.

Poetic justice. That ideal justice which poets exercise in making the good happy, and the bad unsuccessful in their evil schemes.

Juvenal (joo' ve nāl) (Lat., from juvenis). A youth; common in Shakespeare, thus:—

The juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged.—2 Henry IV., i, 2.

Juveniles. In theatrical parlance, those actors who play young men's parts; in the journalistic and book-trade, periodicals or books intended for the young.

K

K. The eleventh letter of the alphabet, representing the Greek kappa, and Hebrew kaph. The Egyptian hieroglyphic for k was a bowl. The Romans, after the C was given the K sound, gave up the use of the letter, except in abbreviated forms of a few words from Greek; thus, false accusers were branded on the forehead with a K (kalumnia), and the Carians, Cretans, and Cilicians were known as the three bad K's.

K is the recognized abbreviation of Knight in a large number of British Orders (but the abbreviation of "Knight" per se is Kt.).

In order of precedence these are:

K.G. Knight of the Garter.

K.T., K.P. Knight of the Thistle, Knight of St. Patrick.

K.C.B. Knight Commander of the Bath.

K.C.S.I. " " " Star of India.

K.C.M.G. " " " St. Michael & St. George.

K.C.I.E. " " " Indian Empire.

K.C.V.O. " " " Victorian Order.

K.B.E. " " " British Empire.

Kt. Knight Bachelor.

K. K. K. The initials branded by the Ku Klux Klan (q.v.) on their victims.

K. of G. A familiar way of referring to Earl Kitchener of Khartoum (1850-1916).

Ka me, ka thee. You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours; one good turn deserves another; do me a service, and I will give you a helping hand when you require one. It is an old proverb, and appears in Heywood's collection (1546).

Kaaba (ka' bā) (Arabic, kabāh, a square house). A shrine of Mecca, said to have been built by Ishmael and Abraham on the spot where Adam first worshipped after his expulsion from Paradise. The building which stands in the centre of the court is about 50 ft. high; its peculiar sanctity is due to the Black Stone, which is built into the N.E. corner. This stone, about 6 in. in diameter is kissed by every pilgrim. The present Kaaba was built in 1626; it is covered with a cloth of black brocade that is replaced with considerable ceremony every year.

Kaf, Mount. The huge mountain in the middle of which, according to Mohammedan myth, the earth is sunk, as a night light is placed in a cup. Its foundation is the emerald Sakhrat, the reflection of which gives the azure hue to the sky.

Kafir (kāf' ir) (Arabic, Kafir, an infidel). A name formerly given to Hottentots who rejected the Moslem faith, also to the natives of Kafiristan ("the country of the infidels"), in northern Afghanistan; but now restricted to the Bantu races of South Africa, especially the Xosa tribe.

Kaffirs, Kaffir market. The Stock Exchange names for shares in South African mines, and for the market in which they are dealt.

Kailyard School. A school of writers, who took their subjects from Scottish humble life; it flourished in the 'nineties of last century, and included such writers as Ian Maclaren, J. J. Bell, S. R. Crockett, and J. M. Barrie. The name is due to the motto—"There grows a bonnie brier bush in our kailyard"—used by Ian Maclaren for his Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush (1894).

Kaiser (kī' zer). The German form of Cæsar; the title formerly used by the head of the Holy Roman Empire, and by the Emperors of Germany and Austria. It was Diocletian who (about 284) ordained that Cæsar should be the title of the Emperor of the West, and it is thence that the modern Kaiser takes its rise.

Kalevala (kā le va' lā). The national epic of the Finns, compiled from popular songs and oral tradition by the Swedish philologist, Elias Lönnroth (1802-1884), who published his first edition of 12,000 verses in 1835, and a second, containing some 22,900 verses, in 1849.

The hero is a great magician, Wainamoinen, and a large part of the action turns on Sampo, an object that gives one all his wishes.

The epic is influenced by, but by no means dependent upon, Teutonic and Scandinavian mythology, and, to a less extent, by Christianity. It is written in unrhymed alliterative trochaic verse, and is the prototype, both in form and content, of Longfellow's Hiawatha.

Kali (ka' lē). The Hindu goddess after whom Calcutta receives its name, Kali-ghat, the steps of Kali, i.e. those by which her worshippers descended from the bank to the waters of the Ganges. She was the wife of Siva (q.v.), was the acme of bloodthirstiness, many human sacrifices being made to her, and it was to her that the Thugs sacrificed their victims. Her idol is black, besmeared with blood; she has red eyes, four arms with blood-stained hands, matted hair, huge fang-like teeth, and a protruding tongue that drips with blood. She wears a necklace of skulls, ear-rings of corpses, and is girdled with serpents.

Kaliyuga (kā lī yū gā). The last of the four Hindu periods contained in the great Yuga (q.v.).

Kalki. See AVATAR.

Kalmar. The Union of Kalmar. A treaty made on July 12th, 1397, uniting the kingdoms of Norway, Sweden and Denmark. This union lasted till it was dissolved by Gustavus Vasa in 1523.

Kalmucks—i.e. Khalmuiku (apostates) from Buddhism. A race of nomadic Mongols, extending from western China to the valley of the Volga, and adhering to a debased form of Buddhism.

Kalyb (kā' lib). The "Lady of the Woods," who stole St. George from his nurse, brought him up as her own child, and endowed him with gifts. St. George enclosed her in a rock, where she was torn to pieces by spirits. (Seven Champions of Christendom, Pt. i.)

Kam. Crooked; a Celtic word. Clean kam, perverted into kim kam, means wholly awry, clean from the purpose.

This is clean kam—merely awry.

Coriolanus, iii, 1.

Kama (ka' ma). The Hindu god of love. See CAMA.

Kamerad (ka' mē rad). (Ger., comrade, mate.) A word used by the Germans in World War I as an appeal for quarter. It is now used in English with the meaning "I surrender."

Kami (ka' mē). A god or divinity in Shinto, the native religion of Japan; also the title given to daimios and governors, about equal to our "lord."

Kamikaze (ka mi ka zi) (World War II). Japanese word meaning "divine wind" and applied to suicide squadrons and suicide resistance.

Kamsin (kām'sin). A simoom or hot, dry, southerly wind, which prevails in Egypt and the deserts of Africa from about the middle of March to the first week in May.

Kansa. See KRISHNA.

Karma (kar'mā) (Sans., action, fate). In Buddhist philosophy, the name given to the results of action, especially the cumulative results of a person's deeds in one stage of his existence as controlling his destiny in the next.

Among Theosophists the word has a rather wider meaning, viz. the unbroken sequence of cause and effect; each effect being, in its turn, the cause of a subsequent effect. It is a Sanskrit word, meaning "action" or "sequence."

Karmathians (kar mā 'thi anz). A Mohammedan sect which rose in Irak in the 9th century. Its founder was Karmat, a labourer who professed to be a prophet; they were communistic pantheists and rejected the forms and ceremonies of the Koran, which they regarded as a purely allegorical work.

Karttikeya (kar ti kē'yā). The Hindu Mars, and god of war. He is shown riding on a peacock, with a bow in one hand and an arrow in the other, and is known also as Skanda and Kumara.

Kaswa, Al. (kās'wā). Mohammed's favourite camel, which fell on its knees in adoration when the prophet delivered the last clause of the Koran to the assembled multitude at Mecca.

Katerfelto (kāt er fel' tō). A generic name for a quack or charlatan, Gustavus Katerfelto was a celebrated quack who became famous during the influenza epidemic of 1782, when he exhibited in London his solar microscope and created immense excitement by showing the infusoria of muddy water. The doctor used to aver that he was the greatest philosopher since the time of Sir Isaac Newton. He was a tall man, dressed in a long, black gown and square cap, and died in 1799.

Katerfelto with his hair on end,

At his own wonders wondering for his bread.

COWPER: Task; The Winter Evening (1782).

Kathay. China. See CATHAY.

Katmir. See KETMIR.

Kay, Sir. In Arthurian romance, son of Sir Ector and foster-brother of King Arthur, who made him his seneschal.

Keblah (keb'la). The point towards which Mohammedans turn when they worship, i.e. the Kaaba (q.v.) at Mecca; also the niche or slab (called the mihrab) on the interior wall of a mosque indicating this direction.

Kedar's Tents (kē' dá). This world. Kedar was a son of Ishmael (Gen. xxv, 15), and was the ancestor of an important tribe of nomadic Arabs. The phrase means houses in the wilderness of this world, and comes from Ps. cxx, 5: "Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar."

Kedgerie (kej' er ē) (Hindi, khichri). In India a stew of rice, vegetables, eggs, butter, etc.; but in England a dish of re-cooked fish with boiled rice, eggs, sauce, etc., is so called.

Keel. Keel-hauling or -haling. Metaphorically, a long, troublesome, and vexatious examination or repetition of annoyances from one in authority. The term comes from a practice that was formerly common in the Dutch and many other navies of tying delinquents to a yardarm with weights on their feet, and dragging them by a rope under the keel of a ship, in at one side and out at the other. The result was often fatal.

Keelson or Kelson. A beam running lengthwise above the keel of a ship, and bolted to the middle of the floor-frames, in order to stiffen the vessel.

Keening. A weird lamentation for the dead, common in Galway. The coffin is carried to the burying place, and while it is carried three times round, the mourners go to the graves of their nearest kinsfolk and "keen." The word is Ir. cacoine, from caoinim, to weep.

Keep. One's keep is the amount that it takes to maintain one; heard in such phrases as You're not worth your keep. The keep of a mediæval castle was the main tower or stronghold, the donjon.

Keep your breath to cool your porridge. Look after your own affairs, and do not put your spoke in another person's wheel.

Keep your hair on! See HAIR.

Keep your powder dry. Keep prepared for action; keep your courage up. The phrase comes from a story told of Oliver Cromwell. During his campaign in Ireland he concluded an address to his troops, who were about to cross a river before attacking, with the words—"Put your trust in God; but be sure to keep your powder dry."

To keep a stiff upper lip. To preserve a resolute appearance; not to give way to grief.

To keep at arm's length. To prevent another from being too familiar.

To keep body and soul together. See BODY.

To keep company with. A phrase formerly commonly used to describe a friendship preliminary to courtship.

To keep down. To prevent another from rising to an independent position; to keep in subjection; also to keep expenses low.

To keep good hours. See HOUR.

To keep house, open house, etc. See HOUSE.

To keep in. To repress, to restrain; also, to confine boys in the classroom after school hours as a punishment.

To keep in with. To continue to maintain friendly relations with.

To keep it dark. See DARK.

To keep one's countenance. See COUNTENANCE.

To keep one's terms. To reside in college, attend the Inns of Court, etc., during the recognized term times.

To keep the pot a-boiling. See POT.

To keep tab. To keep a record or note.

To keep touch. See TOUCH.

To keep up. To continue, as, "to keep up a discussion"; to maintain, as, "to keep up one's courage," "to keep up appearances"; to continue pari passu, as "Keep up with the rest."

Keeping-room. In 18th-century American parlance, the second-best room in the house.

Kehama (ke ha' má). The Hindu rajah in Southey's epic, The Curse of Kehama (1810), who obtains and sports with supernatural powers.

Kells, The Book of. Kells is an ancient Irish town in county Meath, once the residence of the kings of Ireland and the see of a bishop until 1300. Among its antiquities, but now preserved in Trinity College, Dublin, is the finest extant early Irish illuminated MS. of the Gospels, dating from the 8th century.

Kelly. As game as Ned Kelly. An Australian phrase referring to a noted desperado, who became something of a folk-hero. Ned Kelly (1854-80), after enormous depredations, was captured in a suit of armour made by himself, and hanged at Melbourne.

Kelmscott Press, was a private printing press founded in 1890 by William Morris in a cottage adjoining his residence, Kelmscott House, Hammersmith, with the assistance of Emery Walker and Sidney Cockerell. The object was to return to the finest principles of printing in the 15th century.

Kelpie or Kelpy. A spirit of the waters in the form of a horse, in Scottish fairy-lore. It was supposed to take a delight in the drowning of travellers, but also occasionally helped millers by keeping the mill-wheel going at night.

Every lake has its Kelpie or Water-horse, often seen by the shepherd sitting upon the brow of a rock, dashing along the surface of the deep, or browsing upon the pasture on its verge.—GRAHAM: Sketches of Perthshire.

Kendal Green. Green cloth for foresters; so called from Kendal, Westmorland, famous at one time for this manufacture. Kendal green was the livery of Robin Hood and his followers. In Rymer's Fœdera (ii, 83) is a letter of protection, dated 1331, and granted by Edward III to John Kempe of Flanders, who established cloth-weaving in the borough. Lincoln was also famous at one time for dyeing green.

How couldst thou know these men in Kendal green when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? —1 Henry IV, ii, 4.

Kenelm, St. An English saint, son of Kenwulf, King of Wessex in the early 9th century. He was only seven years old when, by his sister's order, he was murdered at Clente-in-Cowbage, Gloucestershire. The murder, says Roger of Wendover, was miraculously notified at Rome by a white dove, which alighted on the altar of St. Peter's, bearing in its beak a scroll with these words:—

In Clent cow pasture, under a thorn,
Of head bereft, lies Kenelm king-born.

St. Kenelm's feast day is July 17th.

Kenna. See KENSINGTON GARDEN.

Kenne. A stone that by mediæval naturalists was fabled to be formed in the eye of the stag. It was used as an antidote to poison. Cp. HYENA.

Kennel. A dog's shelter; from Lat. canis (a dog), Ital. canile; but kennel, a gutter, is, like channe and canal, from Lat. canalis, a pipe (our cane) through which water was conveyed.

Kenno (ken' ô). The dialect name of a large rich cheese, made by the women of the family, with a great affectation of secrecy, for the refreshment of the gossips who were in the house at the birth of a child. After all had eaten their fill what was left was divided among the gossips and taken home. The Kenno is supposed to be a relic of the secret rites of the Bona Dea.

Kensington Garden. A mock-heroic poem by Thomas Tickell (pub. 1722) peopling Kensington Gardens, which a few years before had been laid out, with fairies. The gardens were the royal domain of Oberon, and the hero is Albion, son of "Albion's royal blood," who was stolen thence by a fairy named Milkah. He later fell in love with Kenna, daughter of Oberon, and after many adventures and a war caused by Oberon's opposition they were married and "lived happy ever after."

Kent (Lat. Cantium), the territory of the Kantii or Cantii; Old British, Kant, a corner or headland. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth Kent was so notorious for highway robbery that the word signified a "nest of thieves."

Some bookes are arrogant and impudent;

So are most thieves in Christendome and Kent.

TAYLOR, the Water Poet (1630).

"Kent" and "Christendom" have been verbally associated from very early times, partly, no doubt, because of the alliteration, partly, perhaps, because it was to Kent that St. Augustine first brought Christianity.

A man of Kent. One born east of the Medway. These men went out with green boughs to meet the Conqueror, and obtained in consequence a confirmation of their ancient privileges from the new king. They call themselves the Invicti.

A Kentish man. A resident of West Kent.

The Fair Maid of Kent. See FAIR.

The Holy Maid of Kent. See HOLY.

Kent cap. A standard size of brown paper measuring 22 by 18 in.

Kentish Fire. Rapturous applause, or three times three and one more. The expression originated with the protracted cheers given in Kent to the No-Popery orators in 1828-29. Lord Winchelsea, who proposed the health of the Earl of Roden on August 15th, 1834, said: "Let it be given with the 'Kentish Fire.'"

Kentishmen's Tails. See TAILS.

Kent's Cavern, a mile or so out of Torquay, is a limestone cave in which a great number of bones and flint implements have been discovered. There appear to have been two different periods of occupation in prehistoric times, and the objects found in the cave throw important light on the civilization of those ages.

Kentigern, St. (kent' i jern). The patron saint of Glasgow, born of royal parents about 510. He is said to have founded the cathedral at Glasgow, where he died in 601. He is represented with his episcopal cross in one hand, and in the other a salmon and a ring, in allusion to the well-known legend:—

Queen Langoueth had been false to her husband, King Roderich, and had given her lover a ring. The king, aware of the fact, stole upon the knight in sleep, abstracted the ring, threw it into the Clyde, and then asked the queen for it. The queen, in alarm, applied to St. Kentigern, who after praying, went to the Clyde, caught a salmon with the ring in its mouth, handed it to the queen and was thus the means of restoring peace to the royal couple, and of reforming the repentant queen.

The Glasgow arms include the salmon with the ring in its mouth, and also an oak tree, a bell hanging on one of the branches, a bird at the top of the tree:—

The tree that never grew,
The bird that never flew,
The fish that never swam,
The bell that never rang.

The oak and bell are in allusion to the story that St. Kentigern hung a bell upon an oak to summon the wild natives to worship.

St. Kentigern is also known as "St. Mungo," for Mungho (i.e. dearest) was the name by which St. Servan, his first preceptor, called him. His day is January 13th.

Kentucky Pill. A bullet.

Kepler's Laws. Astronomical laws first enunciated by Johann Kepler (1571-1630). They formed the basis of Newton's work, and are the starting-point of modern astronomy. They are:—

(1) That the orbit of a planet is an ellipse, the sun being in one of the foci.

(2) That every planet so moves that the line drawn from it to the sun describes equal areas in equal times.

(3) That the squares of the times of the planetary revolutions are as the cubes of their mean distances from the sun.

Kermess (ker mes'). Several of the Dutch and Flemish painters depicted scenes of a kermess. This was an annual fair or festival popular in most towns of the Low Countries and the occasion for open-air sports and games often of a somewhat riotous nature. The kermess (kirk mass, church mass) was usually held on the anniversary of the dedication of the parish church.

Kernel. The kernel of the matter; its gist, true import; the core or central part of it. The word is the A.S. cyrnel, diminutive of corn.

Kersey. A coarse cloth, usually ribbed, and woven from long wool; said to be so named from Kersey, in Suffolk, where it was originally made. Shakespeare uses the word figuratively ("russet yeas and honest kersey noes," Love's Labour's Lost, v, 2), with the meaning plain or homely.

Kerseymere. A twilled fine woollen cloth of a particular make, formerly called cassimere, a variation of cashmere, its present name being due to confusion with kersey (see above). Cashmere, a fine woollen material, is so called because it is made from hair of the goats of Kashmir.

Kerton. See EXTER.

Kestrel. A hawk of a base breed, hence a worthless fellow.

No thought of honour ever did assay
His baser brest; but in his kestrell kynd
A pleasant veine of glory he did find. . . .

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, II, iii, 4.

Ketch. See JACK KETCH, under JACK.

Ketchup. A sauce made from mushrooms, tomatoes, etc., which originally, with its name, came from the Far East.

Soy comes in Tubbs from Jappan, and the best ketchup from Tonquin; yet good of both sorts are made and sold very cheap in China.—LOCKYER: Trade with India (1711).

The word is from Chinese, through Malay, kechap.

Ketmir or Katmir. The dog of the Seven Sleepers (q.v.), called in the Mohammedan version "Al Rakhim."

Kettle. Old thieves' slang for a watch; a tin kettle is a silver watch and a red kettle a gold one.

A kettle of fish. An old Border name for a kind of fête champêtre, or picnic by the river-side in which newly caught salmon is the chief dish. Having thickened some water with salt to the consistency of brine, the salmon is put therein and boiled; and when fit for eating, the company partake in gipsy fashion. The discomfort of this sort of picnic probably gave rise to the phrase "A pretty kettle of fish," meaning an awkward state of affairs, a mess, a muddle.

The surgeon . . . was now come to acquaint Mr. Tow-wouse that his guest was in such extreme danger of his life, that he scarce saw any hopes of his recovery. "Here's a pretty kettle of fish," cried Mrs. Tow-wouse, "you have brought upon us! We are like to have a funeral at our own expense."—FIELDING: Joseph Andrews, I, xii.

Kettledrum. A drum made of a thin hemispherical shell of brass or copper with a parchment top.

Also, an obsolete name for an afternoon tea-party, so called because it was on a somewhat smaller scale than the regular "drum" (q.v.), and also in playful allusion to the presence of the tea kettle.

Kevin, St. (kev' in). An Irish saint of the 6th century, of whom legend relates that, like St. Senanus, he retired to an island where he vowed no woman should ever land. A girl named Kathleen followed him, but the saint hurled her from a rock, and her ghost never left the place while he lived. A rock at Glendalough (Wicklow) is shown as the bed of St. Kevin. Moore has a poem on this tradition (Irish Melodies, iv).

Kex. The dry, hollow stem of umbelliferous plants, like the hemlock. Tennyson says in The Princess, "Though the rough kex break the starred mosaic." Nothing breaks a pavement like the growth of grass or lichen through it.

Key. Metaphorically, that which explains or solves some difficulty, problem, etc., as the key to a cipher, the means of interpreting it, the key to a "roman à clef", the list showing whom the fictional characters represent in actual life. Also, a place which commands a large area of land or sea, as Gibraltar is the key to the Mediterranean, and, in the Peninsular War, Ciudad Rodrigo (taken by Wellington, 1812) was known as the key to Spain.

In music the lowest note of a scale is the keynote, and gives its name to the scale, or key, itself: hence the figurative phrases in key, out of key, in or out of harmony with.

St. Peter's keys. The cross-keys on the papal arms symbolizing:

The power of the keys. The supreme ecclesiastical authority claimed by the pope as successor of St. Peter. The phrase is derived from St. Matt. xvi, 19:—

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

The Gold Key. The office of Groom of the Stole (see STOLE), the holder of which had a golden key as his emblem.

The key shall be upon his shoulder. He shall have the dominion, shall be in authority, have the keeping of something. It is said of Eliakim that God would lay upon his shoulder the key of the house of David (Is. xxii, 22). The chamberlain of the court used to bear a key as his insignia, and on public occasions the steward slung his key over his shoulder, as our mace-bearers carry their mace.

The queen's keys. An old legal phrase for the crowbars, hammers, etc., used to force an entrance so that a warrant could be executed.

At the ceremony of locking up the Tower of London at night, the keys are brought to the main guard house, where the sentry demands, "Who goes there?" "Keys," is the answer. "Whose keys?" "Queen Elizabeth's keys." "Advance Queen Elizabeth's keys, and all's well."

To have the key of the street. To be locked out of doors; to be turned out of one's home.

Keys of stables and cowhouses are not infrequently, even at the present day, attached to a stone with a hole through it with a piece of horn attached to the handle. This is a relic of an ancient superstition. The halig, or holy stone, was looked upon as a talisman which kept off the fiendish Mara (nightmare); and the horn was supposed to ensure the protection of the god Pan.

Key and Bible. Formerly employed as a method of divination. The Bible is opened either at Ruth, ch. i, or at Psalms li, and a doorway is placed inside the Bible, so that the handle projects beyond the book. The Bible is then tied with a piece of string and held by the fourth fingers of the accuser and defendant, who must repeat the words touched by the wards of the key. The key was then supposed to turn towards the guilty person, and the Bible fall to the ground.

The Cross Keys as a public-house sign has an ecclesiastical origin (see St. Peter's keys, above). St. Peter is always represented in art with two keys in his hand; they are consequently the insignia of the papacy, and are borne saltirewise, one of gold and the other of silver. They also form the arms of the Archbishop of York; the Bishop of Winchester bears two keys and sword in saltire, and the bishops of St. Asaph, Gloucester, Exeter, and Peterborough bear two keys in saltire. The cross-keys are also the emblem of St. Servatius, St. Hippolytus, St. Geneviève, St. Petronilla, St. Osyth, St. Martha, and St. Germanus of Paris.

Key-cold. Deadly cold, lifeless. A key, on account of its coldness, is still sometimes employed to stop bleeding at the nose.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood

Richard III, l. 2.

Keys, The House of. The representative branch of the Legislature, or Tynwald, of the Isle of Man, which consists of two branches, viz. the Governor and Council, and this House. Since 1866 the twenty-four members of the House of Keys have been popularly elected every seven years; previous to that date the House was self-elected, vacancies being filled by the House presenting to the governor "two of the eldest and worthiest men of the isle," one of which the governor nominated.

The governor and his council consists of the governor, the bishop, the attorney-general, two deemsters (or judges), members appointed by the governor and four members appointed by the House of Keys.

The Keystone State. Pennsylvania; so called from its position and importance.

Keystone Comedies. Early film comedies at Hollywood made between 1916 and about 1926 by the Keystone Company, featuring Mack Sennett.

Keyne, St. (kân). A Celtic saint, daughter of Brychan, King of Brecknock in the 5th century. Concerning her well, near Liskeard, Cornwall, it is said that if a bridegroom drinks therefrom before his bride, he will be master of his house; but if the bride gets the first draught, the grey mare will be the better horse.

Khaki (ka'ki). A Hindu word, meaning dusty, or dust-coloured, from khak, dust. Khaki was first used by British troops at the time of the Indian Mutiny, when it was adopted as the uniform for an irregular corps of Guides, raised at Meerut, hence called the Khaki Risala (Risala = squadron). In 1882 the War Office discussed the question of adopting it as the general active service uniform, but, though certain regiments wore it then, and in the Omdurman campaign in Egypt sixteen years later, on the North-West Frontier, etc., it was not generally introduced until the Boer War of 1899-1902.

Khalifa (ka lē'fā). An Arabic word meaning "successor" and the title adopted by Abdullah el Tashi, the successor in 1885 of the Mahdi (q.v.). Much was heard of the Khalifa in late Victorian days, for it was against him that the British expedition went under Lord Kitchener in 1898, when his power was broken at the battle of Omdurman.

Khamsin. See KAMSIN.

Khedive (ke dēv'). The title by which, from 1867 to 1914, the ruler of Egypt, as viceroy of the Sultan of Turkey, was known. The word is Turkish (from Persian) and means a prince, or viceroy.

In 1914 Egypt was a semi-independent tributary state of Turkey, occupied by British troops. The then Khedive, Abbas II, joined the Central Powers, and was deposed, a British Protectorate being declared. The title then disappeared, and the new ruler, Hussein Kamul, became King of Egypt.

Kibitzer (kib' it zér). An American colloquial term to describe, originally, a spectator at a card game who looks over the players' shoulders and as often as not gives unwanted advice. The word is of Yiddish-German derivation.

Kibosh (kī' bosh). To put the kibosh on. To put an end to; dispose of. Mr. Charles Funk received the following explanation of its origin from Mr. Padraic Colum: "'Kibosh,' I believe, means 'the cap of death' and it is always used in that sense—'He put the kibosh on it.' In Irish it could be written 'cie bais'—the last word pronounced 'bosh,' the genitive of 'bas,' death."

Kiblah. See KEBLAH.

Kick. Slang for a sixpence, but only in compounds. "Two-and-a-kick" is two shillings and sixpence.

He's not got a kick left in him. He's done for, "down and out." The phrase is from pugilism.

More kicks than ha'pence. More abuse than profit. Called "monkey's allowance" in allusion to monkeys led about to collect ha'pence by exhibiting "their parts." The poor brutes get the kicks if they do their parts in an unsatisfactory manner, but the master gets the ha'pence collected.

Quite the kick. Quite a dandy. The Italians call a dandy a chic. The French chic means knock, as avoir le chic, to have the knack of doing a thing smartly.

I cocked my hat and twirled my stick,

And the girls they called me quite the kick.

George Colman the Younger.

To get the kick out. To be summarily dismissed; given the sack or "the Order of the Boot."

To kick one's heels. See HEEL.

To kick against the pricks. To protest when all the odds are against one; to struggle against overwhelming opposition. See ACTS ix, 5, and xxvi, 14, where the reference is to an ox kicking when goaded, or a horse when pricked with the rowels of a spur. Cp. also 1 Sam. ii, 29—"Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering," why do you protest against them?

Kick-off, in football, the start or resumption of a game by kicking the ball from the centre of the field.

To kick over the traces. Not to follow the leader, but to act independently; as a horse refusing to run in harness kicks over the traces.

To kick the beam. To be of light weight; to be of inferior consequence. When one pan of a pair of scales is lighter than the other, it flies upwards and "kicks the beam" of the scales.

To kick the bucket. See BUCKET.

To kick up a dust, a row, etc. To create a disturbance. The phrase "to kick up the dust" explains the other phrases.

Kickshaws. Made dishes, odds and ends, and dainty trifles of small value. Formerly written "kickshose." (Fr. quelque chose.)

Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. —2 Henry IV, v, 1.

Kicksy-wicksy. Full of whims and fancies, uncertain; hence, figuratively, a wife. Taylor, the water poet, calls it kicksie-winsie, but Shakespeare spells it kicky-wicky.

He wears his honour in a box unseen

That hugs his kicky-wicky here at home,

Spending his manly marrow in her arms,

Which should sustain the bound and high curvet

Of Mars's fiery steed.

All's Well that Ends Well, ii, 3.

Kid. A faggot or bundle of firewood. To kid is to bind up faggots. In the parish register of Kneals church there is the following item: "Leading kids to church, 2s. 6d.," that is, carting faggots to church.

Kid. A young child; in allusion to kid, the young of the goat, a very playful and frisky little animal.

The verb to kid, means to make a fool of.

Kiddies, The. The Scots Guards, raised in the reign of Charles I. When James II attempted to overawe the City of London by forming a large camp on Hounslow Heath, the three regiments of Guards then in existence were present, and the Scots Guards, being the junior, gained this disrespectful nickname.

Kidnapping is a slang word imported into the language in the 17th century. "Nabbing" a "kid," or a child was the popular term for the abominable offence of stealing young children and selling them to sea captains and others who bore them off to work on the plantations in America. The most notorious instance of kidnapping in modern times was the stealing and murder of Colonel Lindbergh's infant son in 1932.

Kidney. Temperament, disposition; stamp.

Men of another kidney or of the same kidney. The reins or kidneys were even by the Jews supposed to be the seat of the affections.

Kildare's Holy Fane. Famous for the "Fire of St. Bridget," which was inextinguishable, because the nuns never allowed it to go out. Every twentieth night St. Bridget was fabled to return to tend the fire. Part of the chapel still remains, and is called "The Firehouse."

Kill. To kill two birds with one stone. See BIRD.

Killed by Kindness. It is said that Draco, the Athenian legislator, met with his death from his popularity, being smothered in the theatre of Ægina by the number of caps and cloaks showered on him by the spectators (590 B.C.). Thomas Heywood wrote a play called A Woman Killed with Kindness (1603).

Killing. Irresistible, overpowering, fascinating, or bewitching; so as to compel admiration and notice.

Those eyes were made so killing.

POPE: Rape of the Lock, v, 64.

A killing pace. Too hot or strong to last; exceptionally great; exhausting.

Killing no murder. A pamphlet published in Holland and sent over to England in 1657 advising the assassination of Oliver Cromwell. It purported to be by one William Allen, a Jesuit, and has frequently been attributed to Silas Titus (later made a colonel and Groom of the Bedchamber by Charles II), but it was actually by Col. Edward Sexby, a Leveller, who had gone over to the Royalists, and who, in 1657, narrowly failed in an attempt to murder Cromwell.

The texts on the title-page are:—

And all the People of the Land rejoiced: and the City was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the Sword.—2 Chron. xxiii, 21.

Now after the time that Amaziah did turn away from following the Lord, they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem, and he fled to Lachish; but they sent to Lachish after him, and slew him there.—2 Chron. xxv, 27.

Kilroy. (World War II.) The phrase "Kilroy was here" was found written up wherever the Americans (particularly Air Transport Command) had been, somewhat like "Chad" (q.v.) in Britain. Various theories have been put forward as to its origin—one being that a certain Kilroy was inspector in a shipyard at Quincy, Mass., and wrote the words in chalk on equipment to indicate that he had inspected it—but it seems more likely that the phrase grew by accident. Imitations such as "Clem" did not become so fashionable.

Kilter. Out of kilter. Out of order.

Kind, Kind.

King: But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son—
Ham.: A little more than kin, and less than kind.
Hamlet, i, 2.

Kin or kinsman is a relative by marriage or blood more distant than father and son.

Kind means of the same sort of genus, as man-kind or man-genus.

Hamlet says he is more than kin to Claudius (as he was stepson), but still he is not of the same kind, the same class. He is not a bird of the same feather as the king.

Kindhart. A jocular name for a tooth-drawer in the time of Queen Elizabeth. Kindhart, the dentist, is mentioned by Rowland in his Letting of Humours-Blood in the Bead-vaine (1600); and in Rowley's New Wonder.

Mistake me not, Kindhart . . .

He calls you tooth-drawer.

Act i, 1.

The dedication in Chettle's Kind-heartes Dreame (which contains a reference to Shakespeare and was published in 1592) begins:—

Gentlemen and good-fellowes, (whose kindnes having christened mee with the name of kind-heart, binde me in all kind course I can to deserve the continuance of your love) let it not seeme strange (I beseech ye) that he that all dayes of his life hath bene famous for drawing teeth, should now in drooping age hazard contemptible infamie by drawing himselfe into print.

Kindergarten (kin'dér gar'tèn) meaning in German a children's garden, is the term applied to schools in which very young children are taught by the use of objects, games and songs. The system was initiated in Germany by Friederich Froebel (1782-1852) in 1840.

King. The A.S. cýning, from cyn, a nation or people, and the suffix -ing, meaning "of," as "son of," "chief of," etc. In Anglo-Saxon times the king was elected by the Witenagemot, and was therefore the choice of the nation.

King Franconi. Joachim Murat (1767-1815) was so called because of his resemblance to the mountebank Franconi.

King of Kings. In the Prayer Book the term, of course, refers to the Deity, but it has been assumed by many Eastern rulers, especially by the sovereigns of Abyssinia.

King of the King. Cardinal Richelieu (1585-1642) was so called, because of his influence over Louis XIII of France.

The Factory King. Richard Oastler, of Bradford (1789-1861), the successful advocate of the Ten Hours Bill.

The King of Bath. See BATH.

The King of the Beggars. See BEGGARS.

The King of the Border. A nickname of Adam Scott of Tushielaw (executed 1529), a famous border outlaw and chief.

The King of Dunces. In his first version of the Dunciad (1712), Pope gave this place of honour to Lewis Theobald (1688-1744); but in the edition of 1742 Colley Cibber (1671-1757) was put to reign in his stead.

The King of Men. A title given both to Zeus and Agamemnon.

The King of Painters. A title assumed by Parrhasius, the painter, a contemporary of Zeuxis (400 B.C.). Plutarch says he wore a purple robe and a golden crown.

The King of Preachers. Louis Bourdaloue (1632-1704), the eloquent French Jesuit.

The King of Rome. A title conferred by Napoleon I on his son François Charles Joseph Napoleon, Duke of Reichstadt (1811-32), on the day of his birth. He was called L'Aiglon (the young eagle) by Edmond Rostand in his play.

The King of Waters. The river Amazon, in South America.

The King of the World. The title (in Hindi Shah Jehan) assumed by Khurram Shah, third son of Selim Jehan Ghir, and fifth of the Mogul emperors of Delhi (reigned 1628-58).

The King over the water. The name given by Jacobites to James II after his flight to France; to his son the Old Pretender (James III), and to his grandsons Charles Edward the Young Pretender (Charles III), and Henry, Cardinal of York (Henry IX).

My father so far compromised his loyalty as to announce merely "The king," as his first toast after dinner, instead of the emphatic "King George" . . . . Our guest made a motion with his glass, so as to pass it over the water-decanter which stood beside him, and added, "Over the water."—SCOTT: Redgauntlet, letter v.

King's Cave. Opposite to Campbelton; so called because it was here that King Robert Bruce and his retinue lodged when they landed on the mainland from the Isle of Arran.

King's Crag. Fife, in Scotland. So called because Alexander III of Scotland was killed there (1286).

As he was riding in the dusk of the evening along the sea-coast of Fife, betwixt Burnt-island and King-born, he approached too near the brink of the precipice, and his horse, starting or stumbling, he was thrown over the rock and killed on the spot. . . . The people of the country still point out the very spot where it happened, and which is called "The King's Crag."—Scott: Tales of a Grandfather, vi.

King's Cross. Up to the accession of George IV this London locality was called "Battle Bridge" and had an infamous notoriety. The name was changed in 1821, when the neighbourhood was being developed by speculating builders. A battle is said to have been fought on this site between King Alfred and the Danes, but it is mostly a matter of legend, no facts having yet been discovered to substantiate the story. There was never any cross here, only a singularly bad statue of George IV which was taken down in 1842.

King's Lynn (Lynn Regis). The town in Norfolk has been so called since the time of the dissolution of the monasteries, when certain Church property fell into the hands of King Henry VIII. Previously its name was Lynn Episcopi (Bishop's Lynn). Lynn is Celtic for a deep pool.

A cat may look at a king. See CAT.

King of Arms. The official title of the chief heralds. In England there are three kings of arms, Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy and Ulster; in Scotland there is the Lord Lyon King of Arms. The Order of the Bath has its own Bath King of Arms, instituted in 1725. In Ireland the office of Ulster King of Arms is now associated with the Norroy King of Arms in England.

A king's bad bargain. Said of a soldier (or sailor) who turns out a malingering or to be of no use; in allusion to the shilling formerly given by the recruiting sergeant to a soldier on enlistment.

A king of shreds and patches. In the old mysteries Vice used to be dressed as a mimic king in a parti-coloured suit (Hamlet, iii, 4). The phrase has been applied to hacks who compile books for publishers but supply no originality of thought or matter.

A king should die standing. The reputed dying saying of Louis XVIII.

King Charles's head. A phrase applied to an obsession, a fixed fancy. It comes from Mr. Dick, the harmless half-wit in David Copperfield, who, whatever he wrote or said always got round to the subject of King Charles's head, about which he was composing a memorial—he could not keep it out of his thoughts.

King Charles's Spaniel. A small black-and-tan spaniel with a rounded head, short muzzle, full, rather protruding eyes. This variety came into favour at the Restoration, but the colour of the dogs at that time was liver and white.

King Cotton. Cotton, the staple of the Southern States of America, and one of the chief articles of manufacture in England. The expression was first used by James H. Hammond in the United States Senate in 1858.

King's County in the province of Leinster in Eire is now called Offaly, and Queen's County is now Leix.

King's Cup Air Race was instituted in 1922 for a cup presented by George V. It is a handicap air race open only to British and Empire pilots flying British or Dominion aeroplanes. The winner in 1950 was E. Day, at a speed of 138 m.p.h.

King James's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

King Log and King Stork. See LOG.

King's (or Queen's) Messenger is an official of the British Foreign Office whose duty it is to carry personally confidential messages from London to any embassy or legation abroad. He carries as his badge of office a silver greyhound, and though he naturally receives courtesies and help in the countries across which he travels, he enjoys no diplomatic immunities or privileges save that of passing through the customs the "diplomatic bag" he is carrying.

King of Misrule. In mediæval and Tudor times, the director of the Christmas-time horseplay and festivities, called also the Abbot, or Lord, of Misrule, and in Scotland the Master of Unreason. At Oxford and Cambridge one of the Masters of Arts superintended both the Christmas and Candlemas sports, for which he was allowed a fee of 40s. A similar "lord" was appointed by the lord mayor of London, the sheriffs, and the chief nobility. Stubbs tells us that these mock dignitaries had from twenty to sixty officers under them, and were furnished with hobby-horses, dragons, and musicians. They first went to church with such a confused noise that no one could hear his own voice. Polydore Vergil says of the Feast of Misrule that it was "derived from the Roman Saturnalia," held in December for five days (17th to 22nd). The Feast of Misrule lasted twelve days.

If we compare our Bacchanalian Christmases and New Year-tides with these Saturnalia and Feasts of Janus, we shall find such near affinity between them . . . that we must needs conclude the one to be the very ape or issue of the other.—PRYNNE: Histrio-Mastix (1632).

King-maker. The Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick (1420-71); so called because, when he sided with Henry VI, Henry was king, but when he sided with Edward IV, Henry was deposed and Edward crowned. He was killed at the battle of Barnet. He was first called "the king-maker" by John Major in his History of Greater Britain, England and Scotland, 1521.

King's (or Queen's) Bench. The Supreme Court of Common Law; so called because at one time the sovereign presided in this court, and the court followed the sovereign when he moved from one place to another. Originally called the Aula Regia, it is now a division of the High Court of Judicature.

King-pin, in skittles, etc., the pin in the centre when all the pins are in place, or the pin at the front apex. Figuratively the word is used to describe the principal person in a company, cast, etc.

King's (or Queen's) Remembrancer. An officer of the High Court who represents the Exchequer with the duty of collecting debts and dues on behalf of the Crown.

The King's (or Queen's) Speech with which each session of the British Parliament is opened is prepared by the cabinet and outlines their programme. It is always addressed to both Houses but the special clause relating to finance is addressed to the Commons alone.

King of the Bean. See BEAN-KING.

King of Yvetot. See YVETOT.

King Pétaud. See PÉTAUD.

Kings are above grammar. See GRAMMAR.

Kings have long hands. Do not quarrel with a king, as his power and authority reach to the end of his dominions. The Latin proverb is, An nescis longas regibus esse manus (Ovid, Heroides, 17, 166).

There's such divinity doth hedge a king.
That treason can but peep to what it would.

Hamlet, iv, 5.

King's (or Queen's) evidence. See EVIDENCE.

King Horn. The hero of a French metrical romance of the 13th century, and the original of our Horne Childe, generally called The Geste of Kyng Horn. The nominal author is a certain Mestre Thomas.

Like a king. When Porus, the Indian prince, was taken prisoner, Alexander asked him how he expected to be treated. "Like a king," he replied; and Alexander made him his friend.

Pray aid of the king (or queen). When someone, under the belief that he has a right to the land, claims rent of the king's tenants, they appeal to the sovereign, or "pray aid of the king."

The books of the four kings. A pack of cards. After supper were brought in the books of the four kings.—RABELAIS: Gargantua and Pantagruel, i, 22.

The king of beasts. The lion.

The King of Spain's trumpeter. A donkey. A pun on the word don, a Spanish magnate.

The King of Terrors. Death.

The king of the forest. The oak, which not only braves the storm, but fosters the growth of tender parasites under its arms.

The king's cheese goes half in paring. A king's income is half consumed by the numerous calls on his purse.

The King's English. See ENGLISH.

The King's Oak. The oak under which Henry VIII sat, in Epping Forest, while Anne (Boleyn) was being executed.

The King's (or Queen's) picture. Money; so called because coin is stamped with "the image" of the reigning sovereign.

The Three Kings of Cologne. The Magi (q.v.).

King's (or Queen's) Counsel. In England a member of the Bar appointed by the Crown on the nomination of the Lord Chancellor, in Scotland on the recommendation of the Lord Justice-General. A K.C. wears a silk gown and is thus often called a silk. He takes precedence over the junior Bar, and in a case must have a junior barrister with him.

King's Evil. Scrofula; so called from a notion which prevailed from the reign of Edward the Confessor to that of Queen Anne that it could be cured by the royal touch. The Jacobites considered that the power did not descend to William III and Anne because the "divine" hereditary right was not fully possessed by them, but the office remained in our Prayer-Book till 1719. Prince Charles Edward, when he claimed to be Prince of Wales, touched a female child for the disease in 1745. One of the last persons touched in England was Dr. Johnson, in 1712, when less than three years old, by Queen Anne. The practice was introduced by Henry VII of presenting the person "touched" with a small gold or silver coin, called a touchpiece. The one presented to Dr. Johnson has St. George and the Dragon on one side and a ship on the other; the legend of the former is Soli deo gloria, and of the latter Anna D: G.M.B.R.F: ET.H.REG. (Anne, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland Queen).

We are told that Charles II touched 92,107 persons. The smallest number in one year was 2,983, in 1669; and the largest number was in 1684, when many were trampled to death. (See Macaulay's History of England, ch. xiv.) John Brown, a royal surgeon, had to superintend the ceremony.

Cp. Macbeth, iv, 3:—

Malcolm: Comes the king forth, I pray you?

Doctor: Ay, sir; there are a crew of wretched souls That stay his cure; their malady convinces The great assay of art; but, at his touch Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand, They presently amend.

The French kings laid claim to the same divine power from the time of Clovis, A.D. 481, and on Easter Sunday, 1686, Louis XIV touched 1,600 persons, using these words: Le roy te touche, Dieu te guerisse.

Days fatal to Kings. Much foolish superstition has been circulated respecting certain days supposed to be "fatal" to the crowned heads of Great Britain. The following notes will help the reader to discriminate truth from fiction:—

Of the sovereigns who have died since 1066 Sunday has been the last day of the reign of seven, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday that of six each, Friday and Wednesday of five, and Saturday of four.

Sunday: Henry I, Edward III, Henry VI, James I, William III, Anne, George I.

Monday: Stephen, Richard II, Henry IV, Henry V, Richard III, George V.

Tuesday: Richard I, Edward II, Charles I, James II, William IV, Victoria.

Wednesday: John, Henry III, Edward IV, Edward V, George VI.

Thursday: William I, William II, Henry II, Edward VI, Mary I, Elizabeth.

Friday: Edward I, Henry VIII, Charles II, Mary II, Edward VII.

Saturday: Henry VII, George II, George III, George IV.

Kingdom Come. Death, the grave, execution, the next world.

And forty pounds be theirs, a pretty sum,

For sending such a rogue to kingdom come.

PETER PINDAR: Subjects for Painters.

Kingsale. The premier baron of Ireland, Lord Kingsale, is one of the two British subjects who claim the right of wearing a hat in the presence of royalty. See HAT.

Kingston Bridge. A card bent so that when the pack is cut it is cut at this card.

Kingston-on-Thames. Named King's stone from a large square block of stone near the town hall, on which the early Anglo-Saxon monarchs knelt when they were appointed to the kingly office: Edward the Elder, Athelstan, Edmund, Ethelred, Edred, Edwy, and Edward the Martyr received on this stone the royal unction. The stone is now enclosed.

Kingstown (Eire), by the Irish called Dunleary. The name was changed in 1821 out of compliment to George IV, who visited Ireland that year, and left Dunleary harbour for his return home on September 5th.

Kinless Loons. The judges whom Cromwell sent into Scotland were so termed, because they had no relations in the country and so were free from temptation to nepotism. They tried the accused on the merits of the case.

Kiosk (kē'osk). A Turkish summer-house or pavilion supported by pillars which were usually covered with vines or flowering creepers and often enclosed a fountain. In England and western Europe the name is given to bandstands, pavilions for the sale of refreshments, etc., and to small enclosed stalls for the sale of newspapers in the street; booths for public telephones, etc.

Kirk of Skulls. Gamrie Church, in Banffshire; so called because the skulls and other bones of the Norsemen who fell in the neighbouring field, the Bloody Pots, were built into its walls.

Kirke's Lambs. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Kismet (kis' met). Fate, destiny; or the fulfilment of destiny; from Turk. quismat, portion, lot (qasama, to divide).

Kiss. A very ancient and widely spread mode of salutation, frequently mentioned in the Bible, both as an expression of reverence and adoration and as a greeting or farewell between friends. Esau embraced Jacob, "fell on his neck and kissed him" (Gen. xxxiii, 4), the repentant woman kissed the feet of Christ (Luke vii, 45), and the disciples from Ephesus "fell on Paul's neck and kissed him" (Acts xx, 37). But kissing between the sexes was unknown among the ancient Hebrews, and while the cheeks, forehead, beard, hands, and feet might be kissed the lips might not, the passage in the Bible (Prov. xxiv, 26, see marginal note in Revised Version) that seems to contradict this being a mistranslation. "Kiss the Son, lest He be angry" (Ps. ii, 12), means worship the Son of God. This is the only reference in the Bible to the Kiss of Homage.

The old custom of "kissing the bride" comes from the Salisbury rubric concerning the Pax (q.v.).

In billiards (and also bowls) a kiss is a very slight touch of one moving ball on another, especially a second touch, accidental or designed; and the name also used to be given to a little drop of sealing-wax accidentally let fall beside the seal.

Kiss-behind-the-garden-gate. A country name for a pansy.

Kiss the place to make it well. Said to be a relic of the custom of sucking poison from wounds. St. Martin of Tours, when he was at Paris, observed at the city gates a leper full of sores; and, going up to him, he kissed the sores, whereupon the leper was instantly made whole (Sulpicius Severus: Dialogues). Similar stories are told of St. Mayeul, and quite a number of saints.

Who ran to help me, when I fell,
And would some pretty story tell,
Or kiss the place to make it well?

ANN TAYLOR: My Mother.

Kissing the Pope's toe. Matthew of Westminster says it was customary formerly to kiss the hand of his Holiness; but that a certain woman, in the 8th century, not only kissed the Pope's hand, but "squeezed it." The Church magnate, seeing the danger to which he was exposed, cut off his hand, and was compelled in future to offer his foot. In reality, the Pope's foot (i.e. the cross embroidered on his right shoe) may be kissed by the visitor; bishops kiss his knee as well. This sign of respect was formerly given to other patriarchs and even to temporal sovereigns and, needless to say, implies no servility. It is customary to bend the knee and kiss the ring of a cardinal, bishop, or abbot.

To kiss the book. To kiss the Bible, or the New Testament, after taking an oath; the kiss of confirmation or promise to act in accordance with the words of the oath and a public acknowledgment that you adore and fear to offend, by breaking your oath, the God whose book you reverence.

In the English Courts, the Houses of Parliament, etc., non-Christians and others who have scruples are now permitted to affirm without going through this ceremony.

To kiss or lick the dust. To be completely overwhelmed or humiliated; to be slain. In Ps. lxxii, 9, it is said, "his enemies shall lick the dust."

To kiss hands. To kiss the hand of the sovereign either on accepting or retiring from office.

Kissing the hand of, or one's own hand to, an idol was a usual form of adoration; if the statue was low enough the devotee kissed its hand; if not, kissed his own hand and waved it to the image. God said he had in Israel seven thousand persons who had not bowed unto Baal, "every mouth which hath not kissed him" (1 Kings xix, 18).

To kiss the gunner's daughter. See GUNNER.

To kiss the hare's foot. See HARE.

To kiss the rod. See ROD.

Kissing-comfit. The candied root of the Sea Holly (eryngium maritimum) prepared as a lozenge, to perfume the breath.

Kissing-crust. The crust where the lower lump of a cottage loaf kisses the upper. In French, bâisure de pain.

Kist of Whistles. A church-organ (Scotch). Kist is the same word as cist (q.v.), a chest.

Kit. From Dut. kitte, a wooden receptacle made of hooped staves; hence that which contains the necessities, tools, etc., of a workman; and hence the articles themselves collectively.

A soldier's kit. His outfit.

A small three-stringed fiddle, formerly used by dancing masters, was called a kit. The word is from the obsolete gitterne (Fr. quitterne), a sort of guitar.

Kit-cat Club. A club formed about the beginning of the 18th century by the leading Whigs of the day, and held in the house of Christopher Catt, a pastrycook of Shire Lane, which used to run north from Temple Bar to Carey Street (its site is now covered by the Law Courts). Christopher Catt's mutton pies, which were eaten at the club, were also called kit-cats, and in the Spectator (No. IX) we are told that it was from these the club got its name.

Steele, Addison, Congreve, Garth, Vanbrugh, Manwaring, Stepney, Walpole, and Pulteney were of it; so was Lord Dorset and the present Duke. Manwaring . . . was the ruling man in all conversation . . . Lord Stanhope and the Earl of Essex were also members. . . . Each member gave his [picture].—Pope to Spence.

Sir Godfrey Kneller painted forty-two portraits of the club members for Jacob Tonson, the secretary, whose villa was at Barn Elms, where latterly the club was held. In order to accommodate the paintings to the height of the club-room, he was obliged to make them three-quarter lengths (28 in. by 36 in.), hence a three-quarter portrait is still called a kit-cat. The set of portraits is now in the National Portrait Gallery, London.

Kit's Coty House. A great cromlech,  $3\frac{1}{4}$  m. N.W. of Maidstone on the Rochester road, consisting of a vast block of sandstone resting on three other blocks. It is near the ancient battlefield of Aylesford, where the Saxons under Hengist and Horsa fought the Britons, whose chieftain was, according to the Chronicles, named Catigern, and some authorities derive the name from him. The dolmen is undoubtedly much older than his day, and the name may be British for "the tomb in the woods" (Wel. coed, a wood).

Kitchen. An old term, still used in some parts of rural Scotland, for a cooked relish as toasted cheese, eggs, sausages, bacon, etc.

Kitchen-middens. Prehistoric mounds (referred to the Neolithic Age) composed of sea-shells, bones, kitchen refuse, rude stone implements, and other relics of early man. They were first noticed on the coast of Denmark, but have since been found in the British Isles, North America, etc.

Kite. In lawyer's slang, a junior counsel who is allotted at an assize court to advocate the cause of a prisoner who is without other defence.

In R.A.F. slang, any aircraft.

In Stock Exchange slang, a worthless bill.

To fly the kite. To "raise the wind" by questionable methods, such as by sending begging letters to persons of charitable reputation or by means of worthless bills.

Kiwanis (ki wa' nis). An organization founded in U.S.A. in 1915 aiming to improve business ethics and provide leadership for raising the level of business and professional ideals. There are many Kiwanis clubs in U.S.A. and Canada.

Kiwi (kē' wē). A New Zealand bird incapable of flight. In flying circles the word is applied to a man of the ground staff at an aerodrome. In Australia it is often used to denote a New Zealander.

Klepts (Gr., robbers). The name given to those Greeks who, after the conquest of their country by the Turks in the 15th century, refused to submit and maintained their independence in the mountains. They degenerated—especially after the War of Independence (1821-28)—into brigands, hence the word is often used for a lawless bandit or brigand.

Klondike (klon' dik). A river and district of Yukon Territory in Canada. In 1896 placer gold was discovered in the creeks that flow into the river and for some years much gold was produced. The famous Gold Rush took place 1897-98.

Knave (A.S. cnafa, Ger. knabe). Originally merely a boy or male-child, then a male servant or one in low condition and finally—its present sense—an unprincipled and dishonourable rascal.

The tyme is come, a knave-child she ber;
Mauricius at the font-stoon they him calle.

CHAUCER: Man of Lawe's Tale, 722.

And sche bare a knave child that was to reulyng alle folkis in an yrun gherde (Auth. Ver.—And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron).—Wyclif's Bible: Rev. xii, 5.

In cards the knave (or jack), the lowest court card of each suit, is the common soldier or servant of the royalties.

He lived like a knave, and died like a fool. Said by Warburton of Henry Rich, first Earl of Holland (1590-1649), the turncoat. He went to the scaffold dressed in white satin, trimmed with silver.

Knave of hearts. A flirt.

Knee. Knee tribute. Adoration or reverence, by prostration or bending the knee. Cp. LIP-SERVICE.

Coming to receive from us

Knee-tribute yet unpaid, prostration vile.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, v, 782.

Weak-kneed. Irresolute, not thorough; as, a weak-kneed Christian, a Laodicean, neither hot nor cold.

Kneph. Another name of the Egyptian god Amen-Ra (q.v.).

Knickerbockers, or Knickers. Loose-fitting breeches, gathered in below the knee, and worn by boys, cyclists, sportsmen, tourists, etc., and by women as an undergarment. So named from George Cruikshank's illustrations of Knickerbocker's History of New York, a burlesque published in 1809 by Washington Irving, where the Dutch worthies are drawn with very loose knee-breeches. The name Knickerbocker is found among the old Dutch inhabitants of

New York a century and more earlier; it probably signified a baker of knickers, i.e. clay marbles.

Knife. The emblem of St. Agatha, St. Albert, and St. Christina.

The flaying knife is the emblem of St. Bartholomew, because he was flayed.

He is a capital knife-and-fork, he has a good appetite.

War to the knife. Deadly strife.

Knifeboard. The long, back-to-back benches that used to run longitudinally down the middle of the roof of the old horse omnibuses. In the 'nineties of last century transverse "garden seats" gradually took their place. The allusion is to the board covered with knife-powder on which steel table knives were made bright.

Knight (A.S. cniht). Originally meaning merely a boy or servant, the word came to denote a man of gentle birth who, after serving at court or in the retinue of some lord as a page and esquire, was admitted with appropriate ceremonies to an honourable degree of military rank and given the right to bear arms.

The Knight, or Knight Bachelor, of to-day is a commoner who is the possessor of a personal and non-hereditary dignity conferred by the sovereign, carrying with it the prefix "Sir" and a place in the Table of Precedence next above County Court Judges and next below Knight Commanders of the Order of the British Empire. The wife of a Knight is usually entitled "Lady" or "Dame," but this, as in the case of Baronets, is a matter of courtesy only, not of right.

There are nine Orders of Knighthood in the British Empire, viz. (in the following order of precedence) the Garter, the Thistle, St. Patrick, the Bath, the Star of India, St. Michael and St. George, the Indian Empire, the Royal Victorian Order, and the British Empire. After these come the Knights Bachelor, who are members of no Order and who do not constitute an order. Bachelor here is Fr. bas chevalier, signifying "lower than the Knight of an order."

The word knight is used in various slang or jocular phrases denoting a member of some trade or profession, follower of some calling or occupation, etc. Thus we have Knight of the blade, a roystering bully, Knight of the cleaver, a butcher, Knight of the cue, a billiard player, Knight of the needle, a tailor, Knight of the pestle, a druggist, Knight of the road, a footpad, Knight of the spigot, a tapster, Knight of the wheel, a cyclist, etc., etc.

Cross-legged Knights. See CROSS-LEGGED.

Knight Bachelor. See KNIGHT, above.

Knight Banneret. See BANNERET.

Knight Baronet. The title originally given to Baronets (q.v.) when the degree was instituted by James I in 1611.

Knights of Columbus. A Roman Catholic fraternal and philanthropic society in U.S.A., founded in 1882 with the aim of uniting laymen of the Church in corporate religious and civic unity and usefulness.

Knight errant. A mediæval knight, especially a hero of those long romances satirized by Cervantes in Don Quixote, who wandered about the world in quest of adventure and in search of opportunities of rescuing damsels in distress and performing other chivalrous deeds.

It seemed unto him [Don Quixote] very requisite and behooveful . . . that he himself should become a knight-errant, and go throughout the world, with his horse and armour, to seek adventures, and practise in person all that he had read was used by knights of yore; revenging all kinds of injuries, and offering himself to occasions and dangers, which, being once happily achieved, might gain him eternal renown.—CERVANTES: Don Quixote (Shelton's tr. 1612).

Knight Marshal. See MARSHALSEA.

Knight of Grace. A member of the lower order of the Knights of Malta. See MALTA.

Knight of industry. Slang for a sharper; one who lives on his wits.

Knight of the post. A man who had stood in the pillory or had been flogged at the whipping-post was so called; hence, one who haunted the purlieus of the courts, ready to be hired for a bribe to give false witness, go bail for a debtor for pay, etc.

"A knight of the post," quoth he, "for so I am termed; a fellow that will swear you anything for twelve pence."—NASH: Pierce Penilesse (1592).

These perjured knaves be commonly old knights of the post, that are foisted off from being taken for bale at the king's bench, or other places, and seeing for open perjuries they are refused there, they take that course of life.—GREENE: Second Part of Cony-catching (1591).

The Knight of the Rueful Countenance. Don Quixote (q.v.).

Knight of the Shire. The old name for one of the two gentlemen of the rank of knight who represented a county or shire in the English Parliament; a member elected by a county, in contradistinction to a borough member.

Knight of the square flag. A knight banneret, in allusion to cutting off the points of his pennon when he was raised to this rank on the battlefield.

The Knight of the Swan. Lohengrin (q.v.).

Knight service. The tenure of land, under the feudal system, on the condition of rendering military service to the Crown.

Knight's fee. The amount of land for which, under the feudal system, the services of a knight were due to the Crown. There was no fixed unit, some were larger than others; William the Conqueror created 60,000 such fees when he came to England, and in his time all who had £20 a year in lands or income were compelled to be knights.

Knights of Labour. An organization of working men, founded at Philadelphia in 1869. At first secret, it later emerged to play an important part in the American Trade Union movement. Its objects were to regulate wages, hours of work, etc., and to control strikes. It secured the establishment of Labour Day (q.v.) as a national holiday. In the early 20th century it ceased to exist, being unable to compete with the more powerful American Federation of Labour (founded 1886).

Knights of the Round Table. See ROUND TABLE.

Knights of Windsor. A small order of knights, originally founded by Edward III in 1349 as the "Poor Knights of the Order of the Garter." It was at first formed of 26 veterans, but since the time of Charles I the numbers have been fixed at 13 for the Royal Foundation and 5 for the Lower (since abolished) with a Governor. The members are retired meritorious military officers. They are granted apartments in Windsor Castle and pensions ranging from £50 to £130 a year. They must be in residence for at least nine months in the year, must attend St. George's Chapel on saints' days, and occasionally act as guards of honour. Their present uniform was assigned by William IV, who made their title the "Military Knights of Windsor"; and their early connexion with the Order of the Garter is still retained in many ways, as, for instance, every K.G. on appointment has to give a sum of money for distribution among them, and the Sovereign appoints members in his capacity as head of the Order of the Garter.

Knights Templar. See TEMPLAR.

Knightenguild. The Guild of thirteen "cnihts" (probably youthful scions of noble houses attached to the court) to which King Edgar, or, according to other accounts, Canute, gave that easternmost portion of the City of London now called Portoken Ward, on the following conditions: (1) Each knight was to be victorious in three combats—one on the earth, and one under, and one in the water; and (2) each was, on a given day, to run with spears against all comers in East Smithfield. William the Conqueror confirmed the same unto the heirs of these knights, whose descendants, in 1125, gave all the property and their rights to the newly founded Priory of Holy Trinity.

Knipperdollings (nip er dol' ingz). A sect of 16th-century German Anabaptists, so called from their leader, Bernard Knipperdolling, who was active about 1530-35, and was one of the leaders of the insurrection of Münster.

Knock, To. Slang for to create a great impression, to be irresistible; as in Albert Chevalier's song, "Knocked 'em in the Old Kent Road" (1892), i.e. astonished the inhabitants, filled them with admiration.

To knock about or around. To wander about town "seeing life" and enjoying oneself.

A knock-about turn. A music-hall term for a noisy, boisterous act in which (usually) a couple of red-nosed comedians indulge in violent horseplay.

Knock-kneed. With the knees turned inwards so that they knock together in walking.

To be knocked into a cocked hat, or into the middle of next week. To be thoroughly beaten. See COCKED.

To get the knock (or the nasty knock). To have a blow (actual or figurative) that finishes one off.

To knock out of time. To settle one's hash for him, double him up. The phrase is from pugilism, and refers to disabling an opponent so that he is unable to respond when the referee calls "Time."

To knock spots off someone or something. To beat him soundly, get the better of it, do the job thoroughly. The allusion is probably to pistol-shooting at a playing-card, when a good shot will knock out the pips or spots.

To knock the bottom or the stuffing out of anything. To confound, bring to naught, especially to show that some argument or theory is invalid and "won't hold water."

To knock under. To acknowledge oneself defeated, in argument or otherwise, to knuckle under. Perhaps from the old custom of a disputant who gets the worst of it tapping the under side of the table or from the habit, in hard-drinking days, of subsiding under the table.

He that flinches his Glass, and to Drink is not able,
Let him quarrel no more, but knock under the table.
Gentleman's Journal: March, 1691-2.

Knock-out. Primarily, a disabling blow, especially (in pugilism) one out of guard on the point of the chin, which puts the receiver to sleep and so finishes the fight. Hence, a complete surprise is "a fair knock-out."

In the auction room a knock-out is a sale at which a ring of dealers combine to keep prices artificially low, so that they obtain the goods and afterwards sell them among themselves, dividing the profits.

Knockers. Goblins, or kobolds (q.v.), who dwell in mines, and indicate rich veins of ore by their presence. In Cardiganshire and elsewhere miners attribute the strange noises so frequently heard in mines to these spirits.

Knot. (Lat. nodus, Fr. nœud, Dan. knude, Dut. knot, A.S. cnotta, allied to knit.)

He has tied a knot with his tongue he cannot untie with his teeth. He has got married. He has tied the marriage-knot (q.v.) by saying, "I take thee for my wedded wife," etc., but it is not to be untied so easily.

Gordian knot. See GORDIAN.

Knots of May. See NUT.

She was making 15 knots. The measurement of speed for ocean-going vessels is the knot, i.e. the speed of one mile in one hour; 15 knots is therefore the rate of 15 nautical miles an hour. The log-line is divided into lengths by knots, and is run out while a sand-glass runs for either 28 or 30 seconds.

True lovers' knot. Sir Thomas Browne thinks the knot owes its origin to the nodus Herculanus, a snake complication in the caduceus or rod of Mercury, in which form the woollen girdle of the Greek brides was fastened (Pseudodoxia Epidemica, V, xxii).

To seek for a knot in a rush. Seeking for something that does not exist. Not a very wise phrase, seeing there are jointed rushes, probably not known when the proverb was first current.

Knotgrass. This grass, Polygonum aviculare, was formerly supposed, if taken in an infusion, to stop growth.

Get you gone, you dwarf;

You minimus, of hindering knotgrass made.

Midsummer Night's Dream, iii, 2.

The child's a fatherless child; and say they should put him into a straight pair of gaskins (breeches), 'twere worse than knot-grass; he would never grow after it.—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Knight of the Burning Pestle, ii, 2.

Knout (Russ., knut, probably connected with knot). A long, hard leather thong or a knotted bunch of thongs formerly used in Russia for corporal punishment on prisoners; hence, a symbol of supremely autocratic rule.

Know Thyself. The admonition of the oracle of Apollo at Delphi; also attributed (by Diogenes Laertius, i, 40) to Thales, also to Solon the Athenian lawgiver, Socrates, Pythagoras, and others.

Know-Nothings. A secret political society in the U.S.A., also called the "American party." It arose in 1853, and its members replied to every question about their society, "I know nothing about it." Their object was to accomplish the repeal of the naturalization laws, and of the law which excluded all but natives from holding office. It split on the slavery question and died out in 1859.

Knuckle. To knuckle under. To acknowledge oneself beaten, to sue for pardon; in allusion to the old custom of striking the under side of a table with the knuckles when defeated in an argument. Cp. To KNOCK UNDER.

To knuckle down to. To submit to.

To knuckle down to it. To work away at it, heart and soul; to do one's best.

Knuckle-duster. A brass sheath fitting over the knuckles. Its origin goes back to the times of Roman pugilism, but to-day its use is confined to thugs the world over.

Knurr and Spell (nër, spel). A game resembling trapball, and played with a wooden ball (the knurr) which is released by means of a spring from a little brass cup at the end of a tongue of steel called a spell or spill. After the player has touched the spring, the ball flies into the air, and is struck with a bat.

Knut. See NUT.

Kobold (kob'öld). A house-spirit in German superstition; similar to our Robin Goodfellow, and the Scots brownie. Also a gnome who works in the mines and forests.

Kochlani (kok la'ni). Arabian horses of royal stock, of which genealogies have been preserved for more than 2,000 years. It is said that they are the offspring of Solomon's stud. (Niebuhr.)

Koheleth. See ECCLASIASTES.

Koh-i-Nur (kō i nör) (Pers., mountain of light). A large diamond which, since 1849, has been among the British Crown Jewels. It is said to have been known 2,000 years ago, but its authentic history starts in 1304, when it was wrested by the Sultan, Al-eddin, from the Rajah of Maiwa. From his line it passed in 1526 to Humaiun, the son of Sultan Baber, and thence to Aurungzebe (d. 1707), the Mogul Emperor, who used it for the eye of a peacock in his famous peacock throne at Delhi. In 1739 it passed into the hands of Nadir Shah, who called it the Koh-i-nur. It next went to the monarchs of Afghanistan, and when Shah Sujah was deposed he gave it to Runjit Singh, of the Punjab, as the price of his assistance towards the recovery of the throne of Cabul. After Runjit's death (1839) it was kept in the treasury at Lahore, and when the Punjab was annexed to the British Crown, in 1849, it was, by stipulation, presented to Queen Victoria. At this time it weighed 186½ carats, but after its acquisition it was cut down to 106½ carats. There is a tradition that it always brings ill luck to its possessor.

Kohl or Kohol (kōl). Finely powdered antimony, used by women in Persia and the East to blacken the inside of their eyelids.

And others mix the Kohol's jetty dye

To give that long, dark languish to the eye.

THOMAS MOORE: Lalla Rookh, Pt. i.

Konx Ompax (kongks om' paks). The words of dismissal in the Eleusinian Mysteries. Konx is the sound made by a pebble as it falls into the voting urn; ompax is a compound of two words meaning like or resembling, and the Latin pax (Ital. basta) an exclamation of dismissal, signifying that the proceedings have come to an end.

Köpenick is a suburb of Berlin and the scene of a famous imposture. On October 16th, 1906, a cobbler named Wilhelm Voigt donned the uniform of a captain of a Guards regiment and accompanied by two privates entered the burgomaster's office at Köpenick, appropriated all the cash that happened to be there, and sent the burgomaster, terrified at having committed some unspecified crime, to the guard-house at Berlin in charge of the grenadier guardsman. The discovery of the hoax caused a great sensation, chiefly because of the effrontery of anyone daring to make fun of the all-powerful Army.

Koppa. An ancient Greek letter, disused as a letter in classical Greek, but retained as the sign for the numeral 90.

Korah. See ASAPH.

Koran (ko rān'), or, with the article, Al Koran. The bible or sacred book of the Mohammedans, containing the religious, social, civil, commercial, military, and legal code of Islam. The Koran, which contains 114 chapters, or Surahs, is said to have been communicated to the prophet at Mecca and Medina by the angel Gabriel, with the sound of bells. It is written in Arabic and was compiled from Mohammed's own lips.

Korrigans (kor' i gānz). Nine fays of Breton folklore, who can predict future events, assume any shape they like, move quick as thought from place to place, and cure diseases or wounds.

Kosher (kō' sher). A Hebrew word denoting that which is permitted by, or fulfils the requirements of, the law; applied usually to food—especially to meat which has been slaughtered and prepared in the prescribed manner.

Kraken (kra' ken). A sea-monster of vast size, supposed to have been seen off the coast of Norway and on the North American coasts, and probably founded on a hurried observation of one of the gigantic squids or cuttlefish. It was first described (1752) by Pontopidan in his History of Norway. Pliny speaks of a sea-monster in the Straits of Gibraltar, which blocked the entrance of ships.

The shoal called the Shambles at the entrance of Portland Roads was very dangerous before the breakwater was constructed. According to local legend, at the bottom of the gigantic shaft are the wrecks of ships seized and sunk by the huge spider Kraken, called also the fish-mountain.

Kralitz Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Kratim. The dog of the Seven Sleepers. More correctly called Katmir or Ketmir (q.v.).

Kremlin, The. A gigantic pile of buildings in Moscow of every style of architecture: Arabesque, Gothic, Greek, Italian, Chinese, etc., enclosed by battlemented and many-towered walls 1½ miles in circuit. It contains palaces and cathedrals, churches, convents, museums and barracks, arcades and shops, the great bell, and, before the Revolution, the Russian treasury, government offices, the ancient palace of the patriarch, a throne-room, etc. It was built by two Italians, Marco and Pietro Antonio, for Ivan III in 1485 to 1495, but the Great Palace, as well as many other buildings, dates only from the middle of the 19th century, previous palaces, etc., having been destroyed at various times. There had been previously a wooden fortress on the spot. As the seat of government of the U.S.S.R. the word "Kremlin" is often used symbolically of that government, just as the Vatican is for the Papacy, or Quai D'Orsay for the French government.

The name is from Russ. kreml, a citadel, and other towns beside Moscow possess kremlins, but none on this scale.

Kreuzer (kroit' zer). A small copper coin in Southern Germany and Austria, formerly of silver and marked with a cross (Ger. kreuz, Lat. crux). It is worth (nominally) one-third of a penny.

Kreig-spiel. See WAR GAME.

Kriemhild (krēm' hild). The legendary heroine of the Nibelungenlied (q.v.), a woman of unrivalled beauty, daughter of the Burgundian, King Gibich, and sister of Gunther, Gernot, and Giselher. She first married Siegfried (q.v.), and next Etzel (Attila), king of the Huns.

Krishna (krish' nā) (the black one). One of the greatest of the Hindu deities, the god of fire, lightning, storms, the heavens, and the sun, usually regarded as the eighth avatar (q.v.) of Vishnu. One story relates that Kansa, demon-king of Mathura, having committed great ravages, Brahma prayed to Vishnu to relieve the world of its distress; whereupon Vishnu plucked off two hairs, one white and the other black, and promised they should revenge the wrongs of the demon-king. The black hair became Krishna.

Another myth says that Krishna was the son of Vasudeva and Devaki, and when he was born among the Yadavas at Mathura, between Delhi and Agra, his uncle, King Kansa, who had been warned by heaven that this nephew was to slay him, sought to kill Krishna, who was, however, smuggled away. He was brought up by shepherds, and later killed his uncle and became King of the Yadavas in his stead. He was the Apollo of India and the idol of women. His story is told in the Bhagavadghita and Bhagavatapurana.

Kronos or Cronus (krō' nos). One of the Titans of Greek mythology, son of Uranus and Ge, father (by Rhea) of Hestia, Demeter, Hera, Hades, Poseidon, and Zeus. He dethroned his father as ruler of the world, and was in turn dethroned by his son, Zeus. By the Romans he was identified with Saturn (q.v.).

Ku Klux Klan (kū klüks klān). A secret society in the southern U.S.A. that was founded in Pulaski, Tenn., in 1865, at the close of the Civil War. It was originally a social club with a fanciful ritual and uniform that easily terrified the Negroes. The organization rapidly increased in numbers and, together with a similar society known as the White Camellias (1867) it overawed the whole black population of the South until 1870. Its policy for securing white supremacy was carried to the most extreme lengths and its murders and terrorism grew so numerous and formidable that in 1871 an Act of Congress was passed suppressing it.

The Ku Klux Klan was fully organized, the whole of the South forming its Invisible Empire under a Grand Wizard. Each State was a Realm under a Grand Dragon; a number of counties made a Dominion ruled by a Grand Titan; each county was a Province under a Grand Giant, the Provinces themselves being divided into Dens, each under a Grand Cyclops. Private members were called Ghouls and the minor officials had fantastic titles such as Furies, Goblins, Night Hawks, etc.

In 1915 the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan came into existence at Atlanta, Georgia, and in the hysteria following World War I the movement swept the South. It admitted to membership only native-born, white, Gentile, Protestant Americans and from 1922 until 1925 it controlled elections and politics in several of the Southern States. But its violent views defeated its own ends and by 1927 the society was moribund.

Kudos (kū' dos) (Gr., renown). A slang or colloquial phrase for credit, fame, glory.

Kufic (kū' fik). Ancient Arabic letters; so called from Kufa, a town in the pashalic of Bagdad, noted for expert copyists of the ancient Arabic MSS.

Kufic coins. Mohammedan coins with Kufic or ancient Arabic characters. The first were struck in the eighteenth year of the Hegira (A.D. 638).

Kultur (kul'tur'). The German system of intellectual, moral, æsthetic, economic, and political progress, which is characterized by the subordination of the individual to the State, and through the power of which it was hoped that "kultur" would be imposed on the rest of the world.

It does not mean the same as English culture, which is translated by bildung.

Kulturkampf. In German history, the long and bitter struggle (G<sup>o</sup>. kampf) which took place in the 'seventies of last century between Bismarck and the Vatican, with the idea of ensuring the unity of the new Empire and protecting the authority of its government against outside interference. Many laws were passed against the Catholic hierarchy, but political complications very soon brought about the repeal of the more oppressive, and the Catholics were left practically in their old position.

Kuomintang (kwō' min' tǎng'). A Chinese political party formed by Sun Yat-sen in 1912 on the foundation of the Chinese Republic. A combination of several political groups, it came into power in 1927 under the leadership of General Chiang Kai-shek. The three Chinese words mean "nation," "people," "party" and may be translated as "National Party."

Kurma. See AVATAR.

Kursaal (kur' sal) (Ger. kur, cure, saal, room). A public room or building for the use of visitors, especially at German watering places and health resorts.

Kuru (koo' roo). A noted legendary hero of India, the contests of whose descendants form the subject of two Indian epics. He was a prince of the lunar race, reigning over the country round Delhi.

Kyle (kil). The central district of Ayrshire.

Kyle for a man, Carrick for a coo [cow].

Cunningham for butter, Galloway for woo' [wool].

Kyle, a strong corn-growing soil; Carrick, a wild hilly portion, only fit for feeding cattle; and Cunningham, a rich dairy land.

Kyrie Eleison (ki ri e lī' son) (Gr., "Lord have mercy"). The short petition used in the liturgies of the Eastern and Western Churches, as a response at the beginning of the Mass and in the Anglican Communion Service. Also, the musical setting for this.

Kyrie Society, The (kērl). Founded 1877 for decorating the walls of hospitals, school-rooms, mission-rooms, cottages, etc.; for the cultivation of small open spaces, window gardening, the love of flowers, etc.; and improving the artistic taste of the poorer classes. It was named in memory of John Kyrie (1637-1724), Pope's "Man of Ross." See Ross.

L

L. This letter, the twelfth of the alphabet, in Phœnician and Hebrew represents an ox-goad, lamed, and in the Egyptian hieroglyphic a lioness.

L. for a pound sterling, is the Lat. libra, a pound. In the Roman notation it stands for 50, and with a line drawn above the letter, for 50,000.

LL.D. Doctor of Laws—i.e. both civil and canon. The double L is the plural, as in MSS., the plural of MS. (manuscript), pp., pages, etc. L.S. Lat. locus sigilli, that is, the place for the seal.

L. S. D. Lat. libra (a pound); solidus (a shilling); and denarius (a penny); introduced by the Lombard merchants, from whom also we have Cr. (creditor), Dr. (debtor), bankrupt, do or ditto, etc.

L.S.T. Landing Ship Tank. A form of vessel developed in World War II which was of sufficiently shallow draught to carry its cargo of tanks near enough inshore for them to drive out of the bows, which opened, and get ashore under their own power.

La Belle Sauvage (la bel sō vazh'). The site on the north side of Ludgate Hill occupied by the House of Cassell from 1852 until May 11th, 1941, when the whole area was demolished in an air raid. It took its name from the inn that stood there, noted for the dramatic performances that took place in its courtyard in the 16th and early 17th centuries, and as the starting-place for coaches to the eastern counties in the 18th century, and until the advent of railways. As early as 1530 it appears as "The Belle Savage," and in 1555 as "The Bell Savage" otherwise 'le Bell Savoy.' The inn would seem to have been originally called "The Bell," or "The Bell on the Hoop" (the latter was common as part of inn names) and, at some early date, to have been owned by one "Savage"; for, in a deed enrolled in the Close Rolls of 1453 John Frensh confirms to his mother Joan Frensh all that tenement or inn with its appurtenance called Savages ynn, alias vocat "le Belle on the Hope," in the parish of St. Bridget in Fleet Street.

(Fleet Street at that time extended up Ludgate Hill as far as the Old Bailey).

La Mancha, the Knight of (la man' chá). Don Quixote de la Mancha, the hero of Cervantes' romance Don Quixote. La Mancha, an old province of Spain, is now a part of Ciudad Real.

La-di-da (la' dé da'). A yea-nay sort of fellow, with no backbone; an affected fop with a drawl in his voice. Also used adjectivally, as "in a la-di-da" sort of way.

The phrase was popularized by a song sung by the once-famous Arthur Lloyd, the refrain of which was:—

La-di-da, la-di-do, I'm the pet of all the ladies,
The darlings like to flirt with Captain La-di-da-di-do.

Labarum (lāb' ā rum). The standard borne before the Roman emperors. It consisted of a gilded spear, with an eagle on the top, while from a cross-staff hung a splendid purple streamer, with a gold fringe, adorned with precious stones. Constantine substituted a crown for the eagle, and inscribed in the midst the mysterious monogram. See CROSS.

Labour Party. One of the great political parties of Great Britain. It was founded in 1900 for the express purpose of securing the representation of the working classes in Parliament. At the General Election of 1906 29 out of 50 candidates were successful; in 1924 the first Labour government was formed under Ramsay MacDonald, though it lasted only 9 months.

In 1929 Labour came once again into power; forming a coalition with the Tories in 1931 and itself giving way to a Tory government in 1935. After World War II Labour swept the country in the General Election of 1945, was returned again in 1950 with a majority over all the other parties, and gave way to a Tory government in October 1951.

Labour Day is a legal holiday in the U.S.A. and some provinces of Canada. It is held on the first Monday in September "in honour of the labouring class."

The labourer is worthy of his hire (Luke x. 7). In Latin: Digna canis pabulo. "The dog must be bad indeed that is not worth a bone." Hence the Mosaic law, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn."

The Statute of Labourers. An attempt made in 1349 to fix the rate of wages at which labourers should be compelled to work. It followed the "Black Death," and decreed that the men must work for their former employers, and at the old wages.

Labyrinth (lăb' i rinth). A Greek word of unknown (but probably Egyptian) origin, denoting a mass of buildings or garden walks, so complicated as to puzzle strangers to extricate themselves; a maze. The maze at Hampton Court, formed of high hedges, is a labyrinth on a small scale. The chief labyrinths of antiquity are:—

(1) The Egyptian, by Petesuchis or Thithoes, near the Lake Mœris. It had 3,000 apartments, half of which were underground (1800 B.C.).—Pliny, xxxvi, 13; and Pomponius Mela, i, 9.

(2) The Cretan, by Dædalus, for imprisoning the Minotaur. The only means of finding a way out of it was by help of a skein of thread. (See Virgil: Æneid, v.)

(3) The Cretan conduit, which had 1,000 branches or turnings.

(4) The Lemnian, by the architects Smilis, Rholus, and Theodorus. It had 150 columns, so nicely adjusted that a child could turn them. Vestiges of this labyrinth were still in existence in the time of Pliny.

(5) The labyrinth of Clusium, made by Lars Por-sena, King of Etruria, for his tomb.

(6) The Samian, by Theodorus (540 B.C.). Referred to by Pliny; by Herodotus, ii, 145; by Strabo, x; and by Diodorus Siculus, i.

(7) The labyrinth at Woodstock, built by Henry II to protect Fair Rosamund.

Lac of Rupees. One hundred thousand rupees. The nominal value of the Indian rupee is 2s., and at this rate of exchange a lac of rupees is equivalent to £10,000. Its value varies, however, according to the market value of silver.

Lace. I'll lace your jacket for you, beat you, flog you severely. Perhaps a play on the word lash.

Laced Mutton. See MUTTON.

Tea or coffee laced with spirits, a cup of tea or coffee qualified with brandy or whisky.

Deacon Bearcliff. . . . had his pipe and his teacup the latter being laced with a little spirits.—SCOTT: Guy Mannering, ch. xi.

Lacedæmonians, The. See REGIMENTAL NICK-NAMES.

Lacedæmonian Letter. The Greek ι (iota), the smallest of the letters. See JOT.

Laches (lăsh' iz). A legal term, from the Old French laschesse, meaning negligence, especially any inexcusable delay in making a claim.

Lachesis (lăk' e sis). The Fate who spins life's thread, working into the woof the events destined to occur. See FATE.

Lackadaisical. Affectedly languid, pensive, sentimental. The word is an extension of the old lackadaisy, which, in its turn, is an extended form of lackaday! or alackaday! an exclamation of regret, sorrow, or grief.

Lack-learning or Unlearned Parliament was the name given to the Parliament which met at Coventry in 1404. It was so called because Edward III, in 1372, had directed that no lawyers should be returned to Parliament as members.

Laconic (lă con' ik). Pertaining to Laconia or Sparta; hence very concise and pithy, for the Spartans were noted for their brusque and sententious speech. When Philip of Macedon wrote to the Spartan magistrates, "If I enter Laconia, I will level Lacedæmon to the ground," the ephors sent back the single word, "If." Cæsar's dispatch Veni, vidi, vici (q.v.) and Sir Charles Napier's apocryphal "Peccavi" (q.v.) are well-known examples of laconicisms.

Lacrosse (la kros). A ball game originally played by N. American Indians and now the national game of Canada. The ball is of rubber; it is caught in a net-like racket and thrown through a goal. The playing space between the goals varies from 100 to 150 yards; the goal posts at either end are 6 ft. apart and 6 ft. high. There are twelve players on a side, and the object of the game is to score goals by kicking, striking or carrying the ball on the crosse, in which lies the great art of the game.

Ladas (lă' dās). Alexander's messenger, noted for his swiftness of foot, mentioned by Catullus, Martial, and others.

Ladon (lă' don). The name of the dragon which guarded the apples of the Hesperides (q.v.), also of one of the dogs of Actæon.

Ladrones (la' dronz). The island of thieves; so called, in 1519, by Magellan, on account of the thievish habits of the aborigines.

Lady. Literally "the bread-maker," as lord (q.v.) is "the bread-guarder." A.S. hlæfdige, from hlaf, loaf, and a supposed noun dige, a kneader, connected with Gothic deigan, to knead. The original meaning was simply the female head of the family, the "house-wife."

Ladybird, Ladyfly, or Ladycow. The small red coleopterous insect of the genus Coccinella with black spots, called also Bishop Barnaby (q.v.), and, in Yorkshire, the Cuscow Lady.

Lady Bountiful. The benevolent lady of a village. The character is from Farquhar's Beaux Stratagem (1707).

Lady Chapel. The small chapel east of the altar, or behind the screen of the high altar; dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady Day. March 25th, to commemorate the Annunciation of Our Lady, the Virgin Mary. It used to be called "St. Mary's Day in Lent," to distinguish it from other festivals in honour of the Virgin, which were also, properly speaking, "Lady Days." Until 1752 Lady Day was the legal beginning of the year, and dates between January 1st and that day were shown with the two years, e.g. January 29th, 1648/9, i.e. January 29th, 1649.

Lady-killer. A male flirt; a great favourite with the ladies or one who devotes himself to their conquest.

Lady Margaret Professor. The holder of the Chair of Divinity, founded in 1502, at Cambridge by Lady Margaret Beaufort (1443-1509), the mother of Henry VII, who also founded Christ's (1505) and St. John's Colleges (1508).

The Lady of England and Normandy. The Empress Maud, or Matilda (1102-67), daughter of Henry I of England, and wife of the Emperor Henry V of Germany. The title of Domina Anglorum was conferred upon her by the Council of Winchester, April 7th, 1141. (Rymer: Fædera, i.)

Charlotte M. Tucker (1823-93), a writer for children, used the signature "A.L.O.E.," meaning "A Lady of England."

The Lady of the Lake. In the Arthurian legends, Vivien, the mistress of Merlin. She lived in the midst of an imaginary lake surrounded by knights and damsels. See LANCELOT.

In Scott's poem of this name (1810) the lady is Ellen Douglas, who lived with her father near Loch Katrine.

The Lady of the Lamp. A name given to Florence Nightingale (1820-1910) because she went the rounds of the hospital wards in the Crimea carrying a lighted lamp.

Our Lady of Mercy. A Spanish order of knighthood, instituted in 1218 by James I of Aragon, for the deliverance of Christian captives amongst the Moors. Within the first six years, as many as 400 captives were rescued by these knights.

Our Lady of the Rock. A miraculous image of the Virgin found by the wayside between Salamanca and Ciudad Rodrigo in 1409.

The Lady of Shallott. See SHALLOTT.

Our Lady of the Snows. A fanciful name, given by Kipling in The Five Nations (1903) to Canada.

Lady's Mantle. See ALCHEMILLA.

Lady's Smock. A common name for the Cuckoo-flower or garden cress (Cardamine pratensis); also sometimes applied to the convolvulus, Canterbury bells, and other flowers.

When daisies pied and violets blue
And lady-smocks all silver-white
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men: for thus sings he,
Cuckoo;
Cuckoo, cuckoo: O, word of fear,
Unpleasant to a married ear!

Love's Labour's Lost, v, 2.

So-called because the flowers are supposed to resemble linen exposed to bleach on the grass.

The Ladies' Mile. A stretch of the road on the north side of the Serpentine, Hyde Park, much favoured in Victorian days by "equestriennes." The Coaching and Four-in-Hand Clubs held their meets there in spring.

Ladies' Plate. Formerly, a horse-race in which the riders were women.

Naked Lady. See NAKED.

Læstrygonēs. See LESTRIGONS.

Lætare Sunday (læ ta' ri) (i.e. Rejoice Sunday, Lat.). The fourth Sunday in Lent, so called from the first word of the Introit, which is from Is. lxvi, 10: "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her all ye that love her." It is on this day that the Pope blesses the Golden Rose.

It is also known as Mothering Sunday, from the indulgence granted by Mother Church at mid-Lent, or to the old custom of visiting the cathedral or mother church on that day.

Lag. An old English slang term for a convict, especially one under sentence of transportation. An old lag was a phrase used in Australia to describe a convict who had served his sentence, or a ticket-of-leave man.

Lagado (lā ga' dō). In Swift's Gulliver's Travels, the capital of Balnibarbi, celebrated for its grand academy of projectors, where the scholars spend their time in such projects as making pincushions from softened rocks, extracting sunbeams from cucumbers, and converting ice into gunpowder.

Lagan, or Ligan (lāg' ān, lig' ān). Goods thrown overboard, but marked by a buoy in order to be found again. An Anglo-Fr. word, probably connected with Icel. lagnir, a sea-net.

Lagniappe (lānyāp'). A phrase from the Southern States of U.S.A. meaning a sort of token gift given to a customer with his purchase, by way of compliment or as good measure. The word comes from the Am.-Spanish la ñapa, the gift.

Laid. The term used in the paper trade for the ribbed appearance in papers, due to manufacture on a mould or by a dandy on which the wires are laid side by side instead of being woven transversely.

Lais (lā' is). The name of two celebrated Greek courtezans; the earlier was the most beautiful woman of Corinth, and lived at the time of the Peloponnesian War. The beauty of Lais the Second so excited the jealousy of the Thessalonian women that they picked her to death with their bodkins. She was the contemporary and rival of Phryne and sat to Apelles as a model. Demosthenes tells us that Lais sold her favours for 10,000 (Attic) drachmæ (about £300).

Laissez faire (lā zā fār) (Fr., let alone). The principle of allowing things to look after themselves, especially the policy of non-interference by Government in commercial affairs. The phrase comes from the motto of the mid-18th century "Physiocratic" school of French economists, Laissez faire, laissez passer (let us alone, let us have free circulation for our goods), who wished to have all customs duties abolished and thus anticipated the later Free-traders.

Lake Dwellings. Prehistoric human dwellings on certain lakes in Switzerland, Ireland, etc., built on piles at their shallow edges. The remains found in various examples show that they date from the Neolithic and early metallic periods.

Lake School, The. The name applied in derision by the Edinburgh Review to Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey, who resided in the Lake District of Cumberland and Westmorland, and sought inspiration in the simplicity of nature; it was also applied to the poets who followed them. Charles Lamb, Charles Lloyd, and "Christopher North" (John Wilson) are sometimes placed among the "Lake Poets" or "Lakers."

Lakin. By'r lakin. An oath, meaning "By our Ladykin," or Little Lady, where little does not refer to size, but is equivalent to dear.

By'r lakin, a parlous [perilous] fear.—A Midsummer Night's Dream, iii, 1.

Laksmi or Lakshmi. One of the consorts of the Hindu god Vishnu, and mother of Kama (q.v.). She is goddess of beauty, wealth, and pleasure, and the Ramayana describes her as springing, like Venus, from the foam of the sea.

Lalla Rookh (tulip cheek). In Thomas Moore's poem of that name (1817), the supposed daughter of Aurunzebe, Emperor of Delhi, betrothed to Aliris, Sultan of Lesser Bucharla.

Lama. The Tibetan word blama (b silent) for a Buddhist priest or monk. The Grand Lama or Dalai Lama (the Sacred Lama) was the ruler of Tibet, under the more or less nominal suzerainty of China. In 1910 he fled to India before an invading Chinese army, was deposed, and Tibet has since been in an unsettled state. The Teshu, or Tashi, Lama is the chief lama of Mongolia. The religion of both Mongolia and Tibet is called Lamaism and is a corrupt form of Buddhism. The priests are housed in great monasteries known as lamaseries.

Lamb. In Christian art, an emblem of the Redeemer, in allusion to John i, 29, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

It is also the attribute of St. Agnes, St. Genevieve, St. Catherine, and St. Regina. John the Baptist either carries a lamb or is accompanied by one. It is also introduced symbolically to represent any of the "types" of Christ; as Abraham, Moses, and so on.

Lamb-ale. The "ale," or merry-making formerly given by the farmer when his lambing was over. Cp. CHURCH-ALE.

Lamb's wool. A beverage consisting of the juice of apples roasted with spiced ale.

The pulpe of the roasted apples, in number foure or five . . . mixed in a wine quart of faire water, labour'd together untill it come to be as apples, and ale, which we call lambes wool.—Johnson's Gerard, p. 1460.

The Vegetable, Tartarian, or Scythian Lamb. The woolly rootstalk of a polypodiaceous fern (Dicksonia barometz), found in the Far East, and supposed in mediæval times to be a kind of hybrid animal and vegetable. The down is used in India for stanching wounds.

And there groweth a manner of Fruyt, as though it weren Gowrdes; and whan thei ben ripe, men kутten hem a to, and men fynden with inne a lyttle Best, in Flessche, in Bon and Blode, as though it were a lyttle Lomb, withouten Wolle. And men eten bothe the Frut and the Best; and that is a gret Marveyll.—Travels of Sir John Mandeville, Kt. (Mid-14th cent.).

Lambeth. A London district on the South side of the River.

Lambeth Palace. The official residence of the archbishops of Canterbury since 1197. The palace was built by Hubert Walter, Archbishop of Canterbury, 1193-1205. The followers of Wat Tyler raided the palace on June 14th, 1381, destroyed many valuable books and papers and ended by beheading the archbishop, John of Sudbury. The library and chapel were damaged in an air-raid in 1941.

Lambeth Conferences of Church of England bishops from all over the world have been held at intervals since 1867.

Lambeth Walk is a thoroughfare in Lambeth leading from Broad Street to the Lambeth Road. It gave its name to a Cockney dance that became immensely popular in the early 1940s, introduced by Lupino Lane in a show entitled "Me and my Gal."

Lambert's Day, St. September 17th. St. Lambert, a native of Maestricht, lived in the 7th century.

Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon St. Lambert's day.

Richard II, i, 1.

Lamia (lä' mi a). A female phantom, whose name was used by the Greeks and Romans as a bugbear to children. She was a Libyan queen beloved by Jupiter, but robbed of her offspring by the jealous Juno; and in consequence she vowed vengeance against all children, whom she delighted to entice and devour.

. . . a troop of nice wantons, fair women, that like to Lamiaë had faces like angels, eies like stars, brestes like the golden front in the Hesperides, but from the middle downwards their shapes like serpents.—GREENE: A Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592).

Witches in the Middle Ages were called Lamie, and Keats's poem Lamia (1820), which relates how a bride when recognized returned to her original serpent form, represents one of the many superstitions connected with the race. Keats's story came (through Burton) from Philostratus' De Vita Apollonii, Bk. iv. In Burton's rendering, the sage Apollonius, on the wedding night—found her out to be a serpent, a lamia . . . When she saw herself descried, she wept, and desired Apollonius to be silent, but he would not be moved, and thereupon she, plate, house, and all that was in it, vanished in an instant; many thousands took notice of this fact, for it was done in the midst of Greece.—Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. iii, sect. ii, memb. i, subsect. i.

Lammas Day (läm' as). August 1st; one of the regular quarter days in Scotland, and in England the day on which, in Anglo-Saxon times, the first-fruits were offered. So called from A.S. hlafmæsse, the loaf-mass. See also LLEW LLAW GYFFES.

At latter Lammas. A humorous way of saying "Never."

Lamourette's Kiss (la moo ret'). A term used in France (baiser Lamourette) to denote an insincere or ephemeral reconciliation. On July 7th, 1792, the Abbé Lamourette induced the different factions of the Legislative Assembly to lay aside their differences and give the kiss of peace; but the reconciliation was unsound and very short-lived.

Lamp. The Lamp of Heaven. The moon. Milton calls the stars "lamps."

Why shouldst thou . . .
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That Nature hung in heaven, and filled their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mislead and lonely traveller?
Comus, 200-204.

The Lamp of Phœbus. The sun. Phœbus is the mythological personification of the sun.

The Lamp of the Law. Irnerius the Italian jurist was so called. He was the first to lecture on the Pandects of Justinian after their discovery at Amalfi in 1137.

Sepulchral lamps. The Romans are said to have preserved lamps in some of their sepulchres for centuries, and many legends are told of their never dying. In the papacy of Paul III (1534-40) one was found in the tomb of Tullia (Cicero's daughter), which had been shut up for 1,550 years, and at the dissolution of the monasteries a lamp was found which is said to have been burning 1,200 years. Two are preserved in Leyden museum.

Nor can thy flame immortal burn
Like monumental fires within an urn.

T. STANLEY (1625-78).

It smells of the lamp. Said of a literary composition that bears manifest signs of midnight study; one that is over-laboured. In Lat. olet lucernam.

Lampadion (lām pā' di on). The received name of a lively, petulant courtesan, in the later Greek comedy.

Lampoon. A sarcastic or scurrilous personal satire, so called from Fr. lampoons, let us drink, which formed part of the refrain of a 17th-century French drinking song.

These personal and scandalous libels, carried to excess in the reign of Charles II, acquired the name of lampoons from the burden sung to them: "Lampone, lampone, camerada lampone"—Guzzler, guzzler, my fellow guzzler.

Lampos and Phæton (lām' pos, fā' ton). The two steeds of Aurora. One of Actæon's dogs was also called Lampos.

Lancasterian (län kās tēr' i än). Of or pertaining to Joseph Lancaster (1778-1838), an educational reformer who introduced the monitorial system into schools.

Lancastrian (län kās' tri än). An adherent of the Lancastrian line of kings, or one of these kings (Henry IV, V, VI), who were descended from John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster third son of Edward III, as opposed to the Yorkists, who sprang from Edmund, Duke of York, Edward III's fourth son. The Lancastrian badge was the red rose and the Yorkist the white.

Lance. An attribute in Christian art of St. Matthew and St. Thomas, the apostles; also of St. Longinus, St. George, St. Adalbert, St. Barbara, St. Michael, and several others.

A free lance. One who acts on his own judgment, and not from party motives; a journalist who is not definitely attached to, or on the salaried staff of, any one paper.

The reference is to the Free Companies of the Middle Ages, called in Italy condottieri, and in France compagnies grandes, which were free and willing to sell themselves to any master and any cause, good or bad.

Lance-corporal. A private soldier acting as a corporal, usually as a first step to being promoted to that rank. Similarly, a lance-sergeant is a corporal who performs the duties of a sergeant on probation.

Lance-knight. An old term for a foot-soldier; a corruption of lansquenet or lance-quet, a German foot-soldier.

Lancers. The dance so called, an amplified kind of quadrille, was introduced by Laborde from Paris in 1836. It is in imitation of military evolutions in which men used lances.

Lancelot du Lac. One of the earliest romances of the Round Table (1494).

Sir Lancelot was the son of King Ban of Brittany, but was stolen in infancy by Vivienne, the Lady of the Lake (q.v.); she plunged with the babe into the lake (whence the cognomen of du Lac), and when her protégé was grown into man's estate, presented him to King Arthur. Sir Lancelot went in search of the Grail (q.v.), and twice caught sight of it. Though always represented in the Arthurian romances as the model of chivalry, bravery, and fidelity, Sir Lancelot was the adulterous lover of Guinevere, wife of King Arthur, his friend, and it was through this love that the war, which resulted in the disruption of the Round Table and the death of Arthur, took place.

Land. The Land of Beulah (Is. lxii, 4). In Pilgrim's Progress it is that land of heavenly joy where the pilgrims tarry till they are summoned to enter the Celestial City.

The Land of Cakes. See CAKE.

The Land of Nod. To go to the land of Nod is to go to bed. There are many similar puns, and more in French than in English.

The Land o' the Leal. The land of the faithful or blessed; a Scotticism for a hypothetical land of happiness, loyalty, and virtue, hence heaven, as in Lady Nairn's song—

I'm wearin' awa'
To the land o' the leal.

The Land of Promise, or the Promised Land. Canaan, which God promised to give to Abraham for his obedience. See Ex. xii, 25, Deut. ix, 28, etc.

The Land of Steady Habits. A name given to the State of Connecticut, which was the original stronghold of Presbyterianism in America and the home of the notorious Blue Laws (q.v.).

See how the land lies. See whether things are propitious or otherwise; see in what state the land is that we have to travel over.

Land-damn. A term of uncertain meaning and origin used (possibly inadvertently) by Shakespeare and, apparently, by no one else.

You are abus'd, and by some putter-on
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Winter's Tale, ii, 1.

Land-hunger. A craving for the ownership of land; also the state in which the progress of a community is retarded because it has not sufficient land with which to support itself.

Land League. An association of Irish extremists formed in Ireland in 1879 to agitate for the reduction, or abolition, of rent, introduction of peasant proprietorship, and the settlement of the land question generally.

Land-loupers, vagrants. Louper is from the Dutch looper, to run. Persons who fly the country for crime or debt. Louper, loper, loafer, and luffer are varieties of the German laufer, a vagrant, a runner.

Land-lubber. An awkward or inexpert sailor on board ship.

Land Office Business. The U.S. government in the last century set up offices for the allotment of Government land. The rush of citizens to claim land at these offices led to the use of the above phrase, meaning a tremendous amount of business, or a rush of business.

Land-slide. Used metaphorically of a crushing defeat at the polls, or of a complete reversal of the votes.

Landau (län dö). A four-wheeled carriage, the top of which may be thrown back; first made at Landau, in Bavaria, in the 18th century.

Landscape. A country scene, or a picture representing this. The word comes from Dutch scape being connected with our shape, and the A.S. scap-an, to shape, to give a form to. The old word in English was Landskip.

Father of landscape gardening. André Le-nôtre (1613-1700).

Landwehr (lând' vâ), in Germany and Switzerland, troops composed of men in civil life who have had an army training and are liable to be called to the colours in times of national emergency.

Lane. 'Tis a long lane that has no turning. Every calamity has an ending.

Hope peeps from a cloud on our squad,
Whose beams have been long in deep mourning;
'Tis a lane, let me tell you, my lad,
Very long that has never a turning.
PETER PINDAR: Great Cry and Little Wool, epist. 1.

Lang Syne (Scots, long since). In the olden time, in days gone by.

Auld Lang Syne, usually attributed to Robert Burns, is really a new version by him of a very much older song: in Watson's Collection (1711) it is attributed to Francis Sempiell (d. 1682), but it is probably even older. Burns says in a letter to Thomson, "It is the old song of the olden times, which has never been in print. . . . I took it down from an old man's singing," and in another letter, "Light be the turf on the heaven-inspired poet who composed this glorious fragment."

Language. Language was given to men to conceal their thoughts. See SPEECH.

The three primitive languages. The Persians say that Arabic, Persian, and Turkish are three primitive languages. Legend has it that the serpent that seduced Eve spoke Arabic, the most suasive language in the world; that Adam and Eve spoke Persian, the most poetic of all languages; and that the angel Gabriel spoke Turkish, the most menacing.

Langue d'oc; langue d'oïl (lang dok; lang doil). The former is the old Provençal language, spoken on the south of the River Loire; the latter Northern French, spoken in the Middle Ages on the north of that river, the original of modern French. So called because our "yes" was in Provençal oc (from Latin hoc illud) and in the northern speech oïl (oui).

Lansquenet. See LANCE-KNIGHT.

Lantedo. See ADELANTADO.

Lantern. In Christian art, the attribute of St. Gudule and St. Hugh.

A la lanterne! Hang him from the lamp-post! A cry and custom introduced into Paris during the French revolution. Many of the street lamps in old Paris were hung from iron brackets very suitable for the purpose.

Lantern jaws. Cheeks so thin and hollow that one may almost see daylight through them, as light shows through the horn of a lantern.

The feast of lanterns. A popular Chinese festival, celebrated at the first full moon of each year. Tradition says that the daughter of a famous mandarin one evening fell into a lake. The father and his neighbours went with lanterns to look for her, and happily she was rescued. In commemoration thereof a festival was ordained, and it grew in time to be the celebrated "feast of lanterns."

Lantern Land. The land of literary charlatans, pedantic graduates in arts, doctors, professors, prelates, and so on ridiculed as "Lanterns" by Rabelais (with a side allusion to the divines assembled in conference at the Council of Trent) in his Pantagruel, v, 33, Cp. CITY OF LANTERNS.

Laocoon (lā ok' ō on). A son of Priam and priest of Apollo of Troy, famous for the tragic fate of himself and his two sons, who were crushed to death by serpents while he was sacrificing to Poseidon, in consequence of his having offended Apollo. The group representing these three in their death agony, now in the Vatican, was discovered in 1506, on the Esquiline Hill (Rome). It is a single block of marble, and is attributed to Agesandrus, Athenodorus, and Polydorus of the School of Rhodes in the 2nd century B.C. It has been restored.

Lessing called his treatise on the limits of poetry and the plastic arts (1766) Laocoon because he uses the famous group as the peg on which to hang his dissertation.

Since I have, as it were, set out from the Laocoon, and several times return to it, I have wished to give it a share also in the title.—Preface.

Laodamia (lā ō dām i' ā). The wife of Protesilaus, who was slain before Troy. She begged to be allowed to converse with her dead husband for only three hours, and her request was granted; when the respite was over, she voluntarily accompanied the dead hero to the shades. Wordsworth has a poem on the subject (1815).

Laodicean (lā ō di sē' ān). One indifferent to religion, caring little or nothing about the matter, like the Christians of that church, mentioned in the book of Revelation (iii, 14-18).

Lapithæ (lăp' i thē). A people of Thessaly, noted in Greek legend for their defeat of the Centaurs at the marriage-feast of Hippodamia, when the latter were driven out of Pelion. The contest was represented on the Parthenon, the Theseum at Athens, the Temple of Apollo at Basso, and on numberless vases.

Lapsus Linguae (lăp' sūs ling' gwē) (Lat.). A slip of the tongue, a mistake in uttering a word, an imprudent word inadvertently spoken.

We have also adopted the Latin phrases lapsus calami (a slip of the pen), and lapsus memoriae (a slip of the memory).

Laputa (lă pū' tā). The flying island inhabited by scientific quacks, and visited by Gulliver in his "travels". These dreamy philosophers were so absorbed in their speculations that they employed attendants called "flappers," to flap them on the mouth and ears with a blown bladder when their attention was to be called off from "high things" to vulgar mundane matters.

Lapwing. Shakespeare refers to two peculiarities of this bird: (1) to allure persons from its nest, it flies away and cries loudest when farthest from its nest; and (2) the young birds run from their shells with part thereof still sticking to their heads.

Far from her nest the lapwing cries away.

Comedy of Errors, iv, 2.

This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.
—Hamlet, v, 2.

The first peculiarity, referred to in Ray's Proverbs, as well as by other dramatists and also by Shakespeare himself in other passages, made the lapwing a symbol of insincerity; and the second that of a forward person, one who is scarcely hatched.

Giov.: If I live,

I'll charge the French foe in the very front

Of all my troops, the foremost man.

Fran. de Méd.: What! What!

Giov.: And will not bid my soldiers up, and follow,
But bid them follow me.

Brach.: Forward lapwing!

He flies with the shell on his head.

WEBSTER: The White Devil, ii, 1.

Lar. See LARES.

Larboard. See STARBOARD.

Larder. A place for keeping bacon (Lat. lardum), from O.Fr. lardier or lardoir, a storeroom for bacon. This shows that swine were the chief animals salted and preserved in olden times.

The Douglas Larder. The English garrison and all its provisions in Douglas Castle, Lanark, seized by "the Good" Lord James Douglas, in 1307.

He caused all the barrels containing flour, meat, wheat, and malt to be knocked in pieces, and their contents mixed on the floor; then he staved the great hogheads of wine and ale, and mixed the liquor with the stores; and last of all, he killed the prisoners, and flung the dead bodies among this disgusting heap, which his men called, in derision of the English, "The Douglas Larder."—SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, ix.

Robin Hood's Larder. See OAKS.

Wallace's Larder is very similar to Douglas's. It consisted of the dead bodies of the garrison of Ardrrossan, in Ayrshire, cast into the dungeon keep. The castle was surprised by Wallace in the reign of Edward I.

Lares and Penates. Used as a collective expression for home, and for those personal belongings that make home homely and individual. In ancient Rome the lares (sing. lar) were the household gods, usually deified ancestors or heroes; the penates were also guardian deities of the household (and the State), but were more in the nature of personifications of the natural powers, their duty being to bring wealth and plenty rather than to protect and ward off danger. The Lar familiaris was the spirit of the founder of the house, which never left it, but accompanied his descendants in all their changes.

Large. A vulgarism for excess, as That's all very fine and large, that's a trifle steep, "coming it a bit thick," etc.; To talk large, to brag, "swank" in conversation, talk big; a large order, an exaggerated claim or statement, a difficult undertaking.

To sail large. A nautical phrase for to sail with the wind not straight astern, but "abaft the beam."

Set at large. At liberty. It is a French phrase; prendre la large is to stand out to sea, or occupy the main ocean, so as to be free to move. Similarly, to be set at large is to be placed free in the wide world.

Lark. A spree or frolic. The word is a modern adaptation (about 1800) of the dialectal lake, sport, from M.E. laik, play, and A.S. lac, contest. Skylark, as in skylarking about, etc., is a still more modern extension. Hood plays on the two words—for the name of the bird, the old laverock, A.S. laferce, is in no way connected with this—in his well-known lines:

So, Pallas, take thine owl away
And let us have a lark instead!

When the sky falls we shall catch larks. See SKY.

Larrikin (lă' ri kin). An Australian term dating from the early 19th century used to describe a young ruffian given to brutal lawlessness. These lads formed a recognized stratum of society in the country. They flourished particularly in the 1880s, had their own language and their own style of dress which, oddly enough, was recognizable by its excessive neatness and severe colours. Larrikins still exist; they are obviously distant relatives of the Glasgow corner-boy who spends all his money on dress and carries a razor in his pocket. They are also known as pushers, and currency lads.

Larvæ. A name among the ancient Romans for malignant spirits and ghosts. The larva or ghost of Caligula was often seen (according to Suetonius) in his palace.

[Fear] sometimes representeth strange apparitions, as their fathers and grandfathers ghosts, risen out of their graves, and in their winding-sheets: and to others it sometimes sheweth Larves, Hobgoblins, Robin-good-fellows, and such other Bug-beares and Chimæraes.—Florio's Montaigne, I, xvii.

Lascar. An East Indian sailor employed on European vessels. The natives of the East Indies call camp-followers lascars. (Hindu lashkar, a soldier.)

Last. Last Light. See FIRST LIGHT.

Last Man, The. Charles I was so called by the Parliamentarians, meaning that he would be the last king of Great Britain. His son, Charles II, was called The Son of the Last Man.

Last of the Barons, The. Another name given to Warwick, the King-maker (q.v.).

Last of the Fathers, The. St. Bernard (1091-1153), Abbot of Clairvaux.

Last of the Goths, The. Roderick, who was the last of the kings of the Visigoths in Spain, and died in 711. Southey has a tale in blank verse on him.

Last of the Greeks, The. The general, Philopœmen of Arcadia (253-183 B.C.).

Last of the Knights, The. The Emperor Maximilian I (1459-1519).

Last of the Romans. A title, or sobriquet, given to a number of historical characters, among whom are—

Marcus Junius Brutus (85-42 B.C.), one of the murderers of Cæsar.

Caius Cassius Longinus (d. 42 B.C.), so called by Brutus.

Stilicho, the Roman general under Theodosius.

Aetius, the general who defended the Gauls against the Franks and other barbarians, and defeated Attila near Châlons in 451. So called by Procopius.

François Joseph Terasse Desbillons (1711-89), a French Jesuit; so called from the elegance and purity of his Latin.

Pope called Congreve Ultimus Romanorum, and the same title was conferred on Dr. Johnson, Horace Walpole, and C. J. Fox.

Last of the Saxons, The. King Harold (1022-66), who was defeated and slain at the Battle of Hastings.

Last Supper. Leonardo da Vinci's famous picture of this was painted on a wall of the refectory of the convent of Santa Maria delle Grazie, Milan, in 1494-97. The artist varied the normal tempera with a formula of his own which was not a success, hence the painting wore badly with time. Although the refectory was reduced to ruins by Allied bombs in August, 1943, the wall on which the Last Supper is painted remained practically unharmed—the picture itself quite undamaged. It is now hermetically sealed behind glass and thermostatically controlled to prevent further deterioration.

Last of the Tribunes, The. Cola di Rienzi (1314-54), who led the Roman people against the barons.

Last of the Troubadours, The. Jacques Jasmin, of Gascony (1798-1864).

Last Words. See DYING SAYINGS.

La Tene (la tăn), or The Shallows is a site at the eastern end of the Lake of Neuchâtel, Switzerland, where extensive remains of the Second Iron Age have been found. It was discovered when the level of the lake was lowered, and a number of weapons, ornaments, B.D.—18 pieces of jewellery, etc., from about 550 B.C. until the Christian era were brought to light.

Lateran (lăt'e rân). The ancient palace of the Laterani, which was appropriated by Nero and later given by the Emperor Constantine to the popes. Fable derives the name from lateo, to hide, and rana, a frog, and accounts for it by saying that Nero once vomited a frog covered with blood, which he believed to be his own progeny, and had it hidden in a vault. The palace built on its site was called the "Lateran," or the palace of the hidden frog.

Lateran Council. Name given to each of the five œcumenical councils held in the Lateran Church at Rome. They are (1) 1123; held under Calixtus II; it confirmed the Concordat of Worms; (2) 1139, when Innocent II condemned Anacletus II and Arnold of Brescia; (3) 1179, under Alexander III; it was concerned with the election of popes; (4) 1215, when Innocent III condemned the Albigenses; and (5) 1512-17, under Julius II and Leo X, when the Canons of the Council of Pisa were abrogated.

The locality in Rome so called contains the Lateran palace, the Piazza, and the Basilica of St. John Lateran. The Basilica is the Pope's cathedral church. The palace (once a residence of the popes) is now a museum.

Lateran Treaty, a treaty concluded between the Holy See and the Kingdom of Italy in 1929, granting the Pope jurisdiction over territory on the right bank of the Tiber, to be known as Vatican City. Thus ended the sixty-years' quarrels between the Papacy and the State, and the "Roman Question" was finally answered.

St. John Lateran is called the Mother and Head of all Churches. It occupies part of the site of the palace, which was escheated to the Crown through treason, and given to the Church by the Emperor Constantine.

Lathe. An old division of a county, containing a number of hundreds. The term is now confined to Kent, which is divided into five *lathe*s. In Sussex similar county divisions are called rapes.

Spenser, in his Description of Ireland (1596), uses lathe or lath for the division of a hundred:—

If all that tything failed, then all that lath was charged for that tything; and if the lath failed, then all that hundred was demanded for them [i.e. turbulent fellows], and if the hundred, then the shire.

Latin. The language spoken by the ancient inhabitants of Latium, in Italy, and by the ancient Romans. Alba Longa was head of the Latin League, and, as Rome was a colony of Alba Longa, it is plain to see how the Roman tongue was Latin.

The tale is that the name Latium is from lateo, to lie hid, and was so called because Saturn lay hid there, when he was driven out of heaven by the gods.

According to Roman tradition the Latini were the aborigines, and Romulus and Remus were descended from Lavinia, daughter of their king, Latinus (q.v.).

The earliest known specimen of the Latin language is an inscription of the 5th century B.C. or even earlier, found in the Forum in 1899 on a pyramidal stone. This, unfortunately, was broken and the upper half missing; as the lines were written alternately from the bottom upwards and the top downwards, the meaning of the inscription cannot be ascertained.

The fragment of a hymn of the Arval Brethren, formerly thought to be very ancient, dates only from the early part of the 3rd cent. A.D. The hymn itself, of which this is a corrupt form, is of very great antiquity, but the tablet is comparatively modern. It was discovered in 1778 in the grove of the Dea Dia, five miles from Rome on the Via Campana.

Classical Latin. The Latin of the best authors of the Golden or Augustan Age (about 75 B.C. to A.D. 145), as Livy, Tacitus, and Cicero (prose), Horace, Virgil, and Ovid (poets).

Dog Latin. See DOG-LATIN.

Late Latin. The period which followed the Augustan Age, to about A.D. 600; it includes the Church Fathers.

Low Latin. Mediæval Latin, mainly early French, Italian, Spanish, and so on.

Middle, or Mediæval, Latin. Latin from the 6th to the 16th century, both inclusive. In this Latin, prepositions frequently supply the cases of nouns.

Thieves' Latin. Cant or jargon employed as a secret language by rogues and vagabonds.

The Latin Church. The Western Church, in contradistinction to the Greek or Eastern Church.

The Latin cross. Formed thus: †. The Greek cross has four equal arms, thus: +.

The Latin races. The peoples the basis of whose language is Latin; i.e. the Italians, Spanish, Portuguese, French, Rumanians, etc.

Latinus (lā tī' nus). Legendary king of the Latini, the ancient inhabitants of Latium. See LATIN. According to Virgil, he opposed Æneas on his first landing, but subsequently formed an alliance with him, and gave him his daughter, Lavinia, in marriage. Turnus, King of the Rutuli, declared that Lavinia had been betrothed to him; the issue was decided by single combat, and Æneas being victor, obtained Lavinia for his wife and became by her the ancestor of Romulus, the mythical founder of Rome.

Latitudinarians (lāt i tū di nār' i anz). A Church of England party in the time of Charles II, opposed both to the High Church party and to the Puritans. The term is now applied to those persons who attach little importance to dogma and what are called orthodox doctrines.

Latium. See LATIN.

Latona (lā tō' ná). The Roman name of the Greek Leto, mother by Jupiter of Apollo and Diana. Milton, in one of his sonnets, refers to the legend that when she knelt with her infants in arms by a fountain in Delos to quench her thirst, some Lycian clowns insulted her and were turned into frogs.

As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs
Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny,
Which after held the sun and moon in fee.

Latris and Dulia (lāt' rī a, dū' lī a). Greek words adopted by the Roman Catholics; the former to express that supreme reverence and adoration which is offered to God alone; and the latter, that secondary reverence and adoration which is offered to saints. Latris is from the Greek suffix -latreia, worship, as in our idolatry; dulia is the reverence of a doulos or slave. Hyperdulia is the special reverence paid to the Virgin Mary.

Latter-day Saints. See MORMONISM.

Lattice. See RED LATTICE.

Laugh. He laughs best that laughs last. A game's not finished till it's won. In Ray's Collection (1742) is "Better the last smile than the first laughter," and the French have the proverb Il rit bien qui rit le dernier.

It's no laughing matter. It's really serious; it's no subject for merriment.

Laugh and grow fat. An old saw, expressive of the wisdom of keeping a cheerful mind. One of the works of Tylor, the Water Poet, has the title Laugh and be Fat (about 1625), and in Trapp's Commentaries (1647), on 2 Thess. iii, 11, he says, "Whose whole life is to eat and drink . . . and laugh themselves fat."

To have the laugh of one. To be able to make merry at another's expense, generally to that other's surprise and confusion.

To laugh in one's sleeve. See SLEEVE.

To laugh on the wrong, or the other side of one's mouth. To be made to feel vexation and annoyance after mirth or satisfaction; to be bitterly disappointed; to cry.

To laugh out of court. To cover with ridicule and so treat as not worth considering.

To laugh to scorn. To treat with the utmost contempt.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, they shake the head.—Ps. xxii, 7.

Laughing Philosopher. Democritus of Abdera (5th cent. B.C.), who viewed with supreme contempt the feeble powers of man. Cp. WEEPING PHILOSOPHER.

Laughing-stock. A butt for jokes.

Launcelot. See LANCELOT.

Launfal, Sir (lawn' fal). One of the Knights of the Round Table. His story is told in a metrical romance written by Thomas Chestre in the reign of Henry VI.

Laura. The girl of this name immortalized by Petrarch is generally held to have been Laure de Noves, who was born at Avignon in 1308, was married in 1325 to Hugues de Sede, and died of the plague in 1348, the mother of eleven children. It was Petrarch's first sight of her, in the church of St. Clara, Avignon, on April 6th, 1327 (exactly 21 years before her death) that, he says, made him a poet.

Laura (Gr. laura), an alley. An aggregation of separate cells under the control of a superior. In monasteries the monks live under one roof; in lauras they live each in his own cell apart; but on certain occasions they assemble and meet together, sometimes for a meal, and sometimes for a religious service.

Laureate, Poet. See POET LAUREATE.

Laurel. The Greeks gave a wreath of laurels to the victor in the Pythian games, but the victor in the Olympic games had a wreath of wild olives, in the Nemean games a wreath of green parsley, and in the Isthmian games a wreath of dry parsley or green pine-leaves.

The ancients believed that laurel communicated the spirit of prophecy and poetry. Hence the custom of crowning the pythoness and poets, and of putting laurel leaves under one's pillow to acquire inspiration. Another superstition was that the bay laurel was antagonistic to the stroke of lightning; but Sir Thomas Browne, in his Vulgar Errors, tells us that Vicomereatus proves from personal knowledge that this is by no means true.

Laurel, in modern times, is a symbol of victory and peace, and of excellence in literature and the arts. St. Gudule, in Christian art, carries a laurel crown.

Laurin (law' rin). The dwarf-king in the German folk-legend Laurin, or Der Kleine Rosengarten. He possesses a magic ring, girdle, and cap, and is attacked in his rose-garden, which no one may enter on pain of death, by Dietrich of Bern. The poem belongs to the late 13th century, and is attributed to Heinrich von Ofterdingen.

Lavender. The earliest form of the word is Med. Lat. livendula, and it is probably, like our livid, from livere, to make bluish; as, however, the plant has for centuries been used by laundresses for scenting linen, and in connexion with the bath, later forms of the word are associated with lavare, to wash. The modern botanical name is Lavandula. It is a token of affection.

He from his lass him lavender hath sent,
Showing his love and doth requital crave.

DRAYTON: Eclogue.

Laid up in lavender. Taken great care of, laid away, as things are put in lavender to keep off moths.

The poore gentleman paises so deere for the lavender it is laid up in, that if it lies long at the broker's house he seems to buy his apparel twice.—GREENE: A Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592).

Lavinia (läv in' i ä). Daughter of Latinus (q.v.), betrothed to Turnus, King of the Rutuli. When Æneas landed in Italy, Latinus made an alliance with the Trojan hero, and promised to give him Lavinia to wife. This brought on a war between Turnus and Æneas, which was decided by single combat, in which Æneas was victor (Virgil: Æneid, vi.).

Shakespeare gives the name to the daughter of Titus Andronicus in the play of that name.

Lavolta (la vol' tà) (Ital., the turn). A lively dance, in which was a good deal of jumping or capering, whence its name. Troilus says, "I cannot sing, nor heel the high lavolt!" (Troilus and Cressida, iv, 4). It originated in the 16th century in Provence or Italy, and is thus described:—

A lofty jumping or a leaping round,

Where arm in arm two dancers are entwined,
And whirl themselves with strict embraces bound,
And still their feet an anapest do sound.

SIR JOHN DAVIES: The Orchestra (1594).

Law. In-laws. A way of referring to one's relations by marriage—mother-in-law, sisters-in-law, etc. In-law is short for in Canon law, the reference being to the degrees of affinity within which marriage is allowed or prohibited.

Law-calf. A bookseller's term for a special kind of binding in plain sheep or calf used largely for law-books.

Gentlemen who had no briefs to show carried under their arms goodly octavos, with a red label behind, and that underdone-pie-crust-coloured cover, which is technically known as "law calf."—DICKENS: Pickwick Papers, ch. xxxiv.

Law Latin. The debased Latin used in legal documents. Cp. DOG LATIN.

Law Lords. Members of the House of Lords who are qualified to deal with the judicial business of the House, i.e. the Lord High Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and such peers as are holding or have held high judicial office.

Possession is nine points of the law. See NINE.

Quips of the law. See CEPOLA.

The laws of the Medes and Persians. Unalterable laws.

Now, O king . . . sign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the law of the Medes and Persians which altereth not.—DAN. vi, 8.

To give one law. A sporting term "law," meaning the chance of saving oneself. Thus a hare or a stag is allowed "law"—i.e. a certain start before any hound is permitted to attack it; and a tradesman allowed "law" is one to whom time is given to "find his legs."

To have the law of one. To take legal proceedings against him.

To lay down the law. To speak in a dictatorial manner; to give directions or order in an offensive and high-handed way.

To take the law into one's own hands. To try to secure satisfaction by force; to punish, reward, etc., entirely on one's own responsibility without obtaining the necessary authority.

Law's Bubble. See MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE.

Lawless Parliament, The. Another name for the Unlearned Parliament (q.v.).

Lawn. Fine, thin cambric, used for the rochets of Anglican bishops, ladies' handkerchiefs, etc. So called from Laon (O.Fr. Lan), a town in the Aisne department of France, which used to be famous for its linen factories.

Man of lawn. A bishop.

Lawn-market. The higher end of the High Street, Edinburgh, and the old place for executions; hence, to go up the Lawn-market, in Scots parlance, means to go to be hanged.

Up the Lawn-market, down the West Bow,
Up the lang ladder, down the short low,

Schoolboy Rhyme (Scotland).

Lawn-tennis. The game of tennis greatly simplified and played on an open lawn. It was introduced in England in 1877 and has acquired universal popularity. See TENNIS.

Lawrence, St. The patron saint of curriers, who was broiled to death on a gridiron. He was deacon to Sixtus I and was charged with the care of the poor, the orphans, and the widows. In the persecution of Valerian (258), being summoned to deliver up the treasures of the church, he produced the poor, etc., under his charge, and said to the prætor, "These are the church's treasures." He is generally represented as holding a gridiron, and is commemorated on August 10th.

The phrase Lazy as Lawrence is said to take its origin from the story that when being roasted over a slow fire he asked to be turned, "for," said he, "that side is quite done." This expression of Christian fortitude was interpreted by his torturers as evidence of the height of laziness, the martyr being too indolent even to wriggle.

St. Lawrence's tears or The fiery tears of St. Lawrence. See SHOOTING STARS.

Lawyers' Bags. Some red, some blue. In the Common Law, red bags are reserved for Q.C.s; but a stuffgownsmen may carry one "if presented with it by a silk." Only red bags may be taken into Common Law Courts, blue must be carried no farther than the robing-room. In Chancery Courts the etiquette is not so strict.

Lay. Pertaining to the people, or laity (Lat. laicus) as distinguished from the clergy. Thus, a lay brother is one who, though not in holy orders, is received into a monastery and is bound by its vows.

A layman is, properly speaking, anyone not in holy orders; but the term is also used by professional men—especially doctors and lawyers—to denote one not of their particular profession.

Lay figures. Wooden figures with free joints, used by artists chiefly for the study of how drapery falls. The word was earlier layman, from Dut. leeman, a contraction of ledenman, i.e. led (now lid), a joint, and man, man. Horace Walpole uses layman (1762), but lay figure had taken its place by the end of the 18th century.

Lay (the verb). To lay about one. To strike out lustily on all sides.

He'll lay about him to-day.—Troilus and Cressida, i, 2.

To lay it on thick. To flatter or over-praise.

To lay out. (a) To disburse.

(b) To display goods; place in convenient order what is required for wear.

(c) To prepare a corpse for the coffin, by placing the limbs in order, and dressing the body in its grave-clothes.

To lay to one's charge. To attribute an offence to a person.

And he [Stephen] kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord lay not this sin to their charge.—Acts, vii, 60. The phrase occurs again in the Bible, e.g. Deut. xxi, 8; Rom. viii, 33, etc.

Laylock. Ancient rustic name for lilac.

Lazar House or Lazaretto. A house for lazars, or poor persons affected with contagious diseases. So called from the beggar Lazarus (q.v.).

Lazarillo de Tormes (láz a ril' yo de tórm' ez). A romance, something in the Gil Blas style, satirizing all classes of society. Lazarillo, a light, jovial, audacious manservant, sees his masters in their undress, and exposes their foibles. It was by Diego Hurtado de Mendoza, general and statesman of Spain, and was published in 1553.

Lazarone (lāts á rō nī) (Ital.). Originally applied to Neapolitan vagrants who lived in the streets and idled about, begging, now and then doing odd jobs. So called from the hospital of St. Lazarus, which served as a refuge for the destitute of Naples. Every year they elected a chief, called the Capo Lazzaro. Masaniello, in 1647, with these vagabonds accomplished a revolution, and in 1798 Michele Sforza, at the head of the Lazzaroni, successfully resisted Championnet, the French general.

Lazarus (lāz' á rus). Any poor beggar; so called from the Lazarus of the parable, who was laid daily at the rich man's gate (Luke xvi).

Lazy. Lazy as Ludlam's dog, which leaned his head against the wall to bark. Fable has it that Ludlam was a sorceress who lived in a cave near Farnham, Surrey. Her dog was so lazy that when the rustics came to consult her it would hardly condescend to give notice of their approach, even with the ghost of a bark. (Ray: Proverbs.)

Lazy as Lawrence's dog is a similar old saying. See LAWRENCE.

Lazy-bones. A lazy fellow, a regular idler. The expression is some hundreds of years old.

Go tell the Labourers, that the lazie bones

That will not worke, must seeke the beggars gaines.

NICHOLAS BRETON: Pasquill's Madcap (1600).

Lazy man's load. One too heavy to be carried; so called because lazy people, to save themselves the trouble of coming a second time, are apt to overload themselves.

Lazzaroni. See LAZARONE.

L'état c'est moi (lā ta sã mwā) (Fr., I am the State). The reply traditionally ascribed to Louis XIV when the President of the Parlement of Paris offered objections "in the interests of the State" to the king's fiscal demands. This was in 1655, when Louis was only 17 years of age; on this principle he acted with tolerable consistency throughout his long reign.

Le roi (La reine) le veut (Fr., The king (queen) wills it). The form of royal assent to Bills submitted to the Crown. The dissent is expressed by Le roi (La reine) s'avisera (the king (queen) will give it his consideration).

Leach. See LEECH.

Lead (led) was, by the ancient alchemists, called Saturn.

The lead, or blacklead, of a lead pencil contains no lead at all, but is composed of plumbago or graphite, an almost pure carbon with a touch of iron. It was so named in the 16th century, when it was thought to be or to contain the metal.

Swinging the lead. Navy slang for concocting a plausible yarn to enable one to malingering.

To strike lead. To make a good hit.

That, after the failure of the king, he should "strike lead" in his own house seemed . . . an inevitable law. —BRET HARTE: Fool of Five Forks.

Leads, The. Famous prison in Venice, in which Casanova was incarcerated and from which he escaped.

Lead (lĕd) (the verb.) (A.S. lædan).

To lead apes in hell. See APE.

To lead by the nose. See NOSE.

To lead one a pretty dance. See DANCE.

Leader. The first violin of an orchestra, the first cornet of a military band, etc., is called the leader.

Leading article, or Leader. A newspaper article by the editor or a special writer. So called because it takes the lead or chief place in the summary of current topics, and expresses the policy of the paper.

Leading case. A lawsuit that forms a precedent in deciding others of a similar kind.

Leading counsel in a case, the senior counsel on a circuit.

Leading lady or man. The actress or actor who takes the chief rôle in a play.

Leading note (music). The seventh of the diatonic scale, which leads to the octave, only half a tone higher.

Leading question. A question so worded as to suggest an answer. "Was he not dressed in a black coat?" leads to the answer "Yes." In cross-examining a witness, leading questions are permitted, because the chief object of a cross-examination is to obtain contradictions.

Men of light and leading. Men capable of illuminating the way and guiding the steps of others. The phrase is Burke's:—

The men of England, the men, I mean, of light and leading in England, . . . would be ashamed . . . to profess any religion in name, which, by their proceedings, they appear to condemn.—Reflections on the Revolution in France.

But he seems to have derived it from Milton, who, in his Address to the Parliament, prefixed to his notes on the Judgment of Martin Bucer Concerning Divorce, says:—

I owe no light, or leading received from any man in the discovery of this truth, what time I first undertook it in "the Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce."

Disraeli was rather fond of the phrase: he used it in Sybil—"A public man of light and leading" (Bk. v., ch. i)—as well as in speeches.

To be in leading-strings is to be under the control of another. Leading-strings are those strings used for holding up infants just learning to walk.

Leaf. Before the invention of paper one of the substances employed for writing upon was the leaves of certain plants. The reverse and obverse pages of a book are still called leaves; and the double page of a ledger is termed a "folio," from folium, a leaf. Cp. the derivation of paper itself, from papyrus, and book, from boc, a beech-tree. There are still extant many ancient MSS. written on palm or other leaves.

To take a leaf out of my book. To imitate me; to do as I do. The allusion is to literary plagiarisms.

To turn over a new leaf. To amend one's ways, to start afresh.

League. The Holy League. Several leagues are so denominated. The three following are the most important: 1511, by Pope Julius II; Ferdinand the Catholic, Henry VIII, the Venetians, and the Swiss against Louis XII; and that of 1576, founded at Péronne for the maintenance of the Catholic Faith and the exclusion of Protestant princes from the throne of France. This league was organized by the Guises to keep Henri IV from the throne. The struggle that ensued formed the subject of Voltaire's epic known first as La Ligue and subsequently as La Henriade, 1724.

The League of Nations. A league, having headquarters at Geneva, formed after the close of World War I, largely through the exertions of Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States 1913-21, whose action was, however, repudiated by the United States. At one time or another some 44 nations were members of the League. The League was founded on a Covenant and a Charter of XXVI Articles, the High Contracting Parties agreeing to the Covenant in order to promote International Co-operation and to achieve International Peace and Security, by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to War. The final session of the League was on April 18th, 1946, the United Nations having come into existence on the 24th October, 1945.

Leak. To leak out. To come clandestinely to public knowledge. As a liquid leaks out of an unsound vessel, so the secret oozes out unawares.

To spring a leak. Said of ships, etc., that open or crack so as to admit the water.

Leal. Anglo-Fr. and O.Fr. leel, our loyal; trusty, law-abiding; now practically confined to Scotland.

Land of the leal. See LAND.

Leander. See HERO AND LEANDER.

Leaning Tower. The campanile or bell-tower of the cathedral of Pisa stands apart from the cathedral itself. It is 181 ft. high, 57½ ft. in diameter at the base, and leans about 14 ft. from the perpendicular. It was begun in 1174 and the sinking commenced during construction. Galileo availed himself of the overhanging tower to make his experiments in gravitation. At Caerphilly, Glamorganshire, there is a tower which leans 11ft. in 80. This was caused by an attempt to blow it up with gunpowder during the Civil Wars.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa continues to stand because the vertical line drawn through its centre of gravity passes within its base.—GANOT: Physics.

Leap Year. A year of 366 days, a bissextile year (q.v.); i.e. in the Julian and Gregorian calendars any year whose date is exactly divisible by four except those which are divisible by 100 but not by 400. Thus 1900 (though exactly divisible by 4) was not a leap year, but 2000 will be.

In ordinary years the day of the month which falls on Monday this year will fall on Tuesday next year, and Wednesday the year after; but the fourth year will leap over Thursday to Friday. This is because a day is added to February, the reason being that the astronomical year (i.e. the time that it takes the earth to go round the sun) is approximately 365½ days (365·2422), the difference between ·25 and ·2422 being righted by the loss of the three days in 400 years.

It is an old saying that during leap year the ladies may propose, and, if not accepted, claim a silk gown. The origin of this cannot now be traced, there is, however, an Act of the Scottish parliament, passed in 1288, which says "it is statut and ordaint that during the rein of hir maist blissit Megeste, for ilke year known as lepe yeare, olk mayden ladye of bothe highe and lowe estait shall hae liberte to bespeke ye man she like, albeit he refuses to taik hir to be his lawful wyfe, he shall be mulcted in ye sum of ane pundis or less, as his estait may be; except and awis gif he can make it appeare that he is betrothit ane ither woman he then shall be free." A few years later than this a somewhat similar law was passed in France. In the 15th century the custom was legalized in both Genoa and Florence.

Lear, King. A legendary king of Britain whose story is told by Shakespeare. In his old age he divided his kingdom between Goneril and Regan, two of his daughters, who professed great love for him. These two daughters drove the old man mad by their unnatural conduct, while the third, Cordelia (q.v.), who had been left portionless, succoured him and came with an army to dethrone her two sisters, but was captured and slain in prison. King Lear died over her body.

Camden tells a similar story of Ina, King of the West Saxons. The story of King Lear is given in the Gesta Romanorum (of a Roman emperor), in the old romance of Perceforest, and by Geoffrey of Monmouth in his Chronicles, whence Holinshed, Shakespeare's immediate source, transcribed it. Spenser introduced the same story into his Faerie Queene (II, x). See LIR.

Learn. To learn a person a thing, or to do something is now a provincialism, but was formerly quite good English. Thus, in the Prayer Book version of the Psalms we have "Lead me forth in thy truth and learn me," and "such as are gentle them shall he learn his way" (xxv, 4, 8); and other examples of this use of learn as an active verb will be found at Ps. cxix, 66 and cxxii, 13.

The red plague rid you

For learning me your language.

Tempest, i, 2.

To learn by heart. The heart is the seat of understanding; thus the Scripture speaks of men "wise in heart"; and "slow of heart" means dull of understanding. To learn by heart is to learn and understand, but we commonly employ the phrase as a synonym for committing to memory; to learn by rote is to learn so as to be able to repeat.

Learned (lɛrn'ed). Colman, king of Hungary (1095-1114), was called The Learned. Cp. BEAUCLERC.

The learned Blacksmith. Elihu Burritt (1811-79), the American linguist, who was at one time a blacksmith.

The learned Painter. Charles Lebrun (1619-90), so called from the great accuracy of his costumes.

The learned Tailor. Henry Wild, of Norwich (1684-1734), who mastered, while he worked at his trade, the Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Chaldaic, Syriac, Persian, and Arabic languages.

Leather. Nothing like leather. The story is that a town in danger of a siege called together a council of the chief inhabitants to know what defence they recommended. A mason suggested a strong wall, a shipbuilder advised "wooden walls," and when others had spoken, a currier arose and said, "There's nothing like leather."

Another version is, "Nothing like leather to administer a thrashing."

It is all leather or prunella. Nothing of any moment, all rubbish; through a misunderstanding of the lines by Pope, who was drawing a distinction between the work of a cobbler and that of a parson.

Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;

The rest is all but leather or prunella.

POPE: Essay on Man.

Prunella is a worsted stuff, formerly used for clergymen's gowns, etc., and for the uppers of ladies' boots, and is probably so called because it was the colour of a prune.

Leather medal. A U.S.A. colloquial term for a booby prize.

To give one a leathering. To beat him with a leather belt; hence, to give him a drubbing.

Leatherneck. A nickname in the U.S.A. forces for a Marine.

Leatherstocking Novels. The novels by Fenimore Cooper in which Natty Bumppo, nicknamed Leatherstocking and Hawkeye, is a leading character. They are The Pioneers (1823), The Last of the Mohicans (1826), The Prairie (1826), The Pathfinder (1840), and The Deerslayer (1841). "Leatherstocking" was a hardy backwoodsman, a type of North American pioneer.

Leave in the lurch. See LURCH.

Lebensraum (lā bēnz roum'). A German phrase (room for living) somewhat akin to Land Hunger (q.v.). It is applied especially to the additional territory required by a nation for the expansion of its trade and the settlement of a population growing too numerous to be sustained in the mother country.

Leda. In Greek mythology, the mother by Zeus (who is fabled to have come to her in the shape of a swan) of two eggs, from one of which came Castor and Clytemnestra, and from the other Pollux and Helen.

Leda Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Lee. In nautical language, the side or quarter opposite to that against which the wind blows; the sheltered side, the side away from the windward or weather side. From A.S. hleō, hleow, a covering or shelter.

Lee shore. The shore under the lee of a ship, or that towards which the wind blows.

Lee side. See LEEWARD.

Lee tide. A tide running in the same direction as the wind blows; if in the opposite direction it is called a tide under the lee.

Leeward (loo' ard). Toward the lee (q.v.), or that part towards which the wind blows; windward is in the opposite direction, viz., in the teeth of the wind. See A-WEATHER; LEE.

Take care of the lee hatch. A warning to the helmsman to beware lest the ship goes to the leeward of her course—i.e. the part towards which the wind blows.

To lay a ship by the lee. An obsolete phrase for to heave to; i.e. to arrange the sails of a ship flat against the masts and shrouds so that the wind strikes the vessel broadside and thus causes her to make little or no headway.

Under the lee of the land. Under the shelter of the cliffs which break the force of the winds.

Under the lee of a ship. On the side opposite to the wind, so that the ship shelters or wards it off.

Leech. One skilled in medicine or "leechcraft"; the word, which is now obsolete, is the A.S. læce, one who relieves pain, from lacnian, to leace. The blood-sucking worm, the leech, gets its name probably from the same word, the healer.

And straightway sent, with carefull diligence,
To fetch a leech the which had great insight
In that disease.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, I, x, 23.

Leech-finger. See MEDICINAL FINGER.

Leek. The national emblem of Wales. The story is that St. David, patron saint of the Welsh, on one occasion caused his countrymen under King Cadwallader to distinguish themselves from their Saxon foes by wearing a leek in their caps.

Shakespeare makes out that the Welsh wore leeks at the battle of Poitiers, for Fluellen says:—

If your majesty is remembered of it, the Welshmen did goot service in a garden where leeks grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps, which, your majesty know, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon St. Tavy's Day.—Henry V, iv, 7.

To eat the leek. To be compelled to eat your own words, or retract what you have said. Fluellen (in Henry V) is taunted by Pistol for wearing a leek in his hat. "Hence," says Pistol, "I am qualmish at the smell of leek." Fluellen replies, "I beseech you . . . at my desire . . . to eat this leek." The ancient answers, "Not for Cadwallader and all his goats." Then the peppery Welshman beats him, nor desists till Pistol has swallowed the entire abhorrence.

Lees. There are lees to every wine. The best things have some defect. A French proverb.

Doubt is the lees of thought.

BOKER: Doubt, etc., i, 11.

Settling on the lees. Making the best of a bad job; settling down on what is left, after having squandered the main part of one's fortune.

Leet or Court-leet. A manor court for petty offences, held once a year; the day on which it was held. The word is probably connected with A.S. lathe (q.v.), a division of a county.

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets and law-days and in session sit
With meditations lawful?

Othello, iii, 3.

Left. The left side of anything is frequently considered to be unlucky, of bad omen (cp. AUGURY; SINISTER), the right the reverse.

In politics the left is the opposition, the party which, in a legislative assembly, sits on the left of the Speaker or President. The left wing of a party is composed of its extremists, the "irreconcilables." The term leftist has been used since c. 1930 to denote a person of Socialist or Communist tendencies.

A left-handed compliment. A compliment which insinuates a reproach.

A left-handed marriage. A morganatic marriage (q.v.), in which the husband gave his left hand to the bride instead of the right, when saying, "I take thee for my wedded wife."

A left-handed oath. An oath not intended to be binding.

Over the left. In early Victorian time a way of expressing disbelief, incredulity, or a negative.

Each gentleman pointed with his right thumb over his left shoulder. This action, imperfectly described in words by the very feeble term of "over the left", when performed by any number of ladies or gentlemen who are accustomed to act in unison, has a very graceful and airy effect; its expression is one of light and playful sarcasm.—DICKENS: Pickwick Papers.

Leg. In many phrases, e.g. "to find one's legs," "to put one's best leg foremost," leg is interchangeable with foot (q.v.).

Leg and leg. Equal, or nearly so, in a race, game, etc. Cp. NECK AND NECK.

On its last legs. Moribund; obsolete; ready to fall out of cognisance.

Show a leg, there! Jump out of bed and be sharp about it! A phrase from the Navy.

To give a leg up. To render timely assistance, "to help a lame dog over a stile." Originally from horsemanship—to help one into the saddle.

To have good sea legs. To be a good sailor; to be able to stand the motion of the ship without getting sea sick.

To make a leg. To make a bow, especially an old-fashioned obeisance, drawing one's leg backward.

The pursuivant smiled at their simplicity,
And making many leggs, tooke their reward.
The King and Miller of Mansfield.

Leg-pulling, in England, means teasing or chaffing (see PULL), in U.S.A. it means toadying, intriguing, or blackmailing.

To set on his legs. So to provide for a man that he is able to earn his living without further help.

To stand on one's own legs. To be independent, to be earning one's own living. Of course, the allusion is to being nursed, and standing "alone."

Without a leg to stand on. Having no excuse; divested of all support; with no chance of success.

Leg-bail. A runaway. To give leg-bail, to abscond, make a "get-away."

Leg bye. In cricket, a run scored from a ball which has glanced off any part of a batsman's person except his hand.

Legal tender. Money which, by the law of the particular country, a creditor is bound to accept in discharge of a debt. In England the tender of gold, Treasury notes, and Bank of England notes (except for £10 and upwards) is legal up to any amount, with the one exception that a creditor of the Bank of England cannot be compelled to receive his money in Bank of England notes. Silver is not legal tender for sums over forty shillings, nor bronze for sums over one shilling.

Legem Pone (lĕ' jem pō ne). Old slang for money paid down on the nail, ready money; from the opening words of the first of the psalms appointed to be read on the twenty-fifth morning of the month—Legem pone mihi, Domine, viam justificationum tuarum (Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, Ps. cxix, 33). March 25th is the first pay-day of the year, and thus the phrase became associated with cash down.

Use legem pone to pay at thy day,

But use not oremus for often delay.

TUSSER: Good Husbandry (1557).

Oremus (let us pray) occurs frequently in the Roman Catholic liturgy. Its application to a debtor who is suing for further time is obvious.

Legend. Literally and originally, "something to be read" (Lat. legenda, from legere, to read); hence the narratives of the lives of saints and martyrs were so termed from their being read, especially at matins, and after dinner in the refectories. Exaggeration and a love for the wonderful so predominated in these readings, that the word came to signify a traditional story, especially one popularly regarded as true, a fable, a myth.

In Numismatics the legend is the inscription impressed in letters on a coin or medal. Formerly the words on the obverse only (i.e. round the head of the sovereign) were called the legend, the words on the reverse being the inscription; but this distinction is no longer recognized by numismatists. It is also properly applied to the title on a map or under a picture.

Legenda Aurea. See GOLDEN LEGEND.

Leger. See ST. LEGER.

Legion. My name is Legion: for we are many (Mark v, 9). A proverbial expression somewhat similar to hydra-headed. Thus, we say of a plague of rats, "Their name is Legion."

Foreign Legion. A body of highly-trained mercenaries of any nationality; the French and Spanish armies include such bodies.

The Thundering Legion. See THUNDERING.

Legion of Honour. An order of distinction and reward instituted by Napoleon in 1802, for either military or civil merit.

It was, at the outset, limited to 15 cohortes, each composed of 7 grands officiers, 20 commandants, 30 officiers, and 350 légionnaires, making in all 6,105 members; it was reorganized by Louis XVIII in 1814, and again by Napoleon III in 1852, and now comprises 80 grands croix, 200 grands officiers, 1,000 commandeurs, 4,000 officiers, with chevaliers to whose creation there is no fixed limit.

The badge is a five-branched cross with a medallion bearing a symbolical figure of the republic and round it the legend, "République Française, 1870." This is crowned by a laurel wreath and the ribbon is of red watered silk.

The order holds considerable property, out of which it distributes pensions to members and maintains schools for their daughters.

Leglen-girth. To cast a leglen-girth. To have made a faux pas, particularly by having an illegitimate child; to have one's reputation blown upon. Leglen is Scottish for a milk-pail, and a leglen-girth is its lowest hoop.

Leicester. The town gets its name from Lat. Legionis castra, the camp of the legion, it having been the headquarters of a legion during the Roman occupation of Britain. Caerleon, in Wales, Leon, Spain, and Ledjun, in Palestine, owe their names to the same cause.

Leicester Square (London). So called from the family mansion of the Sydneys, Earls of Leicester, which stood on the north-east side in the 17th century.

Leipzig Fairs. These were sample fairs to which commercial agents used to flock from all parts of the world. The Spring Fair opened the first week in March, the Autumn Fair the last week in August, and each lasted three weeks. All sorts of wares including pottery, textiles, glass, machinery, books, etc., were on sale.

Leitmotiv (lit' mō tĕf'). This is a German word meaning the leading motive, and is applied in music to a theme associated with a personage, etc., in an opera or similar work which is quoted at appropriate times and worked up symphonically. The term has got into general usage to describe any phrase or turn of thought or speech that continually recurs with a certain association.

Lely (Sir Peter) (lĕ' li), the painter, was the son of Vander Vaas or Faes, of Westphalia, whose house had a lily for its sign. Both father and son went by the nickname of Le-llys (the Lily), a sobriquet which Peter afterwards adopted as his cognomen.

Lemmings are one of the curiosities of nature, and their blind instinct is the origin of several fables. The lemming is a mouse-like rodent, some five inches long, that lives in the grass and bushes in the higher lands of the great mountain ranges of Scandinavia. Lemmings multiply at such a rate that every three or four years they make a vast migration, coming down the mountain slopes, swimming rivers and lakes, but always descending. As they pass on their way, devastating the countryside, they are harassed by man, birds of prey and beasts, but undeterred they push in their millions ever onwards and downwards until they reach the sea, into which they plunge and are drowned.

Various theories have been advanced to account for their behaviour. It would seem that lemmings are obeying a blind instinct, inherited maybe from Miocene days when the Baltic and North Sea were dry land which could offer a refuge for their overcrowded, teeming hosts.

Lemnos. The island where Vulcan fell when Jupiter flung him out of heaven. One myth connected with Lemnos tells how the women of the island, in revenge for their ill-treatment, murdered all the men. The Argonauts (q.v.) were received with great favour by the women, and as a result of their few months' stay the island was repopulated: the queen, Hypsipyle, became the mother of twins by Jason.

Lemnian earth. A kind of bole, or clayey earth, of a reddish or yellowish grey colour, found in the island of Lemnos, said to cure the bites of serpents and other wounds. It was made into cakes, and was called terra sigillata, because these were sealed by a priest before being vended.

Lemon. Lemon, Salts of. See MISNOMERS.

Lemon sole. The name of the flat-fish has nothing to do with the fruit but is from limande, a dab or flat-fish. This may be connected with O.Fr. limande, a flat board, but may also be from Lat. limus, mud, the fish being essentially a bottom fish.

The answer's a lemon. A senseless and ridiculous repartee; used as a form of reply to some particularly silly or unanswerable conundrum.

Lemures (lem' ū rēz). The name given by the Romans to the spirits of the dead, especially spectres which wandered about at night-time to terrify the living. Cp. LARVÆ. (Ovid: Fasti. v.)

The lars and lemures moan with midnight plaint.

MILTON: Ode on the Nativity.

Lemuria (le mū' ri ā). The name given to a lost land that is supposed to have connected Madagascar with India and Sumatra in pre-historic times. See W. Scott Elliott's The Lost Lemuria (1904). Cp. ATLANTIS.

Lend Lease. On March 11th, 1942, President Roosevelt signed the Lend-Lease Act whereby U.S.A. was committed to lend or lease military equipment, stores, food, etc., to the governments of the powers fighting Fascism in the name of democracy. Fifteen powers in addition to the twenty Latin-American Republics benefited by Lend-Lease, and over £1,000,000,000 was expended by U.S.A. It was ended by President Truman on the conclusion of hostilities in 1945.

Leningrad (len' in grād). The present name of what was once known as St. Petersburg, the capital city of Tsarist Russia. It was founded by Peter the Great in 1703; the name was changed to Petrograd in 1914, and to Leningrad in 1924.

Lens (Lat., a lentil or bean). Glasses used in optical instruments are so called because the double convex one, which may be termed the perfect lens, is of a bean shape.

Lent (A.S. lencten). Lenctentid (spring tide) was the Saxon name for March, because in this month there is a manifest lengthening of the days. As the chief part of the great fast, from Ash Wednesday to Easter, falls in March, this period received the name of the Lencten-fæsten, or Lent.

The fast of thirty-six days was introduced in the 4th century. Felix III (483-492) added four days in 487, to make it correspond with Our Lord's fast in the wilderness.

Galeazzo's Lent. A form of torture devised by Galeazzo Visconti, Duke of Milan, 1395-1402, calculated to prolong the unfortunate victim's life for forty days.

Lent lily. The daffodil, which blooms in Lent.

Lenten. Frugal, stinted, as food in Lent. Shakespeare has "lenten entertainment" (Hamlet, ii, 2); "a lenten answer" (Twelfth Night, i, 5); "a lenten pye" (Romeo and Juliet, ii, 4).

And with a lenten salad cooled her blood.

DRYDEN: Hind and Panther, iii, 27.

Leonard, St. A Frank at the court of Clovis in the 6th century. He founded the monastery of Noblac, and is the patron saint of prisoners, Clovis having given him permission to release all whom he visited. He is usually represented as a deacon, and holding chains or broken fetters in his hand. His feast day is November 6th.

Leonidas of Modern Greece (lē on' i dās). Marco Bozzaris, who with 1,200 men put to rout 4,000 Turco-Albanians, at Kerpenisi, but was killed in the attack (1823). He was buried at Missolonghi.

Leonine (lē' ō nīn). Lion-like; also, relating to one of the popes named Leo, as the Leonine City, the part of Rome surrounding the Vatican, which was fortified by Leo IV in the 9th century.

Leonine contract. A one-sided agreement; so called in allusion to the fable of The Lion and his Fellow-Hunters. Cp. GLAUCUS SWOP, under GLAUCUS.

Leonine verses. Latin hexameters, or alternate hexameters and pentameters, rhyming at the middle and end of each respective line. These fancies were common in the 12th century, and are said to have been popularized by and so called from Leoninus, a canon of the church of St. Victor, in Paris; but there are many such lines in the classic poets, particularly Ovid. In English verse, any metre which rhymes middle and end may be called Leonine verse.

Leopard. So called because it was thought in mediæval times to be a cross between the lion (leo), or lioness, and the pard, which was the name given to a panther that had no white specks on it.

References to the impossibility of a leopard changing its spots are frequent; the allusion is to Jeremiah, xiii, 23.

Lions make leopards tame.

Yea; but not change his spots.

Richard II, i, 1.

In Christian art the leopard represents that beast spoken of in Revelation xiii, 1-8, with seven heads and ten horns; six of the heads bear a nimbus, but the seventh, being "wounded to death," lost its power, and consequently is bare.

And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion.—Rev. xiii, 2.

The lions in the coat of arms of England. See LION.

The leopard's head, or King's Mark, on silver is really a lion's head. It is called a leopard, because the O.Fr. heraldic term Leopard means a lion passant guardant.

Leopolita Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Leprachaun (lep 'rā kawn). The fairy shoemaker of Ireland; so called because he is always seen working at a single shoe (leith, half, brog, a shoe or brogue). Another of his peculiarities is that he has a purse that never contains more than a single shilling.

Do you not catch the tiny clamour,
Busy click of an elfin hammer,
Voice of the Leprachaun singing shrill,
As he merrily plies his trade?

W. B. YEATS: Fairy and Folk Tales.

He is also called lubrican, cluricaune (q.v.), etc. In Dekker and Middleton's Honest Whore (Pt. II, III, i) Hippolito speaks of Bryan, the Irish footman, as "your Irish lubrican."

Lesbian (lez' by ān). Pertaining to Lesbos, one of the islands of the Greek Archipelago, or to Sappho, the famous poetess of Lesbos, and to the homosexual practices attributed to her.

The Lesbian Poets. Terpander, Alcæus, Arion, and Sappho, all of Lesbos.

The Lesbian rule. A flexible rule used by ancient Greek masons for measuring curved mouldings, etc.; hence, figuratively, a pliant and accommodating principle or rule of conduct.

Lèse-majesté (lēz māj' es tī). High treason, a crime against the sovereign (Lat. læsa majestas, hurt or violated majesty).

Lestrigons (les' tri gonz). A fabulous race of cannibal giants who lived in Sicily. Ulysses (Odys. x) sent two of his men to request that he might land, but the king of the place ate one for dinner and the other fled. The Lestrigons assembled on the coast and threw stones against Ulysses and his crew; they fled with all speed, but many men were lost. Cp. POLYPHEMUS.

Let, to permit, is the A.S. læt-an, to suffer or permit; but let, to hinder, now obsolete or archaic, is the verb lett-an. From this comes a let in ball games such as lawn-tennis, where a point is played again because there has been a hindrance.

Ofentimes I purposed to come unto you, but was let hitherto.—Rom. i, 13.

Yf any man had rather bestowe thys tyme upon hys owne occupation . . . he is not letted nor prohibited.—MORE: Utopia, II, iv.

Lethe (lē' thi). In Greek mythology, one of the rivers of Hades, which the souls of all the dead are obliged to taste, that they may forget everything said and done when alive. (Gr.

leitho, latheo, lanthano, to cause persons not to know.)

Here, in a dusky vale where Lethe rolls
Old Bavus sits, to dip poetic souls,
And blunt the sense.

POPE: Dunciad, iii, 23.

Letter. The name of a character used to represent a sound, and of a missive or written message. Through O.Fr. lettre, from Lat. littera, a letter of the alphabet, the plural of which (litteræ) denoted an epistle. The plural, with the meaning literature, learning, erudition (as in man of letters, republic of letters, etc.), dates in English from at least the time of King Alfred, and is seen in Cicero's otium literatum, lettered ease.

The number of letters in the English alphabet is 26, but in a fount of type 206 characters are required; these are made up of Roman lower case (i.e. small letters), capitals, and small capitals; included are the diphthongs (Æ, æ, etc.) and ligatures (ff, fi, fl, ffi, ffl), the remaining characters being the accented letters, i.e. those with the grave (`), acute (´), circumflex (ˆ), diæresis (¨), or tilde (~), and the "cedilla c" (ç). To these characters must be added the figures, fractions, points (., !, etc.), brackets, reference marks (*, §, etc.), and commercial and mathematical signs (£, %, +, etc.) in common use. Cp. TYPOGRAPHICAL SIGNS; FONT.

The proportionate use of the letters of the alphabet is given as follows:—

E	..	1,000	H	..	540	F	..	236	K	..	88
T	..	770	R	..	528	W	..	190	J	..	55

O	..	672	C	..	280	B	..	158
N	..	670	M	..	272	V	..	120

Consonants, 5,977. Vowels, 3,400.

Another "fount-scheme" gives a rather different order, viz. e, t, a, o, i, n, s, r, h, d, l, u, c, m, f, w, y, p, g, b, v, k, j, q, x, fi, ff, fi, z, fi, fl, "e" accounts for 7.83 per cent. of the fount, "z" for 0.17, and the first twelve characters here given for 50 per cent. of the whole. The least wanted character is the italic capital Œ, of which it has been calculated that only five are necessary for a million type.

As initials the order of frequency is very different, the proportion being:—

S	..	1,194	M	..	439	W	..	272	Q	..	58
C	..	937	F	..	388	G	..	266	K	..	47

Letter-Gae. A jocular Scottish name (after Allan Ramsay, 1686-1758) for the precentor of a kirk, he who leads off the singing, and lets go.

There were no sae mony hairs on the warlock's face as there's on Letter-gae's ain at this moment.—SCOTT: Guy Mannering, ch. xi.

Letter-lock. A lock that cannot be opened unless letters on exterior movable rings are arranged in a certain order.

A strange lock that opens with A M E N.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Noble Gentleman.

Letter of Bellerophon. See BELLEROPHON.

Letter of credence, or letters credential, formal documents with which a diplomatic agent is furnished accrediting him on his appointment to a post at the seat of a foreign government.

Letter of Credit. A letter written by a merchant or banker to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with certain sums of money. Circular Notes are letters of credit carried by travellers.

Letter of Licence. An instrument in writing made by a creditor, allowing a debtor longer time for the payment of his debt.

Letter of Marque. A commission authorizing a privateer to make reprisals on a hostile nation till satisfaction for injury has been duly made. Marque is from Provençal marcar, Med. Lat. marcare, to seize as a pledge.

Letter of Safe Conduct. A writ under the Great Seal, guaranteeing safety to and fro to the person named in the passport.

Letter of Slains. In old Scottish law a petition to the Crown from the relatives of a murdered person, declaring that they have received satisfaction (assythment), and asking pardon for the murderer.

Letter of Uriah. See URIAH.

Letters Missive. An order from the Lord Chancellor to a peer to put in an appearance to a bill filed in chancery.

Letters of Administration. The legal instrument granted by the Probate Court to a person appointed administrator to one who has died intestate.

Letters of Horning. In Scottish history, signed orders putting rebels to the horn. See HORN.

Letters of Junius. See JUNIUS.

Letters Patent, or Overt. See PATENT.

Lettres de Cachet. See CACHET.

Leucadia or Leucas (lū kā' di a). One of the Ionian Islands, now known as Santa Maura. Here is the promontory from which Sappho threw herself into the sea when she found her love for Phaon was in vain.

Haste, Sappho, haste, from high Leucadia throw
Thy wretched weight, nor dread the deeps below!
There injured lovers, leaping from above,
Their flames extinguish, and forget to love.

POPE: Sappho to Phaon.

Leucothea (lū kōth' ē a) (The White Goddess). So Ino, the mortal daughter of Cadmus and wife of Athamas, was called after she became a sea goddess. Athamas in a fit of madness slew one of her sons; she threw herself into the sea with the other, imploring assistance of the gods, who deified both of them. Her son, Melicertes, then renamed Palæmon, was called by the Romans Portunus, or Portumnus, and became the protecting genius of harbours.

Levant (le vānt'). He has levanted—i.e. made off, decamped. A levanter is an absconder, especially one who makes a bet, and runs away without paying his bet if he loses. From Span. levantar el campo, or la casa, to break up the camp or house.

Levant and Ponent Winds. The east wind is the Levant, and the west wind the Ponent. The former is from Lat. levare, to raise (sunrise), and the latter from ponere, to set (sunset).

Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, x, 704.

Levant, the region, strictly speaking, means the eastern shore of the Mediterranean; but is often applied to the whole East.

Levant and Couchant (lev' ānt, kou' chānt). Applied in legal phraseology to cattle which have strayed into another's field, and have been there long enough to lie down and sleep. The owner of the field can demand compensation for such intrusion. (Lat. levantes et cubantes, rising up and going to bed.)

Levee (le' vi) (Fr., lit., a rising, i.e. from bed). An official reception of men only by the sovereign or his representative, held usually in the afternoon.

It was customary for the queens of France to receive at the hour of their levée—i.e. while making their toilet—the visits of certain noblemen. The court physicians, messengers from the king, the queen's secretary, and some few others demanded admission as a right, so ten or more persons were often in the dressing-room while the queen was making her toilet and sipping her coffee.

In the Southern U.S.A. the word levee is used for an earth or masonry embankment for preventing the overflowing of a river.

Levée en masse (Fr.). A patriotic rising of a whole nation to defend their country.

Level. Level-headed. Shrewd, business-like, characterized by common sense; said of one who "has his head screwed on the right way."

To do one's level best. To exert oneself to the utmost. This term, and that above, were originally American slang, and came from the gold-diggings of California.

To find one's own level. Said of a person who, after making an unsuccessful start, arrives at the position in society, business, etc., for which his gifts or attainments qualify him.

To level up, or down. To bring whatever is being spoken of—as the state of some class of society, the standard of wages, and so on—up or down to the level of some similar thing.

Your levellers wish to level down as far as themselves; but they cannot bear levelling up to themselves.

—DR. JOHNSON: Remark to Boswell, 1763.

On the level. Honest and sincere in whatever one is doing or saying. A term from Freemasonry.

Levellers. In English history, a body of ultra-Republicans in the time of Charles I and the Commonwealth, who wanted all men to be placed on a level, particularly with respect to their eligibility to office. John Lilburne was one of the leaders of the sect, which was active from 1647 to 1649, when it was suppressed.

In Irish history the name was given to the 18th century agrarian agitators, afterwards called Whiteboys (q.v.). Their first offences were levelling the hedges of enclosed commons; but their programme developed into a demand for the general redress of all agrarian grievances.

Lever de Rideau (lev' à de rê' dō) (Fr , curtain-raiser). A short sketch performed on the stage before drawing up the curtain on the real play of the evening.

Leviathan (le ví' à thán). The name (Hebrew for "that which gathers itself together in folds," Cp. Is. xxvii, 1) given in the Bible to a sea-serpent, though in Job xli, 1, it is possible that the reference is to the crocodile. Cp. BEHEMOTH.

The name is applied to a ship of great size from the reference in Ps. civ, 25, 26—

This great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts. There go the ships; there is that leviathan, whom thou hast made to play therein.

But this is a mistranslation of the Hebrew, the correct rendering being—according to Dr. Cheyne—

... There dragons move along; (yea), Leviathan whom thou didst appoint ruler therein.

Hobbes took the name as the title for his treatise on "the Matter, Forme, and Power of a Commonwealth Ecclesiasticall and Civil" (1651), and applied it to the Commonwealth as a political organism. He says:—

I have set forth the nature of man, (whose Pride and other Passions have compelled him to submit himself to Government;) together with the great power of his Governour, whom I compared to Leviathan, taking that comparison out of the two last verses of the one and fortieth of Job; where God having set forth the great power of Leviathan, calleth him King of the Proud.—Leviathan; Pt. ii, ch. xxviii.

The Leviathan of Literature. Dr. Johnson (1709-84).

Levitation is a term applied to the phenomenon of heavy bodies rising and floating in the air. It is frequently mentioned in the Hindu scriptures and other writings, and it is a not-uncommon attribute of Catholic saints. Joseph of Cupertino (1603-66) was the subject of such frequent levitation that he was forbidden by his superiors to attend choir and performed his devotions in a special chapel where his levitation would cause no distraction to other worshippers. D. D. Home was alleged by Sir W. Crookes to have had this power or gift. Scientific research has not yet found an explanation.

Levites (lê' vitz). In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.), the Dissenting clergy who were expelled by the Act of Conformity.

Lewis Machine-gun. Named after an American Army officer and inventor, Isaac Newton Lewis (1858-1931), whose organizational system still dominates the artillery corps.

Lex. (Lat., law).

Lex non scripta (leks non skrip' ta) (Lat., unwritten law). The common law, as distinguished from the statute or written law. Common law does not derive its force from being recorded, and though its several provisions have been compiled and printed, the compilations are not statutes, but simply remembrancers.

Lex talionis (Lat.). The law of retaliation; tit for tat.

Leyden Jar. A glass vessel partly coated, inside and out, with lead foil, and used to accumulate electricity; invented by Vanleight, of Leyden, Holland, in 1745.

Lia-fail. The Irish name of the Coronation Stone, or Stone of Destiny, of the ancient Irish kings. See SCONE; TANIST STONE.

Liar. Liars should have good memories. This old proverb, which is found in many languages and was quoted by St. Jerome in the 4th century, has been traced to Quintilian's Mendacem memorem esse oportet. "It is fitting that a liar should be a man of good memory" (Institutes, IV, ii, 91). It occurs in Taverner's translation of Erasmus's Proverbs (1539)—

A lyer ought not to be forgetfull.

And Montaigne says (Essays, I, ix):—

It is not without reason, men say, that he who hath not a good and readie memorie, should never meddle with telling of lies, and feare to become a liar.

Libel (Lat. libellus, a little book). A writing of a defamatory nature, one which contains malicious statements ridiculing someone or calculated to bring him into disrepute, etc.; a lampoon, a satire. Originally a plaintiff's statement of his case, which usually "defames" the defendant, was called a "libel," for it made a "little book."

Malicious intention is not necessary to make a written or printed statement libellous if it reflects on the character of another and is published without lawful justification or excuse, and the use of the name of a real person in a work of fiction has been held to constitute a libel.

In legal phraseology a libel is the written statement commencing a suit, containing the plaintiff's allegations.

The greater the truth, the greater the libel, a dictum of Lord Ellenborough (1750-1818), who amplified it by the explanation—"if the language used were true, the person would suffer more than if it were false."

Burns, in some lines written at Stirling, attributes the saying to the Earl of Mansfield—Dost not know that old Mansfield, who writes like the Bible,

Says: "The more 'tis a truth, sir, the more 'tis a libel"?

Liber (Lat., a book).

Liber Albus (Lat., the white book). A compilation of the laws and customs of the City of London, made in 1419, by John Carpenter, town clerk.

Liber Niger. The Black Book of the Exchequer, compiled by Gervase of Tilbury, in the reign of Henry II. It is a roll of the military tenants.

Liberal. A political term introduced in the early 19th century from Spain and France (where it denoted "advanced" or revolutionary politicians), and employed in 1815 by Byron, Leigh Hunt, and others as the title of a periodical representing their views in politics, religion, and literature. It was originally bestowed upon the advanced Whigs as a term of reproach. but when the moderate Whigs formed a coalition with the Tories and the advanced Whigs with the Radicals, it was adopted by the latter party; it came into general use about 1831, when the Reform Bill, in Lord Grey's Ministry, gave it prominence.

Influenced in a great degree by the philosophy and the politics of the Continent, they [the Whigs] endeavoured to substitute cosmopolitan for national principles, and they baptized the new scheme of politics with the plausible name of "Liberalism."—DISRAELI, June 24, 1872.

Liberal Unionists. Those Liberals who united, in 1886, with Lord Salisbury and the Conservative party to oppose Home Rule for Ireland. Lord Hartington, afterwards Duke of Devonshire, and Joseph Chamberlain were the chiefs of the party.

Liberate. At a press conference in May, 1944, President Roosevelt said that the Allied campaigns in Europe were a liberation, not an invasion. This gave rise to a sarcastic use of the verb "to liberate" as a synonym for "to loot."

Liberator, The. The Peruvians so call Simon Bolivar (1783-1830), who established the independence of Peru. Daniel O'Connell (1775-1847) was also so called, because he led the agitation which resulted in the repeal of the Penal Laws and the Emancipation of the Irish Roman Catholics.

Liberator was the name associated with a famous financial crash at the close of last century. In 1868 Jabez Balfour promoted the Liberator Building Society in which a great number of small investors embarked their entire capital. The crash came in 1892, owing to the systematic fraud whereby Balfour had applied the funds to all manner of wild speculation. Balfour, at the time M.P. for Burnley, was sentenced to 14 years penal servitude.

Liberator of the World. So Benjamin Franklin (1706-90) has been called.

Libertarians. See AGENT.

Libertine. A debauchee, a dissolute person; one who puts no restraint on his personal indulgence.

A libertine, in earlier use, was a speculative free-thinker in matters of religion and in the theory of morals . . . but [it has come] to signify a profligate.—TRENCH: On the Study of Words, lecture iii.

In the New Testament the word is used to mean a freedman (Lat. Libertinus).

Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, . . . disputing with Stephen.—Acts vi, 9.

There was a sect of heretics in Holland, about 1525, who maintained that nothing is sinful but to those who think it sinful, and that perfect innocence is to live without doubt.

Liberty means "to do what one likes." (Lat. liber, free.)

Civil liberty. The liberty of a subject to conduct his own affairs as he thinks proper, provided he neither infringes on the equal liberty of others, nor offends against the good morals or laws under which he is living.

Moral liberty. Such freedom as is essential to render a person responsible for what he does, or what he omits to do.

Natural liberty. Unrestricted freedom to exercise all natural functions in their proper places; the state of being subject only to the laws of nature.

Political liberty. The freedom of a nation from any unjust abridgment of its rights and independence; the right to participate in political elections and civil offices, and to have a voice in the administration of the laws under which one lives.

Religious liberty. Freedom in religious opinions, and in both private and public worship, provided such freedom in no wise interferes with the equal liberty of others.

The liberty of the press. The right to publish what one pleases, subject only to penalty if the publication is mischievous, hurtful, or libellous to the state or individuals.

Cap of Liberty. See CAP.

Liberty Enlightening the World. The colossal statue standing on Bedloe's (or Liberty) Island, at the entrance of New York Harbour, presented to the American people by France in commemoration of the centenary of the American Declaration of Independence, and inaugurated in 1886. It is of bronze, 155 ft. in height (standing on a pedestal 135 ft. high), and represents a woman, draped, and holding a lighted torch in her upraised hand. It is the work of the Alsatian sculptor, Auguste Bartholdi (1834-1904).

The statue of Liberty, placed over the entrance of the Palais Royal, Paris, was modelled from Mme Tallien.

The liberties of the Fleet. The district immediately surrounding the Fleet, the old debtors' prison in the City of London, in which prisoners were sometimes allowed to reside, and beyond which they were not allowed to go. They included the north side of Ludgate Hill and the Old Bailey to Fleet Lane, down the lane to the market, and on the east side along by the prison wall to the foot of Ludgate Hill.

The word liberty was also used to denote the areas belonging to the City of London, but lying immediately without the City walls which, in course of time, were attached to the nearest ward within the walls, and to the surroundings of the Tower of London. See TOWER LIBERTY.

Liberty Ship. A name given to a type of merchant vessel of some 10,000 tons built in numbers by U.S.A. during World War II.

In the Royal Navy it is the name given to the boat taking men off a warship for shore leave.

Liberty Tree, or Pole (U.S.A.). The first so called was an elm on Boston Common. A pole inscribed "To his Gracious Majesty George III, Mr. Pitt, and Liberty" was set up in New York in 1766. It was cut down by the British four times, but the fifth remained for ten years.

Libido (li bē' dō). A term used by Freud to designate "the energy of those instincts which have to do with all that may be comprised under the word 'Love.'" More simply, it is applied to the innate impelling force of sex urge.

Libitina (lib it'i nâ). The goddess who, in ancient Italy, presided over funerals. She was identified by the Romans with Proserpina, and her name was frequently used as a synonym for death itself.

Libra (Lat., the balance). The seventh sign of the Zodiac (and the name of one of the ancient constellations), which the sun enters about September 22nd and leaves about October 22nd. At this time the day and night being weighed would be found equal.

Library. Before the invention of paper the thin rind between the solid wood and the outside bark of certain trees was used for writing on; this was in Lat. called liber, which came in time to signify also a "book." Hence our library, the place for books; librarian, the keeper of books; and the French livre, a book.

Famous libraries:—

Athens public library, founded 540 B.C.

The first private library was that of Aristotle, 334 B.C.

Alexandrian Library, burned A.D. 640.

St. Mark's, Venice, founded with gifts from Petrarch, 1468.

Vatican Library, 1450.

Matthias Corvinus's Library (500,000 vols.)

He was King of Hungary, died 1490.

Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, founded 1350.

University Library, St. Andrews, founded 1411.

Cambridge University Library, founded 1475.

Bodleian Library, Oxford, founded 1598.

British Museum Library, became important with the gift of George III's books, 1823.

New York Public Library.

Morgan Library.

Henry E. Huntington Library.

John Rylands Library, Manchester.

A circulating library. A library from which the books may be borrowed and taken by readers to their homes.

Libya. The north of Africa between Egypt and the Atlantic Ocean. It was the Greek name for Africa in general. The Romans used the word sometimes as synonymous with Africa, and sometimes for the fringe containing Carthage.

Libya was occupied by the Italians in 1911-12, and by the Treaty of Ouchy (1912) the sovereignty of the province was transferred from Turkey to Italy. The Italians began its colonization, and so late as 1938 some 16,000 emigrants left Genoa for the province. In 1942-43 the Germans and Italians were driven from Libya in the British advance from El Alamein. In 1949 the General Assembly of the United Nations decreed that Libya should become an independent state by January 1st, 1952. On this date Libya became a kingdom under Sayed Mohammed Idris.

Lich. A dead body (A.S. lie; Ger. leiche).

Lich-fowls. Birds that feed on carrion, as night-ravens, etc.

Lich-gate. The shed or covered place at the entrance of churchyards, intended to afford shelter to the coffin and mourners, while they wait for the clergyman to conduct the cortège into the church.

Lich-owl. The screech-owl, superstitiously supposed to foretell death.

Lich-wake or Lyke-wake. The funeral feast or the waking of a corpse, i.e. watching it all night.

In a pastoral written by Ælfric in 998 for Wilfsige, Bishop of Sherborne, the attendance of the clergy at lyke-wakes is forbidden.

Lich-way. The path by which a funeral is conveyed to church, which not infrequently deviates from the ordinary road. It was long supposed that wherever a dead body passed became a public thoroughfare.

Lick. I licked him. I flogged or beat him. A licking is a thrashing, or—in games—a defeat, as I gave him a good licking at billiards.

A lick and a promise. To give a lick and a promise to a piece of work is to do it in a hasty and superficial way—as a cat might give its dirty face one quick lick of its tongue with a promise of more cleaning later.

To go at a great lick. To run, ride, etc., at great speed; to put on a spurt.

To lick into shape. To make presentable; to give a good appearance, decent manners, etc., to. In allusion to the tradition that the cubs of bears are cast shapeless, and remain so till the dam has licked them into proper form. See BEAR.

So watchful Bruin forms, with plastic care,
Each growing lump, and brings it to a bear.

POPE: Dunciad, 1, 101.

To lick one's lips. To give evident signs of the enjoyment of anticipation.

To lick a man's shoes. To be humble or abjectly servile towards him. Cp. LICKSPITTLE.

To lick the dust or the ground. See TO KISS THE DUST under KISS.

Lickpenny. Something or someone that makes the money go—that "licks up" the pennies. Lydgate (about 1425) wrote a humorous poem called London Lickpenny in which he shows that life in London makes the money fly.

Lickspittle. A toady, the meanest of sycophants.

Lictors. Binders (Lat. ligo, to bind or tie). These Roman officers were so called because they bound the hands and feet of criminals before they executed the sentence of the law.

Lidice (lid' i si). Once a mining village in Czechoslovakia. In 1942 the German authorities asserted that the inhabitants had helped the patriots who had assassinated the atrocious Reinhard Heydrich, Nazi governor of Bohemia. All the adult inhabitants of Lidice were shot and the children taken away none have ever known where; the village was then utterly rased to the ground. This example of German ferocity aroused such indignation throughout the civilized world that in U.S.A., Mexico, and elsewhere a number of towns and villages were renamed Lidice in its memory.

Lido (lê' dō). An outdoor bathing-pool, usually with a place for sunbathing and often with accommodation for concerts or other amusements. The name is taken from the sandy island called the Lido, facing the Adriatic outside Venice, and a fashionable bathing resort.

Lie. A falsehood (A.S. lyge, from leogan, to lie).

A lie hath no feet. Because it cannot stand alone. In fact, a lie wants twenty others to support it, and even then is in constant danger of tripping. Cp. LIAR (Liars should have good memories).

A white lie. A conventional lie, such as telling a caller that Mrs. A. or Mrs. B. is not at home, meaning not "at home" to that particular caller.

It is said that Dean Swift called on a friend, and was told "master is not at home." The friend called on the dean, and Swift, opening the window, shouted, "Not at home." When the friend expostulated, Swift said, "I believed your footman when he said his master was not at home; surely you can believe the master himself when he tells you he is not at home."

Lie detector. An American invention which records the heart-beats of a man under questioning. It has been found that a human being cannot tell a lie without the pulse of his heart increasing, and this increase of pulsation is recorded. In some States of the Union the findings of this machine are accepted as legal evidence.

The Father of lies. Satan (John viii, 44).

The greatest lie. In Heywood's Four P's, an interlude of about 1543, a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Poticary, and a Pedlar disputed as to which could tell the greatest lie. The Palmer said he had never seen a woman out of patience; whereupon the other three P's threw up the sponge, saying such a falsehood could not possibly be outdone.

The lie circumstantial, direct, etc. See COUNTERCHECK.

To give one the lie. To accuse him to his face of telling a falsehood.

To give the lie to. To show that such and such a statement is false; to belie.

Lie (A.S. licgan, to 'bide or rest).

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee.

This is part of Dr. Evan's epitaph on Sir John Vanbrugh (1664-1726), the dramatist, herald, and architect. The "heavy loads" referred to were Blenheim, Greenwich Hospital (which he finished), Castle Howard in Yorkshire, and other massive buildings.

To lie at the catch. In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress Talkative says to Faithful, "You lie at the catch, I perceive." To which Faithful replies, "No, not I; I am only for setting things right." To lie at or on the catch is to lie in wait or to lay a trap to catch one.

To lie in. To be confined in childbirth.

To lie in state. Said of a corpse of a royal or distinguished person that is displayed to the general public.

To lie low. To conceal oneself or one's intentions.

All this while Brer Rabbit lay low.—JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS: Uncle Remus.

To lie over. To be deferred; as, this question must lie over till next sessions.

To lie to. To stop the progress of a vessel at sea by reducing the sails and counter-bracing the yards; hence, to cease from doing something.

We now ran plump into a fog, and were obliged to lie to.—LORD DUFFERIN: Letters from High Latitudes.

To lie to one's work. To work energetically.

To lie with one's fathers. To be buried in one's native place.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt.—Gen. xlvii, 30.

To lie up. To refrain from work, especially on account of ill health; to rest.

Liege (lêj). The word means one bound, a bondsman (O.Fr. lige, connected with O.H.Ger. ledig, free); hence, vassals were called liege-men—i.e. men bound to serve their lord, or liege lord.

Unarmed and bareheaded, on his knees, and with his hands placed between those of his lord, he [the military tenant] repeated these words: "Hear, my lord, I have become your liegeman of life and limb, and earthly worship; and faith and truth I will bear to you to live and die.—LINGARD: History of England, vol. ii, ch. 1.

Lieutenant (in the British Navy and Army, lef ten' ant; American usage, loo ten' ant), is the Latin locum-tenens, through the French. A Lieutenant-Colonel is the colonel's deputy. The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland was the representative of the Crown in that country.

Life (A.S. lif). Drawn from life. Drawn or described from some existing person or object.

For life. As long as life continues.

For the life of me. True as I am alive. Even if my life depended on it. A strong asseveration, originally "under pain of losing my life."

Nor could I, for the life of me, see how the creation of the world had anything to do with what I was talking about.—GOLDSMITH: Vicar of Wakefield.

Large as life. Of the same size as the object represented.

On my life. I will answer for it by my life.

People of high life. The upper ten, the haut monde.

To bear a charmed life. To escape accidents in a marvellous manner.

To know life. To be well versed in the niceties of social intercourse, good breeding, manners, etc.; to be up to all the dodges by which one may be imposed upon.

To see life. To "knock about" town, where life may be seen at its fullest; to move in smart or fast society.

To the life. In exact imitation. "Done to the life."

Life Guards. The two senior cavalry regiments of the Household Troops (q.v.), the members of which are not less than six feet high; hence, a fine, tall, manly fellow is called "a regular Life Guardsman."

Life preserver. A buoyant jacket, belt, or other appliance, to support the human body in water; also a loaded staff or knuckle-duster for self-defence.

Lift. To have one at a lift is to have one in your power. When a wrestler has his antagonist in his hands and lifts him from the ground, he has him "at a lift," or in his power.

"Sirra," says he, "I have you at a lift."

Now you are come unto your latest shift."

PERCY: Reliques; Guy and Amarant.

Air-lift. Organized manœuvre to transport a quantity of troops or stores to a destination by air. The Berlin air-lift, to victual the British and American zones of the city after the Russian embargo on all land transport, began June 28th, 1948 and ended May 12th, 1949, having made in all 195,530 flights and carried 1,414,000 tons of food, coal and other stores.

Lifter. A thief. We still call one who plunders shops a "shop-lifter."

Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Troilus and Cressida, i, 2.

Lifting. In Scotland, the raising of the coffin on to the shoulders of the bearers. Certain ceremonies preceded the funeral.

At the first service were offered meat and ale; at the second, shortbread and whisky; at the third, seed-cake and wine; at the fourth, currant-bun and rum; at the last, sugar-biscuits and brandy.

Lifting the little finger. See FINGER.

Ligan. See LAGAN.

Light. The A.S. of this word in both senses, i.e. illumination and smallness of weight, is leoht, but in the former sense it is connected with Ger. licht, Lat. lux, and Gr. leukos (white), and in the latter with Ger. leicht, Gr. elachus (not heavy), and Sansk. laghu. The verb to light, to dismount, to settle after flight, is A.S. lihtan, from the last mentioned leoht, originally meaning to lighten, or relieve of a burden.

According to his lights. According to his information or knowledge of the matter; or, according to the capacity he has for forming opinions on it.

Ancient lights. A sign put up on a building to show the owner thereof has a right to the light coming from adjacent property, and consequently, no building may be erected there without his consent, if it would interfere with his light. By the Prescription Act of 1832 a light is ancient if it has been uninterrupted for a period of twenty years.

Before the lights. In theatrical parlance, on the stage, i.e. before the foot-lights.

Light comedian. One who takes humorous, but not low, parts. Orlando, in As You Like It, might be taken for a "light comedian"; Tony Lumpkin (She Stoops to Conquer), and Paul Pry (in Poole's comedy of that name, 1825) are parts for a "low comedian."

Light and leading. See LEADING.

Light-fingered. See FINGER.

Light gains make a heavy purse. Small profits and a quick return, is the best way of gaining wealth.

Light Infantry. In the British Army, infantry carrying less equipment than normal and trained to move at high speed in manœuvring round the flanks of an enemy. They were introduced into the British Army by Sir John Moore (1761-1809). The regiments so designated still march at a high speed, with short paces and with arms trailed instead of carried at the slope.

Light o' love. An inconstant or loose-principled woman; a harlot.

Light troops. A term formerly applied to light cavalry, i.e. lancers and hussars, who are neither such large men as the "Heavies," nor yet so heavily equipped.

The light of Thy countenance. God's smile of approbation and love.

Lift up the light of Thy countenance on us.—Ps. iv, 6.

The light of the age. Maimonides or Rabbi Moses ben Maimon, of Cordova (1135-1204).

To bring to light. To discover and expose.

The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light; would he were returned!—Measure for Measure, iii, 2.

To light upon. To discover by accident; to come across by a lucky chance. Thus, Dr. Johnson wrote to Mrs. Thrale "How did you light on your specifick for the tooth-ach?"

To make light of. To treat as of no importance; to take little notice of.

Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage.

But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise.—Matt. xxii, 4, 5.

To put out one's light. To kill him, "send him into the outer darkness." Othello says, "Put out the light and then put out the light."

To stand in one's own light. To act in such a way as to hinder advancement.

To throw or shed light upon. To elucidate, to explain.

Lighthouse. See PHAROS.

Light year. This is a term used by scientists as a unit in measuring stellar distances. Light travels at the rate of 186,000 miles a second; a light year, or the distance travelled by light in a year, is, therefore, 5,876,068,880,000 miles.

Lightning. Hamilcar (d. 228 B.C.), the Carthaginian general, was called "Barca," the Phœnician for "lightning" (Heb. Barak), both on account of the rapidity of his march and for the severity of his attacks.

Chain lightning. Two or more flashes of lightning repeated without intermission.

Forked lightning. Zig-zag lightning.

Globular lightning. A meteoric ball (of fire), which sometimes falls on the earth and flies off with an explosion.

Lightning conductor. A metal rod raised above a building with one end in the earth, to carry off the lightning and prevent its injuring the building.

Lightning preservers. The most approved classical preservatives against lightning were the eagle, the sea-calf, and the laurel. Jupiter chose the first, Augustus Cæsar the second, and Tiberius the third. (Columella, x; Sueton. in Vit. Aug., xc.; ditto in Vit. Tib., lxi). Cp. HOUSE-LEEK.

Bodies scathed and persons struck dead by lightning were said to be incorruptible; and anyone so distinguished was held by the ancients in great honour. (J. C. Bullenger: De Terræ Motu, etc., v, 11.)

Liguria (li gū' ri à). The ancient name of a part of Cisalpine Gaul, including the modern Genoa, Piedmont, some of Savoy, etc. In 1797 Napoleon founded a "Ligurian Republic," with Genoa as its capital, and embracing also Venetia and a part of Sardinia. It was annexed to France in 1805.

The Ligurian Sage. Aulus Persius Flaccus (A.D. 34-62), born at Volaterræ, in Etruria, famous for his Satires.

Lilburne. If no one else were alive, John would quarrel with Lilburne. John Lilburne (1614-57) was a contentious Leveller (q.v.) in the Commonwealth; so rancorous against rank that he could never satisfy himself that any two persons were exactly on the same level.

Is John departed? and is Lilburne gone?

Farewell to both—to Lilburne and to John.

Yet, being gone, take this advice from me.

Let them not both in one grave buried be.

Here lay ye John, lay Lilburne thereabout;

For if they both should meet, they would fall out.

Epigrammatic Epitaph.

Lilith (lil' ith). A Semitic (in origin probably Babylonian) demon supposed to haunt wildernesses in stormy weather, and to be specially dangerous to children and pregnant women. She is referred to in Is. xxxiv, 14, as the "screech-owl" (Revised Version, "night monster," and in margin "Lilith"); and the Talmudists give the name to a wife that Adam is fabled to have had before Eve, who, refusing to submit to him, left Paradise for a region of the air, and still haunts the night. Superstitious Jews put in the chamber occupied by their wife four coins inscribed with the names of Adam and Eve and the words "Avaunt thee, Lilith!" Goethe introduced her in his Faust, and Rossetti in his Eden Bower faunted the Adamitic story, making the Serpent the instrument of Lilith's vengeance. See THE DEVIL AND HIS DAM under DEVIL, and Cp. LAMIA.

Lilli-Burlero (lil' i bêr lër' ô). Said to have been the watchword of the Irish Roman Catholics in their massacres of the Protestants in 1641, the words were adopted as the refrain of a piece of political doggerel (written by Lord Wharton) satirizing James II, which contributed not a little to the success of the great revolution of 1688. Burnet says, "It made an impression on the (king's) army that cannot be imagined. . . . The whole army, and at last the people, both in city and country, were singing it perpetually . . . never had so slight a thing so great an effect."

The song is referred to in Tristram Shandy, and is given in Percy's Reliques (series ii, Bk. 3). Chappell attributes the air to Henry Purcell.

Wharton afterwards boasted that he had sung a king out of three kingdoms. But in truth, the success of Lilliburlero was the effect, not the cause, of that excited state of public feeling which produced the Revolution.—MACAULAY: History.

In World War II the tune of Lilliburlero was revived in certain official broadcasts on military matters.

Lilli Marlene. A song composed by Norbert Schultze, in 1938, and sung by the Swedish singer Lala Anderson. It was broadcast by the German radio on the capture of Belgrade, 1941, and became a favourite song of the Afrika Korps. From them it was caught up by the British 8th Army. In 1944 a documentary film, The True Story of Lilli Marlene appeared, featuring Lala Anderson herself.

Lilliput. The country of pigmies ("Lilliputians") to whom Captain Lemuel Gulliver was a giant. (Swift: Gulliver's Travels.)

Lily, The. There is a tradition that the lily sprang from the repentant tears of Eve as she went forth from Paradise.

In Christian art, the lily is an emblem of chastity, innocence, and purity. In pictures of the Annunciation, Gabriel is sometimes represented as carrying a lily-branch, while a vase containing a lily stands before the Virgin, who is kneeling in prayer. St. Joseph holds a lily-branch in his hand, indicating that his wife Mary was a virgin.

Lily of France. The device of Clovis was three black toads (see CRAFTAUD); but the story goes that an aged hermit of Joye-en-valle saw a miraculous light stream one night into his cell, and an angel appeared to him holding an azure shield of wonderful beauty, emblazoned with three gold lilies that shone like stars, which the hermit was commanded to give to Queen Clotilde; she gave it to her royal husband, whose arms were everywhere victorious, and the device was thereupon adopted as the emblem of France. (See Les Petits Bollandistes, vol. vi, p. 426.) It is said the people were commonly called Liliaris, and the kingdom Lihum in the time of Philippe le Bel, Charles VIII, and Louis XII. See FLEUR-DE-LYS.

Florence is "The City of Lilies."

By "the lily in the field" in Matt. vi, 28, which is said to surpass Solomon in all his glory, is meant simply the wild lily, probably a species of iris. Our "lily of the valley"—with which this is sometimes confused—is one of the genus Convallaria, a very different plant.

To paint the lily. See PAINT.

Limb. Slang for a mischievous rascal, a young imp; it is short for the older Limb of the devil, where the word implies "agent" or "scion." Dryden called Fletcher "a limb of Shakespeare."

Limb of the law. A clerk attitled to a lawyer, a sheriff's officer, a policeman, or other legal assistant. Just as the limbs of the body do what the head directs, so these obey the commands of the head of the office.

Limbo (Lat., border, fringe, edge). The borders of hell; the portion assigned by the Schoolmen to those departed spirits to whom the benefits of redemption did not apply through no fault of their own.

The Paradise of Fools. As fools or idiots are not responsible for their works, the old Schoolmen held that they are not punished in purgatory and cannot be received into heaven, so they go to a special "Paradise of Fools."

Then might you see
Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tossed
And fluttered into rags; then relics, beads,
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. All these, upwhirled aloft,
Into a Limbo large and broad, since called
The Paradise of Fools.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, iii, 489.

Cp. FOOL'S PARADISE under FOOL.

Limbo of the Fathers. The half-way house between earth and heaven, where the patriarchs and prophets who died before the death of the Redeemer await the Last Day, when they will be received into heaven. Some hold that this is the "hell" into which Christ descended after He gave up the ghost on the cross.

Shakespeare uses limbo patrum for "quod," jail, confinement.

I have some of them in limbo patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days.—Henry VIII, v, 4.

The Limbo of Children, for children who die before they are baptized or are responsible for their actions.

Limbus of the Moon. See MOON.

Limehouse. At one time descriptive of violent abuse of one's political opponents: so called out of compliment to a speech by Lloyd George at Limehouse, London, on July 30th, 1909, when he poured forth scorn and abuse on dukes, landlords, financial magnates, etc.

Lime-light. A vivid light, giving off little heat, produced by the combustion of oxygen and hydrogen on a surface of lime. It is also called Drummond Light, after Thomas Drummond (1797-1840), who invented it in 1826. It was tried at the South Foreland lighthouse in 1861. But its main use developed in the theatre, where it could be used to throw a powerful beam upon one player to the exclusion of others on the stage. Hence the phrase to be in the lime-light, to be in the full glare of public attention.

Limerick. A nonsense verse in the metre, popularized by Edward Lear in his Book of Nonsense (1846), of which the following is an example:—

There was a young lady of Wilts,
Who walked up to Scotland on stilts;
When they said it was shocking
To show so much stocking,
She answered, "Then what about kilts?"

The name was not given till much later, and comes from the chorus, "We'll all come up, come up to Limerick," which was interposed after each verse as it was improvised and sung by a convivial party.

Limey (lī' mī). In American and Australian slang this means a British sailor or ship, or just a Briton. It comes from the old system of taking steps to prevent scurvy by making the crew take lime water.

Limp. A word formed of the initials of Louis (XIV), James (II), his wife Mary of Modena, and the Prince (of Wales), and used as a Jacobite toast in the time of William III. Cp. NOTARIKON.

Lincoln. A hybrid Celtic and Latin name, Lindumcolonia, Lindum, the name of the old British town, meaning "the hill fort on the pool."

Lincoln green. Lincoln, at one time, was noted for its light green, as was Coventry for its blue, and Yorkshire for its grey cloth. Cp. KENDAL GREEN.

Swains in shepherds' gray, and girls in Lincoln green.
DRAYTON: Polyolbion, xxv, 262.

Lincoln College (Oxford). Founded by Richard Fleming, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1427, and completed by Thomas Rotherham, Bishop of Lincoln (afterwards Archbishop of York and Lord Chancellor), in 1479.

Lincoln Imp. A grotesque carving, having long ears and only one leg, in the Angel Choir of Lincoln Cathedral.

The devil looking over Lincoln. See DEVIL.

Lincoln's Inn. One of the four Inns of Court (q.v.), in London. Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, built a mansion here in the 14th century on ground which had belonged to the Black Friars, but was granted to him by Edward I. A Bishop of Chichester, in the reign of Henry VII, granted leases here to certain students of law.

Lindabrides (līn dā brī' dēz). A heroine in The Mirror of Knighthood, whose name at one time was a synonym for a kept mistress.

Linden. The German name (largely used in England) for lime trees. Unter den Linden ("under the limes") is the name of the principal street in Berlin. It is about 1,100 yd in length.

Baucis (see PHILEMON) was converted into a linden tree.

Lindor. One of the conventional names given by the classical poets to a rustic swain, a lover en bergère.

Line. All along the line. In every particular, as in such phrases as—

The accuracy of the statement is contested all along the line by persons on the spot.

Crossing the line. Sailing across the Equator. Advantage is usually taken of this for all sorts of sports aboard ship, playing great practical jokes on those who have never crossed the Line before. The custom was at its prime in the old sailing-ship days. A sailor crudely dressed as Father Neptune, accompanied by a yet cruder Amphitrite appeared over the ship's side, followed by yet others, naked to the waist and painted with red ochre or the like. The neophytes were then seized, lathered with some horrible compound and while still struggling were forcibly shaved with a piece of rusty hoop iron. This was the usual procedure, accompanied by much horseplay and licence.

The line. In the British Army all regular infantry regiments except the Foot Guards, the Rifle Brigade, and the Marines are line regiments.

Line of battle. The order of troops in the old set-piece battle, drawn up so as to present a battle-front. There were three lines—the van, the main body, and the rear. A fleet drawn up in line of battle is so arranged that the ships are ahead and astern of each other at stated distances.

To break the enemy's line is to derange his order of battle, and so put him to confusion.

Line of beauty. According to Hogarth, a curve thus ~.

Line of direction. The line in which a body moves, a force acts, or motion is communicated. In order that a body may stand without falling, a line let down from the centre of gravity must fall within the base on which the object stands. Thus the leaning tower of Pisa does not fall, because this rule is preserved.

Line of life. In palmistry, the crease in the left hand beginning above the web of the thumb, and running towards or up to the wrist.

The nearer it approaches the wrist the longer will be the life, according to palmists. If long and deeply marked, it indicates long life with very little trouble; if crossed or cut with other marks, it indicates sickness.

Line upon line. Admonition or instruction repeated little by little (a line at a time).

Line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little.—Is. xxviii, 10.

Hard lines. Hard luck, a hard lot. Here lines means an allotment measured out.

No day without its line. A saying attributed by Pliny to the Greek artist Apelles (nulla dies sine linea), who said he never passed a day without doing at least one line, and to this steady industry owed his great success. The words were adopted as his motto by Anthony Trollope.

On the line. Said of a picture that at the Royal Academy is hung in a position that places its centre about the level of the spectator's eye.

The lines have fallen to me in pleasant places (Ps. xvi, 6). The part allotted to me and measured off by a measuring line. The allusion is to drawing a line to mark out the lot of each tribe, hence line became the synonym of lot, and lot means position or destiny.

The thin red line. British infantrymen in action. The old 93rd Highlanders were so described at the battle of Balaclava by W. H. Russell, because they did not take the trouble to form into square; their regimental magazine is named The Thin Red Line.

To read between the lines. To discern the secret meaning. One method of cryptography is to write so that the hidden message is revealed only when alternate lines are read.

What line are you in? What trade or profession are you of? Commercial travellers use the word frequently to signify the sort of goods which they have to dispose of; as, one travels "in the hardware line," another "in the drapery line," or "grocery line," etc.

Line-up. A phrase with a variety of meanings; a parade of persons, especially criminals, for inspection or recognition; an arrangement of players at the start of a game; the deploying of opposing forces before a battle.

To shoot a line. An R.A.F. phrase meaning to exaggerate, to tell a tall story.

Lingo. Talk, language, especially some peculiar or technical phraseology; from lingua, tongue.

Lingua Franca (ling' gwa fräng' kâ). A species of Italian mixed with French, Greek, Arabic, etc., spoken on the coasts of the Mediterranean. Also, any jumble of different languages.

Lining of the Pocket. Money.

My money is spent: Can I be content

With pockets deprived of their lining?

The Lady's Decoy, or Man Midwife's Defence, 1738, p. 4.

When the great court tailor wished to obtain the patronage of Beau Brummel, he made him a present of a dress-coat lined with bank-notes. Brummel wrote a letter of thanks, stating that he quite approved of the coat, and he especially admired the lining.

Linnæan System (lin ē' ân). The artificial classification adopted by the great Swedish naturalist Linnæus (1707-78), who arranged his three kingdoms of animals, vegetables, and minerals into classes, orders, genera, species, and varieties, according to certain characteristics.

Linne, The Heir of (lin). The hero of an old ballad, given in Percy's Reliques, which tells how he wasted his substance in riotous living, and, having spent all, sold his estates to his steward, reserving only a poor lodge in a lonely glen. When no one would lend him money, he retired to the lodge, where was dangling a rope with a running noose. He put it round his neck and sprang aloft, but he fell to the ground, and when he came to espied two chests of beaten gold, and a third full of white money, over which was written—

Once more, my sonne, I sette thee clere;

Amend thy life and follies past;

For but thou amend thee of thy life,

That rope must be thy end at last.

The heir of Linne now returned to his old hall, where he was refused the loan of forty pence by his quondam steward; one of the guests remarked that he ought to have lent it, as he had bought the estate cheap enough. "Cheap call you it?" said the steward; "why, he shall have it back for 100 marks less." "Done," said the heir of Linne, and recovered his estates.

Lion. As an agnomen.

Alp Arslan, son of Togrul Beg, the Perso-Turkish monarch (reigned 1063-72) was surnamed The Valiant Lion.

Ali Pasha, called The Lion of Janina, overthrown in 1822 by Ibrahim Pasha. (1741, 1788-1822.)

Arioch (fifth of the dynasty of Ninu, the Assyrian), called Arioch Ellasar—i.e. Arioch Melech al Asser, the Lion King of Assyria. (1927-1897 B.C.)

Damelowicz, Prince of Haliez, who founded Lemberg (Lion City) in 1259.

Gustavus Adolphus, called The Lion of the North. (1594, 1611-32.)

Hamza, called The Lion of God and His Prophet. So Gabriel told Mohammed that his uncle was enregistered in heaven.

Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Saxony, was called The Lion for his daring courage. (1129-95.)

Louis VIII of France was called The Lion because he was born under the sign Leo. (1187, 1223-26.)

Richard I. Cœur de Lion (Lion's heart), so called for his bravery. (1157, 1189-99.)

William of Scotland, so called because he chose a red lion rampant for his cognizance. (Reigned 1165-1214.)

See LION of GOD below.

A lion is emblem of the tribe of Judah; Christ is called "the lion of the tribe of Judah."

Judah is a lion's whelp: . . . he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?—Gen. xlix. 9.

Among the titles of the Emperor of Abyssinia are Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, Elect of God, King of the Kings of Ethiopia.

The Lion in Story and Legend

Cybele is represented as riding in a chariot drawn by two tame lions.

Pracuti, the goddess of nature among the Hindus, is represented in a similar manner.

Hippomenes and Atalanta (fond lovers) were metamorphosed into lions by Cybele.

Hercules is said to have worn over his shoulders the hide of the Nemean lion (see NEMEAN), and the personification of Terror is also arrayed in a lion's hide.

The story of Androcles and the lion (see ANDROCLES) has many parallels, the most famous of which are those related of St. Jerome and St. Gerasimus:—

While St. Jerome was lecturing one day, a lion entered the schoolroom, and lifted up one of its paws. All the disciples fled; but Jerome, seeing that the paw was wounded, drew out of it a thorn and dressed the wound. The lion, out of gratitude, showed a wish to stay with its benefactor. Hence the saint is represented as accompanied by a lion.

St. Gerasimus, says the story, saw, on the banks of the Jordan, a lion coming to him, limping on three feet. When it reached the saint it held up to him the right paw, from which Gerasimus extracted a large thorn. The grateful beast attached itself to the saint, and followed him about as a dog.

Half a score of such tales are told by the Bollandists in the Acta Sanctorum; and in more recent times a similar one was told of Sir George Davis, an English consul at Florence at the beginning of the 19th century. One day he went to see the lions of the great Duke of Tuscany. There was one which the keepers could not tame; but no sooner did Sir George appear than it manifested every symptom of joy. Sir George entered its cage, when the lion leaped on his shoulder, licked his face, wagged its tail, and fawned on him like a dog. Sir George told the great duke that he had brought up the creature; but as it grew older it became dangerous, and he sold it to a Barbary captain. The duke said that he had bought it of the very same man, and the mystery was solved.

Sir Iwan de Galles, a hero of romance, was attended by a lion, which, in gratitude to the knight who had delivered it from a serpent with which it had been engaged in deadly combat, ever after became his faithful servant, approaching the knight with tears, and rising on its hind-feet like a dog.

Sir Geoffrey de Latour was aided by a lion against the Saracens; but the faithful brute was drowned in attempting to follow the vessel in which the knight had embarked on his departure from the Holy Land.

The lion will not touch the true prince (1 Henry IV., ii, 4). This is an old superstition, and has been given a Christian significance, the "true prince" being the Messiah. It is applied to any prince of blood royal, supposed at one time to be hedged around with a sort of divinity.

Fetch the Numidian lion I brought over;
If she be sprung from royal blood, the lion
He'll do her reverence, else . . .
He'll tear her all to pieces.

FLETCHER: The Mad Lover, iv, 5.

The lion in Heraldry

Ever since 1164, when it was adopted as a device by Philip I, Duke of Flanders, the lion has figured largely and in an amazing variety of positions as an heraldic emblem, and, as a consequence, in public-house signs. The earliest and most important attitude of the heraldic lion is rampant (the device of Scotland), but it is also shown as passant, passant gardant (as in the shield of England), salient, sejant, etc., and even dormant. For these terms see HERALDRY.

The lions in the arms of England. They are three lions passant gardant, i.e. walking and showing the full face. The first was that of Rollo, Duke of Normandy, and the second represented the country of Maine, which was added to Normandy. These were the two lions borne by William the Conqueror and his descendants. Henry II added a third lion to represent the Duchy of Aquitaine, which came to him through his wife Eleanor. Any lion not rampant is called a lion leopardé, and the French heralds call the lion passant a leopard; accordingly Napoleon said to his soldiers, "Let us drive these leopards (the English) into the sea."

Since 1603 the royal arms have been supported as now by (dexter) the English lion and (sinister) the Scottish unicorn (see UNICORN); but prior to the accession of James I the sinister supporter was a family badge. Edward III, with whom supporters began, had a lion and eagle; Henry IV, an antelope and swan; Henry V, a lion and antelope; Edward IV, a lion and bull; Richard III, a lion and boar; Henry VII, a lion and dragon; Elizabeth, Mary, and Henry VIII, a lion and greyhound.

The lion in the arms of Scotland is derived from the arms of the ancient Earls of Northumberland and Huntingdon, from whom some of the Scottish monarchs were descended. The tressure is referred to the reign of Achaius (d.

about 819), who made a league with Charlemagne, "who did augment his arms with a double trace formed with Floure-de-lyces, signifying thereby that the lion henceforth should be defended by the ayde of Frenchmen." (Holinshed: Chronicles.)

Sir Walter Scott says:—

William, King of Scotland, having chosen for his armorial bearing a Red Lion rampant, acquired the name of William the Lion; and this rampant lion still constitutes the arms of Scotland; and the president of the heraldic court . . . is called Lord Lion King-at-Arms.—Tales of a Grandfather, iv.

The lion an emblem of the resurrection. According to tradition, the lion's whelp is born dead, and remains so for three days, when the father breathes on it and it receives life. Another tradition is that the lion is the only animal of the cat tribe born with its eyes open, and it is said that it sleeps with its eyes open. This is not a fact.

St. Mark the Evangelist is symbolized by a lion because he begins his gospel with the scenes of St. John the Baptist and Christ in the wilderness. See EVANGELISTS.

A lion at the feet of crusaders or martyrs, in effigy, signifies that they died for their cause.

The Lion of St. Mark, or of Venice. A winged lion sejant, holding an open book with the inscription Pax tibi, Marce, Evangelista Meus. A sword-point rises above the book on the dexter side, and the whole is encircled by an aureola.

Among other distinctive lions that appear in blazonry and on the signs of inns, etc., may be mentioned:—

Blue, the badge of the Earl of Mortimer, also of Denmark.

Crowned, the badge of Henry VIII.

Golden, the badge of Henry I, and also of Percy, Duke of Northumberland.

Rampant, with the tail between its legs and turned over its back, the badge of Edward IV as Earl of March.

Red, of Scotland; also the badge of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, who assumed this badge as a token of his claim to the throne of Castile.

Sleeping, the device of Richard I.

Stantant gardant (i.e. standing and showing a full face), the device of the Duke of Norfolk.

White, the device of the Duke of Norfolk; also of the Earl of Surrey, Earl of Mortimer, and the Fitz-Hammonds.

Lion of God. Ali-Ben-Abou-Thaleb (602-61), the son-in-law of Mohammed, was so called because of his zeal and his great courage. His mother called him at birth Al Haidara, "the Rugged Lion."

Lion-hunter. One who hunts up a celebrity to adorn or give prestige to a party. Mrs. Leo Hunter, in Pickwick, is a good satire on the name and character of a lion-hunter.

Lion of St. Mark. See above.

Lion Sermon. The. Preached annually in St. Katharine Cree Church, Leadenhall Street, London, in October, to commemorate "the wonderful escape" of Sir John Gayre, about 300 years ago, from a lion which he met with on being shipwrecked on the coast of Africa. Sir John was Lord Mayor in 1647.

Sir John Gayre bequeathed £200 for the relief of the poor on condition that a commemorative sermon was preached annually at St. Katharine Cree. It is said that Sir John was on his knees in prayer when the lion came up, smelt about him, prowled round and round him, and then stalked off.

Lions. The lions of a place are sights worth seeing, or the celebrities; so called from the ancient custom of showing strangers, as chief of London sights, the lions at the Tower. The Tower menagerie was abolished in 1834.

Lion's Head. In fountains the water is often made to issue from the mouth of a lion. This is a very ancient custom. The Egyptians thus symbolized the inundation of the Nile, which happens when the sun is in Leo (July 28th to August 23rd), and the Greeks and Romans adopted the device for their fountains.

To place one's head in the lion's mouth. To expose oneself needlessly and foolhardily to danger.

Lion's Provider. A jackal; a foil to another man's wit, a humble friend who plays into your hand to show you to best advantage. The jackal (q.v.) feeds on the lion's leavings, and is said to yell to advise the lion that it has roused up his prey, serving the lion in much the same way as a dog serves a sportsman.

. . . the poor jackals are less foul,

As being the brave lion's keen providers,
Than human insects catering for spiders.

BYRON: Don Juan, ix, 27.

Lion's share. The larger part: all or nearly all. In Æsop's Fables, several beasts joined the lion in a hunt; but, when the spoil was divided, the lion claimed one quarter in right of his prerogative, one for his superior courage, one for his dam and cubs, "and as for the fourth, let who will dispute it with me." Awed by his frown, the other beasts yielded and silently withdrew. Cp. MONTGOMERY.

Lionize a person, To. is either to show him the lions, or chief objects of attraction, or to make a lion of him by fêting him and making a fuss about him.

Lip. Lip homage or service. Verbal devotion. Honouring with the lips while the heart takes no part nor lot in the matter. See Matt. xv, 8; Is. xxix, 13.

To bite one's lip. To express vexation and annoyance, or to suppress some unwanted emotion as laughter or anger.

To carry a stiff upper lip. To be self-reliant; to bear oneself courageously in face of difficulties or danger.

To curl the lip. To express contempt or disgust with the mouth.

To hang the lip. To drop the under lip in sullenness or contempt. Thus in Troilus and Cressida (iii, 1) Helen explains why her brother Troilus is not abroad by saying, "He hangs the lip at something."

A foolish hanging of thy nether lip.—1 Henry IV, i, 4.

To shoot out the lip. To show scorn.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn. They shoot out the lip; they shake the head . . .—Ps. xxii, 7.

Liqueur (li kū' ér). An aromatic and usually sweetened drink combined with various flavourings to give a distinctive character. Liqueurs generally consist of equal portions of alcohol and syrup made from cane sugar mixed with essences and herbs. Some of the most renowned liqueurs originated in monasteries, and the secret of their recipe has been and still is jealously guarded. Among the chief of these are the green and yellow Chartreuse, now made at Tarragona by paid servants and lay brothers. The great profits help to keep up the monasteries and maintain considerable charities. Benedictine, although made on the site of the great monastery of Fécamp, has nothing whatever to do with the monastic order—it is an ordinary commercial product.

Liquidate. In the sinister slang introduced by Fascism, this means to kill, to get out of the way by murder.

Lir, King. The earliest known original of the King in King Lear, an ocean god of early Irish and British legend. He figures in the romance The Fate of the Children of Lir as the father of Fionnuala (q.v.). On the death of Fingula, the mother of his daughter, he married the wicked Aoife, who, through spite, transformed the children of Lir into swans, doomed to float on the water till they heard the first mass-bell ring.

Lir was fabled to be a descendant of Brutus, and appears in early Welsh chronicles as Lear, or Leyr (the founder of Leicester), whence—through Geoffrey of Monmouth, by whose time other legends had crystallized round him—Shakespeare obtained the framework of his plot.

Lisbon. Camoëns, in the Lusiad, derives the name from 'Ulyssippo (Ulysses' polis or city), and says that it was founded by Ulysses; but it is in fact the old Phœnician Olisippo, the walled town. The root Hippo appears as the name of more than one ancient African city, also in Oripippo, Lacippo, and other Spanish towns.

Lismahago (lis má há' gō). A proud but poor, and very conceited, Scots captain, in Smollett's Humphrey Clinker. Fond of disputation, jealous of honour, and brimful of national pride, he marries Miss Tabitha Bramble.

Lit de Justice (lē de zhus tēs). Properly the seat occupied by the French king when he attended the deliberations of his parlement; hence, the session itself, any arbitrary edict. As the members derived their power from the king, when the king was present their power returned to the fountain-head, and the king was arbitrary. What he then proposed could not be controverted, and had the force of law. The last lit de justice was held by Louis XVI in 1787.

Little. Little by little. Gradually; a little at a time.

Many a little makes a mickle. The real Scottish proverb is: "A wheen o' mickles mak's a muckle," where mickle means little, and muckle much; but the Anglo-Saxon micel or mycel means "much," so that, if the Scots proverb is accepted, we must give a forced meaning to the word "mickle."

Little Britain. The name given in the old romances to Armorica, now Brittany; also called Benwic.

The street in the City of London of this name was first so called in the time of Queen Elizabeth; previously it was known as Britten or Brettone Street, and is said to have been so called because the Dukes of Brittany had had a mansion on this site. The old name of the northern part of Little Britain was Duke Street.

Little Corporal. The. Napoleon Bonaparte. So called after the battle of Lodi, in 1796, from his low stature, youthful age, and amazing courage. He was barely 5 ft. 2 in. in height.

Little-endians. In Swift's Gulliver's Travels (Voyage to Lilliput) the faction which insisted on interpreting the vital direction contained in the 54th chapter of the Blundercl: "All true believers break their eggs at the convenient end," as meaning the little end, and waged a destructive war against those who adopted the alternative (cp. BIG-ENDIANS).

The terms are still used in connexion with hostilities or arguments arising out of trifling differences of opinion, etc., especially in matters of doctrine. In Swift's satire the Big-endians typify the Catholics, and the Little-endians the Protestants.

Little Englanders. An opprobrious name which became popular about the time of the last Boer War for those who upheld the doctrine that the English should concern themselves with England only, and were opposed to any extension of the Empire.

Little Entente was the name given to some of the Near Eastern countries before World War II. Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, and Rumania signed formal treaties of alliance in 1920 and again in 1929, one of the chief objects being to prevent the restoration of the Hapsburgs to the throne of Hungary.

Little Gentleman in Velvet. "The little gentleman in velvet," i.e. the mole, was a favourite Jacobite toast in the reign of Queen Anne. The reference was to the mole that raised the molehill against which the horse of William III stumbled at Hampton Court. By this accident the king broke his collar-bone, and after a severe illness died early in 1702.

Little-go. A preliminary examination at Cambridge which all undergraduates must pass (unless excused on account of having passed certain other exams.) before proceeding to take any examination for a degree. The Little-go is almost invariably taken in or before the first term. The examination at Oxford corresponding with this is Responsions.

Little Jack Horner. See JACK.

Little John. A semi-legendary character in the Robin Hood cycle, a big stalwart fellow, first named John Little (or John Nailor), who encountered Robin Hood, and gave him a sound thrashing, after which he was re-christened, and Robin stood godfather.

"This infant was called John Little," quoth he;

"Which name shall be changed anon.

The words we'll transpose, so wherever he goes,

His name shall be called Little John".

RITSON: Robin Hood, xxi.

Little Mary. See MARY.

Little Masters. A name applied to certain designers who worked for engravers, etc., in the 16th and 17th centuries, because their designs were on a small scale, fit for copper or wood. The most famous are Jost Amman, Hans Burgmair (who made drawings in wood illustrative of the triumph of the Emperor Maximilian), Albert Altdorfer, and Heinrich Aldegraver. Albert Dürer and Lucas van Leyden made the art renowned and popular.

Little Parliament, The. Another name for the Barebones Parliament (q.v.).

Little Red Ridinghood. This nursery tale is, with slight alterations, common to Sweden, Germany, and France. It comes to us from the French Le Petit Chaperon Rouge, in Charles Perrault's Contes des Temps, and was probably derived from Italy. The finale, which tells of the arrival of a huntsman who slits open the wolf and restores little Red Ridinghood and her grandmother to life, is a German addition.

Little Rhody. The State of Rhode Island, U.S.A.

Liturgy. The Greek word from which this comes means public service, or worship of the gods, and the arranging of the dancing and singing on public festivals, the equipping and manning of ships, etc. In the Church of England it means the religious forms prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer.

Liver. The liver was anciently supposed to be the seat of love; hence, when Longaville reads the verses, Biron says, in an aside, "This is the liver-vein, which makes flesh a deity" (Love's Labour's Lost, iv, 3); and in The Merry Wives of Windsor (ii, 1) Pistol speaks of Falstaff as loving Ford's wife "with liver burning hot."

Another superstition concerning this organ was that the liver of a coward contained no blood; hence such expressions as white-livered, lily-livered, and Sir Toby's remark in Twelfth Night (ii, 2):—

For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

In the auspices taken by the Greeks and Romans before battle, if the liver of the animals sacrificed was healthy and blood-red, the omen was favourable; but if pale, it augured defeat.

Liverpool. There have been many guesses at the origin of this place-name (which was first recorded about 1190, as Leverpol), the most probable deriving it from Welsh Llŷr-pwl, the sea-pool, though both the Norse hlithar polir, the pool of the slape, and Eng. lither (stagnant) pool have something to recommend them.

It was in the 17th century that antiquarians invented the liver, a mythical bird, to account for the name. They evolved it from the bird in the arms of the city, which was intended for an heraldic representation of the eagle of St. John the Evangelist.

A native of Liverpool is called a Liverpudlian or a Dicky Sam.

Livery. What is delivered. The clothes of a manservant delivered to him by his master. The stables to which your horse is delivered for keep. Splendid dresses were formerly given to all the members of royal households; barons and knights gave uniforms to their retainers, and even a duke's son, serving as a page, was clothed in the livery of the prince he served.

What livery is we know well enough; it is the allowance of horse-meate to keepe horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of delivering forth their nightly food.—Spenser on Ireland.

The colours of the livery of menservants should be those of the field and principal charge of the armorial shield; hence the royal livery is scarlet trimmed with gold.

Livery Companies. The modern representatives in the City of London of the old City Guilds (see GUILDHALL), so called because they formerly wore distinctive costumes, or liveries (see above) for special occasions. The names of the companies are not, to-day, any guide to the profession or occupation of the "liverymen" (except, perhaps, in a few cases, such as the Stationers'), but they show the origin of the company, and many of the present members are descendants of prominent men in the particular business.

The twelve "great" companies, in order of civic precedence, with the date of their formation or incorporation, are:—

Mercers (1393).	Merchant Taylors (1326).
Grocers (1345).	Haberdashers (1448).
Drapers (1364).	Salters (1394).
Fishmongers (1384).	Ironmongers (1463).
Goldsmiths (1327).	Vintners (1437).
Skinner (1319).	Clothworkers (1527).

The Grocers' were originally known as the Pepperers, and the Haberdashers' the Hurrers. Samuel Pepys was Master (1677) of the Clothworkers, which was a 16th-century incorporation of the Shearmen and Fullers' Guild.

The first twelve of the lesser livery companies, in order of civic precedence, are:—

Dyers.	Barbers.	Tallowchandlers.
Brewers.	Cutlers.	Armourers & Braziers.
Leathersellers.	Bakers.	Girdlers.
Pewterers.	Waxchandlers.	Butchers.

There are about 90 City companies of old standing, nearly all of which contribute largely from their funds to charities (especially in the matter of education), and about 40 of which have their own "Halls" in the City.

Liverymen. The freemen of the London livery companies are so called because they were entitled to wear the livery of their respective companies.

Livy. Livy of France, The. Juan de Mariana (1537-1624).

Livy of Portugal, The. João de Barros, the chief of the Portuguese historians (1496-1570).

Lizard. Supposed, at one time, to be venomous, and hence a "lizard's leg" was an ingredient of the witches' cauldron in Macbeth.

Poison be their drink!

Their chiefest prospect murdering basilisks!

Their softest touch as smart as lizard's stings!

2 Henry VI, iii, 2.

Lizard Point (Cornwall). Gaelic, "the point of the high (ard) fort (lis)."Ard appears in a large number of place names—Ardrissan (the little high point), Ardwick (the high town), the Ardennes (high valleys), etc., and Lis in Lismore, Liskeard, Ballylesson (the town of the little fort), etc.

Lounge lizard. A phrase current in the 1920s to describe a young man who spent his time, or, often made his living, by dancing and waiting upon elderly women.

Llew Llaw Gyffes, or the Lion with the Steady Hand, a hero of the type of Hercules, was worshipped in ancient Britain and until the 19th century in some parts of Wales. His death on the first Sunday in August, was celebrated by a feast called Lugh-mass, sometimes confounded with Lammas.

Lloyd's. An association of underwriters, merchants, shipowners, brokers, etc., principally dealing with ocean-borne commerce, marine insurance, and the publication of shipping intelligence. So called because the society was founded (1689) in Tower Street, and moved (1691) to a coffee-house kept in Lombard Street by one Edward Lloyd. In 1774 the offices, or Lloyd's Rooms, were removed to the Royal Exchange; in 1928 to Leadenhall Street.

Lloyd's books. Two enormous ledger-like volumes, placed on desks at the entrance (right and left) of Lloyd's Rooms. They give the principal arrivals, and all losses by wrecks, fire, or other accidents at sea. The entries are written in a fine, bold Roman hand, legible to all.

Lloyd's List. A periodical, in which the shipping news received at Lloyd's Rooms is published. It has been issued regularly from 1726; since 1800 as a daily.

Lloyd's Register. A register of ships, British and foreign, published yearly.

Load Line is another name for the Plimsoll Mark (q.v.) that is carried amidships by every vessel of the Merchant Navy. It shows the maximum depth to which she may be loaded in salt water, in fresh water, at different times of the year, in different oceans, etc.

Loaf. In sacred art a loaf held in the hand is an attribute of St. Philip the Apostle, St. Osyth, St. Joanna, St. Nicholas, St. Godfrey, and of many other saints noted for their charity to the poor.

Half a loaf is better than no bread. An old saying; if you can't get all you want, try to be content with what you do get. Heywood (1546) says:—

Throw no gift at the giver's head;
Better is half a loaf than no bread.

Never turn a loaf in the presence of a Menteith. An old Scottish saying. It was Sir John Stewart de Menteith who betrayed Wallace to the English. When he turned a loaf set on the table, his guests were to rush upon the patriot and secure him. (Scott: Tales of a Grandfather, vii.)

With an eye to the loaves and fishes. With a view to the material benefits to be derived. The allusion is to the Gospel story of the crowd following Christ, not for the spiritual doctrines

He taught, but for the loaves and fishes distributed by Him amongst them.

Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek Me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.—John vi, 26.

Loafer. One who idles away his time, or saunters about as though he had all his life to do it in; a lazy "do-nothing." The word was originally American slang (about 1830), and was probably German—either a mispronunciation of lover, or from laufen, to run, go, move.

Loathly Lady. A stock character of the old romances who is so hideous that everyone is deterred from marrying her. When, however, she at last finds a husband her ugliness—the effect of enchantment—disappears, and she becomes a model of beauty. Her story—a very common one, in which sometimes the enchanted beauty has to assume the shape of a serpent or some hideous monster—is the feminine counterpart of that of "Beauty and the Beast" (q.v.).

Lob. Old thieves' slang for a till. Hence lob-sneak, one who robs the till; lob-crawling, on the prowl to rob tills.

Lob's Pound. Old slang for prison, the stocks, or any other place of confinement.

Lobby. A vestibule or corridor, usually giving access to several apartments, from Med. Lat. lobia, a word used in the monasteries for the passages (connected with lodge). In the Houses of Parliament the name is given to the corridors ("Division Lobbies") to which members of the Commons go to vote, and also to the large anteroom to which the public are admitted. The latter gives us the verb to lobby, to solicit the vote of a member or to seek to influence members, and the noun lobbyist, one who does this.

The Bill will cross the lobbies. Be sent from the House of Commons to the House of Lords.

Loblolly. A sailors' term for spoon-victuals, pap, water-gruel, and so on.

Loblolly boy. A surgeon's mate in the Navy, a lad not yet out of his spoon-meat.

Loblolly-boy is a person on board a man-of-war who attends the surgeon and his mates, but knows as much about the business of a seaman as the author of this poem.—The Patent (1776).

Lobsters. Soldiers used to be popularly called lobsters, because they were "turned red" when enlisted into the service. But the term was originally applied to a troop of horse soldiers in the Great Rebellion, clad in armour which covered them as a shell.

Sir William Waller received from London (in 1643) a fresh regiment of 500 horse, under the command of Sir Arthur Haslerig, which were so prodigiously armed that they were called by the king's party "the regiment of lobsters," because of their bright iron shells with which they were covered, being perfect cuirassiers, and were the first seen so armed on either side.—CLARENDON: History of the Rebellion, iii, 91.

Died for want of lobster sauce. Sometimes said of one who dies or suffers severely because of some trifling disappointment, pique, or wounded vanity. At the grand feast given by the great Condé to Louis XIV, at Chantilly, Vatel, the chef, was told that the lobsters intended for sauce had not arrived, whereupon he retired to his private room, and, leaning on his sword, ran it through his body, unable to survive the disgrace thus brought upon him.

Local, in colloquial parlance, means the nearest or the most frequented public house.

Local option is the choice allowed to a town, county, or other locality to decide what course it shall take on a given question, specifically the sale of liquor. In 1913 Carlisle was given local option in this sense, in each area the electors having the decision as to whether or not intoxicating liquor should be sold.

Lochiel (loch ēl'). The title of the head of the clan Cameron.

The hero of Campbell's poem, Lochiel's Warning (1802), is Donald Cameron, known as The Gentle Lochiel. He was one of the Young Pretender's staunchest adherents, and escaped to France with him after Culloden (1746). He took service in the French army, but died two years later.

Lochinvar (lok in var'), being in love with a lady at Netherby Hall, persuaded her to dance one last dance. She was condemned to marry a "laggard in love and a dastard in war," but her young chevalier swung her into his saddle and made off with her, before the "bridegroom" and his servants could recover from their astonishment. (Scott: Marmion.)

Loch Ness Monster. In April, 1933, a motorist driving along the shore of Loch Ness, Scotland, saw at some distance from the land what seemed a strange object, subsequently described as being 30 ft. long, with two humps, a snake-like head at the end of a long neck, and two flippers about the middle of the body. It was "seen" by others, and a brisk tourist trade began to centre around its movements. Public interest and excitement were worked up by newspaper reports, and the question of an official investigation was raised in Parliament, but negatived. A well-known circus proprietor offered £20,000 for the monster, but it resisted all baits and allurements. From time to time fresh evidences of its presence have been reported, but scientists have found few details to arouse their interest. The popular theory is that the creature is a diplodocus or some prehistoric survival, but scientists preserve an open mind on the existence or nature of the Loch Ness Monster.

Lockhart. Legend has it that when the good Lord James, on his way to the Holy Land with the heart of King Robert Bruce, was slain in Spain fighting against the Moors, Sir Simon Locard, of Lee, was commissioned to carry back to Scotland the heart, which was interred in Melrose Abbey. In consequence thereof he changed his name to Lock-heart, and adopted the device of a heart within a fetterlock, with this motto: "Corda serrata pando" (Locked hearts I open.)

Locksley Hall. Tennyson's poem of this name (1842) deals with an imaginary place and an imaginary hero. The Lord of Locksley Hall fell in love with his cousin Amy; she married a rich clown, and he, indignant at this, declared he would wed a savage; he changed his mind, however, and decided, "Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay."

In 1886 Tennyson published Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, another dramatic poem.

Locksmith's Daughter. A key.

Lock, Stock, and Barrel. The whole of anything. The lock, stock, and barrel of a gun is the complete firearm.

Locofoco (lō' kō fō' kō). A trade-name coined in America as that of a self-igniting cigar (patented in New York, 1834), but quickly transferred to lucifer matches, and then to the Democratic Party in America, because, at a meeting in Tammany Hall (1835), when the chairman left his seat, and the lights were suddenly extinguished with the hope of breaking up the turbulent assembly, those of the opposition faction drew from their pockets their locofocos, re-lighted the gas, and got their way.

Here's full particulars of the patriotic loco-foco movement yesterday, in which the whigs was so chawed up.—DICKENS: Martin Chuzzlewit (1843).

Locrine (lok rin'). Father of Sabrina, and eldest son of the mythical Brutus, King of ancient Britain. On the death of his father he became king of Loegria. (Geoffrey: Brit. Hist., ii, 5.)

Virgin daughter of Locrine,
Sprung from old Anchises' line.
MILTON: Comus, 942-3.

An anonymous tragedy, based on Holinshed and Geoffrey of Monmouth, was published under this name in 1595. As the words "Newly set forth, overseene and corrected, By W. S." appear on the title-page, it was at one time ascribed to Shakespeare. It has also been ascribed to Marlowe, Greene, and Peele—the weight of evidence being rather in favour of the last named.

Locum tenens (lō' kum tē' nens) (Lat.). One (especially a doctor) acting temporarily for another.

Locus. Latin for a place.

Locus delicti. The place where a crime was committed.

Locus in quo (Lat.). The place in question, the spot mentioned.

Locus penitentiae (Lat.). Place for repentance—that is, the licence of drawing back from a bargain, which can be done before any act has been committed to confirm it. In the interview between Esau and his father Isaac, St. Paul says that the former "found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears" (Heb. xii, 17)—i.e. no means whereby Isaac could break his bargain with Jacob.

Locus sigilli (Lat.). The place where the seal is to be set; usually abbreviated in documents to "L.S."

Locus standi (Lat.). Recognized position, acknowledged right or claim, especially in courts of law. We say such-and-such a one has no locus standi in society.

Locusta (lō kūs' tā). A woman who murders those she professes to nurse, or those whom it is her duty to take care of. Locusta lived in the early days of the Roman Empire, poisoned Claudius and Britannicus, and attempted to destroy Nero; but, being found out, she was put to death.

Lode. Originally a ditch that guides or leads water into a river or sewer, from A.S. lað, way, course (connected with to lead); hence, in mines, the vein that leads or guides to ore.

Lodestar. The North Star or Pole Star; the leading-star by which mariners are guided (see LODE).

Your eyes are lodestars.—Midsummer Night's Dream, i, 1.

Lodestone, Loadstone. The magnet or stone that guides.

Lodona (lō dō' nā). The Loden, an affluent of the Thames in Windsor Forest. Pope, in Windsor Forest, says it was a nymph, fond of the chase, like Diana. It chanced one day that Pan saw her, and tried to catch her; but Lodona fled from him, imploring Cynthia to save her from her persecutor. No sooner had she spoken than she became "a silver stream which ever keeps its virgin coolness."

Loegria or Logres (lō eg' ri ā, lō' gres). Eng-land is so called by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from Locrine (q.v.).

His [Brute's] three sons divide the land by consent; Locrine had the middle part, Loegra.—MILTON: History of England, bk. i.

Thus Cambria to her right, what would herself restore,

And rather than to lose Loegria, looks for more.

DRAYTON: Polyolbion, iv.

Log. Instrument for measuring the velocity of a ship in motion. In its simplest form it is a flat piece of wood, some six inches in radius, in the shape of a quadrant, and made so that it will float perpendicularly. To this is fastened the log-line, knotted at intervals. See KNOT.

A King Log. A king who rules in peace and quietness, but never makes his power felt. In allusion to the fable of the frogs asking for a king. Jupiter first threw them down a log of wood, but they grumbled at so spiritless a king. He then sent them a stork, which devoured them eagerly.

Log-book. On board ship, the journal in which the "logs" are entered. It contains also all general transactions pertaining to the ship and its crew, such as the strength and course of the winds, everything worthy of note.

Log-cabin Campaign (U.S.A.). Political campaign in 1840, in which Gen. W. H. Harrison is said to have lived in a log-cabin and subsisted mainly on hard cider.

Log-rolling. Applied in politics to the "give and take" principle, by which one party will further certain interests of another in return for assistance given in passing their own measures; in literary circles it means mutual admiration. The mutual admirers are called "log-rollers," and the allusion (originally American) is to neighbours who assist a new settler to roll away the logs of his "clearing."

Logs. An early Australian name for prison, changed with time and circumstances to The Bricks.

Loganberry. A cross between the raspberry and blackberry; so called from Judge Logan, of California, who was the first to cultivate it.

Logan Stones. Rocking stones; large masses of stone so delicately poised by nature that they will rock to and fro at a touch. There are many logan stones in Cornwall, Derbyshire, Yorkshire, and Wales, and some well-known specimens in Scotland and Ireland; they were formerly used in connexion with Druidical rites. When the Logan Rock (about 70 tons) at Land's End was displaced by a naval lieutenant (1824), he was ordered to replace it, which he did at a cost of some £2,000.

Pliny tells of a rock near Harpasa which might be moved with a finger.

Ptolemy says the Gygonian rock might be stirred with a stalk of asphodel.

Half a mile from St. David's is a Logan stone, mounted on divers other stones, which may be shaken with one finger.

In Pembrokeshire is a rocking stone, rendered immovable by the soldiers of Cromwell, who held it to be an encouragement to superstition.

The stone called Menamber in Sithney (Cornwall) was also rendered immovable by the soldiers, under the same notion.

Loggerheads, Fall to loggerheads: to squabbling and fisticuffs. The word is used by Shakespeare. Logger was the name given to the heavy wooden clog fastened to the legs of grazing horses to prevent their straying.

Logres, Logria. See LOEGRIA.

Logris. Same as Locrine (q.v.).

Lohengrin (lō' en grin). A son of Percival, in German legend, attached to the Grail Cycle, and Knight of the Swan. He appears at the close of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival (about 1210), and in other German romances, where he is the deliverer of Elsa, Princess of Brabant, who has been dispossessed by Tetramund and Ortrud. He arrives at Antwerp in a skiff drawn by a swan, champions Elsa, and becomes her husband on the sole condition that she shall not ask his name or lineage. She is prevailed upon to do so on the marriage-night, and he, by his vows to the Grail, is obliged to disclose his identity, but at the same time disappears. The swan returns for him, and he goes; but not before transforming the swan into Elsa's brother Gottfried, who, by the wiles of the sorceress Ortrud, had been obliged to assume that form. Wagner's opera of this name was composed in 1847.

Loins. Gird up your loins. Brace yourself for vigorous action, or energetic endurance. The Jews wore loose garments, which they girded about their loins when they travelled or worked.

Gird up the loins of your mind.—1 Pet. i, 13.

My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins (1 Kings xii, 10). My lightest tax shall be heavier than the most oppressive tax of my predecessor. The arrogant answer of Rehoboam to the deputation which waited on him to entreat an alleviation of "the yoke" laid on them by Solomon. The reply caused the revolt of all the tribes, except those of Judah and Benjamin.

Loki (lō'ki). The god of strife and spirit of evil in Norse mythology, son of the giant Fjrbauti and Laufey, or Nal, the friend of the enemy of the gods, and father of the Midgard Serpent, Fenrir, and Hel. It was he who artfully contrived the death of Balder (q.v.). He was finally chained to a rock with ten chains, and—according to one legend—will so continue till the Twilight of the Gods, when he will break his bonds; the heavens will disappear, the earth be swallowed up by the sea, fire shall consume the elements, and even Odin, with all his kindred deities, shall perish. Another story has it that he was freed at Ragnarok, and that he and Heimdall fought till both were slain.

Lollards. The early German reformers and the followers of Wyclif were so called. An ingenious derivation is given by Bailey, who suggests the Latin word lolium (darnel), because these reformers were deemed "tares in God's wheat-field," but the name is from Mid. Dut. lollaerd, a mutterer, one who mumbles over prayers and hymns.

Gregory XI, in one of his bulls against Wyclif, urged the clergy to extirpate this lolium.

Lombard. A banker or moneylender, so called because the first bankers were from Lombardy, and set up in Lombard Street (London), in the Middle Ages.

I am an honest man than Will Coppersmith, for all his great credit among the Lombards.—STEELE: The Tatler. No. lvii.

The business of lending money on pawn was carried on in England by Italian merchants or bankers as early as the reign of Richard I. By the 12 Edward I, a message was confirmed to these traders where Lombard Street now stands; they exercised a monopoly in pawnbroking till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, but the trade was first recognized in law by James I. Among the richest of the Lombard merchant princes was the celebrated Medici family, from whose armorial bearings the insignia of three golden balls has been derived.

All Lombard Street to a China orange. An old saying, implying very long odds. Lombard Street, London, is the centre of great banking and mercantile transactions. To stake the wealth of London against a common orange is to stake what is of untold value against a mere trifle.

"It is Lombard Street to a China orange," quoth Uncle Jack.—BULWER LYTTON: The Caxtons.

London. The origin of the name is uncertain, but it first appears in Tacitus (Lib. XIV, ch. xxxiii, 61 A.D.):

At Suetonius mira constantia medios inter hostes Londinium perrexit, cognomento quidem colonia non insigne, sed copia negotiatorum et comæatum maxime celebre.

Stow, following Geoffrey of Monmouth, says that it was originally called Troynovant (q.v.), and that Cæsar's "cittie of the Trinobantes" meant London. By later Latin writers it was frequently called "Londinium Augusta."

The first syllable may represent Welsh lli, water, and the second be the Celtic dun, a hill-fort—the fort on the water; lon- may equally well be Celtic lon, a marsh, or llwyn, a grove, while another authority says that it is Welsh llong, a ship—the City of Ships.

Francis Crossley derives the name from Luan-dun (Celtic), City of the Moon, and tradition says there was once a temple to Diana (the Moon) where St. Paul's now stands; but he says that Greenwich (q.v.) is Grian-wich (City of the Sun), also Celtic. It would fill a page to give a list of guesses made at the derivation of the word London.

London Bridge. There was a bridge over the Thames in the 10th century. There was a new one of wood in 1014. The stone bridge (1176-1209) was by Peter of Colechurch. The present London Bridge, constructed of granite, was begun in 1824, and finished in seven years. It was built some 50 yards west of the old bridge, which started from Fish Street Hill. It was designed by Sir John Rennie, and cost £1,458,000. Till 1750 London Bridge was the only bridge crossing the Thames in London.

London Bridge was built upon woolpacks. An old saying commemorating the fact that in the reign of Henry II the new stone bridge over the Thames was paid for by a tax on wool.

London Gazette is the official organ of the British Government and the appointed medium for all official announcements. It dates from 1665 when Henry Muddiman started it as a daily newsletter or newspaper. It is now published on Tuesdays and Fridays. The Irish Free State Gazette (Dublin), the Belfast Gazette are similar official organs.

London Pride is the little red-and-white Saxifraga umbrosa also called None-so-pretty and St. Patrick's Cabbage.

London Regiment consists of two regular battalions of the City of London Regiment (Royal Fusiliers) and a number of territorial battalions including the London Rifle Brigade, Kensingtons, Artists Rifles, London Scottish, etc.

London Stone. The ancient Roman stone now fixed for security in the wall of St. Swithin's church, facing Cannon Street station, and guarded by an iron grille. It has two inscriptions, one in Latin and one in English. The latter runs thus:—

London stone. Commonly believed to be a Roman work, long placed about xxxv feet hence towards the south-west, and afterwards built into the wall of this church, was for more careful protection and transmission to future ages, better secured by the churchwardens in the year of OVR LORD MDCCCLXIX.

It is supposed to have been the central milliarium (milestone) of Roman London, similar to that in the Forum of Rome, from which the high roads radiated and were measured.

Londonderry. This Northern Ireland county took its prefix of "London" when, in 1609, much of the land was made over to the corporation of London. The capital city, long known as Derry, was besieged for 15 weeks by James II in 1689 and its citizens were reduced to great distress before the relieving fleet broke the boom across the harbour, June 30th, 1689.

Lone Star State. The state of Texas, U.S.A.

Long. For Long chalks, dozen, odds, etc., see these words.

So long. Good-bye, till we meet again.

Longboat. Formerly the largest boat carried by a sailing ship, built so as to take a great weight. A longboat is often from 30 to 40 feet long, having a beam from .29 to .25 of its length. It has a heavy flat floor, and is carvel-built.

To draw the longbow. See Bow.

Long-headed. Clever, sharp-witted. Those who believe in the shape and bumps of the head think that a long head indicates shrewdness.

Long Meg of Westminster. A noted virago in the reign of Henry VIII, around whose exploits a comedy (since lost) was performed in London in 1594.

Lord Proudly: What d'ye this afternoon?

Lord Feesimple: Faith, I have a great mind to see Long Meg and The Ship at the Fortune.

FIELD: Amends for Ladies, II, i (1618).

Her name has been given to several articles of unusual size. Thus, the large blue-black marble in the south cloister of Westminster Abbey, over the grave of Gervasius de Blois, is called "Long Meg of Westminster." Fuller says the term is applied to things "of hop-pole height, wanting breadth proportionable thereunto," and refers to a great gun in the Tower so called, taken to Westminster in troublesome times; and in the Edinburgh Antiquarian Magazine (September, 1769) we read of Peter Branan, aged 104, who was 6 ft. 6 in. high, and was commonly called Long Meg of Westminster. Cp. MEG.

Long Meg and her daughters. In the neighbourhood of Penrith, Cumberland, is a circle of 67 (Camden says 77) stones, some of them 10 ft. high, ranged in a circle. Some seventeen paces off, on the south side, is a single stone, 15 ft. high, called Long Meg, the shorter ones being called her daughters.

This, and the Robrick stones in Oxfordshire, are supposed to have been erected at the investiture of some Danish kings, like the Kingstoler in Denmark and the Moresteen in Sweden.—CAMDEN: Britannia.

Long Melford. A long, stocking purse, such as was formerly carried by country folk. In boxing, according to Isopel Berners, a Long Melford was a straight blow with the right hand. (Lavengro, lxxxv.)

Long Parliament. The parliament that sat 12 years and 5 months, from November 2nd, 1640, to April 20th, 1653, when it was dissolved by Cromwell. A fragment of it called "The Rump" (q.v.), continued till the Restoration, in 1660.

Long Range Desert Patrol. A British military organization of volunteers in World War II who, in N. Africa, penetrated behind the enemy's lines to do as much damage as possible. Their most celebrated exploit was the raid on Field Marshal Rommel's headquarters, carried out by a small group under Lieut.-Col. Keyes, who was posthumously awarded the V.C.

Long-Sword (Longue épée). The surname of William, the first Duke of Normandy (d. 943). He was the great-great-grandfather of William the Conqueror, and so a direct ancestor of our reigning House. The name was also given to William, third Earl of Salisbury (d. 1226), a natural son of Henry II and (probably) the Fair Rosamund.

Cut and long tail. One and another, all of every description. The phrase had its origin in the practice of cutting the tails of certain dogs and horses, and leaving others in their natural state, so that cut and long tail horses or dogs included all the species, Master Slender says he will maintain Anne Page like a gentlewoman. "Ah!" says he—

That I will, come cut and long tail under the degree of a squire [i.e. as well as any man can who is not a squire].—SHAKESPEARE. Merry Wives of Windsor, iii, 4.

How about the long-tailed beggar? A reproof given to one who is drawing the longbow too freely. The tale is that a boy who had been a short voyage pretended on his return to have forgotten everything belonging to his home, and asked his mother what she called that "long-tailed beggar," meaning the cat.

Long words. "Honorificabilitudinitatibus," (q.v.) has often been called the longest word in the English language; "quadradiimensionality" is almost as long, and "antidisestablishmentarianism" beats it by one letter.

While there is some limit to the coining of polysyllabic words by the conglomeration of prefixes, combining forms, and suffixes (e.g. "deanthropomorphization," "inanthropomorphizability"), there is little to the length to which chemists will go in the nomenclature of compounds, and none at all to that indulged in by facetious romancers like Rabelais, the author of Croquemitaine. The chemists furnish us with such concatenations (for they are scarcely words) as "nitrophenylenediamine," and "tetramethyldiamidobenzhydrols"; but the worst in this sort are far surpassed by the nonsense words found in Urquhart and Motteux's translation of Rabelais. The following come from a single chapter (Bk. IV, ch. xv):—

He was grown quite esperruanchurelublouzereliced down to his very heel. . .

Long place-names in Britain include Drimtaidhvrickhillichattan, in the Isle of Mull, Argyllshire, and the famous village in Anglesea, Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwlllandysylliogogoch (usually called Llanfairpwll). In the postal directory the first twenty letters only are given as a sufficient address for practical purposes, but the full name contains 59 letters. The meaning is, "The church of St. Mary in a hollow of white hazel, near to the rapid whirlpool, and to St. Tisilio church, near to a red cave."

The longest English surname is said to be Featherstonehaugh, often pronounced fân'-shaw.

The longest English monosyllables are probably "stretched" and "screeched."

The German language lends itself to very extensive agglomerations of syllables, but the following official title of a North Bohemian official—"Lebensmittelzuschusseinstellungs-kommissionsvorsitzenderstellvertreter," i.e. Deputy-President of the Food-Rationing-Winding-up-Commission—would be hard to beat.

Longchamps (long shong). The racecourse at the end of the Bois de Boulogne, Paris. An abbey formerly stood there, and it was long celebrated for the promenade of smartly dressed Parisians which took place on the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of Holy Week.

The custom dates from the time when all who could do so went to the abbey to hear the Ténébres sung in Holy Week; and it survives as an excellent opportunity to display the latest spring fashions.

Longevity (lon jév' i ti). The oldest man of modern times was Thomas Carn, if we may rely on the parish register of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, where it is recorded that he died in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, aged 207. He was born in 1381, in the reign of Richard II, lived in the reigns of ten sovereigns, and died in 1588. Henry Jenkins was only 160 when he died in 1670 and remembered going (when he was a boy of twelve) with a load of arrows, to be used in the battle of Flodden Field. Thomas Parr died in 1635 at the age of 152. William Wakley (according to the register of St. Andrew's Church, Shifnal, Salop) was at least 124 when he died. He was baptized at Idsal 1590, and buried at Adbaston, November 28th, 1714, and he lived in the reigns of eight sovereigns. Mary Yates, of Lizard Common, Shifnal, married her third husband at the age of 92, and died in 1776, at the age of 127.

Longinus, or Longius (lon ji' nus). The traditional name of the Roman soldier who smote Our Lord with his spear at the Crucifixion. The only authority for this is the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, dating from the 5th century. In the romance of King Arthur, this spear was brought by Joseph of Arimathea to Listenise, when he visited King Pellam, "who was nigh of Joseph's kin." Sir Balin the Savage, being in want of a weapon, seized this spear, with which he wounded King Pellam. "Three whole countries were destroyed" by that one stroke, and Sir Balin saw "the people thereof lying dead on all sides."

Longwood. The residence on the island of St. Helena where the Emperor Napoleon passed the last years of his life in exile, dying there May 5th, 1821.

Look. To look black, blue, daggers, a gift-horse, etc., see these words.

Look before you leap. Consider well before you act.

And look before you ere you leap,
For, as you sow, you're like to reap.
BUTLER: Hudibras, canto ii, Pt. ii, 502.

To look one way and row another. To aim apparently at one thing, but really to be seeking something quite different. In Pilgrim's Progress Mr. By-ends told Christian and Hopeful, "my great-grandfather was but a waterman, looking one way and rowing another, and I got most of my estate by the same occupation."

To look through blue glasses or coloured spectacles. To regard actions in a wrong light; to view things distorted by prejudice.

It is unlucky to break a looking-glass. The nature of the ill-luck varies; thus, if a maiden, she will never marry; if a married woman, it betokens a death, etc. This superstition arose from the use made of mirrors in former times by magicians. If in their operations the mirror used was broken, the magician was obliged to give over his operation, and the unlucky inquirer could receive no answer.

Looping the Loop. The airman's term for the evolution which consists of describing a perpendicular circle in the air; at the top of the circle, or "loop," the airman and the aeroplane are, of course, upside down. The term comes from a kind of switchback that used to be popular at fairs, etc., in which a rapidly moving car or bicycle performed a similar evolution on a perpendicular circular track.

Loose. Figuratively—of lax morals; dissolute, dissipated.

Drummond . . . was a loose and profane man; but a sense of honour which his two kinsmen wanted restrained him from a public apostasy.—MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., ch. vi.

A loose fish. See FISH.

At a loose end. Without employment, or uncertain what to do next.

Having a tile loose. See TILE.

On the loose. Dissolute (which is dis-solutus). Living on the loose is leading a dissolute life.

To play fast and loose. See FAST.

Loose-strife. The name of this plant is an instance of erroneous translation. The Greeks called it lusimachion, from the personal name Lusimachos, and this was treated as though it were lusi- from luen, to loose, and mache, strife. Pliny refers the name to one of Alexander's generals, said to have discovered its virtues, but the mistake obtained such currency that the author of Flora Domestica tells us that the Romans put these flowers under the yokes of oxen to keep them from quarrelling with each other; for (says he) the plant keeps off flies and gnats and thus relieves horses and oxen from a great source of irritation. Similarly in Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess (II, ii), we read—

Yellow Lysimachus, to give sweet rest,
To the faint shepherd, killing, where it comes,
All busy gnats, and every fly that hums.

Lope. See SLOPE.

Lord. A nobleman, a peer of the realm; formerly (and in some connexions still), a ruler, a master, the holder of a manor.

The word is a contraction of A.S. hlaford, hlaf, loaf, and modern ward, i.e. the bread-guardian, or -keeper, the head of the household (cp. LADY); all members of the House of Lords are Lords (the Archbishops and Bishops being Lords Spiritual, and the lay peers Lords Temporal); and the word is given as a courtesy title as a prefix to the Christian and surname of the younger sons of dukes and marquises, and to the eldest sons of viscounts and earls when the fathers hold subordinate titles as barons, and as a title of honour to certain official personages, as the Lord Chief Justice and other Judges, the Lord Mayor, Lord Advocate, Lord Rector, etc. A baron is called by his title of peerage (either a surname or territorial designation), prefixed by the title "Lord," as "Lord Dawson," "Lord Islington," and it may also be substituted in other than strictly ceremonial use for "Marquis," "Earl," or "Viscount," the of being dropped, as "Lord Salisbury" (for "the Marquis of Salisbury"), "Lord Derby" ("The Earl of Derby"), etc.; this cannot be done in the case of dukes.

Drunk as a lord. See DRUNK.

In the Year of our Lord. See ANNO DOMINI.

Lord Harry. See HARRY.

Lord Mayor. See ALDERMAN.

Lord Mayor's Day. November 9th. So called because the Lord Mayor of London enters office on that day, and inaugurates his official dignity with a procession through the City to the Royal Courts of Justice, followed by a banquet at the Guildhall at which it is the custom for the Prime Minister to make a political speech.

Lord of the Ascendant. See ASCENDANT.

Lord of Creation. Man.

Replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth . . . Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed . . . and every tree . . . —Gen. i, 28, 29.

Lord of the Isles. Donald of Islay, who in 1346 reduced the Hebrides under his sway. The title had been borne by others for centuries before, and is now borne by the Prince of Wales. One of Scott's metrical romances is so called.

Lord of Misrule. See KING OF MISRULE.

Lords and ladies. The popular name of the wild arum, Arum maculatum.

My Lord. The correct form to use in addressing Judges of the Supreme Court (usually slurred to "M'Lud"), also the respectful form of address to bishops, noblemen under the rank of a Duke, Lord Mayors, Lord Provosts, and the Lord Advocate.

The Lord knows who, what, where, etc. Flippant expressions used to denote one's own entire ignorance of the matter.

Great families of yesterday we show,
And lords, whose parents were the Lord knows who.

DEFOE: The True-Born Englishman, 374.

Ask where's the north? At York, 'tis on the Tweed;
In Scotland, at the Orcaides; and there,
At Greenland, Zembla, or the Lord knows where.

POPE: Essay on Man, ii, 217.

The Lord's Day. Sunday.

To live like a lord. To fare luxuriously, live like a fighting-cock (q.v.).

To lord it, or lord it over. To play the lord; to rule tyrannically, to domineer.

Yon grey towers that still Rise up as if to lord it over air.

WORDSWORTH: The Punishment of Death, Sonn. i.

When our Lord falls in our Lady's lap. When Easter Sunday falls on the same date as Lady

Day (March 25th). This is said to bode ill for England. In the 19th century the combination occurred only twice (1883 and 1894); in the 20th its sole occurrence was in 1951.

Lord's Cricket Ground. The headquarters of the Marylebone Cricket Club (M.C.C.) and of cricket generally, is at St. John's Wood, London. Its founder, Thomas Lord (1757-1832), was groundsman at the White Conduit Club, London, in 1780. In 1797 he started a cricket ground of his own on the site of what is now Dorset Square, moving the turf in 1811 to a new site near Regent's Canal whence, in 1814, he transferred it to the present position.

Lorel. A worthless person; a rogue or blackguard. The word is from loren, the past part. of the old verb leese, to lose, and is chiefly remembered through "Cock Lorell". See COCK LORELL'S BOTE.

Here I set before the good Reader the leud, lousye language of these lewtering Luskies and lasy Lorels, wherewith they bye and sell the common people as they pas through the cuntry. Whych language they terme Peddelar's Frenche.—Harman's Caveat (1567).

Lorelei (lo' rē li). The name of a steep rock on the right bank of the Rhine, near St. Goar, some 430 ft. high. It is noted for its remarkable echo and is the traditional haunt of a siren who lures boatmen to their death. Heine and others have written poems on it, and Max Bruch made it the subject of an opera (Die Lorelei) produced in 1864. Mendelssohn began an uncompleted opera with the same title in 1847.

Loreto (lo re' tō). The house of Loreto. The Santa Casa, the reputed house of the Virgin Mary at Nazareth. It was said to have been translated to Fiume in Dalmatia in 1291, thence to Recanatì in 1294, and finally to a plot of land belonging to a certain Lady Lauretta, situated in Italy, 3 m. from the Adriatic, and about 14 SSE. from Ancona, round which the town of Loreto sprang up. The chapel contains bas-reliefs showing incidents in the life of the Virgin, and a rough image which is traditionally held to have been carved by St. Luke. The tradition has been approved by many popes and theologians and numerous miracles are recorded of the place, but the most recent research tends to show that the tradition rests on some unexplained misunderstanding.

There is a Loretto in Styria — Mariazell (Mary in the Cell), so called from the miracle-working image of the Virgin, made of ebony, and very ugly; another in Bavaria (Altötting), near the river Inn, where there is a shrine of the Black Virgin; and one in Switzerland, at Einsiedeln, a village containing the shrine of the "Black Lady of Switzerland," a church of black marble with an image of ebony.

Loss. To be at a loss. To be unable to decide. To be puzzled or embarrassed. As: "I am at a loss for the proper word."

Lost Tribes. The term used for that portion of the Hebrew race that disappeared from North Palestine about 140 years before the dispersion of the Jews. This disappearance has caused much speculation, especially among those who look forward to a restoration of the Hebrews as foretold in the O.T. In 1649 John Sadler suggested that the English were of Israelitish origin. This suggestion was developed by Richard Brothers, the half-crazy enthusiast who declared himself Prince of the Hebrews and Ruler of the World (1792). The theory has since been developed by other writers.

Lothair (lô thâr). A novel by Benjamin Disraeli (Lord Beaconsfield), pubd. 1870. The characters are supposed to represent the following persons:—

The Oxford Professor, Goldwin Smith.
Grandison, Cardinals Manning and Wiseman.

Lothair, Marquis of Bute.
Catesby, Monsignor Capel.
The Duke and Duchess, the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn.
The Bishop, Bishop Wilberforce.
Corisande, one of the Ladies Hamilton.

Lothario (lô thâr' i ô). A gay Lothario. A gay libertine, a seducer of women, a debauchee. The character is from Rowe's tragedy The Fair Penitent (1703), which is founded on Massinger's Fatal Dowry, though Rowe probably got the name from Davenant's Cruel Brother (1630), where is a similar character with the same name.

Is this that haughty, gallant, gay Lothario?
Fair Penitent, v. 1.

Lothian (lôth' i an) (Scotland). So named, according to tradition, from King Lot, or Lothus, Llew, the second son of Arthur, also called Lothus. He was the father of Modred, leader of the rebellious army that fought at Camlan, 537 A.D.

Lotus (lô' tus). A name given to many plants, e.g. by the Egyptians to various species of water-lily, by the Hindus and Chinese to the Nelumbo (a water-bean, Nymphaeaceæ speciosum), their "sacred lotus," and by the Greeks to Zizyphus Lotus, a north African shrub of the natural order Rhamnææ, the fruit of which was used for food.

According to Mohammed a lotus-tree stands in the seventh heaven, on the right hand of the throne of God, and the Egyptians pictured God sitting on a lotus above the watery mud. Jamblichus says the leaves and fruit of the lotus-tree being round represent "the motion of intellect"; its towering up through mud symbolizes the eminence of divine intellect over matter; and the Deity sitting on it implies His intellectual sovereignty. (Myster. Egypt., sec. 7, cap. ii, p. 151.)

The classic myth is that Lotis, a daughter of Neptune, fleeing from Priapus was changed into a tree, which was called Lotus after her, while another story goes that Dryope of Eechalia was one day carrying her infant son, when she plucked a lotus flower for his amusement, and was instantaneously transformed into a lotus.

Lotus-eaters or Lotophagi, in Homeric legend, are a people who ate of the lotus-tree (thought to be intended for Zizyphus Lotus, see above), the effect of which was to make them forget their friends and homes, and to lose all desire of returning to their native country, their only wish being to live in idleness in Lotus-land (Odyssey, xi). Hence, a lotus-eater is one living in ease and luxury.

Louis, St. (Louis IX of France, 1215, 1226-70), is usually represented as holding the Saviour's crown of thorns and the cross; sometimes, however, he is pictured with a pilgrim's staff, and sometimes with the standard of the cross, the allusion in all cases being to his crusades. He was canonized in 1297, his feast day being August 25th.

Louissette. See GUILLOTINE.

Louisiana (loo' èz 'i ân à). U.S.A. So named in compliment to Louis XIV of France. The name originally applied to the French possessions in the Mississippi Valley.

The Louisiana Purchase was the acquisition by the U.S. Government in 1803 of New Orleans and a vast tract of territory extending westward from the Mississippi to the Rockies, and northward from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border, from the French under Napoleon (then First Consul) for the sum of $15,000,000.

Lounge Lizard. See LIZARD.

Lourdes (loord). A famous scene of pilgrimage, situated in the south-west of France. In 1858 Bernadette Soubirous, a simple peasant girl, claimed that the Virgin Mary had appeared to her on eighteen occasions. Investigation failed to shake her narrative, and a spring with miraculous healing properties that appeared at the same time began to draw invalids from all parts of the world. Lourdes became the greatest sanctuary in Christendom and is resorted to by thousands, sick and well, every year.

Louver or Louvre. The tower or turret of mediæval buildings, originally designed for a sort of chimney to let out the smoke by means of louvre boards, i.e. narrow sloping and overlapping boards which, while allowing smoke to emerge, prevented the entrance of rain. Louvre is the old Fr. lover or lovier, probably from Old High Ger. lauba, whence our lodge.

Louvre (loo' vrè). The former royal palace of the French kings in Paris.

Dagobert is said to have built here a hunting-seat, but the present buildings were begun by Francis I in 1541. Since the French Revolution the greater part of the Louvre has been used for the national museum and art gallery.

He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it.
Henry V, ii, 4.

Love. The word is connected with Sanskrit lubh, to desire (Lat. lubet, it pleases), and was lufu in A.S.

A labour of love. Work undertaken for the love of the thing, without regard to pay.

Love and lordship never like fellowship. Neither lovers nor princes can brook a rival.

Love in a cottage. A marriage for love without sufficient means to maintain one's social status. "When poverty comes in at the door, love flies out of the window."

Love in a hut, with water and a crust,
Is—Love, forgive us!—cinders, ashes, dust;
Love in a palace is, perhaps, at last
More grievous torment than a hermit's fast.

KEATS: Lamia, Pt. ii.

Love me, love my dog. If you love anyone, you will like all that belongs to him. St. Bernard quotes this proverb in Latin, Qui me amat, amat et canem meum.

Love's Girdle. See CESTUS.

Not for love or money. Unobtainable, either for payment or for entreaties.

The abode of Love. See AGAPEMONE.

The family of love. Certain fanatics in the 16th century, holding tenets not unlike those of the Anabaptists. They were founded by David Joris (or George), a Dutchman (1501-65), and in England formed a sect of the Puritans in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. They are also known as the "Famlists."

The god of love. Generally meaning either Eros (Gr.) or Cupid (Roman mythology). Among the Scandinavians Freyja was the goddess of sexual love, and among the Hindus Kama more or less takes the place of Eros.

There is no love lost between so and so. The persons referred to have no love for each other. Formerly the phrase was used in exactly the opposite sense—it was all love between them, and none of it went a-missing. In the old ballad The Babes in the Wood we have—

No love between these two was lost
Each was to other kind.

To play for love. To play without stakes, for nothing.

Love-lock. A small curl worn by women, plastered to the temples; sometimes called a beau or bow catcher. A man's "love-lock" is called a *bell-rop*e. At the latter end of the 16th century the love-lock was a long lock of hair hanging in front of the shoulders, curled and decorated with bows and ribbons.

Love-powders or Potions were drugs to excite lust. Once these love-charms were generally believed in; thus, Brabantio accuses Othello of having bewitched Desdemona with "drugs to waken motion"; and Lady Grey was accused of having bewitched Edward IV "by strange potions and amorous charms" (Fabian, p. 495).

Love-in-Idleness. One of the numerous names of the pansy or heartsease (q.v.). Fable has it that it was originally white, but was changed to purple by Cupid.

Yet marked I where the bolt of Cupid fell,
It fell upon a little Western flower,
Before, milk-white, now purple with love's wound;
The maidens call it Love-in-idleness.

Midsummer Night's Dream, ii, 1.

Love's Labour's Lost. The exact form of the title of this, probably the first of Shakespeare's plays (1588), cannot be ascertained, but the above is the generally accepted form, the first "s" denoting the possessive, and the second the contraction of "is." On the title-page of the first quarto it is given as "A Pleasant Conceited Comedie called, Loves labors lost," with no apostrophes; the running head-line of this edition, however, is "Love's Labour's Lost," while the title given to the play in the first folio (1623) is "Loves Labour's Lost."

Other variants are Mere's "Love labors lost" and Robert Toffie's "Loves Labour Lost" (both 1598). Sir Walter Cope's "Loves Labore lost" (1604), Drummond of Hawthornden's "Loves Labors Lost" (1606), and Dryden's "Love's labour lost" (1672).

Loving or Grace Cup. A large cup passed round from guest to guest at formal banquets, especially at College, Court, and in the City of London. Miss Strickland says that Margaret Atheling, wife of Malcolm Canmore, in order to induce the Scots to remain for grace, devised the grace cup, which was filled with the choicest wine, and of which each guest was allowed to drink ad libitum after grace had been said. (Historic Sketches.)

On the introduction of Christianity, the custom of wassailing was not abolished, but it assumed a religious aspect. The monks called the wassail bowl the poculum caritatis (loving cup), a term still retained in the London companies, but in the universities the term Grace Cup is more general.

At the Lord Mayor's or City companies' banquets the loving-cup is a silver bowl with two handles, a napkin being tied to one of them. Two persons stand up, one to drink and the other to defend the drinker. Having taken his draught, the first wipes the cup with the napkin, and passes it to his "defender," when the next person rises to defend the new drinker, and so on to the end.

Lovel, the Dog. See RAT; CAT, etc.

Lovelace. The principal male character of Richardson's novel Clarissa Harlowe (1748). He is a selfish voluptuary, a man of fashion, whose sole ambition is to seduce young women, and he is—like Lothario (q.v.)—often taken as the type of a libertine. Crabbe calls him "rich, proud, and crafty; handsome, brave, and gay."

Low. To lay low is transitive, and means to overthrow or to kill; to lie low is intransitive, and means to be abased, or dead, and (in slang use) to bide one's time, to do nothing at the moment.

In low water. Financially embarrassed; or, in a bad state of health. The phrase comes from seafaring men; cp. "stranded," "left high and dry."

Low-bell. A bell formerly used in night-fowling. The birds were first roused from their slumber by its tinkling, and then dazzled by a low (Sc. for "a blaze" or "flame") so as to be easily caught. The word low-bell was, however, in earlier use for any small bell, such as a sheep-bell, without any connexion with lights or fowling.

The sound of the low-bell makes the birds lie close, so that they dare not stir whilst you are pitching the net: for the sound thereof is dreadful to them; but the sight of the fire, much more terrible, makes them fly up, so that they become instantly entangled in the net. —British Sportsman (1792).

Low Church. The popular name given to the evangelical party in the Church of England which maintains the essential Protestantism of that institution, adheres to the doctrinal and devotional formulas of the Book of Common Prayer, and regards the Bible as the ultimate rule of faith.

Low Sunday. The Sunday next after Easter.

The popular English name of Low Sunday has probably arisen from the contrast between the joys of Easter and the first return to ordinary Sunday services. On this Sunday, or sometimes on the fourth Sunday after Easter, it was the custom, in primitive days, for those who had been baptized the year before to keep an anniversary of their baptism, which was called the Annotine Easter, although the actual anniversary of the previous Easter might fall on another day.—Blunt's Annotated Book of Common Prayer.

Lower case. The printer's name for the small letters (minuscules) of a fount of type, as opposed to the capitals; these are, in a type-setter's "case," on a lower level than the others.

Lower Empire. The later Roman, especially the Western Empire, from about the foundation of the Eastern Empire in 364 to the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

Lower House, The. The second of any two legislative chambers; in England, the House of Commons.

Lower your sail, To. To salute; to confess yourself submissive or conquered; to humble oneself. A nautical phrase.

Lowndean Professor. The professor of astronomy and geometry at Cambridge; so called from Thomas Lowndes (1692-1748) who bequeathed all his property for the founding of the chair.

Loyal. Only one regiment of all the British army is so called, and that is the Loyal North Lancashire. It was so called in 1793, and probably had some allusion to the French revolutionists.

Loyola, St. Ignatius (ig nā' shūs loi ō' lá) (1491-1556). Founder of the Society of Jesus (the order of Jesuits), is depicted in art with the sacred monogram I.H.S. on his breast, or as contemplating it, surrounded by glory in the skies, in allusion to his claim that he had a miraculous knowledge of the mystery of the Trinity vouchsafed to him. He was a son of the Spanish ducal house of Loyola, and after being severely wounded at the siege of Pampluna (1521) left the army and dedicated himself to the service of the Virgin. The society of Jesus (see Jesuits), which he projected in 1534, was confirmed by Paul III in 1540.

Luath (loo' ath). The name of Burns's favourite dog, and that which he gave to the poor man's dog representing the peasantry in his poem The Two Dogs. Burns got the name from Macpherson's Ossian, where it is borne by Cuchullin's dog.

A ploughman's collie,
A rhyming, ranting, raving billie,
Wha for his friend and comrade had him,
And in his freaks had Luath ca'd him
After some dog in Highland sang
Was made lang syne—Lord knows how lang.
BURNS: The Two Dogs.

Lubber's Hole. In sailing ships a seaman's name for the vacant space between the head of a lower mast and the edge of the top, because timid boys, or "lubbers," got through it to the top, to avoid the danger and difficulties of the "futtock shrouds." Hence, some means for, or method of, wriggling through one's difficulties.

B.D.—19

Lubberkin or Lubrican. See LEPRACHAUN.

Lucasian Professor. A professor of mathematics at Cambridge. The professorship was endowed by a bequest from Henry Lucas (d. 1663), M.P. for the University.

Lucasta (lū kās' tā), to whom Richard Lovelace sang (1649), was Lucy Sacheverell, called by him lux casta, i.e. Chaste Lucy.

Luce. The full-grown pike (Esox lucius), from Gr. lukos, a wolf, meaning the wolf of fishes.

Shakespeare plays upon the words luce and louse (Merry Wives, I, i) at the expense of Justice Shallow, who stands for his old enemy, Sir Thomas Lucy. According to Ferne's Blazon of Gentry (1586) the arms of the Lucy family were "Gules, three lucies hariant, argent," but Dugdale (Warwickshire, 1656) gives a representation of a quartering of the Lucy arms where the "dozen white lucies" are shown.

They may give the dozen white lucies in their coat.—Merry Wives, I, 1.

Luce was also formerly used as a contraction of fleur-de-lys (q.v.). The French messenger says to the Regent Bedford—

Cropped are the flower de lucies in your arms;
Of England's coat one-half is cut away.
1 Henry VI, i, 1.

Referring of course to the loss of France.

Lucian (loo' si ān). The chief character in the Golden Ass of Apuleius (2nd cent. A.D.), a work which is in part an imitation of the Metamorphoses by Lucian, the Greek satirist who lived about 120 to 200. In the Golden Ass Lucian, changed into an ass, is the personification of the follies and vices of the age.

Lucifer (loo' si fēr). Venus, as the morning star. When she follows the sun and is an evening star, she is called Hesperus.

Isaiah applied the epithet "Day-star" to the king of Babylon who proudly boasted he would ascend to the heavens and make himself equal to God, but who was fated to be cast down to the uttermost recesses of the pit. This epithet was translated into "Lucifer"—

Take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, . . . How art thou fallen, from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!—Is. xiv, 4, 12.

By St. Jerome and other Fathers the name was applied to Satan. Hence poets feign that Satan, before he was driven out of heaven for his pride, was called Lucifer, and Milton, in Paradise Lost, gives this name to the demon of "Sinful Pride," and hence, too, the phrase Proud as Lucifer.

Lucifer-match, or Lucifer. The name given by the inventor to one of the earliest forms (about 1832) of matches tipped with a combustible substance and ignited by friction, an improvement on the Congreves and Prometheans (qq.v.); hence, any match igniting by friction.

Luciferians. A sect of the 4th century, who refused to hold any communion with the Arians, who had renounced their "errors" and been readmitted into the Church. So called from Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari, in Sardinia, their leader.

Lucius. One of the mythical kings of Britain, placed as the great-great-grandson of Cymbeline (q.v.), and fabled as the first Christian king. He is supposed to have died about 192. See PUDENS.

Luck. Accidental good fortune. (Dut., luk; Ger. glück, verb glücken, to succeed, to prosper.)

Down on one's luck. Short of cash and credit.

He has the luck of the devil, or the devil's own luck. He is extraordinarily lucky; everything he attempts is successful.

Give a man luck and throw him into the sea. Meaning that his luck will save him even in the greatest extremity. Jonah and Arion were cast into the sea, but were carried safely to land, the one by a whale and the other by a dolphin.

Luck or lucky penny. A trifle returned to a purchaser for good luck; also a penny with a hole in it, supposed to ensure good luck.

Not in luck's way. Not unexpectedly promoted, enriched, or otherwise benefited.

The Luck of Eden Hall. See EDEN HALL.

There's luck in odd numbers. See ODD.

Lucky. In Scotland a term of familiar but respectful endearment for any elderly woman; often used of the landlady of an ale-house.

A lucky dip, or bag. A tub or other receptacle in which are placed a number of articles covered with bran or the like. Much in request at bazaars and so on, where the visitors pay so much for a "dip" and take what they get.

A lucky stone. A stone with a natural hole through it. Cp. LUCK PENNY.

The lucky bone. The small bone of a sheep's head; prized by beggars and tramps, as it is supposed to bring luck for the whole day on which it is received.

To cut one's lucky (old slang). To decamp or make off quickly; to "cut one's stick" (q.v.). As luck means chance, the phrase may signify, "I must give up my chance and be off."

To strike lucky. See STRIKE.

Lucullus sups with Lucullus (lūk ūl' ūs). Said of a glutton who gormandizes alone. Lucullus was a rich Roman, noted for his magnificence and self-indulgence. Sometimes above £1,700 was expended on a single meal, and Horace tells us he had 5,000 rich purple robes in his house. On one occasion a very superb supper was prepared, and when asked who were to be his guests the "rich fool" replied, "Lucullus will sup to-night with Lucullus" (110-57 B.C.).

Lucus a non lucendo (lū' kūs ā non loo sen' dō). An etymological contradiction; a phrase used of etymologists who accounted for words by deriving them from their opposites. It means literally "a grove (called lucus) from not being luculent" (lux, light, luceo, to shine). It was the Roman grammarian Honoratus Maurus Servius (fl. end of 4th cent. A.D.) who provided this famous etymology. In the same way ludus, a school, may be said to come from ludere, to play, and our word linen, from lining, because it is used for linings.

One Tryphiodorus . . . composed an Epick Poem . . . of four and twenty books, having entirely banished the letter A from his first Book, which was called Alpha (as Lucus a non Lucendo) because there was not an Alpha in it.—ADDISON: Spectator, No. 59.

Lucy, St. Patron saint for those afflicted in the eyes. She is supposed to have lived in Syracuse and to have suffered martyrdom there about 303. One legend relates that a nobleman wanted to marry her for the beauty of her eyes; so she tore them out and gave them to him, saying, "Now let me live to God." Hence she is represented in art carrying a palm branch and a platter with two eyes on it. Her day is December 13th.

Lud (lūd). A mythical king of Britain, stated by the old chronicles to have been the eighth in succession from Brute and to have died in 862 B.C. He was the father of Bladud, founder of Bath. This King Lud must either have started as a deity or have been early euhemerized, for temples to him existed both on the Severn and the Thames (LUDGATE); but the King Lud whom Geoffrey of Monmouth supposes to have founded London was a king of the Trinobantes, a brother of Cassivelaunus, and is dated about 66 B.C.

General Lud. See LUDDITES.

Lud's Town. London; so called from King Lud.

And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads.

SHAKESPEARE: Cymbeline, iv, 2.

Luddites. Discontented workmen who, from 1811 to 1816, went about the manufacturing districts (especially Nottingham) breaking machines, under the impression that machinery threw men out of work. So called from Ned Lud, of Leicestershire, who forced his way into a house, and broke two stocking-frames, whence the leader of these rioters was called General Lud.

In the winter of 1811 the terrible pressure of this transition from handicraft to machinery was seen in the Luddite, or machine-breaking, riots which broke out over the northern and midland counties; and which were only suppressed by military force.—J. R. GREEN: Short History, x, § iv.

Ludgate. One of the gates in the old City walls of London standing (till 1760) on Ludgate Hill, a few yards above the Old Bailey. It was probably on the site of a gate in the later Roman wall, but its first mention (as Ludgata) occurs in the early 12th century. Suggestions have been made that the true origin of the name is to be found in Floodgate (or Fleetgate, cp. Fleet Street, which at one time extended to Ludgate), or in A.S. leode, people, nation (cp. the Porto del populi of Rome).

Ludgate was used as a free prison in 1373, but soon lost that privilege. A romantic story is told of Sir Stephen Forster, who was Lord Mayor in 1454. He had been a prisoner at Ludgate, and begged at the gate, where he was seen by a rich widow, who bought his liberty, took him into her service, and afterwards married him. To commemorate this, Sir Stephen enlarged the prison accommodation, and added a chapel. The old gate was taken down and rebuilt in 1586. The new-built gate was destroyed in the Great Fire of London, and the next gate (used also as a prison for debtors) was pulled down in 1760.

Stow says:

King Lud, repairing the city, called it after his name Lud's town: the strong gate which he built in the west part he likewise named Lud-gate. In the year 1260 the gate was beautiful with images of Lud and other kings. Those images, in the reign of Edward VI, had their heads smitten off . . . Queen Mary did set new heads on their old bodies again.

Survey of London.

[Lud] Built that gate of which his name is hight, By which he lies entombed solemnly.

Spencer: Faerie Queene, ii, x, 46.

The statue of Queen Elizabeth I formerly on old Lud Gate is now built into the façade of St. Dunstan's Church, Fleet Street.

Ludlum. See LAZY.

Luez. See LUZ.

Luff. The weather-gauge; the part of a vessel towards the wind. (Dut. loef, a weather-gauge.)

Luff! Put the tiller on the lee-side. This is done to make the ship sail nearer the wind.

A ship is said to spring her luff when she yields to the helm by sailing nearer the wind.

Luggagg. In Gulliver's Travels, an island where people live for ever. Swift shows the evil of such a destiny, unless accompanied with eternal youth. See STRULDBRUGS.

Lugs. To put on the lugs. 19th-century American slang for conceit, swank.

Luke, St. Patron saint of painters and physicians. Tradition says he painted a portrait of the Virgin Mary. Col. iv, 14, states that he was a physician, but the word may have been used in a metaphorical sense. His day is October 18th.

In art St. Luke is usually represented with an ox lying near him, and often with painting materials. Sometimes he is pictured as painting the Virgin and infant Saviour. Metaphrastus mentions his skill in painting, and John of Damascus speaks of his portrait of the Virgin (cp. LORETO). Many pictures still extant are attributed to St. Luke; but the artist was probably St. Luke, the Greek hermit; for certainly these meagre Byzantine productions were not the work of the evangelist.

St. Luke's Club or The Virtuosi. An artists' club, established in England by Vandyck about 1638, and held at the Rose Tavern, Fleet Street. There was an academy of St. Luke founded by the Paris artists in 1391; one at Rome, founded in 1593, but based on the "Compagnia di San Luca" of Florence, founded in 1345; a similar one was established at Siena in 1355.

St. Luke's Summer. The latter end of autumn, called by the French l'été de S. Martin.

As light as St. Luke's bird. Not light at all, but quite the contrary.

Luke's Iron Crown. A symbol of political tyranny.

The lifted axe, the agonising wheel,
Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of steel,
To men remote from power but rarely known,
Leave reason, faith, and conscience all our own.
GOLDSMITH: The Traveller, 435.

George and Luke Dosa headed an unsuccessful revolt in Hungary in the early part of the 16th century. George underwent the torture of the red-hot iron crown, as a punishment for allowing himself to be proclaimed king; Goldsmith slips in attributing the incident to Luke.

Lumber. Formerly a pawnbroker's shop (from Lombard, q.v.). Thus Lady Murray (Lives of the Baillies, 1749) writes: "They put all the little plate they had in the lumber, which is pawning it, till the ships came home."

From its use as applied to old broken boards and bits of wood the word was extended to mean timber sawn and split, especially when the trees have been felled and sawn in situ.

Lump. If you don't like it, you may lump it. Whether you like to do it or not, no matter; you must take it without choice; it must be done.

Lumpkin, Tony (Goldsmith's She Stoops to Conquer). A sheepish, mischievous, idle, cunning lout, "with the vices of a man and the follies of a boy."

Lunar Month. From new moon to new moon, i.e. the time taken by the moon to revolve round the earth, about 29½ days. Popularly, the lunar month is 28 days. In the Jewish and Mohammedan calendars, the lunar month commences at sunset of the day when the new moon is first seen after sunset, and varies in length, being sometimes 29 and sometimes 30 days. Lunar Year. Twelve lunar months, i.e. about 354½ days.

Lunatics. Literally, moon-struck persons. The Romans believed that the mind was affected by the moon, and that "lunatics" grew more and more frenzied as the moon increased to its full.

The various mental derangements . . . which have been attributed to the influence of the moon, have given to this day the name lunatics to persons suffering from serious mental disorders.—CROZIER: Popular Errors, ch. iv.

Lunch, Luncheon. Lunch was originally a variant of lump, meaning a piece or slice of bread, etc. The -eon is a later extension, perhaps representing -ing ("Noonings and intermealiary Lunchings," Brome's Mad Couple, about 1650), but affected by the suffix of nuncheon. This -eon has now been dropped except as an affectation of gentility.

Luni (loo' nē). The ancient Etruscan town of Luna some 70 miles from Genoa. The quarries nearby furnish a beautiful white marble which takes its name from the place "marmo lunese" and the whole district is called La Lunigiana.

Lupercal, The (lū' pēr käl). In ancient Rome, an annual festival held on the spot where Romulus and Remus were suckled by the wolf (lupus), on February 15th, in honour of Lupercus, the Lycæan Pan (so called because he protected the flocks from wolves). It was on one of these occasions that Antony thrice offered Julius Cæsar the crown, and Cæsar refused, saying, "Jupiter alone is king of Rome."

You all did see that on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.

Julius Cæsar, iii, 2.

Lurch. To leave in the lurch. To leave a person in a difficulty. In cribbage one is left in the lurch when his adversary has run out his score of sixty-one holes before he himself has turned the corner (or pegged his thirty-first) hole. In some card-games it is a slam, that is, when one side wins the entire game before the other has scored a point.

Lush. Beer and other intoxicating drinks. The word is well over a century old, and is of uncertain origin. Up to about 1895 there was a convivial society of actors called "The City of Lushington," which met in the Harp Tavern, Russell Street, and claimed to have been in existence for 150 years. Lush may have come from the name of this club, though it is just as likely that the club took its name from the lush—for which it was famous.

Lusiad. The (loo' si' äd). The Portuguese national epic, written by Camoëns, and published in 1572. It relates the stories of illustrious actions of the Lusians, or Portuguese, of all ages, but deals principally with the exploits of Vasco da Gama and his comrades in their "discovery of India." Gama sailed three times to India:—(1) with four vessels, in 1497, returning to Lisbon in two years and two months; (2) in 1502, with twenty ships, when he was attacked by the Zamorin or king of Calicut, whom he defeated, and returned to Lisbon the year following; and (3) when John III appointed him viceroy of India. He established his government at Cochín, where he died in 1525. It is the first of these voyages which is the groundwork of the epic; but its wealth of episode, the constant introduction of mythological "machinery," and the intervention of Bacchus, Venus, and other deities, make it far more than a mere chronicle of a voyage.

Lusitania (loo si tăn' yä). The Cunard liner that was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine off the Old Head of Kinsale on May 7th, 1915, with the loss of 1193 lives. The sinking of the Lusitania was notorious as the first of many subsequent examples of German atrocities. The Germans struck a medal to celebrate this feat.

Lustrum (lūs' trūm). In ancient Rome the purificatory sacrifice made by the censors for the people once in five years, after the census had been taken (from luere, to wash, to purify); hence, a period of five years.

Lustral (lūs' träl). Properly, pertaining to the Lustrum (q.v.); hence, purificatory, as lustral water, the water used in Christian as well as many pagan rites for aspersing worshippers. In Rome the priest used a small olive or laurel branch for sprinkling infants and the people.

Lusus. Pliny (iii, 1) tells us that Lusus was the companion of Bacchus in his travels, and settled a colony in Portugal; whence the country was termed Lusitania, and the inhabitants Lusians, or the sons of Lusus.

Lutestring. A glossy silk fabric; the French lustreine (from lustre).

Speaking in lutestring. Flash, highly polished oratory. The expression was used more than once by Junius. Shakespeare has "taffeta phrases and silken terms precise." We call inflated speech "fustian" (q.v.) or "bombast" (q.v.); say a man talks stuff; term a book or speech made up of other men's brains, shoddy (q.v.); sailors call telling a story "spinning a yarn," etc., etc.

Lutetia (Lat. lutum, mud). The ancient name of Paris, which, in Roman times, was merely a collection of mud hovels. Cæsar called it Lutetia Parisiorum (the mud-town of the Parisii), which gives the present name Paris.

Lutin. A goblin in the folklore of Normandy; similar to the house-spirits of Germany. The name was formerly netum, and is said to come from the Roman sea-god Neptune. When the lutin assumes the form of a horse ready equipped it is called Le Cheval Bayard.

To lutin. To twist hair into elf-locks. These mischievous urchins are said to tangle the mane of a horse or head of a child so that the hair must be cut off.

Lutine Bell (loo' tēn). H.M.S. Lutine, a French warship that had been captured and put into service by the British, sailed from Yarmouth for Holland on October 9th, 1799, with bullion and specie to the value of some £500,000. That same night she was wrecked on a sandbank off the Zuyder Zee, with the loss of every soul on board save one, who died as soon as rescued. It was a black day for Lloyd's underwriters. In 1858 some £50,000 was salvaged, and among other things the Lutine's bell and rudder were brought back to England. The latter was made into the official chair for Lloyd's chairman and a secretary's desk; the bell was hung up at Lloyd's and is rung once whenever a total wreck is reported, and twice when an overdue ship is reported.

Luz or Luez (lüz). The indestructible bone: the nucleus of the resurrection body of Rabbinical legend.

The learned rabbins of the Jews

Write there's a bone which they call luz. . .

BUTLER: Hudibras, iii, 2.

"How doth a man revive again in the world to come?" asked Hadrian; and Joshua Ben Hananiah made answer. "From luz in the backbone." He then went on to demonstrate this to him; He took the bone luz, and put it into water, but the water had no action on it; he put it in the fire, but the fire consumed it not; he placed it in a mill, but could not grind it; and laid it on an anvil, but the hammer crushed it not.—Lightfoot.

LXX. See SEPTUAGINT.

Lycanthropy (lī kăn' thrō pi). The insanity afflicting a person who imagines himself to be some kind of animal and exhibits the tastes, voice, etc., of that animal; formerly the name given by the ancients to those who imagined themselves to be wolves (Gr. lukos, wolf, anthropos, man). The werewolf (q.v.) has sometimes been called a lycanthrope; and lycanthropy was sometimes applied to the form of witchcraft by which witches transformed themselves into wolves.

Lycæon (lī kâ' on). In classical mythology, a king of Arcadia, who, desirous of testing the divine knowledge of Jove, served up human flesh on his table; for which the god changed him into a wolf. His daughter, Callisto, was changed into the constellation the Bear, which is sometimes called Lycæonis Arctos.

Lycidas (lus' i dās). The name under which Milton celebrated the untimely death of Edward King, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, who was drowned in his passage from Chester to Ireland, August 10th, 1637. He was the son of Sir John King, Secretary for Ireland.

Lycopodium (lī kō pō' dī ūm). A genus of perennial plants comprising the club-mosses, so called from their fanciful resemblance to a wolf's foot (Gr. lukos, wolf, pous, podos, foot); the powder from the spore-cases of some of these is used in surgery as an absorbent and also—as it is highly inflammable—for stage-lightning.

Lyddite (lid' it). A high-explosive composed mainly of picric acid; so called from Lydd, in Kent, where are situated the artillery ranges on which it was first tested in 1888.

Lydford Law. Punish first and try afterwards. Lydford, in the county of Devon, was a fortified town, where were held the courts of the Duchy of Cornwall. Offenders against the stannary laws were confined before trial in a dungeon so loathsome and dreary that they frequently died before they could be brought to trial. Cp. CUPAR JUSTICE.

Lydia (lid' i ā). The ancient name of a district in the middle of Asia Minor which was an important centre of early civilization and exerted much influence on Greece. Gyges (716 B.C.) was one of its most famous rulers, and the Empire flourished until its overthrow by the Persians under Cyrus (546 B.C.).

Lydian Poet, The. Alcman of Lydia (fl. 670 B.C.).

Lying for the Whetstone. See WHETSTONE.

Lyke-wake. See LICH-WAKE (LICH).

Lyme-, or Lyam-hound (lim). The bloodhound, so called from lyme, or lyam, the leash (Lat. ligare, to tie). By mediæval huntsmen the lyme-hound was used for tracking down the wounded buck, and the gaze-hound for killing it.

Thou art the lyme-hound, I am the gaze-hound. . . . Thou hast deep sagacity and unrelenting purpose, a steady, long-breathed malignity of nature, that surpasses mine. But then, I am the bolder, the more ready, both at action and expedient . . . I say . . . shall we hunt in couples?—SCOTT: Kenilworth, ch. iv.

Lynceus (lin' sūs). One of the Argonauts (q.v.). He was so sharp-sighted that he could see through the earth, and distinguish objects nine miles off.

Non possis oculo quantum contendere Lynceus.
HORACE: l Epistle, i, 28.

Lynch Law (linch). Mob-law, law administered by private persons. The origin of the term is unknown; none of the suggested derivations from James Lynch or Justice Lynch having any foundation in fact.

The term is first recorded in 1817, and is certainly American in origin, though there is an old northern English dialect word linch, meaning to beat or maltreat.

In the U.S.A. the drastic justice of Lynch Law—usually true justice, it must be observed—was effective where the civil law failed in clearing the West of outlaws, cattle-thieves, and rogues in general.

Lynx (lingks). The animal proverbial for its piercing eyesight is a fabulous beast, half dog and half panther, but not like either in character. The cat-like animal now called a lynx is not remarkable for keen-sightedness. The word is probably related to Gr. lussein, to see. Cp. LYNCEUS.

Oh, I must needs o' the sudden prove a lynx
And look the heart, that stone-wall, through and through Such an eye, God's may be,—not yours nor mine.

BROWNING: The Ring and the Book, xi, 917.

Lyon King-of-Arms. The chief heraldic officer for Scotland; so called from the lion rampant in the Scottish regal escutcheon. See HERALDRY, also LION.

Lyonnesse (li on es'). "That sweet land of Lyonesse"—a tract of land fabled to stretch between the Land's End and the Scilly Isles, now submerged full "forty fathoms under water." Arthur came from this mythical country.

Faery damsels met in forest wide
By knights of Logres, or of Lyones,
Lancelot, or Pelleas, or Pellennore.

MILTON: Paradise Regained, ii, 359.

Lyre (lir). That of Terpander and Olympus had only three strings; the Scythian lyre had five; that of Simonides had eight; and that of Timotheus had twelve. It was played either with the fingers or with a plectrum. The lyre is called by poets a "shell," because the cords of the lyre used by Orpheus, Amphion, and Apollo were stretched on the shell of a tortoise. Hercules used boxwood.

Amphion built Thebes with the music of his lyre, for the very stones moved of their own accord into walls and houses.

Arion charmed the dolphins by the music of his lyre, and when the bard was thrown overboard one of them carried him safely to Tænarus.

Hercules was taught music by Linus. One day, being reproved, the strong man broke the head of his master with his own lyre.

Orpheus charmed savage beasts, and even the infernal gods, with the music of his lyre, or—as some have it, lute.

M

M. The thirteenth letter of the English alphabet (the twelfth of the ancient Roman, and twentieth of the futhorc), M in the Phœnician character represented the wavy appearance of water, and is called in Hebrew mem (water). The Egyptian hieroglyphic represented the owl. In English M is always sounded, except in words from Greek in which it is followed by n, as mnemonics, Mnason (Acts xxi, 16).

In Roman numerals M stands for 1,000 (Lat. mille): MCMLII = one thousand, nine hundred and fifty-two.

Persons convicted of manslaughter, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, used to be branded with an M. It was burnt on the brawn of the left thumb.

What is your name? N or M. (Church Catechism.) See N.

M, to represent the human face. Add two dots for the eyes, thus, .M. These dots being equal to O's, we get OMO (homo) Latin for man.

Who reads the name,

For man upon his forehead, there the M
Had traced most plainly.

DANTE: Purgatory, xxiii.

M'. The first letter of certain Celtic surnames (M'Cabe, M'Ian, M'Mahon, etc.) represents Mac, and should be so pronounced.

M.B. Waistcoat. A clerical cassock waistcoat was so called (about 1830) when first introduced by the High Church party. M.B. means "mark of the beast."

He smiled at the folly which stigmatised an M.B. waistcoat.—"MRS. OLIPHANT: Phæbe Juno, ii, 3.

M.P. Member of Parliament.

MS. (pl. MSS.). Manuscript; applied to literary works either in handwriting or typescript. (Lat. manuscriptum, that which is written by the hand.)

Mab (perhaps the Welsh mab, a baby). The "fairies' midwife"—i.e. employed by the fairies as midwife to deliver man's brain of dreams. Thus when Romeo says, "I dreamed a dream to-night," Mercutio replies, "Oh, then, I see Queen Mab hath been with you." When Mab is called "queen," it does not mean sovereign, for Titania as wife of King Oberon was Queen of Faery, but simply female. A.S. quén or cwén (modern quean) meant neither more nor less than woman; so "elf-queen," and the Danish ellequinde, mean female elf, and not "queen of the elves."

Excellent descriptions of Mab are given by Shakespeare (Romeo and Juliet, i, 4), by Ben Jonson, by Herrick, and by Drayton in Nymphidea.

Macaber (or Macabre), the Dance. See DANCE OF DEATH.

Macadamize (mă kăd' à miz). A method of road-making introduced about 1820 by John L. Macadam (1756-1836), consisting of layers of broken stones of nearly uniform size, each layer being separately crushed into position by traffic, or (later) by a heavy roller.

Macaire, Robert (mă kâr'). The typical villain of French comedy; from the play of this name (a sequel to L'Auberge des Adrets) by Frédéric Lemaître and Benjamin Antier (1834): Macaire is—le type de la perversité, de l'impudence, de la friponnerie audacieuse, le héros fanfaron du vol et de l'assassinat.

"Macaire" was the name of the murderer of Aubrey de Montdidier in the old French legend; he was brought to justice by the sagacity of Aubrey's dog, the Dog of Montargis. See DOG.

Macaroni (măk' à rô ni). A coxcomb (Ital. un maccherone, see next entry). The word is derived from the Macaroni Club, instituted in London about 1760 by a set of flashy men who had travelled in Italy, and introduced at Almack's subscription table the new-fangled Italian food, macaroni. The Macaronies were the most exquisite fops; vicious, insolent, fond of gambling, drinking, and duelling, they were (about 1773) the curse of Vauxhall Gardens.

An American regiment raised in Maryland during the War of Independence was called The Macaronies from its showy uniform.

Macaronic Latin. Dog Latin (q.v.), modern words with Latin endings, or a mixture of Latin and some modern language. From the Italian macheroni (macaroni), a mixture of coarse meal, eggs, and cheese. The law pleadings of G. Steevens, as Daniel v. Dish-clout and Bullum v. Boatum, are excellent examples.

Macaronic verse. Verses in which foreign words are ludicrously distorted and jumbled together, as in Porson's lines on the threatened invasion of England by Napoleon or J. A. Morgan's "translation" of Canning's The Elderly Gentleman, the first two verses of which are—

Prope ripam fluvii solus
A senex silently sat
Super caput, ecce his wig
Et wig super, ecce his hat.
Blew Zephyrus alte, acerbus,
Dum elderly gentleman sat;
Et a capite took up quite torve
Et in rivum projecit his hat.

It seems to have been originated by Odaxius of Padua (born c. 1450), but was popularized by his pupil, Teofilo Folengo (Merlinus Coccaus), a Mantuan monk of noble family, who published a book entitled Liber Macaronicorum, a poetical rhapsody made up of words of different languages, and treating of "pleasant matters" in a comical style (1520).

In England a somewhat similar kind of verse was practised rather earlier. Skelton's Phyllip Sparowe (1512), which contains a good deal of it, begins—

Pla ce bo,
Who is there, who?
Di le xi,
Dame Margery.

and Dunbar's Testament of Andrew Kennedy (1508)—

I will na priestis for me sing,
Dies illa, Dies iræ,
Na yet na bellis for me ring,
Sicut semper solet fieri—

though not true macaronic, is a near approach.

A. Cunningham in 1801 published Delectus Macaronicorum Carminum, a history of macaronic poetry.

Macbeth (măc beth'). The story of Shakespeare's tragedy (written 1605-6, acted certainly in 1610 and probably four years earlier, and first printed in the First Folio, 1623) is taken from Holinshed, who copied it from the History of Scotland, by Hector Boece (1527).

History states that Macbeth slew Duncan at Bothgowan, near Elgin, in 1039, and not, as Shakespeare says, at his castle of Inverness; the attack was made because Duncan had usurped the throne, to which Macbeth had the better claim. As a king Macbeth proved a very just and equitable prince, but the partisans of Malcolm got head, and succeeded in deposing Macbeth, who was slain in 1056, at Lumphanan. He was thane of Cromarty [Glamis] and afterwards of Moray [Cawdor].—LARDNER: Cabinet Cyclopædia.

Ambition is the dominant trait in the character of Lady Macbeth, and to gain her ends she hesitates at nothing. Her masterful mind sways the weaker Macbeth to "the mood of what she liked or loathed." She is a Medea, or Catherine de' Medici, or Cæsar Borgia in female form.

The real name of Lady Macbeth was Graoch, and instead of being urged to the murder of Duncan through ambition, she was goaded by deadly injuries. She was, in fact, the granddaughter of Kenneth IV, killed in 1003, fighting against Malcolm II.—LARDNER: Cabinet Cyclopædia, vol. i, p. 17.

Maccabæus (māk à bē' us). The surname given to Judas (the central figure in the struggle for Jewish independence, about 170-160 B.C.), third son of Mattathias, the Hasmonæan, and hence to his family or clan. It has generally been supposed that the name is connected with Heb. Makkēbeth, hammer (Judas being the Hammerer of the Syrians just as Charles Martel was of the Saracens), but this view is open to many weighty objections, and the origin of the name is wholly obscure.

Maccabees, The. The family of Jewish heroes, descended from Mattathias the Hasmonæan (see above) and his five sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar, and Jonathan, which delivered its race from the persecutions of the Syrian king Antiochus Epiphanes (175-164 B.C.), and established a line of priest-kings which lasted till supplanted by Herod in 40 B.C. Their exploits are told in the two Books of the Maccabees, the last books in the Apocrypha.

Macdonald. Lord Macdonald's breed. Parasites. It is said that a Lord Macdonald (son of the Lord of the Isles) once made a raid on the mainland. He and his followers, with other plunder, fell on the clothes of the enemy, and stripping off their own rags, donned the smartest and best they could lay hands on, with the result of being overrun with parasites.

Macduff (mac dūf'). Thethane of Fife in Macbeth (q.v.). His castle of Kenmoy was surprised by Macbeth, and his wife and babes "savagely slaughtered." Macduff vowed vengeance and joined the army of Siward, to dethrone the tyrant. On reaching the royal castle of Dunsinane they fought, and Macbeth was slain.

History states that Macbeth was defeated at Dunsinane, but escaped from the battle and was slain at Lumphannan in 1056.—LARDNER: Cabinet Cyclopædia, vol. i, p. 17.

Mace. Originally a club armed with iron, and used in war; now a staff of office pertaining to certain dignitaries, as the Speaker of the House of Commons, Lord Mayors and Mayors, etc. Both sword and mace are symbols of dignity, suited to the times when men went about in armour, and sovereigns needed champions to vindicate their rights.

Macedon (mās' e dōn). Macedon is not worthy of thee, is what Philip said to his son Alexander, after his achievement with the horse Bucephalus, which he subdued to his will, though only eighteen years of age.

Macedonian Madman, The. See MADMAN.

Macedonians. A religious sect, so named from Macedonius, an Arian patriarch of Constantinople, in the 4th century. They denied the divinity of the Holy Ghost, and that the essence of the Son is the same in kind with that of the Father.

MacFarlane's Geese. The proverb is that "MacFarlane's geese like their play better than their meat." The wild geese of Inch-Tavoe (Loch Lomond) used to be called MacFarlane's Geese because the MacFarlanes had a house on the island, and it is said that the geese never returned after the destruction of that house. One day James VI visited the chieftain, and was highly amused by the gambols of the geese, but the one served at table was so tough that the king exclaimed, "MacFarlane's geese like their play better than their meat."

MacFlecknoe (māc flek' nō), in Dryden's famous satire (1682), is Thomas Shadwell (1640-92), poet laureate in succession to his attacker (1688) when Dryden, having become a Catholic, refused to take the oath.

The original Flecknoe (Richard, d. about 1678) was an Irish Roman Catholic priest, doggerel sonneteer, and playwright. Shadwell, according to Dryden, was his double.

The rest to some slight meaning make pretence,

But Shadwell never deviates into sense.

MacFlecknoe, 19.

MacGirdie's Mare, used by degrees to eat less and less, but just as he had reduced her to a straw a day the poor beast died. This is an old Greek joke, which is well known to school-boys who have been taught the Analecta Minora.

MacGregor (mā greg' ōr). The motto of the MacGregors is, "E'en do and spair nocht," said to have been given them in the 12th century by a king of Scotland. While the king was hunting he was attacked by a wild boar; when Sir Malcolm requested permission to encounter the creature, "E'en do," said the king, "and spair nocht." Whereupon the strong baronet tore up an oak sapling and dispatched the enraged animal. For this defence the king gave Sir Malcolm permission to use the said motto, and, in place of a Scotch fir, to adopt for crest an oak-tree eradicate, proper.

Another motto of the MacGregors is Sriogal mo dhream, i.e. "Royal is my tribe."

The MacGregors furnish the only instance of a race being forbidden to bear its family name. It was proscribed by James VI owing to the treachery of the family, who then took the name of Murray. Charles II restored them to their estates and name in 1661, but under William and Mary the law of proscription again came into force, and it was not till 1822 that Sir John Murray, as he then was, obtained by royal licence the right to resume the ancient name of his family, MacGregor.

Rob Roy MacGregor. See ROB ROY.

Macheath, Captain (māk hēth'). A highwayman, hero of The Beggar's Opera by John Gay (1685-1732), which was produced as a satire on and protest against the fashionable Italian opera, based on classical subjects. It took London by storm when produced in 1727.

Machiavelli, Niccolo (nik ō lō' ma kyā vel' i) (1469-1527). The celebrated Florentine statesman, and author of Il Principe, an exposition of unscrupulous statecraft, whose name has long been used as an epithet or synonym for an intriguer or for an unscrupulous politician, while political cunning and overreaching by diplomacy and intrigue are known as Machiavellianism or Machiavellism. The general trend of Il Principe is to show that rulers may resort to any treachery and artifice to uphold their arbitrary power, and whatever dishonourable acts princes may indulge in are fully set off by the insubordination of their subjects.

The Imperial Machiavelli. Tiberius, the Roman emperor (42 B.C. to A.D. 37). His political axiom was: "He who knows not how to dissemble knows not how to reign." It was also the axiom of Louis XI of France.

Macintosh. Cloth waterproofed with rubber by a process patented in 1823 by Charles Macintosh (1766-1843); also a coat made of this.

Mackerel Sky. A sky dappled with detached rounded masses of white cloud, something like the markings of a mackerel.

To throw a sprat to catch a mackerel. See SPRAT.

Mackworth's Inn. See BARNARD'S INN.

Macmillanites. A religious sect of Scotland, who in 1743 seceded from the Cameronians because they wished to adhere more strictly to the principles of the Reformation in Scotland; so named from John Macmillan (1670-1753), their leader. They called themselves the "Reformed Presbytery."

MacPherson (măc fēr' son). Fable has it that during the reign of David I of Scotland, a younger brother of the chief of the powerful clan Chattan became abbot of Kingussie. His elder brother died childless, and the chieftainship devolved on the abbot. He procured the needful dispensation from the Pope (a dispensation, by the way, that no pope would ever give), married the daughter of the thane of Calder, and a swarm of little "Kingussies" was the result. The people of Inverness-shire called them the Mac-phersons, i.e. the sons of the parson.

Macrocosm (Gr., the great world), in opposition to the microcosm, the little world. The ancients looked upon the universe as a living creature, and the followers of Paracelsus considered man a miniature representation of the universe. The one was termed the Macrocosm, the other the Microcosm (q.v.).

Mad. Mad as a hatter. The probable origin of this phrase is "Mad as an adder" (A.S. næddre, A.S. atter being "poison"), but evidence is wanting. It was popularized by Lewis Carroll (Alice in Wonderland, 1865), but was well known earlier, and was used by Thackeray (Pendennis, ch. x) in 1849.

Mad as a March hare. See HARE.

The Mad Cavalier. Prince Rupert (1619-82), noted for his rash courage and impatience of control. He was a grandson of James I, through his mother, Elizabeth, and was famous as a cavalry leader on the Royalist side during the English Civil War.

The Mad Parliament. The Parliament which assembled at Oxford in 1258, and broke out into open rebellion against Henry III. It confirmed the Magna Charta, the king was declared deposed, and the government was vested in the hands of twenty-four councillors, with Simon de Montfort at their head.

The Mad Poet. Nathaniel Lee (about 1653-92), who towards the end of his life lost his reason through intemperance and was confined for four years in Bedlam.

Macedonia's Madman. Alexander the Great (356, 336-323 B.C.).

The Brilliant Madman or Madman of the North. Charles XII of Sweden (1682, 1697-1718).

Heroes are much the same, the point's agreed
From Macedonia's madman to the Swede.

POPE: Essay on Man, iv.

Madame. The wife of Philippe Duc d'Orléans, brother of Louis XIV, was so styled; other ladies were only Madame This or That.

Madame la Duchesse. Wife of Henri Jules de Bourbon (1627-93), eldest son of the Prince de Condé.

Mademoiselle. The daughter of Philippe, Duc de Chartres, grandson of Philippe, Duc d'Orléans, brother of Louis XIV.

La Grande Mademoiselle. The Duchesse de Montpensier, cousin to Louis XIV, and daughter of Gaston, Duc d'Orléans.

Madge. A popular name for the barn owl.

'Sdeins, an I swallow this, I'll ne'er draw my sword in the sight of Fleet-street again while I live; I'll sit in a barn with madge-howlet, and catch mice first.—BEN JONSON: Every Man in his Humour, ii, 1.

Madoc (măd' ok). A legendary Welsh prince, youngest son of Owain Gwyneth, king of North Wales, who died in 1169. According to tradition he sailed to America, and established a colony on the southern branches of the Missouri. About the same time the Aztecs forsook Aztlan, under the guidance of Yuhidthiton, and founded the empire called Mexico, in honour of Mexitli, their tutelary god. Southey's poem, Madoc (1805), harmonizes these two events.

Madonna (Ital., my lady). A title specially applied to the Virgin Mary.

Mæander. See MEANDER.

Mæcenās (mē sē' nās). A patron of letters; so called from C. Cilnius Mæcenās (d. 8 B.C.), a Roman statesman in the reign of Augustus, who kept open house for all men of letters, and was the special friend and patron of Horace and Virgil. Nicholas Rowe so called the Earl of Halifax on his installation to the Order of the Garter (1714).

The last English Mæcenās. Samuel Rogers (1763-1855), poet and banker.

Maelström (māl' strom) (Norw., whirling stream). A dangerous whirlpool off the coast of Norway, between the islands of Moskenasø and Varø (in the Lofoten Islands), where the water is pushed and jostled a good deal, and where, when the wind and tide are contrary, it is not safe for small boats to venture.

It was anciently thought that it was a subterranean abyss, penetrating the globe, and communicating with the Gulf of Bothnia.

The name is given to other whirlpools, and also, figuratively, to any turbulent or overwhelming situation.

Mæonides (mæ on' i dēz), or The Mæonian Poet. Homer (q.v.), either because he was the son of Mæon, or because he was born in Mæonia (Asia Minor).

Mæra. The dog of Icarus (q.v.).

Mæviad. See BAVIAD.

Mae West (mā west). The name given by flying men in World War II to the inflatable life-preserver vest or jacket worn when there was a possibility of their being forced into the sea. The name was given in compliment to the figure and charms of the famous film star.

Maffick. To celebrate an event, especially an occasion of national rejoicing, with wild and extravagant exuberance. From the uproarious scenes and unrestrained exultation that took place in London on the night of May 18th, 1900, when the news of the relief of Mafeking (besieged by the Boers since the previous November) became known.

Mafia (mă fē' a). In Sicily, those who take part in active hostility to the law, viz. the greater part of the population. Mafia is often erroneously stated to denote an organized secret society.

Mag. A contraction of magpie. What a mag you are! You chatter like a magpie. A prating person is called "a mag."

Not a mag to bless myself with. Not a half-penny.

Magā (mā' gā). A familiar name for Blackwood's Magazine.

Magazine. A place for stores (Arab. makhzan, a storehouse). This meaning is still retained for military and some other purposes; but the word now commonly denotes a periodical publication containing contributions by various authors. How this came about is seen from the Introduction to the Gentleman's Magazine (1731)—the first to use the word in this way:—

This Consideration has induced several Gentlemen to promote a Monthly Collection to treasure up, as in a Magazine, the most remarkable Pieces on the Subjects above mention'd.

Magdalene (măg' dā lēn). An asylum for the reclaiming of prostitutes; so called from Mary Magdalene or Mary of Magdala, "out of whom He had cast seven devils" (Mark xvi, 9).

Magdalen College, Oxford (1458) and

Magdalene College, Cambridge (1542), are pronounced mawd' lin.

Magdalenian (măg dē lē' nyān). The name given to a late period of the Stone Age, during which the climate was cold and reindeer, bison, and wild horses roamed over all Europe. It was at this time that the mammoth became extinct. Stone Age man attained his highest degree of civilization in the Magdalenian period, the finest examples of which are found in the district of La Madeleine, Dordogne, France.

Magdeburg Centuries. The first great work of Protestant divines on the history of the Christian Church. It was begun at Magdeburg by Matthias Flacius, in 1552, and published at Basle (13 volumes), 1560-74. As each century occupies a volume, the thirteen volumes complete the history to 1300.

Magellan, Straits of (mă jel' ān). So called after Fernão de Magelhaes (c. 1480-1521), the Portuguese navigator, and first circumnavigator of the globe, who discovered them in 1520.

Magenta (mă jen' tā). A brilliant red aniline dye derived from coal-tar, named in commemoration of the bloody battle of Magenta, when the Austrians were defeated by the French and Sardinians. This was just before the dye was discovered, in 1859.

Maggot. There was an old idea that whimsical or crotchety persons had maggots in their brains—

Are you not mad, my friend? What time o' th' moon is't?

Have not you maggots in your brains?

FLETCHER: Women Pleased, iii, 4 (1620).

Hence we have the adjective maggoty, whimsical, full of fancies. Fanciful dance tunes used to be called maggots, as in The Dancing Master (1716) there are many such titles as "Barker's maggots," "Cary's maggots," "Draper's maggots," etc., and in 1685 Samuel Wesley father of John and Charles Wesley, published a volume with the title Maggots; or Poems on Several Subjects.

When the maggot bites. When the fancy takes us. Swift, making fun of the notion, says that if the bite is hexagonal it produces poetry; if circular, eloquence; if conical, politics.

Instead of maggots the Scots say, "His head is full of bees"; the French, Il a des rats dans la tête (cp. our slang "Rats in the garret"); and in Holland, "He has a mouse's nest in his head."

Magi (mă' jī) (Lat.; pl. of magus). Literally "wise men"; specifically, the Three Wise Men of the East who brought gifts to the infant Saviour. Tradition calls them Melchior, Gaspar, and Balthazar, three kings of the East. The first offered gold, the emblem of royalty; the second, frankincense, in token of divinity; and the third, myrrh, in prophetic allusion to the persecution unto death which awaited the "Man of Sorrows."

MELCHIOR means "king of light."

GASPAR, or CASPAR, means "the white one."

BALTHAZAR means "the lord of treasures."

Mediæval legend calls them the Three Kings of Cologne, and the Cathedral there claims their relics. They are commemorated on January 2nd, 3rd, and 4th, and particularly at the Feast of the Epiphany.

Among the ancient Medes and Persians the Magi were members of a priestly caste credited with great occult powers, and in Camoëns' Lusiad the term denotes the Indian Brahmins. Ammianus Marcellinus says that the Persian magi derived their knowledge from the Brahmins of India (i, 23), and Arianus expressly calls the Brahmins "magi" (i, 7).

Magic Rings, Wands, etc. See these words.

The Great Magician or Wizard of the North. Professor Wilson ("Christopher North") gave Sir Walter Scott the name, because of the wonderful fascination of his writings.

Magician of the North. The title assumed by Johann Georg Hamann (1730-88), a German philosopher and theologian.

Magniot Line (ma' zhi no). A zone of fortifications, mostly of concrete, with impregnable gun-positions, shelters, etc., built along the eastern frontier of France between 1929 and 1934, and named after André Magniot (1877-1932), Minister of War, who was responsible for their construction. The line extended from the Swiss border to that of Belgium, and for long it deluded the French into the belief that it would make a German invasion impossible. This might have been true, had the Germans not entered France through Belgium in 1940, turning the Magniot Line, which thus served no purpose whatever.

Magna Charta. The Great Charter of English liberty extorted from King John, 1215.

It contained (in its final form) 37 clauses, and is directed principally against abuses of the power of the Crown and to guaranteeing that no subject should be kept in prison without trial and judgment by his peers.

Magnanimous. The. Alfonso V of Aragon (1385, 1416-58).

Chosroes or Khosru, King of Persia, twenty-first of the Sassanids, surnamed Nouslurwan (the Magnanimous) (531-579).

Magnet. The loadstone; so called from Magnesia, in Lydia, where the ore was said to abound. Milton uses the adjective for the substantive in the line "As the magnetic hardest iron draws" (Paradise Regained, ii, 168).

Magnetic Mountain. A mountain of mediæval legend which drew out all the nails of any ship that approached within its influence. It is referred to in Mandeville's Travels and in many stories, such as the tale of the Third Calender and one of the voyages of Sinbad the Sailor in the Arabian Nights.

Magnificat. The hymn of the Virgin (Luke i, 46-55) beginning "My soul doth magnify the Lord" (Magnificat anima mea Dominum), used as part of the daily service of the Church since the beginning of the sixth century, and at Evening Prayer in England for over 800 years.

To correct Magnificat before one has learnt Te Deum. To try to do that for which one has no qualifications; to criticize presumptuously.

To sing the Magnificat at matins. To do things at the wrong time, or out of place. The Magnificat belongs to vespers, not to matins.

Magnificent. The. Chosroes of Persia. See MAGNANIMOUS.

Lorenzo de Medici (1448-92), Il Magnifico, Duke of Florence.

Robert, Duke of Normandy, also called Le Diable (1028-35).

Soliman I, greatest of the Turkish sultans (1490, 1520-66).

C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la guerre. A magnificent gesture, but not real warfare. Admirable, but not according to rule. The comment on the field made by the French General Bosquet to A. H. Layard on the charge of the Light Brigade at Balacava. It has frequently been attributed to Marshal Canrobert.

Magnolia (măg nō' li à). A genus of North American flowering trees so called from Pierre Magnol (1638-1715), professor of botany at Montpellier.

Magnum (măg' num). A wine bottle, double the size of the ordinary bottle—holding two quarts or thereabouts. Cp. JEROBOAM.

Magnum bonum (Lat., "great and good"). A name given to certain choice potatoes, and also plums. Burns, in the following extract, evidently meant by it a magnum (see above):—

And Welsh, who ne'er yet flinch'd his ground,
High-way'd his magnum-bonum round
With Cyclopean fury.
An Election Ballad: Dumfries Burls.

Magnum opus. The chief or most important of one's literary works.

My magnum opus, the "Life of Dr. Johnson" . . . is to be published on Monday, 16th May.—BOSWELL: Letter to Rev. W. Temple, 1791.

Magpie. Formerly "maggot-pie," maggot representing Margaret (cp. Robin redbreast, Tom-tit, and the old Phyllip-sparrow), and pie being pied, in allusion to its white and black plumage.

Augurs and understood relations have
(By magotpies, and coughs, and rooks) brought forth
The secret'st man of blood.

Macbeth, iii, 4.

The magpie has generally been regarded as an uncanny bird; in Sweden it is connected with witchcraft, in Devonshire if a peasant sees one he spits over his shoulder three times to avert ill luck, and in Scotland magpies flying near the windows of a house, foretell the early death of one of its inmates.

The following rhyme about the number of magpies seen in the course of a walk is old and well known:—

One's sorrow, two's mirth,
Three's a wedding, four's a birth,
Five's a christening, six a dearth,
Seven's heaven, eight is hell,
And nine's the devil his ane sel.'

In target-shooting the score made by a shot striking the outermost division but one is called a magpie because it was customarily signalled by a black and white flag; and formerly bishops were humorously or derisively called magpies because of their black and white vestments.

Lawyers, as Vultures, had soared up and down;
Prelates, like Magpies, in the Air had flown.
Howell's Letters: Lines to the Knowing Reader (1645).

Magus. See SIMON MAGUS.

Magyar (mă jar'). The dominant race in Hungary. Magyars are not of Aryan stock but of the Finno-Ugrian peoples, who invaded Hungary about the end of the 9th century and settled there. The Hungarian language is one of the most difficult to master in Europe.

Mahabharata (ma ha ba ra' tà). One of the two great epic poems of ancient India (cp.

RAMAYANA), about eight times as long as the Iliad and Odyssey together. Its main story is the war between descendants of Kuru and Pandu, but there are an immense number of episodes.

Maha-pudma. See TORTOISE.

Maharajah (ma ha ra' ja) (Sansk., "great king"). The title of certain native rulers of India whose territories are very extensive. The wife of a Maharajah is a Maharanee.

Mahātma (mā hāt' mā) (Sansk., "great soul"). Max Müller tells us that:—

Mahātma is a well-known Sanskrit word applied to men who have retired from the world, who, by means of a long ascetic discipline, have subdued the passions of the flesh, and gained a reputation for sanctity and knowledge. That these men are able to perform most startling feats, and to suffer the most terrible tortures, is perfectly true.—Nineteenth Century, May, 1893.

By the Esoteric Buddhists the name is given to adepts of the highest order, a community of whom is supposed to exist in Tibet, and by Theosophists to one who has reached perfection spiritually, intellectually, and physically. As his knowledge is perfect he can produce effects which, to the ordinary man, appear miraculous.

The title was later associated with Mohandas Gandhi, the Hindu leader of revolt against British rule in India. A preacher and unceasing practiser of the doctrine of non-violence, by his life of pure simplicity and his intercessory fasts—often carried to the verge of death—he acquired an immense influence over Indians of all creeds and races. Gandhi was assassinated by a fanatical Hindu at the age of 78, on January 30th, 1948.

Mahdi (ma' di) (Arab., "the divinely directed one"). The expected Messiah of the Mohammedans; a title often assumed by leaders of insurrection in the Sudan, especially Mohammed Ahmed (1843-85) who led the rising of 1883, and who, say some, is not really dead, but sleeps in a cavern near Bagdad, and will return to life in the fullness of time to overthrow Dejal (anti-Christ). The Shiah believe that the Mahdi has lived (some sects maintaining that he is in hiding), but the Sunnis hold that he is still to appear.

Mah-jongg (ma jongg). A Chinese game played with dominoes made of ivory and bamboo. There are usually four players at a table, each acting for himself. The dominoes, which number 136, are arranged in three suits, and there are four sets of each. One consists of three honours—red, white, and green; another represents the four winds, north, south, east, and west; the third consists of three sets of nine dominoes named characters, circles, and bamboos. The object of each player is to obtain the highest scoring hand, known as Mah-jongg.

Mahomet. See MOHAMMED.

Mahoun, Mahound. Names of contempt for Mohammed, a Moslem, a Moor, particularly in romances of the Crusades. The name is sometimes used as a synonym for "the Devil."

Of-times by Tergant and Mahound swore.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, VI, vii, 47.

Maid. Maid Marian. A female character in the old May games and morris dances, in the former usually being Queen of the May. In the later Robin Hood ballads she became attached to the cycle as the outlaw's sweetheart, probably through the performance of Robin Hood plays at May-day festivities. The part of Maid Marian both in the games and the dance was frequently taken by a man dressed as a woman.

[The Courtier] must, if the least spot of morphew come on his face, have his oyle of tartar, his lac virginis, his camphir dissolved in verjuice, to make the foote as faire, for sooth, as if he were to playe Maid Marian in a May-game or moris-dance.—GREENE: Quip for an Upstart Courtier (1592).

Maid of Athens. The girl immortalized by Byron, was Theresa Macri.

Maid of Norway. Margaret (1283-90), daughter of Eric II and Margaret of Norway. On the death of Alexander III of Scotland (1285), her maternal grandfather, she was acknowledged Queen of Scotland, and was betrothed to Edward, son of Edward I of England, but she died on her passage to Scotland.

Maid of Orleans. Joan of Arc (1412-31), who raised the siege of Orleans in 1429. She was canonized in 1920, her feast day being May 8th.

Maid of Saragossa. Augustina Zaragoza, distinguished for her heroism when Saragossa was besieged in 1808 and 1809, and celebrated by Byron in his Childe Harold (I, liv-lvi).

Maiden. A machine resembling the guillotine, used in Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries for beheading criminals, and introduced there by the Regent Morton for the purpose of beheading the laird of Pennycuik. It was also called "the widow."

He who invented the maiden first hanselled it. Morton is erroneously said to have been the first to suffer by it. Thomas Scott, one of the murderers of Rizzio, was beheaded by it in 1566, fifteen years before the Regent's execution.

Maiden Assize. One in which there is no person to be brought to trial. We have also the expressions maiden tree, one never lopped; maiden fortress, one never taken; maiden speech, the first delivered, etc. In a maiden assize, the sheriff of the county presents the judge with a pair of white gloves. Maiden conveys the sense of unspotted, unpolluted, innocent; thus Hubert says to the king—

This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
King John, iv, 2.

Maiden King. The. Malcolm IV of Scotland (1141, 1153-65).

Malcolm . . . son of the brave and generous Prince Henry . . . was so kind and gentle in his disposition, that he was usually called Malcolm the Maiden.—SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, iv.

Maiden over. A cricket term for an over in which no runs are made.

Maiden or Virgin Queen. Elizabeth I, Queen of England, who never married. (1533, 1558-1603.)

Maiden Town. A town never taken by the enemy (cp. MAIDEN ASSIZE above). Also, specifically, Edinburgh, from tradition that the maiden daughters of a Pictish king were sent there for protection during an intestine war.

Mail Order. The carrying on of business by post, that is of receiving orders and cash by post and sending on the goods purchased by the customer also by post, grew to enormous dimensions in U.S.A. where, in great agricultural areas, it was the only method whereby people could obtain other than the mere necessities of life.

Mailed Fist, The. Aggressive military might; from a phrase (gepanzerzte Faust) made use of by William II of Germany when bidding adieu to Prince Henry of Prussia as he was starting on his tour to the Far East (December 16th, 1897):—

Should anyone essay to detract from our just rights or to injure us, then up and at him with your mailed fist.

Maillotins (mī yō tan). Insurgents in Paris who, in 1382, rose against the taxes imposed by the Regent, the Duc d'Anjou. They seized iron mallets (maillotins) from the Arsenal and killed the tax collectors.

Main. To splice the mainbrace. A nautical phrase meaning to serve out grog; hence to indulge freely in strong drink. Literally, the mainbrace is the rope by which the main-yard of a ship is set in position, and to splice it would be to join the two ends together again when broken.

Main, chance, The. Profit or money, probably from the game called hazard, in which the first throw of the dice is called the main, which must be between four and nine, the player then throwing his chance, which determines the main.

To have an eye to the main chance. To keep in view the money or advantage to be made out of an enterprise.

Main Street. The principal thoroughfare in many of the smaller towns and cities of U.S.A. The novel of this name, by Sinclair Lewis (1920) epitomized the social and cultural life of these towns, and gave the phrase a significance of its own.

Maintenance (Fr. main, tenir, to hold in the hand, maintain). Means of support or sustenance: in legal phraseology, officious intermeddling in litigation with which one has rightfully nothing whatever to do. Cp. CHAMPERTY. Actions for maintenance are rare, but damages can be recovered for this abuse of legal process.

Cap of Maintenance. See CAP.

Maitland Club. A club of literary antiquaries, instituted at Glasgow in 1828. It published or reprinted a number of works of Scottish historical and literary interest.

Maize. American superstition had it that if a damsel found a blood-red ear of maize, she would have a suitor before the year was over.

Even the blood-red ear to Evangeline brought not her lover. LONGFELLOW: Evangeline.

Majesty. Henry VIII was the first English sovereign who was styled "His Majesty," though it was not till the time of the Stuarts that this form of address had become stereotyped, and in the Dedication to James I prefixed to the Authorized Version of the Bible (1611) the King is addressed both in this way and as "Your Highness."

The Lord of Heaven and earth blesses your Majesty with many and happy days, that as his Heavenly hand hath enriched your Highness with many singular and extraordinary Graces, etc.

Henry IV was "His Grace"; Henry VI, "His Excellent Grace"; Edward IV, "High and Mighty Prince"; Henry VII, "His Grace" and "His Highness"; Henry VIII, in the earlier part of his reign, was styled "His Highness," "His Sacred Majesty" was a title assumed by subsequent sovereigns, but was afterwards changed to "Most Excellent Majesty." "His Catholic Majesty" was the king of Spain, and "His Most Christian Majesty" the king of France.

In heraldry, an eagle crowned and holding a sceptre is said to be "an eagle in his majesty."

Majolica Ware. A pottery originally made in the island of Majorca or Majolica. See FAIENCE.

Major-General. A rank in the British Army above that of Brigadier and below that of Lieutenant-General. The distinguishing badge is a crossed sword and baton with one star. The rank was first instituted by Cromwell in 1655, after his quarrel with the Parliament; each major-general was to govern a military district with civil and military powers. As such the scheme was in force until 1657, when the civil side was dropped and the rank became purely military.

Majority. He has joined the majority. He is dead. Blair says, in his Grave, "'Tis long since Death had the majority."

Make. In America this word is much more frequently used with the meaning put ready for use than it is with us; we have the phrase to make the bed, and Shakespeare has make the door (see DOOR), but in the States such phrases as Have you made my room? (i.e. put it tidy), are common. To make good, to make one's pile, to make a place (i.e. to arrive there), are among the many Americanisms in which this word is used. To make a die of it, to die, is another.

Why, Tom, you don't mean to make a die of it?—R. M. BRD: Nick of the Woods (1837).

On the make. Looking after one's own personal advantage; intent on the "main chance."

Make and mend. A term used in the Royal Navy for a period of time devoted to sewing and general repairs on board ship.

To make it. To succeed in catching a train, keeping an appointment, etc.

To make away with. To put or take out of the way, run off with; to squander; also to murder; to make away with oneself is to commit suicide.

To make believe. To pretend; to play a game at.

We will make believe that there are fairies in the world. KINGSLEY: Water Babies, ch. ii.

Make-believe is also used as a noun.

To make bold. See BOLD.

To make for. To conduce; as, "His actions make for peace"; also to move towards; hence, in slang use, to attack.

To make free with. To take liberties with, use as one's own.

To make good. To fulfil one's promises or to come up to expectations, to succeed.

Whether or not the new woman Mayor would "make good" was of real interest to the country at large.—Evening Post (New York), Sept. 14th, 1911.

Also to replace, repair, or compensate for; as, "My car was damaged through your carelessness, so now you'll have to make it good."

To make it up. To become reconciled.

To make off. To run away, to abscond.

To make out. To manage, to contrive; to assert.

To make tracks. To hurry away.

What make you here? What do you want? What are you come here for?

Now, sir, what make you here?—As You Like It, i. 1.

'Twas in Margate last July, I walk'd upon the pier, I saw a little vulgar boy—I said, "What make you here?"

INGOLDSBY LEGENDS: Misadventures at Margate.

Makeshift. A temporary arrangement during an emergency.

Make-up. The general use of this term as noun and verb to describe face cosmetics and their application is of theatrical origin, being employed to describe the materials used by an actor for painting his face and otherwise transforming his appearance to suit a character on the stage; the manner in which he is made up; hence, in colloquial use, the sum of one's characteristics, idiosyncrasies, etc. In printing the make-up is the arrangement of the printed matter in columns, pages, etc.

Make-weight. A small addition as compensation or an "extra," as a piece of meat, cheese, bread, etc., thrown into the scale to make the weight correct.

Malagrowth, Malachi. The signature of Sir Walter Scott to a series of letters contributed in 1826 to the Edinburgh Weekly Journal upon the lowest limitation of paper money to £5. They caused an immense sensation, similar to that produced by Draper's Letters (q.v.), or Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution.

Malakoff (mäl' à kof). This fortification, which was carried by storm by the French, September 8th, 1855 was named from a drunken Russian sailor who lived at Sebastopol, and, being dismissed the dockyards in which he had been employed, opened a liquor-shop on the hill outside the town. His old friends gathered round, other houses sprang up, and "Mala-koff," as it came to be called, was ultimately fortified.

Malaprop, Mrs. (mäl' à prop). The famous character in Sheridan's The Rivals. Noted for her blunders in the use of words (Fr. mal à propos). "As headstrong as an allegory on the banks of the Nile" is one of her grotesque misapplications; and she has given us the word malapropism to denote such mistakes.

Malaysia (mäl lä' zya). The collective name given to the whole Malay Archipelago, as opposed to Malaya, which is applied to the southern and greater portion of the Malay Peninsula. Amongst other islands Malaysia includes the Sunda Islands, the Moluccas, Borneo, and the Philippines.

Malbecco (mäl bek' ö). A "cankered, crabbed carle" in Spenser's Faerie Queene (III, x) wealthy, very miserly, and the personification of self-inflicted torments. His young wife, Helenore, set fire to his house, and eloped with Sir Paridel, whereupon Malbecco cast himself from a rock, and his ghost was metamorphosed into Jealousy.

Malbrouk or Marlborough. The old French song, "Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre" (Marlborough is off to the wars), is said to date from 1709, when the Duke of Marlborough was winning his battles in Flanders, but it did not become popular till it was applied to Charles Churchill, 3rd Duke of Marlborough, at the time of his failure against Cherbourg (1758), and was further popularized by its becoming a favourite of Marie Antoinette about 1780, and by its being introduced by Beaumarchais into Le Mariage de Figaro (1784). The air, however (the same as our "We won't go home till morning"), is of far older date, was well known in Egypt and the East, and is said to have been sung by the Crusaders. According to a tradition recorded by Châteaubriand, the air came from the Arabs, and the tale is a legend of Mambron, a crusader.

Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,

Mironton, mironton, mirontaine;

Malbrouk s'en va-t-en guerre,

Nul sait quand reviendra.

Il reviendra z'à pâques—

Mironton, mironton, mirontaine . . .

Ou à la Trinité.

Male. Applied in the vegetable kingdom to certain plants which were supposed to have some masculine property or appearance, as the male fern (Nephrodium filix-mas), the fronds of which cluster in a kind of crown; and to precious stones—particularly sapphires—that are remarkable for their depth or brilliance of colour.

Malebolge (mäl è bolj'). The eighth circle of Dante's Inferno (Canto xviii), containing ten bolgi or pits. The name is used figuratively of any cesspool of filth or iniquity.

Malice. In addition to its common meaning malice is a term in English law to designate either actual ill-will formed against another in the mind of the person charged with malice or the doing of some deliberate act so injurious to another that the law will imply evil intent—this is commonly known as malice prepense, or malice aforethought. Malicious damage is a legal term meaning damage done to property wilfully and purposely; malicious prosecution means the preferring a criminal prosecution or the presentation of a bankruptcy petition maliciously and without reasonable cause.

Malkin (mol' kin). An old diminutive of Matilda; formerly used as a generic term for a kitchen-wench or untidy slut; also for a cat (see GRIMALKIN), and for a scarecrow or grotesque puppet.

All tongues speak of him . . .

The kitchen malkin pins

Her richest lochram 'bout her reechy neck,

Clambering the walls to eye him.

Coriolanus, ii, 1.

The name was also sometimes given to the Queen of the May (see MAID MARIAN):—

Put on the shape of order and humanity,

Or you must marry Malkin, the May lady.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Monsieur Thomas, ii, 2.

Mall, The (mäl). A broad promenade in St. James's Park, London, so called because the game of Pall-mall (q.v.) used to be played there. The mall was the mallet with which the ball was struck.

Noe persons shall after play carry their malls out of St. James's Parke without leave of the said keeper.—Order Book of General Monk (1662).

Malmesbury, The Philosopher of (mamz' b'ë ri), Thomas Hobbes (1588-1679), author of Leviathan (q.v.), from his birthplace.

Malmsey Wine (mam' zi) is the wine of Malvasia, in the Morea, and is the same name as Malvoisie.

George, Duke of Clarence, son of Richard, Duke of York, was, according to tradition, drowned in a butt of malmsey in 1477-8, by order of his brother, Richard III. Holinshed says, "finalle the duke was cast into the Tower, and therewith adjudged for a traitor, and privily drowned in a butt of malmesie, the eleventh of March, in the beginning of the seventeenth yeaere of the kinge's reigne."

See Shakespeare's Richard III, i, 4.

Malt. A malt worm. A toper, especially a well-soaked beer-drinker.

I am joined with no foot-landrakers, no long-staff sumpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio-purple-hued malt worms; but with nobility and tranquillity.—1 Henry IV, ii, 1.

In meal or malt. See MEAL.

When the malt gets aboon the meal. When persons, after dinner, get more or less fuddled.

The famous Sermon on Malt is generally credited to the Puritan divine John Dod (about 1549-1645), rector of Fawsley, Northants, called the Decalogist, from his exposition of the Ten Commandments (1604).

Malta. After a varied and eventful history this island became a British possession in 1814 since when it has been almost impregnable fortified as a naval base, commanding the Mediterranean and the approaches to the Suez Canal. For its resistance and suffering under aerial bombardment the island was awarded the George Cross in 1942.

Malta, Knights of, or Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. Some time after the first crusade (1042), some Neapolitan merchants built at Jerusalem a hospital for sick pilgrims and a church which they dedicated to St. John; these they committed to the charge of certain knights, called Hospitallers of St. John. In 1310 these Hospitallers, having developed into a military Order, took the island of Rhodes, and changed their title into Knights of Rhodes. In 1522 they were expelled by the Turks, and took up their residence in Malta, which was ruled by the Grand Master until the island was taken by the French in 1798. The Order is now extinct as a sovereign body, but maintains a lingering existence in Italy, Germany, France, etc., and in Malta, where it still confers titles of "Marquis" and "Count." See HOSPITALLERS.

Maltese Cross. Made thus: ✠. Originally the badge of the Knights of Malta, formed of four barbed arrow-heads with their points meeting in the centre. In modified and elaborated forms it is the badge of many well-known Orders, etc., as the British Victoria Cross and Order of Merit, and the German Iron Cross.

Maltese terrier. An ancient breed of lap-dog, somewhat resembling a Skye terrier though not really a terrier at all. In colour it is pure white, though occasionally marked with fawn; the face and sides are clothed with long, silky hair and the highly-plumed tail usually curves over the back.

Malthusian Doctrine was that population in creases more than the means of subsistence does, so that in time, if no check is put upon the increase of population, many must starve or all be ill fed. It was promulgated by T. R. Malthus (1766-1835), especially in his Essay on Population (1798). Applied to individual nations, such as Britain, it intimated that something must be done to check the increase of population, as all the land would not suffice to feed its inhabitants.

Malum (mä' lüm), in Latin, means an apple; and malus, mala, malum means evil. Southey, in his Commonplace Book, quotes a witty etymon given by Nicolson and Burn, making the noun derived from the adjective, in allusion, possibly, to the apple eaten by Eve; and there is the schoolboy joke showing how malo repeated four times can be translated into a tolerable and fairly lengthy quatrain:—

Malto, I would rather be

Malto, Up an apple tree

Malto, Than a bad man

Malto, In adversity.

Malum in se (Lat.). What is of itself wrong, and would be so even if no law existed against its commission, as lying, murder, theft.

Malum prohibitum (Lat.). What is wrong merely because it is forbidden, as eating a particular fruit was wrong in Adam and Eve, because they were commanded not to do so.

Malvern Hills (mawl' vërn). A range of hills or downs extending for some nine miles between Worcestershire and Herefordshire. Worcester Beacon and Hereford Beacon are both nearly 1,400 ft. high; from the former can be seen fifteen counties, the cathedrals of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester and five abbeys.

On a May morwenynge on Malverne hilles

Me befel a ferly, of fairye me thogte.

I was wery for-wandred, and wente me to reste

Under a brood bank by a bournes syde,

And as I lay and lenede, and loked on the watres

I slombred into a slepyng, it swayed so myrre.

LANGLAND: Piers Plowman.

Mambrino (mäm brë nõ). A pagan king of old romance, introduced by Ariosto into Orlando

Furioso. He had a helmet of pure gold which rendered the wearer invulnerable, and was taken possession of by Rinaldo. This is frequently referred to in Don Quixote, and we read that when the barber was caught in a shower and clapped his brazen basin on his head, Don Quixote insisted that this was the enchanted helmet of the Moorish king.

Mamelukes (mām' e lookz) (Arab. mamluc, a slave). The slaves brought from the Caucasus to Egypt, and formed into a standing army, who, in 1254, raised one of their body to the supreme power. They reigned over Egypt till 1517, when they were overthrown by the Turkish Sultan, Selim I. The country, though nominally under a Turkish viceroy, was subsequently governed by twenty-four Mameluke beys. In 1811 the Pasha of Egypt, Mohammed Ali, by a wholesale massacre annihilated the Mamelukes.

Mammet, or Maumet. An idol; hence a puppet or doll (as in Romeo and Juliet, iii, 5, and 1 Henry IV, ii, 3). The word is a corruption of Mahomet. Mohammedanism being the most prominent non-Christian religion with which Christendom was acquainted before the Reformation, it became a generic word to designate any false faith; even idolatry is called mammetry; and in a 14th-century MS. Bible (first edited by A. C. Paues, 1904) 1 John v, 21, reads—

My smale children, kepe ye you from mawmetes and symulacris.

Mammon (mām' on). The god of this world. The word in Syriac means riches, and it occurs in the Bible (Matt. vi, 24, Luke xvi, 13): "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Spenser (Faerie Queene, II, vii) and Milton (who identifies him with Vulcan or Mulciber, Paradise Lost, i, 738-51) both make Mammon the personification of the evils of wealth and miserliness.

Mammon led them on—
Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell
From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts
Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, i, 678.

The Mammon of Unrighteousness. Money; see Luke xvi, 9.

Sir Epicure Mammon. A worldly sensualist in Ben Jonson's Alchemist.

Mammoth Cave. In Edmonson county, Kentucky; the largest known in the world, discovered in 1809. It comprises a large number of chambers, with connecting passages said to total 150 miles, and covers an area of nearly 10 miles in diameter.

Man. Man in the Moon, Man of Blood, Brass, December, Sin, Straw, War, etc. See these words.

Man about town. A fashionable idler.

Man Friday. See FRIDAY.

Man-Mountain. See QUINBUS FLESTRIN.

Man of letters. An author, a literary scholar.

Man of the world. One "knowing" in worldcraft; no greenhorn. Charles Macklin brought out a comedy (1704), and Henry Mackenzie a novel (1773) with the title.

Man of war. A warship in the navy of a government; though the name is masculine, always spoken of as "she." Formerly the term was used to denote a fighting man ("the Lord is a man of war," Ex. xv, 3).

The name of the "Man of War Rock," in the Scilly Islands, is a corruption of Cornish men (or maen) an vawr, meaning "big rock."

The popular name of the marine hydrozoan, Physalia pelagica, is the Portuguese man of war, or, simply, man of war.

Man-of-war bird. The frigate-bird.

Man proposes, but God disposes. So we read in the Imitatio Christi (Homo proponit, sed Deus disponit, I, xix, 2). Herbert (Jacula Prudentum) has nearly the same words; as also has Montluc: L'homme propose et Dieu dispose (Comédie de Proverbes, iii, 7).

The Man in Black. A well-known character in Goldsmith's Citizen of the World; supposed to have been drawn from the author's father.

The Man in the Iron Mask. See MASK.

Man in the street. The ordinary citizen, the man or woman who, in the aggregate, makes public opinion. According to Charles Greville (1794-1865) this was originally a racing term—"the man in the street," as we call him at Newmarket." Diary, s.d. March 22nd, 1831.

The Man of Destiny. Napoleon I (1761-1821). He looked on himself as an instrument in the hands of destiny.

G. B. Shaw used the epithet as the title of a play about Napoleon.

The Man of Ross. See ROSS.

The New Man. The regenerated man. In Scripture phrase the unregenerated state is called the old man.

The Threefold Man. According to Diogenes Laertius, the body was composed of (1) a mortal part; (2) a divine and ethereal part, called the phren; and (3) an aerial and vapor-ous part, called the thumos.

According to the Romans, man has a threefold soul, which at the dissolution of the body resolves itself into (1) the Manes; (2) the Anima or Spirit; (3) the Umbra. The Manes went either to Elysium or Tartarus; the Anima returned to the gods; but the Umbra hovered about the body as unwilling to quit it.

According to the Jews, man consists of body, soul, and spirit.

Man, Isle of. The origin of the name is doubtful, but it may be O. Celt. man, a place. The Old English Chronicle calls it Mon ege (Mona's Isle), Orderic (about 1100) Insula Man; while Cæsar called it Mona, Pliny Monapia, and Ptolemy Monarina. To Bede the island was Mevantia Insule, and Nennius gives it its current Latin name as well as its native name—Eubonia, id est Manau. The Manx form is Eilan Mhamin.

Mancha, La (la man' cha) was a province of Spain almost identical with the modern province of Ciudad Real. It is celebrated as the country of Don Quixote. It is a land of arid steppes and wide expanses of heath and waste, and is the least populated area of Spain.

Manchester. The name—which is given in Domesday Book as Mamecestre, and in the Old English Chronicle as Mameceaster—is of doubtful origin, but the mam- is probably Celtic mam, rounded, breast-like, in which case the word would be a Latin and Celtic hybrid denoting “the camp by the round hill.” A native of Manchester is a Mancunian, from Mancunium, the mediæval Latin name of the city.

The Manchester Massacre. See PETERLOO.

The Manchester Poet. Charles Swain (1803-74).

The Manchester School. The name given in derision by Disraeli to the Cobden-Bright group of Free Trade economists in 1848. Hence, Free Traders, and Free Trade principles generally.

Manchukuo (mǎn choo kwō). This was the name given to a country formed of Manchuria and parts of Inner Mongolia, under the control of Japan, incorporated in 1932. In 1945 it was restored to China under the old name of Manchuria.

Manciple. A purveyor of food, a steward, or clerk of the kitchen. Chaucer has a “manciple” in his Canterbury Tales. (Lat. manceps, mancipis, a buyer, manager.)

Mancus. An Anglo-Saxon coin worth thirty pence. In the reign of Ethelbert, King of Kent, money accounts were kept in pounds, mancuses, shillings, and pence. Five pence = one shilling, 30 pence = one mancus. Mancuses were in gold and silver also.

Mandamus (Lat., we command). A writ of Queen's Bench, commanding the person or corporation, etc., named to do what the writ directs. So called from the opening word.

Mandarin is not a Chinese word, but one given by the Portuguese colonists at Macao to the officials called by the natives Kwan. It is from Malay and Hindi mantri, counsellor, from Sansk. mantra, counsel (man, to think).

The word is sometimes used derisively for over-pompous officials, as, “The mandarins of our Foreign Office.”

The mandarin orange is probably so called from the resemblance of its colour to that of a mandarin's robe.

The nine ranks of mandarins were distinguished by the button in their cap:—1, ruby; 2, coral; 3, sapphire; 4, an opaque blue stone; 5, crystal; 6, an opaque white shell; 7, wrought gold; 8, plain gold; and 9, silver.

The whole body of Chinese mandarins consists of twenty-seven members. They are appointed for (1) imperial birth; (2) long service; (3) illustrious deeds; (4) knowledge; (5) ability; (6) zeal; (7) nobility; and (8) aristocratic birth.—GUTZLAY.

Mandate (Lat. mandatum, mandare, to command). An authoritative charge or command; in law, a contract of bailment by which the mandatory undertakes to perform gratuitously a duty regarding property committed to him.

After World War I it was decided by the victorious Powers that the former extra-European colonies and possessions of Germany and Turkey should be governed under mandate by one or other of the Powers. Thus, the German colonies in West Africa and parts of the Turkish possessions in Palestine and Mesopotamia became mandatory spheres under Great Britain.

Mandeville, Sir John. See MAUNDREL.

Mandrake. The root of the mandrake, or mandragora, often divides in two, and presents a rude appearance of a man. In ancient times human figures were cut out of the root, and wonderful virtues ascribed to them, such as the production of fecundity in women (Gen. xxx, 14-16). It was also thought that mandrakes could not be uprooted without producing fatal effects, so a cord used to be fixed to the root, and round a dog's neck, and the dog being chased drew out the mandrake and died. Another fallacy was that a small dose made a person vain of his beauty, and a large one made him an idiot; and yet another that when the mandrake is uprooted it utters a scream, in explanation of which Thomas Newton, in his Herball to the Bible, says, “It is supposed to be a creature having life, engendered under the earth of the seed of some dead person put to death for murder.”

Shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth.

Romeo and Juliet, iv, 3.

Mandrakes called love-apples. From the old notion that they were aphrodisiacs. Hence Venus is called Mandragoritis, and the Emperor Julian, in his epistles, tells Calixenes that he drank its juice nightly as a love-potion.

He has eaten mandrake. Said of a very indolent and sleepy man, from the narcotic and stupefying properties of the plant, well known to the ancients.

Give me to drink mandragora . . .

That I might sleep out this great gap of time

My Antony is away.

Antony and Cleopatra, i, 5.

Not poppy, nor mandragora

Nor all the drowsy syrops of the world,

Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep

Which thou owedst yesterday.

Othello, iii, 3.

Manes (mā' nēz). To appease his Manes. To do when a person is dead what would have pleased him or was due to him when alive. The spirit or ghost of the dead was by the Romans called his Manes, which never slept quietly in the grave so long as survivors left its wishes unfulfilled. February 19th was the day when all the living sacrificed to the shades of dead relations and friends—a kind of pagan All Souls' Day.

Manes is probably from the old word manis, i.e. “bonus,” “quod eos venerantes manes vocarent, ut Græci chrestous.” (See Lucretius, iii, 52.)

Manfred. Count Manfred, the hero of Byron's dramatic poem of this name (1817), sold himself to the Prince of Darkness, was wholly without human sympathies, and lived in splendid solitude among the Alps. He loved the Lady Astarte (q.v.), who died, but Manfred went to the hall of Arimanes to see her, and was told that he would die the following day. The next day the Spirit of his Destiny came to summon him; the proud count scornfully dismissed it, and died.

Mani (ma' nē). The moon, in Scandinavian mythology, the son of Mundilfœri (q.v.), taken to heaven by the gods to drive the moon-car. He is followed by a wolf, which, when time shall be no more, will devour both Mani and his sister Sol.

Mani, Manes, or Manichæus. The founder of Manichæanism (see below), born in Persia probably about 216, prominent at the court of Sapor I (240-72), but crucified by the Magians in 277.

Manichæans or Manichees. The followers of Mani who taught that the universe is controlled by two antagonistic powers, viz. light or goodness (identified with God), and darkness, chaos, or evil. The system was the old Babylonian nature-worship modified by Christian and Persian influences, and its own influence on the Christian religion was, even so late as the 13th century, deep and widespread. St. Augustine was a member of the body for some nine years. One of Mani's claims was that though Christ had been sent into the world to restore it to light and banish the darkness His apostles had perverted his doctrine and he, Mani, was sent as the Paraclete to restore it. The headquarters of Manichæanism were for many centuries at Babylon, and later at Samarkand.

Manitou (mān' i too). The Great Spirit of the American Indians. The word is Algonkin, and means either the Great Good Spirit or the Great Evil Spirit.

Manna (Ex. xvi, 15), popularly said to be a corrupt form of man-hu (What is this?). The marginal reading gives—"When the children of Israel saw it [the small round thing like hoar-frost on the ground], they said to one another, What is this? for they wist not what it was."

And the house of Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was like corander seed, white; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

The word is more probably the Egyptian mennu, a waxy exudation of the tamarisk (Tamarix gallica).

Manna of St. Nicholas of Bari. The name given to a colourless and tasteless poison, sold by a notorious female poisoner of 16th-century Italy named Tofana, who confessed to having poisoned six hundred persons by its means. Also called Aqua Tofana.

Manningtree (Essex). Noted for its Whitsun fair, where an ox was roasted whole. Shakespeare makes Prince Henry call Falstaff "a roasted Manningtree ox, with the pudding in his belly" (1 Henry IV, ii, 4).

Manaoa (mā nō' ā). The fabulous capital of El Dorado (q.v.), the houses of which city were said to be roofed with gold.

Manon Lescaut (mā nong les kō). A novel by the Abbé Prevost (1733). It is the history of a young man, the Chevalier des Grieux, possessed of many brilliant and some estimable qualities, who being intoxicated by a fatal attachment to Manon, a girl who prefers luxury to faithful love, sets his love against the claims of society.

Manor. Demesne (i.e. "domain") land is that near the demesne or dwelling (domus) of the lord, and which he kept for his own use. Manor land was all that remained (maneo), and was let to tenants for money or service; originally, a barony held by a lord and subject to the jurisdiction of his court-baron.

In some manors there was common land also, i.e. land belonging in common to two or more persons, to the whole village, or to certain natives of the village.

Lord of the manor. The person of corporation in whom the rights of a manor are vested.

Mansard Roof, also called the curb roof. A roof in which the rafters, instead of forming a  $\Lambda$ , are broken on each side into an elbow, the lower rafters being nearly vertical and the upper much inclined. It was devised by François Mansard (1598-1666), the French architect, to give height to attics. Mansard's nephew, Jules Hardouin Mansard (1645-1708) was the architect of the palace of Versailles, and the magnificent dome of the Invalides, among many great works of French architecture.

Mansfield. The Miller of Mansfield. The old ballad (given in Percy's Reliques) tells how Henry II, having lost his way, met a miller, who took him home to his cottage. Next morning the courtiers tracked the king, and the miller discovered the rank of his guest, who, in merry mood, knighted his host as "Sir John Cockle." On St. George's Day, Henry II invited the miller, his wife and son, to a royal banquet, and after being amused with their rustic ways, made Sir John "overseer of Sherwood Forest, with a salary of £300 a year."

Mansion. The Latin mansio (from manere, to remain, dwell) was simply a tent pitched on the march, hence sometimes a "day's journey" (Pliny, xii, 14). Subsequently the word was applied to a roadside house for the accommodation of strangers (Suetonius: Tit. 10).

Mansion House, now the name of the official residence of a Lord Mayor. It was formerly used of any important dwelling, especially the houses of lords of the manor and of high ecclesiastics.

Mantallini, Madame (mān ta lin' i). A fashionable milliner in Dickens's Nicholas Nickleby, near Cavendish Square. Her husband, whose original name was "Muntle," noted for his white teeth, minced oaths, and gorgeous morning gown, lives on his wife's earnings, and ultimately goes to "the demnition bow-wows."

Mantle of Fidelity. The old ballad "The Boy and the Mantle," in Percy's Reliques, tells how a little boy showed King Arthur a curious mantle, "which would become no wife that was not leal." Queen Guinever tried it, but it changed from green to red, and red to black, and seemed rent into shreds. Sir Kay's lady tried it, but fared no better; others followed, but only Sir Cradock's wife could wear it. The theme is a very common one in old story, and was used by Spenser in the incident of Florimel's girdle.

Mantuan Swan, Bard, (măn' tū ān) etc. Virgil, a native of Mantua, in Italy. Besides his great Latin epic, he wrote pastorals and Georgics.

Ages elapsed ere Homer's lamp appeared.

And ages ere the Mantuan Swan was heard.

COWPER: Table-Talk, 557.

Manu. See MENU.

Manufacturer. See SURGEON.

Manumit (măn' ū mit). To set free; properly "to send from one's hand" (e manu mittere). One of the Roman ways of freeing a slave was to take him before the chief magistrate and say, "I wish this man to be free." The lictor or master then turned the slave round in a circle, struck him with a rod across the cheek, and let him go. The ancient ceremony subsists to this day in the R.C. rite of Confirmation when the bishop strikes the confirmand lightly on the cheek with the words, "Peace be with thee."

Manure (Fr. main-œuvre). Literally "hand-work," hence tillage by manual labour, hence the dressing applied to lands. Milton uses the word in its original sense in Paradise Lost, iv, 628:—

You flowery arbours. . . with branches overgrown
That mock our scant manuring.

And in xi, 28, says that the repentant tears of Adam brought forth better fruits than all the trees of Paradise that his hands "manured" in the days of innocence.

Manx cat. A tailless species of cat found in the Isle of Man.

Many a little makes a mickle. Little and often fills the purse. See LITTLE.

Many men, many minds, i.e. as many opinions as there are persons to give them; an adaptation of Terence's Quot homines tot sententiæ (Phormio, II, iv, 14).

Too many for me or One too many for me. More than a match. Il est trop fort pour moi.

The Irishman is cunning enough; but we shall be too many for him.—MRS. EDGEWORTH.

Maori (mou' ri). The aboriginal Polynesian inhabitants of New Zealand; a native word meaning indigenous.

Maple Leaf. The emblem of Canada.

Maquis (ma' kē). The thick scrub in Corsica to which bandits retire and resist by arms any attempt to apprehend them. A bandit so on the run is called a maquisard. See also F.F.I.

Marabou. A large stork or heron of western Africa, so called from Arab. murabit, a hermit, because among the Arabs these birds were held to be sacred. Its feathers are used by ladies for headgear, neck-wraps, etc.

Marabouts. A priestly order of Morocco (Arab. murabit, a hermit) which, in 1075, founded a dynasty and ruled over Morocco and part of Spain till it was put an end to by the Almohads in the 12th century.

Marais, Le. See PLAIN.

Maranatha (Syriac, the Lord will come—i.e. to execute judgment). A word which, with

Anathema (g.v.), occurs in 1 Cor. xvi, 22, has been erroneously taken as a form of anathematizing among the Jews; hence, used for a terrible curse.

Marathon Race (măr' ā thon). A long-distance running race, named after the Battle of Marathon (490 B.C.) the result of which was announced at Athens by a courier, sometimes called Pheidippides, who fell dead on his arrival. The race, properly of 26 miles, 385 yards, is one of the events at the modern Olympic games. The record (1948) was held by K. Son, of Japan, who in 1936 ran the course in 2 hours, 29 mins., 19.2 secs.

Maravedi or Marvedie (mar ā ve' di). A very small Spanish copper coin, worth less than a farthing and long obsolete. There are frequent references to it in Elizabethan and 17th-century literature. In the 11th and 12th centuries there was a Portuguese gold coin of the same name, equivalent to about 14s.

Marbles. See ARUNDELIAN; ELGIN.

March. The month is so called from "Mars," the Roman war-god and patron deity.

The old Dutch name for it was Lent-maand (lengthening-month), because the days sensibly lengthen; the old Saxon name was Hreth-monath (rough month, from its boisterous winds); the name was subsequently changed to Length-monath (lengthening month); it was also called Hlyd-monath (boisterous month); In the French Republican calendar it was called Ventose (windy month, February 20th to March 20th).

A bushel of March dust is worth a king's ransom. Because we want plenty of dry, windy weather in March to ensure good crops. The fine for murder used to be proportioned to the rank of the person killed. The lowest was £10, and the highest £60; the former was the ransom of a churl, and the latter of a king.

He may be a rogue, but he's no fool on the march. Though his honesty may be in question he is a useful sort of person to have about.

March borrows three days from April. See BORROWED DAYS.

Mad as a March hare. See HARE.

To steal a march on. See STEAL.

March table. British military term denoting a direction setting out the order in which the elements of a convoy should proceed, the exact minute at which each should pass a given starting point, and the average speed at which each should proceed.

Marching Watch. The guard of civilians enrolled in London during the Middle Ages to keep order in the streets on the Vigils of St. Peter and St. John the Baptist during the festivities then held; used also of the festivities themselves. Henry VIII approved of the pageants, etc., and on one occasion, to encourage them, took his queen, Katharine of Aragon, to witness the proceedings at "the King's Heade in Cheape." The custom fell into abeyance in 1527 on account of the sweating sickness, but was revived a few years later.

Marches. The A.S. mearc, a mark, by way of Fr. marche, a frontier. The boundaries between England and Wales, and between England and Scotland, were called "marches," and the word is the origin of our marquis, the lord of the march.

The word is still applied in the sense that a boundary is shared, e.g. Kent marches with Sussex, that is, the two counties are contiguous.

Riding the marches—i.e. beating the bounds of the parish (Scots). See BOUNDS, BEATING THE.

Marchington (Staffordshire). Famous for a crumbling short cake. Hence the saying that one of crusty temper is "as short as Marchington wake-cake."

Marchioness, The. The half-starved girl-of-all-work in Dickens's Old Curiosity Shop. As she has no name of her own Dick Swiveller gives her that of "Sophronia Sphynx," and eventually marries her.

Marchpane (march' pān). The old name for the confection of almonds, sugar, etc., that we call marzipan, this being the German form of the original Ital. marzapane, and adopted by us in the 19th century in preference to our own well-established word, because we imported the stuff largely from Germany.

First Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate. Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane.—Romeo and Juliet, i, 5.

Marcionites (mar' si on itz). An ascetic Gnostic sect, founded by Marcion of Sinope in the 2nd century, and surviving till the 7th or even later. They believed in a good God, first revealed by Christ (whose incarnation and resurrection they rejected), in an evil God, i.e. the Devil, and in "Demiurge," the name they gave to the imperfect God of the Jews.

Marcle Hill. Legend states that this hill in Herefordshire, on February 7th, 1571, at six o'clock in the evening, "roused itself with a roar, and by seven next morning had moved 40 paces." It kept on the move for three days, carrying all with it; it overthrew Kinnaston chapel, and diverted two high roads at least 200 yards from their former route. Twenty-six acres of land are said to have been moved 400 yards. (Speed: Herefordshire.)

Marconigram. A radiogram named after Marconi (1874-1937) who invented wireless telegraphy.

Mardi Gras (mar dē gra') (Fr., "fat Tuesday"). The last day of the Lent carnival in France, Shrove Tuesday, which is celebrated with all sorts of festivities. In Paris a fat ox used to be paraded through the principal streets, crowned with a fillet, and accompanied by mock priests and a band of tin instruments in imitation of a Roman sacrificial procession.

Mare. The Cromlech at Gorwell, Dorsetshire, is called the White Mare; the barrows near Hambleton, the Grey Mare.

Away the mare. Off with the blue devils, good-bye to care. This mare is the incubus called the nightmare.

To cry the mare (Herefordshire and Shropshire). In harvesting, when the ingathering is complete, a few blades of corn left for the purpose have their tops tied together. The reapers then place themselves at a certain distance, and fling their sickles at the "mare." He who succeeds in cutting the knot cries out "I have her!" "What have you?" "A mare." "Whose is she?" The name of some farmer whose field has been reaped is here mentioned. "Where will you send her?" The name of some farmer whose corn is not yet harvested is here given, and then all the reapers give a final shout.

To win the mare or lose the halter. To play double or quits; all or nothing.

The grey mare is the better horse. The woman is paramount; said of a wife who "bosses" her husband. Macaulay says (Hist. Eng. I, iii):—"I suspect (the proverb) originated in the preference generally given to the grey mares of Flanders over the finest coach-horses of England"; but as the saying is recorded in England from earlier than the date of importation of Flemish horses this explanation is probably incorrect.

As long as we have eyes, or hands, or breath, We'll look, or write, or talk you all to death, Yield, or she-Pegasus will gain her course.

And the grey mare will prove the better horse.

PRIOR: Epilogue to Mrs. Manley's "Lucius."

The grey mare's tail. A cataract that is made by the stream which issues from Lochsken, in Scotland, so called from its appearance.

The two-legged mare. The gallows.

Shanks's mare. One's legs or shanks.

Money will make the mare to go. You can do anything if only you have the money.

"Will you lend me your mare to go a mile?"

"No, she is lame leaping over a stile."

"But if you will her to me spare,

You shall have money for your mare."

"Oh, ho! say you so?"

Money will make the mare to go."

Old Gleees and Catches.

Whose mare's dead? What's the matter? Thus, in 2 Henry IV, when Sir John Falstaff sees Mistress Quickly with the sheriff's officers, evidently in a state of great discomposure, he cries,

How now? Whose mare's dead? What's the matter? —Act ii, 1.

To find a mare's nest is to make what you suppose to be a great discovery, but which turns out to be either no discovery at all or else all moonshine.

Why dost thou laugh?

What mare's nest hast thou found?

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Bonduca, v, 2.

In some parts of Scotland the expression is a skate's nest, and in Cornwall they say, You have found a wee's nest, and are laughing over the eggs. In Devon, nonsense is called a blind mare's nest.

Mare (mār' i). The Latin word for sea. Mare clausum is a sea that is closed by a certain Power or Powers to the unrestricted trade of other nations. Mare liberum is a free and open sea. In 1635 John Selden (1584-1654) published a treatise entitled Mare Clausum. Mare nostrum, "our sea" was a term applied by Italian Fascists to the Mediterranean at the height of their imperial ambitions.

Marforio. See PASQUINADE.

Margaret. A country name for the magpie (q.v.); also for the daisy, or marguerite, so called from its pearly whiteness, marguerite being Old French for a pearl.

The daisy, a flour white and redde,
In French called "la belle Marguerite."

Lady Margaret Professor. A professor of divinity both at Oxford and Cambridge, the professorship being founded in 1502 by Lady Margaret Beaufort (1443-1509), mother of Henry VII, who also endowed Christ's and St. John's College at Cambridge. These lectures are given for the "voluntary theological examination," and treat upon the Fathers, the Liturgy, and the priestly duties, Cp. NORRISIAN.

Lady Margaret Hall, a college for women at Oxford, was founded in her memory in 1878.

Margaret, St. The chosen type of female innocence and meekness, represented as a young woman of great beauty, bearing the martyr's palm and crown, or with the dragon as an attribute. Sometimes she is delineated as coming from the dragon's mouth, for legend says that the monster swallowed her, but on her making the sign of the cross he suffered her to quit his maw.

Another legend has it that Olybrius, governor of Antioch, captivated by her beauty, wanted to marry her, and, as she rejected him with scorn, threw her into a dungeon, where the devil came to her in the form of a dragon. Margaret held up the cross, and the dragon fled.

St. Margaret, whose feast is held on July 20th, is the patron saint of the ancient borough of Lynn Regis, and on the corporation seal she is represented as standing on a dragon and wounding it with the cross. The inscription is "SVB . MARGARETA . TERITUR . DRACO . STAT . CRUCE . LETA."

St. Margaret of Scotland, whose feast is kept on June 10th in the Western Church except in Scotland where it is observed on November 16th, was the daughter of Edmund Ironside, King of England, and the wife of Malcolm III of Scotland. She died in 1093 and was canonized in 1250.

Margarine (there are two pronunciations of this: mar' jà rén, mar' gá rén). It is a well-known butter substitute made of a great variety of vegetable and animal fats and oils. It takes its names from the Greek margaron, a pearl.

Margin. In many old books a commentary was printed in the margin (as in our Bible of the present day); hence the word was often used for a commentary itself, as in Shakespeare's—

His face's own margent did quote such amazes.
Love's Labour's Lost, ii, 1.
I knew you must be edified by the margent.
Hamlet, v, 2.

And Lyly's—

Beware my Comment, tis odds the margent shall be as full as the text.—Pappe with a Hatchet (1589).

Marguerite des Marguerites (the pearl of pearls). So Francis called his sister, Marguerite de Valois (1492-1549), authoress of the Heptameron. She married twice; first, the Duc d'Alençon, and then Henri d'Albret, king of Navarre, and was the mother of Henry IV of France.

Sylvius de la Haye published (1547) a collection of her poems with the title Marguerites de la marguerite des princesses, etc.

Marigold. The plant Calendula officinalis and its bright yellow flower are so called in honour of the Virgin Mary.

This riddle, Cuddy, if thou canst, explain . . .
What flower is that which bears the Virgin's name,
The richest metal added to the same?

GAY: Pastoral.

In 17th-century slang a marigold (or "marygold") meant a sovereign.

Marimba (mà rim' bà). A musical instrument formed of strips of wood struck by hammers or sticks. It is of African origin but it has been improved upon and popularized in Central America, where it got its present name.

Marine. The female Marine. Hannah Snell, of Worcester (1723-92), who (according to tradition), passing herself off as a Marine, took part in the attack on Pondicherry. It is said that she ultimately opened a public-house in Wapping, but retained her male attire.

Tell that to the Marines. See HORSE MARINES. In nautical parlance a greenhorn or a land-lubber afloat is often called "a marine" in contempt. See JOLLY.

Empty bottles were at one time called "marnes" because the Royal Marines were looked down upon by the regular seamen, who considered them useless. A marine officer was once dining at a mess-table, when the Duke of York said to the man in waiting, "Here, take away these marines." The officer demanded an explanation, when the duke replied, "They have done their duty, and are prepared to do it again."

Mariner's compass. Traditionally claimed by the Chinese to have been in use as early as 2364 B.C., but first recorded as being used for sea travel by a Chinese writer of about A.D. 800. It was introduced to Europe by Marco Polo, but it is probable that it was known—as the result of independent discovery—in the 12th century. See FLEUR-DE-LIS.

Marinism. Excessive literary ornateness and affectation. So named from Giambattista Marini (1569-1625), the Neapolitan poet, famous for his whimsical comparisons, pompous and overwrought descriptions, and "conceits."

Marino Faliero (ma rē' nō fāl yer' ō). The forty-ninth doge of Venice, elected 1354. He joined a conspiracy to overthrow the republic, under the hope and promise of being made a king, but was betrayed by Bertram, one of the conspirators, and was beheaded on the "Giant's Staircase," the place where the doges were wont to take the oath of fidelity. A different story is told in Byron's tragedy of this name (1820).

Marivaudage (ma rē' vō daj). An imitation of the style of Marivaux (1688-1763), author of several comedies and novels. Il tombe souvent dans une métaphysique alambiquée (far-fetched, over-strained) pour laquelle on a créé le nom de marivaudage.

Ce qui constitue le marivaudage, c'est une recherche affectée dans le style, une grande subtilité dans les sentiments, et une grande complication d'intrigues.—BOUILLET: Dict. Universel, etc.

Marjoram (mar' jôr âm). As a pig loves marjoram. Not at all. "How did you like so-and-so?" "Well, as a pig loves marjoram." Lucretius tells us (vi, 974), Amaricinium fugiatis, swine shun marjoram; but it is not at all certain that the Latin amaricus is identical with our marjoram.

Mark. A man of mark. A notable or famous man; one who has "made his mark" in some walk of life.

Beside the mark. Not to the point; a phrase from archery, in which the mark was the target.

God bless or save the mark! An ejaculation of contempt or scorn. Hotspur, apologizing to the king for not sending the prisoners according to command (Shakespeare, 1 Henry IV, i, 3), says the messenger was a "popinjay," who made him mad with his unmanly ways, and who talked "like a waiting gentlewoman of guns, drums, and wounds (God save the mark!)" ; and in Othello (i, 1) Iago says he was "his Moorship's ancient; God bless the mark!" expressive of derision and contempt.

Sometimes the phrase is used to avert ill fortune or an evil omen, as in—

To be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who, God bless the mark! is a kind of devil.—Merchant of Venice, ii, 2.

I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes (God save the mark!) upon his manly breast.—Romeo and Juliet, iii, 2.

And sometimes it refers simply to the perverted natural order of things, as "travelling by night and resting (save the mark!) by day."

Its origin is unknown, and there is no evidence in favour of the widely quoted assumption that it arose from archery. It seems to have been originally a formula used for averting evil omens, and was in early use by midwives at the delivery of a child with a "birth-mark."

Mark time! Move the feet alternately as in marching, but without advancing or retreating from the spot.

The mark of the beast. To set the "mark of the beast" on an object or pursuit (such, for instance, as dancing, theatres, gambling, etc.) is to denounce it, to run it down as unorthodox. The allusion is to Rev. xvi, 2; xix, 20.

A certain kind of clerical waistcoat that used to be considered "Popish" in the 60s and 70s of last century was known as the "Mark of the Beast," or "M.B." waistcoat.

Mark is also a British military term denoting a version or issue of a piece of equipment. The first issue of a new weapon, for example, is Mark I, which continues until any alteration or improvement, however small, is made in the design. Subsequent issues are known as Mark II until any further alteration is made, and so on.

To make one's mark. To distinguish oneself. To write one's name (or make one's mark) on the page of history.

In olden times persons who could not write "made their mark" as they do now, but we find in ancient documents words such as these: "This (grant) is signed with the sign of the cross for its greater assurance (or) greater inviolability," and after the sign follows the name of the donor.

To toe the mark. To line up abreast of the others; so, to "fall in" and do one's duty.

Up to the mark. Generally used in the negative; as, "Not quite up to the mark," not good enough, not up to the standard fixed by the assay office for gold and silver articles; not quite well.

Marks of gold and silver. See HALL MARK.

Marks in printing. See TYPOGRAPHICAL SIGNS.

Mark, as a name.

Mark Banco. See BANCO.

Mark, King. A king of Cornwall in the Arthurian romances, Sir Tristram's uncle. He lived at Tintagel, and is principally remembered for his treachery and cowardice, and as the husband of Isolde the Fair, who was passionately enamoured of his nephew, Tristram (q.v.).

Mark Twain. The pseudonym of the American novelist and humorist, Samuel L. Clemens (1835-1910) who adopted it from the Mississippi river pilots' cry, "Mark twain!" when taking soundings.

Mark, St., in art, is represented as being in the prime of life; sometimes habited as a bishop, and, as the historian of the resurrection, accompanied by a winged lion. He holds in his right hand a pen, and in his left the Gospel. His day is April 25th.

St. Mark's Eve. An old custom in North-country villages is for people to sit in the church porch on this day (April 24th) from 11 at night to 1 in the morning for three years running, and the third time they will see the ghosts of those who are to die that year pass into the church.

Poor Robin's Almanack for 1770 refers to another superstition:—

On St. Mark's Eve, at twelve o'clock,
The fair maid will watch her smock,
To find her husband in the dark,
By praying unto good St. Mark.

Keats has an unfinished poem on the subject, and he also refers to it in Cap and Bells (iv):—

Look in the Almanack—Moore never lies—
April the twenty-fourth,—this coming day
Now breathing its new bloom upon the skies,
Will end in St. Mark's Eve; you must away,
For on that eve alone can you the maid convey.

Market-penny. A toll surreptitiously exacted by servants sent out to buy goods for their master; secret commission on goods obtained for an employer.

Marlborough (mawl' brô). Statutes of Marlborough. Laws passed in 1267 by a parliament held in Marlborough Castle. They reaffirmed in more formal fashion the Provisions of Westminster of a few years earlier.

Marmion (mar' mi òn). A romantic poem by Scott (pubd. 1808), telling the story of Lord Marmion, an entirely fictional character, who lived in the Border Country in the time of Henry VIII and James IV of Scotland. He was slain at the battle of Flodden.

Maro (mâr' ô). Virgil (70-19 B.C.), whose full name was Publius Virgilius Maro; born on the banks of the river Mincio, at the village of Andes, near Mantua.

Marocco or Morocco. The name of Banks's horse (q.v.).

Maronites (mâr' ô nîtz). A nation and Church of Arabic-speaking Syrian Christians, united to the Roman Catholic Church but still retaining the Syrian liturgy and many of their peculiarities. They descend from a sect of Monothelites of the 8th century, and are so called from their chief seat, the monastery of Maron, on the slopes of Lebanon, which was named from Maron (Syriac, "my lord," or "master"), Patriarch of Antioch in the 6th century.

Maroon (mâ roon'). To set a person on an inhospitable shore and leave him there (a practice common with pirates and buccaneers); a corruption of Cimarron, a word applied by Spaniards to anything unruly, whether man or beast. As a noun the word denotes runaway slaves or their descendants who live in the wilds of Dutch Guiana, Brazil, etc. Those of Jamaica are the offspring of runaways from the old plantations or from Cuba, to whom, in 1738, the British Government granted a tract of land, on which they built two towns.

Maroon, the firework that explodes like a cannon going off, is so called from Fr. marron, a chestnut, probably with reference to the popping of chestnuts when being roasted.

In World War I air-raid warnings and all-clear signals were made by means of maroons.

In the U.S.A. the term was also applied to a hunting or fishing expedition in the form of a prolonged picnic lasting several days.

Marplot. An officious person who defeats some design by gratuitous meddling. The name is given to a silly, cowardly, inquisitive Paul Pry, in The Busybody (1710), by Mrs. Centlivre. Similarly we have Shakespeare's "Sir Oliver Mar-text," the clergyman in As You Like It, and "Sir Martin Mar-All, the hero of the Duke of Newcastle's comedy of that name, which was founded on Molière's L'Etourdi.

Marprelate Controversy. The name given to the vituperative paper war of about 1589, in which the Puritan pamphleteers attacked the Church of England under the pseudonym "Martin Marprelate." Thomas Cooper, Bishop of Winchester, defended the Church, and the chief of the "Martinists" were probably Udall, Throckmorton, Penry, and Barrow. Udall died in prison (1592); Penry and Barrow were executed in 1593. Some thirty pamphlets are known to have been published in this controversy.

Marque. See LETTER OF.

Marquess or Marquis (O.Fr. marchis, warden of the marches). A title of nobility, in England ranking next below that of Duke (q.v.). It was first conferred on Richard II's favourite, Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who was created Marquess of Dublin in 1385. A marquess is addressed as "The Most Honourable the Marquess of —", his younger sons and daughters bear the honorary titles of Lord and Lady.

Marriage. Marriage knot, The. The bond of marriage effected by the legal marriage service. The Latin phrase is nodus Herculeus, and part of the marriage service was for the bridegroom to loosen (solvere) the bride's girdle, not to tie it. In the Hindu marriage ceremony the bridegroom hangs a ribbon on the bride's neck and ties it in a knot. Before the knot is tied the bride's father may refuse consent unless better terms are offered, but immediately the knot is tied the marriage is indissoluble. The Parsees bind the hands of the bridegroom with a sevenfold cord, seven being a sacred number. The ancient Carthaginians tied the thumbs of the betrothed with a leather lace.

The practice of throwing rice (see RICE) is also Indian.

Marriages are made in heaven. This does not mean that persons in heaven "marry and are given in marriage," but that the partners joined in marriage on earth were foreordained to be so united. E. Hall (1499-1547) says, "Consider the old proverb to be true that saith: Marriage is destinie." Cp. "Hanging and wiving, etc." under HANG.

Married women take their husband's surname. This was a Roman custom. Thus Julia, Octavia, etc., married to Pompey, Cicero, etc., would be called Julia of Pompey, Octavia of Cicero. Our married women are named in the same way, omitting "of."

Marrow. A Scots and North-country word (obsolete except in dialect) for a mate or companion, hence a husband or wife, and (of things) an article that makes a pair with another. The origin of the word is unknown.

Busk ye, busk ye, my bonnie bonnie bride,
Busk ye, busk ye, my winsome marrow.

W. HAMILTON: The Braes of Yarrow (1774).

Down on your marrow-bones! Down on your knees! A humorous way of telling a person he had better beg pardon.

The marrow-bone stage. Walking. The leg-bone is the marrow-bone of beef and mutton, and the play is on Marylebone (London), formerly pronounced "Marrybun."

Marrow Controversy. A memorable struggle in Scotland about 1719 to 1722, between Puritanism and Presbyterianism; so called from Edward Fisher's Marrow of Modern Divinity, a book of ultra-evangelical tendency (pubd. 1644), which was condemned by the General Assembly in 1720.

Abelli, Bishop of Rhodes (d. 1691), wrote the Medulla Theologica.

Marrow-men. The twelve ministers who signed the remonstrance to the General Assembly for condemning the evangelical doctrines of the "Marrow" (see above); the chief were Thomas Boston and Ralph and Ebenezer Erskine.

Marry! An oath, meaning by Mary, the Virgin.

Marry come up! An exclamation of disapproval or incredulity. May Mary come up to my assistance, or to your discomfort!

Marry come up, you saucy jade!

Mar's Year. The year 1715, noted for the Jacobite rebellion of the Earl of Mar on behalf of the Old Pretender.

Auld uncle John wha wedlock's joys

Sin Mar's year did desire.

BURNS: Hallowe'en, 27.

Mars. The Roman god of war; identified in certain aspects with the Greek Ares. He was also the patron of husbandmen.

The planet of this name was so called from early times because of its reddish tinge, and under it, says the Composit of Ptholomeus, "is borne thieves and robbers . . . nyght walkers and quarell pykers, bosters, mockers, and skoffers; and these men of Mars causeth warre, and murder, and batayle. They will be gladly smythes or workers of yron . . . lyers, gret swerers. . . . He is red and angry . . . a great walker, and a maker of swords and knyves, and a shedder of mannes blode . . . and good to be a barbour and a blode letter, and to drawe tethe."

Among the alchemists Mars designated iron, and in Camoën's Lusiad typified divine fortitude. As Bacchus, the evil demon, is the guardian power of Mohammedanism, so Mars is the guardian of Christianity.

The Mars of Portugal. Alfonso de Albuquerque, Viceroy of India (1452-1515).

See also MARTIANS.

Marseillaise (Eng. mar se lāz', Fr. mar sã yāz'). The hymn of the French revolution. Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle (1760-1835), an artillery officer in garrison at Strasbourg, composed both the words and the music (April 24th, 1792). On July 30th, 1792, the Marseilles volunteers entered Paris singing the song; and the Parisians, enchanted with it, called it the Hymne des Marseillais.

Marshal (A.S. mere, mare, scealc, servant; O.Fr. mareschal). Originally one who tended horses, either as a groom or farrier; now the title of high officials about the Court, in the armed forces, etc. In the Army Field-Marshal (g.v.) is the highest rank; in the Royal Air Force Marshal of the R.A.F., Air Chief Marshal, Air Marshal, and Air Vice-Marshal, correspond to Field-Marshal, General, Lieutenant-General, and Major-General respectively. The military rank of Marshal of France was revived by Napoleon I, who gave the baton to a number of his most able generals. No Marshals were created after 1870 until 1916 when the title was given to General Joffre (1852-1931). Generals Foch (1851-1929), Lyautey (1854-1934), and Pétain (1856-1951) were also Marshals of France.

Marshal Vorwärts (Ger., forward). Blücher; so called for his persistence in attacking and pursuing the French during the campaign of 1813.

Marshal of the Army of God, and of Holy Church. The Baron Robert Fitzwalter, appointed by his brother barons to lead their forces in 1215 to obtain from King John redress of grievances. Magna Charta was the result.

Marshall Plan. This was a plan for aiding the stricken European states after World War II. On June 5th, 1947, G. C. Marshall, Secretary of State for the U.S.A., called upon the countries of Europe to work out a programme of reconstruction for which he promised American assistance "so far as it may be practicable." After consultation together most of the powers concerned, with the exception of Russia and the eastern European states under her tutelage, agreed to participate and on April 3rd, 1948 the scheme came into force by Congress passing a Foreign Aid Bill of $3,800,000,000. Britain ceased to receive Marshall Aid in 1950.

Marshalsea Prison. An old prison in Southwark, London (demolished in 1849), so called because it was formerly governed by a Knight Marshal, i.e. an official of the Royal Household who took cognizance of offences committed within the royal verge and who presided over the Marshalsea Court (amalgamated with the Queen's Bench in 1842). It was the Marshal of this prison who was beheaded by the rebels under Wat Tyler in 1381.

Marsyas (mar' si às). The Phrygian flute-player who challenged Apollo to a contest of skill, and, being beaten by the god, was flayed alive for his presumption. From his blood arose the river so called. The flute on which Marsyas played was one Athene had thrown away, and, being filled with the breath of the goddess, discoursed most excellent music. The interpretation of this fable is as follows: A contest long existed between the lutists and the flautists as to the superiority of their respective instruments. The Dorian mode, employed in the worship of Apollo, was performed on lutes; and the Phrygian mode, employed in the rites of Cybele, was executed by flutes, the reeds of which grew on the banks of the river Marsyas. As the Dorian mode was preferred by the Greeks, they said that Apollo beat the flute-player.

Martel (mar' tel). The surname given to Charles, son of Pépin d'Héristal (about 690-791), probably because of his victory over the Saracens, who had invaded France under Abd-el-Rahman in 732. It is said that Charles "knocked down the foe, and crushed them beneath his axe, as a martel or hammer crushes what it strikes." Another suggestion is that he was so called because his patron saint (and the patron saint of Tours, near which he gained his great victory) was St. Martellus (or Martin).

Martello Towers. Round towers about forty feet in height, of great strength, and situated on a coast or river-bank. Many of them were built on the south-eastern coasts of England about 1804, to repel the threatened Napoleonic invasion; and they took their name from Mortella (Corsica), where a tower from which these were designed had proved, in 1794, extremely difficult to capture.

Mar-text. See MARLOT.

Martha, St., patron saint of good housewives, is represented in art in homely costume, bearing at her girdle a bunch of keys, and holding a ladle or pot of water in her hand. Like St. Margaret, she is accompanied by a dragon bound, for she is said to have destroyed one that ravaged the neighbourhood of Marseilles, but she has not the palm and crown of martyrdom. She is commemorated on July 29th, and is patron of Tarascon.

Martha's Vineyard. An island, some 100 sq. miles in area, off the S.E. coast of Massachusetts. It was discovered in 1602 by Bartholomew Gosnold, the discoverer of Cape Cod and the adjacent coasts, and so named by him. Martha's Vineyard is now a popular summer resort with a population, in 1940, of over 5,000.

Martian Laws. Laws traditionally said to have been compiled by Martia, wife of Guithelin, great-grandson of Mulmutius, who established in England the Mulmutine Laws (q.v.). Alfred translated both these codes into Saxon-English. Guynethline . . . whose queen, . . . to show her upright mind,

To wise Mulmutius' laws her Martian first did frame.
DRAYTON: Polyolbion, vii.

Martians (mar'shānz). The hypothetical inhabitants of the planet Mars. This planet has an atmosphere of much less density than that of the earth, but it has clouds and seasonal changes which have led some observers to presume that there is vegetation of a sort. From this it was an easy step to imagine life on its surface and in 1898 H. G. Wells wrote The War of the Worlds in which he recounted the adventures and horrors of a war between the fabulous men of Mars and the dwellers on Earth.

Martin. One of the swallow tribe; probably so called from the Christian name Martin (St. Martin's bird is the goose), but possibly because it appears in England about March (the Martian month) and disappears about Martinmas.

In Reynard the Fox (q.v.) Martin is the Ape; Rukenaw was his wife, Fubrumpe his son, and Byteluys and Hattenette his two daughters; and in Dryden's Hind and the Panther, an allegory, Martin means the Lutheran party; so called by a pun on the name of Martin Luther.

Martin, St. The patron saint of innkeepers and drunkards, usually shown in art as a young mounted soldier dividing his cloak with a beggar. He was born of heathen parents but was converted in Rome, and became Bishop of Tours in 371, dying at Caudes forty years later. His day is November 11th, the day of the Roman Vinalia, or Feast of Bacchus; hence his purely accidental patronage (as above), and hence also the phrase Martin drunk.

The usual illustration of St. Martin is in allusion to the legend that when he was a military tribune stationed at Amiens he once, in midwinter, divided his cloak with a naked beggar, who craved alms of him before the city gates. At night, the story says, Christ Himself appeared to the soldier, arrayed in this very garment.

Martin drunk. Very intoxicated indeed; a drunken man "sobered" by drinking more. Baxter uses the name as a synonym of a drunkard:—

The language of Martin is there [in heaven] a stranger.—Saint's Rest.

St. Martin's bird. The goose, whose blood was shed "sacrificially" on November 11th, in honour of that saint. See below.

St. Martin's beads, jewellery, lace, rings, etc. Cheap, counterfeit articles. When the old collegiate church of St. Martin's le Grand was demolished at the Dissolution of the Monasteries, hucksters established themselves on the site and carried on a considerable trade in artificial jewels, Brummagem ornaments, and cheap ware generally. Hence the use of the saint's name in this connexion in Elizabethan and 17th-century writings.

Certaine lyght braynes . . . wyll rather weare a Marten chayne, the pryce of viiid, then they woulde be unchayned. BECON: Jewel of Joy (about 1558).

This kindnesse is but like Alchimy or Saint Martin's rings, that are faire to the eye, and have a rich outside, but if a man breake them asunder and looke into them (etc.).—FENNER: Compter's Commonwealth (1618).

St. Martin's goose. November 11th, St. Martin's Day, was at one time the great goose feast of France. The legend is that St. Martin was annoyed by a goose, which he ordered to be killed and served up for dinner. He died from the repast, and the goose was "sacrificed" to him on each anniversary.

St. Martin of Bullions. The St. Swithun of Scotland. His day is July 4th, and the saying is that if it rains then, rain may be expected for forty days.

St. Martin's running footman. The devil, traditionally assigned to St. Martin for such duties on a certain occasion.

Who can tell but St. Martin's running footman may still be hatching us some further mischief.—RABELAIS: Pantagruel, iv, 23.

St. Martin's summer. See SUMMER.

Martinmas. The feast of St. Martin, November 11th. His Martinmas will come, as it does to every hog—i.e. all must die. November was the great slaughtering time of the Anglo-Saxons, when oxen, sheep, and hogs, whose food was exhausted, were killed and salted. Thus the proverb intimates that our day of death will come as surely as that of a hog at St. Martin's-tide.

Martinet. A strict disciplinarian; so called from the Marquis de Martinet, colonel commanding Louis XIV's own regiment of infantry. All young noblemen were obliged, by direction of the king, to command a platoon in this unit before purchasing command of an infantry regiment, and Martinet's own system for inculcating in these wild young men the principles of military discipline earned him immortal fame. He was slain at the siege of Doesbourg, in 1672 (Voltaire, Louis XIV, c. 10).

Martyr (Gr.), simply means a witness, but is applied to one who witnesses a good confession with his blood.

The Martyr King. Charles I of England, beheaded January 30th, 1649.

Martyr to science. A title conferred on anyone who loses his health or life through his devotion to science; especially Claude Louis, Count Berthollet (1748-1822), who tested in his own person the effects of carbolic acid on the human frame, and died under the experiment.

Marvedie. See MARAVEDI.

Mary. As the Virgin, she is represented in art with flowing hair, emblematical of her virginity.

As Mater Dolorosa, she is represented as somewhat elderly, clad in mourning, head draped, and weeping over the dead body of Christ.

As Our Lady of Dolours, she is represented as seated, her breast being pierced with seven swords, emblematic of her seven sorrows.

As Our Lady of Mercy, she is represented with arms extended, spreading out her mantle, and gathering sinners beneath it.

As The glorified Madonna, she is represented as bearing a crown and sceptre, or a ball and cross, in rich robes and surrounded by angels.

Her seven joys. The Annunciation, Visitation, Nativity, Epiphany, Finding in the Temple, Resurrection, Ascension.

Her seven sorrows. Simeon's Prophecy, the Flight into Egypt, Christ Missed, the Betrayal, the Crucifixion, the Taking Down from the Cross, and the Entombment.

Little Mary. A euphemism for the stomach; from the play of that name by J. M. Barrie (1903).

The four Marys. Mary Beaton (or Bethune), Mary Livingston (or Leuson), Mary Fleming (or Flemyng), and Mary Seaton (or Seyton); called the "Queen's Marys," that is, the ladies of the same age as Mary, afterwards Queen of Scots, and her companions. Mary Carmichael was not one of the four, although introduced in the well-known ballad.

Yestre'en the queen had four Marys,

This night she'll hae but three:

There was Mary Beaton, and Mary Seaton,

Mary Carmichael, and me.

Mary Ann or Marianne. A slang name for the guillotine. See below.

Mary Anne Associations. Secret republican societies in France. The name was adopted by the Republican party because Ravailiac was instigated to assassinate Henri IV (1610) by reading the treatise De Rege et Regio Institutione, by Mariana.

The Mary Annes, which are essentially republicans, are scattered about all the French provinces.—DISRAELI: Lothair.

Mary of Arnhem. Name used by Helen Sensburg in Nazi propaganda broadcasts to British troops in North-west Europe, 1944-45. Her melting voice made her programmes very popular with the British, but without the results for which she hoped.

Mary, Highland. See HIGHLAND MARY.

Mary Magdalene. St. Patron saint of penitents, being herself the model penitent of Gospel history. Her feast is July 22nd.

In art she is represented either as young and beautiful, with a profusion of hair, and holding a box of ointment, or as a penitent, in a sequestered place, reading before a cross or skull.

Mary Queen of Scots. Shakespeare being under the patronage of Queen Elizabeth, and knowing her jealousy, would not, of course, praise openly her rival queen; but in the Midsummer Night's Dream (ii, 1) composed in 1592, five years after the execution of Mary, he wrote these exquisite lines:—

Thou rememberest

Since once I sat upon a promontory,

And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back

Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath

That the rude sea grew civil at her song;

And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,

To hear the sea-maid's music. Act ii, 1.

These have been conjectured to refer to the ill-fated queen on the following grounds:—

Mermaid and sea-maid, Mary; on the dolphin's back, she married the Dolphin or Dauphin of France; the rude sea grew civil, the Scottish rebels; certain stars, the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Westmoreland, and the Duke of Norfolk; shot madly from their spheres, that is, revolted from Queen Elizabeth, bewitched by the sea-maid's sweetness.

The Queen of Scot's pillar is a column in the Peak Cavern, Derbyshire, as clear as alabaster, and so called because on one occasion, when going to throw herself on the mercy of Elizabeth, the Queen of Scots proceeded thus far, and then returned.

Marybuds. The flower of the marigold (q.v.) Like many other flowers, they open at day-break and close at sunset.

And winking marybuds begin

To ope their golden eyes.

Cymbeline, ii, 3.

Marygold. See MARIGOLD.

Maryland (U.S.A.) was so named in compliment to Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I. In the Latin charter it is called Terra Mariæ.

Marylebone (London) is not a corruption of Marie la bonne, but "Mary on the bourn," i.e. the Tyburn (q.v.), as Holborn is "Old Bourne."

Masaniello (mäs än yel' ð). A corruption of TOMMASO ANELLO, a Neapolitan fisherman, who led the revolt of July, 1647. The great grievance was heavy taxation, and the immediate cause of Masaniello's interference was the seizure of his property because his wife had smuggled flour. He obtained a large following, was elected chief of Naples, and for nine days ruled with absolute control; but he was betrayed by his own people, shot, and his body flung into a ditch. It was reclaimed and interred with a pomp and ceremony never equalled in Naples.

Auber's opera La Muette de Portici (1828) takes the story for its groundwork.

Mascot. A person or thing that is supposed to bring good luck (cp. JETTATURA). The word is French slang (perhaps connected with Provençal masco, a sorcerer), and was popularized in England by Audran's opera, La Mascotte, 1880.

Ces envoyés du paradis,
Sont des Mascottes, mes amis,
Heureux celui que le ciel dote d'une Mascotte.
La Mascotte.

Masher. An old-fashioned term for a "nut" or dude (q.v.); an exquisite; a lardy-dardy swell. This sort of thing used to be called "crushing" or killing, and, as mashing is crushing, the synonym was substituted about 1880. A lady-killer, a crusher, a masher, all mean the same thing.

Mask, The Man in the Iron. A mysterious individual held for over forty years as a State prisoner by Louis XIV at Pignerol and other prisons, ultimately dying in the Bastille, Nov. 19th, 1703, with his identity still undisclosed. His name was given as "Marchiali" when he was buried; but despite the numerous conjectures and wide research that have been made, no one to this day knows for certain who he was. One name put forward is that of General du Bulonde, who, in 1691, raised the siege of Cuneo against the orders of Catinat. In 1891 Capt. Bazeris published in Le Temps translations of some cipher dispatches, apparently showing that this is the solution.

Other persons who have been suggested are:—

A twin brother of Louis XIV; or, perhaps, an elder brother, whose father is given as Cardinal Mazarin or the Duke of Buckingham.

Louis, Duc de Vermandois, natural son of Louis XIV by De la Vallière, who was imprisoned for life because he gave the Dauphin a box on the ears.

It is now considered probable that he was Count Girolamo Mattioli, Minister to the Duke of Mantua, who had acted treacherously towards Louis in refusing to give up the fortress of Casale—the key of Italy—after signing a treaty promising to do so, and in consequence was lured on to French soil, captured, and imprisoned at Pignerol.

Among the less likely names that have been put forward are the Duke of Monmouth, Avedick (an Armenian patriarch), Fouquet (the disgraced Minister of Finance), the Duc de Beaufort (who disappeared at the siege of Candia in 1669), and Mattioli's secretary, Jean de Gonzague.

Masochism (mäs'ō kizm). A psychological term for the condition in which sexual gratification depends on the subject's self-humiliation and self-inflicted physical pain. It takes its name from Leopold von Sacher-Masoch (1836-95) the Austrian novelist who first described this aberration.

Mason and Dixon's Line. The southern boundary line which separated the free state of Pennsylvania from what were at one time the slave states of Maryland and Virginia. It lies in 39° 43' 26" north latitude, and was fixed by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, English astronomers and surveyors (1763-67).

Mass (mäs, mas). The R.C. name for the Eucharist. There are several kinds of Mass, the principal being High Mass, or Missa solemnis in which the celebrant is assisted by a deacon and subdeacon—it requires the presence of a choir, a number of acolytes or servers, and the use of incense; Sung Mass, said and sung by the celebrant alone; Low Mass, which is said by the celebrant alone in four tones of voice; clear, medium, low, and inaudible (secret). There is also Pontifical Mass, sung by a cardinal, bishop in his own diocese, or abbot in his own abbey, with a very full ritual, three assistants and at least nine acolytes.

There are also a number of special masses, as the mass of the Beate, mass of the Holy Ghost, mass of the dead, of a saint, of security, dry mass, votive mass, holiday mass, Ambrosian mass, Gallic mass, mass of the presanctified (for Good Friday), etc.

Pope Celestinus ordained the introit and the gloria in excelsis.

Pope Gregory the Great ordered the kyrie eleison to be repeated nine times, and introduced the prayer. Pope Gelasius ordained the Epistle and Gospel.

Pope Damasus introduced the Credo.

Pope Alexander put into the canon the following clause: "Qui pridie quam pateretur."

Pope Sextus introduced the Sanctus.

Pope Innocent the pax.

Pope Leo the Orate Fratres, and the words in the canon: "Hostiam sanctam, hostiam immaculatam."

E. KINESMAN: Lives of the Saints, p. 187 (1623).

Mass observation is a British trade-mark name for a system of obtaining information as to popular sentiment and opinion similar to the Gallup Poll (q.v.).

Massachusetts (mäs à choo' sets) (U.S.A.). So called from the tribe of Indians of that name. Its origin is not clear; one suggestion is that it means "the Blue Mountains," and another that it is massa, great, wadehuash, mountains, et, near, i.e. near-the-great-mountain.

Massacre of the Innocents. The slaughter of the male children of Bethlehem "from two years old and under," when Jesus was born (Matt. ii, 16). This was done at the command of Herod the Great in order to cut off "the babe" who was destined to become "King of the Jews."

In parliamentary phraseology, the phrase denotes the withdrawal at the close of a session of the bills which there has been no time to consider and pass.

Mast. To serve before the mast. To be one of the common sailors, whose quarters are in the forward part of the ship. In an old sailing-ship the half-deck was the sanctum of the second mate, and, in Greenland fishers, of the spikeoneer, harpooners, carpenters, coopers, boatswains, and all secondary officers.

Master (through O.Fr. maistre, or A.S. mægester, from Lat. magister).

Little Masters. See LITTLE.

Master-at-arms. The first-class petty officer in the Navy who acts as head of the ship's police.

Master Mason. A Freemason who has been raised to the third degree.

Master of sentences. See SENTENCES.

Master of the Rolls. See ROLLS.

Old Masters. The great painters (especially of Italy and the Low Countries) who worked from the 13th century to about the end of the 16th, or a little later. Also their paintings.

Mastic. A kind of chewing-gum made of the resin of Pistachia Lentiscus, a tree of the Levant and other Eastern parts, formerly much used in medicine. It was said to promote appetite, and therefore only increased the misery of a hungry man.

Like the starved wretch that hungry mastic chews,
But cheats himself and fosters his disease.

West: Triumphs of the Gout (Lucian).

Matador (măt' à dôr). In Spanish bull-fights the star or leader of each team, who has to play the bull alone and finally kill it.

In the game of ombre, Spadille (the ace of spades), Manille (the seven of trumps), and Basto (the ace of clubs) are called "Matadors."

Now move to war her sable Matadores . . .

Spadillo first, unconquerable lord,

Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board,

As many more Manillo forced to yield,

And marched a victor from the verdant field.

Him Basto followed . . .

POPE: Rape of the Lock, canto iii.

In the game of dominoes of this name the double-blank and all the "stones" that of themselves make seven (6-1, 5-2, and 4-3) are "matadors," and can be played at any time.

Matamore (măt à môr). A poltroon, a swaggerer, a Bobadil (q.v.). It is composed of two Spanish words, matar-Moros (a slayer of Moors). See MOOR-SLAYER.

Matapan Stew (Austr.). A meal concocted of left-overs, and so called from the fact that the cooks of H.M.A.S. Perth served a scratch hot meal during the Battle of Matapan, March 28th, 1941.

Mate. A man does not get his hands out of the tar by becoming second mate. In long-past days of sailing-ships the second mate was expected to put his hands into the tar bucket for tarring the rigging, like the men below him. The first mate was exempt from this dirty work.

Maté (măt' à). Paraguay tea, made from the leaves of the Brazilian holly (Ilex Paraguayensis), is so called from the vessel in which it is infused. The vessels are generally hollow gourds.

Materialism. The doctrines of a Materialist, who maintains that there is nothing in the universe but matter, that mind is a phenomenon of matter, and that there is no ground for assuming a spiritual First Cause; as against the orthodox doctrine that the soul is distinct from the body, and is a portion of the Divine essence breathed into the body. Materialism is opposed to Idealism; in the ancient world its chief exponents were Epicurus and Lucretius, in modern times the 18th-century French philosophers, Helvétius, d'Holbach, and Lamettrie.

Materialize. A word used in psychical research to describe the assumption of bodily form of psychical phenomena. The principles governing materialization are as yet unknown, and little progress has been made in discovering them.

Matriculate means to enrol oneself in a society (Lat. matricula, a roll or register). The University is called our alma mater (propitious mother). The students are her alumni (foster-children), and become so by being enrolled in a register after certain forms and examinations.

In common parlance it used to mean to pass the entrance examination that permits one to be entered as a student at a university. Many, however, sat for the matriculation examinations who had no intention of proceeding to a university. It has now been abolished.

Matsya. See AVATAR.

Matter-of-fact. Unvarnished truth; prosaic, unimaginative, as a "matter-of-fact swain."

Matterhorn. The German name of the mountain in the Pennine Alps known to the French as Mont Cervin and to the Italians as Monte Silvio; so called from its peak (horn) and the scanty patches of green meadow (matter) which hang around its base. Above a glacier-line 11,000 feet high, it rises in an almost inaccessible obelisk of rock to a total elevation of 14,703 feet. It was first scaled in 1865 by Edward Whymper (1840-1911), when four of his party lost their lives.

Figuratively any danger, desperate situation threatening destruction, or leap in the dark, as the matrimonial Matterhorn.

Mathew, Father. Theobald Mathew (1790-1856), called The Apostle of Temperance. He was an Irish priest, and in his native country the success of his work on behalf of total abstinence was almost miraculous.

O Father Mathew!

Whatever path you

In life pursue

God grant your Reverence

May brush off never hence

Our mountain dew!

An Irishman to Father Mathew: WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR

Matthew, St. Represented in art (1) as an evangelist—an old man with long beard—an angel generally standing near him dictating his Gospel; (2) As an apostle, in which capacity he bears a purse, in reference to his calling as a publican; sometimes he carries a spear, sometimes a carpenter's rule or square. His symbol is an angel, or a man's face (see EVANGELISTS), and he is commemorated on September 21st.

Legend has it that St. Matthew preached for 15 years in Judæa after the Ascension, and then carried the Gospel to Ethiopia, where he was martyred.

In the last of Matthew. At the last gasp, on one's last legs. This is a German expression, and arose thus: a Catholic priest said in his sermon that Protestantism was in the last of Matthew, and, being asked what he meant, replied, "The last five words of the Gospel of St. Matthew are these: 'The end of this dispensation.'" He quoted the Latin version; ours is less correctly translated "the end of the world."

Matthew Parker's Bible: Matthew's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Maudlin. Stupidly sentimental. Maudlin drunk is the drunkenness which is sentimental and inclined to tears. Maudlin slip-slop is sentimental chit-chat. The word is derived from Mary Magdalen, who is drawn by ancient painters with a lackadaisical face, and eyes swollen with weeping.

Maul of Monks, The. Thomas Cromwell (1485-1540), visitor-general of English monasteries, many of which he summarily suppressed.

Maumet, Maumetry. See MAMMET.

Maudrel. A foolish, vapouring gossip. The Scots say, "Haud your tongue, maundrel." As a verb it means to babble, to prate, as in delirium, in sleep, or intoxication. The term is said to be from Sir John Mandeville, well-known 14th-century traveller in the Far East, the account of whose adventures (earliest MS., 1371) is full of strange stories and unverified events.

Maundy Thursday. The day before Good Friday is so called from the first words of the antiphon for that day being Mandatum novum do vobis, a new commandment I give unto you (St. John xiii, 34), with which the ceremony of the washing of the feet begins. This is still carried out in R.C. cathedral churches and monasteries. In the monasteries it was the custom to wash the feet of as many poor people as there were monks, and for centuries in England the sovereign, as a token of humility, did the same. Mention is made in the Wardrobe Book of Edward I of money being given on Easter Eve to thirteen poor people whose feet the Queen had washed; the custom is said to have been kept up even as late as the time of James II, but for long now the distribution of money (see MAUNDS) is all that is left of it.

The word has been incorrectly derived from maund (a basket), because on the day before the great fast Catholics brought out their broken food in maunds to distribute to the poor. This custom in many places gave birth to a fair, as the Tombland Fair of Norwich, held on the plain before the Cathedral Close.

Maunds, the Royal, or Maundy Money. Gifts in money given by the sovereign on Maundy Thursday to the number of aged poor persons that corresponds with his age. It used to be distributed by the Lord High Almoner; but since 1883 the Clerk of the Almonry Office has been responsible for the distribution which takes place in Westminster Abbey, and for which special money (silver pennies, four-penny pieces, etc.) is usually coined. These amount in value to £50 or £60. The custom began in 1368, in the reign of Edward III, and is a relic of the "washing of the feet" (see MAUNDY THURSDAY). James II was the last sovereign to distribute the doles personally, until George V did so in 1932. Edward VIII distributed the purses also, in 1936. Since then the sovereign has been present on most occasions at the distribution.

Entries of "al maner of things yerly yevin by my lorde of his Maundy, and my laidis, and his lordshippis children."—Household Book of the Earl of Northumberland, 1512.

Mauritania (maw ri tā' nyā). Morocco and Algiers, the land of the ancient Mauri or Moors. The kingdom of Mauritania was annexed to the Roman Empire in A.D. 42, and was finally disintegrated when overrun by the Vandals in 429.

Mausoleum. Originally the name of the tomb of Mausolus, King of Caria, to whom Artemisia (his wife) erected at Halicarnassus a splendid sepulchral monument (353 B.C.). Parts of this sepulchre, which was one of the Seven Wonders of the World, are now in the British Museum. The name is now applied to any sepulchral monument of great size or architectural quality.

The chief mausoleums are: that of Augustus; of Hadrian, i.e. the castle of St. Angelo, at Rome; that erected in France to Henry II by Catherine de' Medici; that of St. Peter the Martyr in the church of St. Eustatius, by G. Balduccio in the 14th century.

Mauthe Dog. A ghostly black spaniel that for many years haunted Peel Castle, in the Isle of Man. It used to enter the guardroom as soon as candles were lighted, and leave it at day-break. While this spectre dog was present the soldiers forbore all oaths and profane talk. One day a drunken trooper entered the guard-house alone out of bravado, but lost his speech and died in three days. Scott refers to it in his Lay of the Last Minstrel, vi stanza, 26, and again in a long note to ch. xv of Peveril of the Peak.

Mauther, mawther (maw' ther). An old dialect word in East Anglia for a young girl; frequently altered to Modder, Morther, Mor, etc. Its etymology is obscure, but the word does not seem to be connected with mother.

Kastril (to his sister): Away! you talk like a foolish mauther.—BEN JONSON: Alchemist, iv, 4.

When once a giggling mother you,

And I a red-faced chubby boy,

Sly tricks you played me not a few,

For mischief was your greatest joy.

BLOOMFIELD: Richard and Kate.

Well, Mor, where have you been this long while? and I s'y, Mor, come hither! are, in Norfolk, still common modes of addressing a young girl.

Mauvais, mauvaise (mō vā, mo vāz). French, bad.

Mauvais ton. Bad manners. Ill-breeding, vulgar ways.

Mauvaise honte. Bad or silly shame. Bashfulness, sheepishness.

Mauvaise plaisanterie. A rude or ill-mannered jest; a jest in bad taste.

Maverick. See BRAND.

Mavournin (mā voor' nin). Irish (mo mhurnin) for "My darling." Erin mavournin = Ireland, my darling; Erin go bragh = Ireland for ever! Land of my forefathers, Erin go bragh!... Erin mavournin, Erin go bragh!

CAMPBELL: Exile of Erin.

Mawworm (maw' wērm). A hypocritical pretender to sanctity, a pious humbug. From the character of this name in Isaac Bickerstaffe's The Hypocrite (1769).

Maximum and Minimum (Lat.). The greatest and the least amount; as, the maximum profits or exports and the minimum profits or exports; the maximum and minimum price of corn during the year. The terms are also employed in mathematics, etc.; a maximum and minimum thermometer is one that indicates the highest and lowest temperatures during a specified period.

May. The Anglo-Saxons called this month thrimilce, because then cows can be milked three times a day; the present name is the Latin Maius from Maia, the goddess of growth and increase, connected with major.

The old Dutch name was Blou-maand (blossoming month). In the French Republican calendar the month was called Floreale (the time of flowers, April 20th to May 20th).

Here we go gathering nuts in May. See NUTS.

It's a case of January and May. See JANUARY.

May unlucky for weddings. This is a Roman superstition, and is referred to by Ovid. In this month were held the festivals of Bona Dea (the goddess of chastity), and the feasts of the dead called Lemuralia.

Nec viduæ tædis eadem, nec virginis apta
Tempora; quæ nupsit, non diuturna fuit;
Hæc quoque de causa, si te proverbia tangunt,
Mente malum Maiò nubere vulgus ait.
OVID: Fasti, v, 496, etc.

May meetings. The annual gatherings, usually held in London in May and June, of religious and charitable societies, to hear the annual reports and appeals for continued or increased support, etc.

May-day. Polydore Virgil says that the Roman youths used to go into the fields and spend the calends of May in dancing and singing in honour of Flora, goddess of fruits and flowers. The English consecrated May-day to Robin Hood and Maid Marian, because the favourite outlaw died on that day, and villagers used to set up Maypoles (q.v.), and spend the day in archery, morris dancing, and other amusements.

The old custom of singing the Hymnus Eucharisticus on the top of Wolsey's Tower, Oxford, as the clock strikes five on May Morning is still kept up by the choristers of Magdalen. This is a relic of the requiem mass that, before the Reformation, was sung at this spot and time for the repose of the soul of Henry VII. The opening lines of the hymn are:—

Te Deum Patrem colimus,
Te laudibus prosequimur;
Qui corpus cibo reficis,
Cælesti mentem gratia.

Evil May Day. See EVIL.

Maypole, Queen, etc. Dancing round the Maypole on May Day, "going a-Maying," electing a May Queen, and lighting bonfires, are all remnants of nature-worship, and may be traced to the most ancient times. The chimney-sweeps used to lead about a Jack-i'-the-green, and the custom is not yet quite extinct, especially in country towns.

Any very tall, ungainly woman is sometimes called a "Maypole," a term which was bestowed as a nickname on the Duchess of Kendal, one of George I's mistresses.

The Maypole in the Strand. This ancient London landmark, referred to more than once by 18th-century writers, stood on a spot now occupied by St. Mary-le-Strand, where formerly stood a cross. In place of this a May-pole was set up by John Clarges, the blacksmith, whose daughter Ann became the wife of Monk, Duke of Albemarle. It was taken down in 1713, and replaced by a new one erected opposite Somerset House. This had two gilt balls and a vane on its summit, and on holidays was decorated with flags and garlands. It was removed in 1718, and sent by Sir Isaac Newton to Wanstead Park to support the largest telescope in Europe.

Captain Bailly . . . employed four hackney coaches, with drivers in liveries, to ply at the Maypole in the Strand, fixing his own rates, about the year 1634.—Note 1, The Tatler, iv, p. 415.

Amid that area wide they took their stand,
Where the tall maypole once o'erlooked the Strand,
But now (so Anne and piety ordain)
A church collects the saints of Drury Lane.

POPE: Dunciad II, 217 (1728).

What's not destroyed by Time's devouring hand?
Where's Troy, and where's the Maypole in the Strand?
J. BRAMSTON (d. 1744): The Art of Politics.

Maya Civilization. The Mayas were an American Indian race who possessed an advanced civilization at the time of the Spanish conquest of Central America. The oldest dated monument approximates to A.D. 50, when the race centre was in the neighbourhood of Yucatan. A general decay in art and the building of the great pyramidal temples set in in the 15th century and the Maya civilization was gradually absorbed into the Aztec of S. Mexico. Little progress has been made in the decipherment of the Maya inscriptions and the history and mode of life of this ancient people is still largely conjectural.

Mayduke Cherries. So called from Médoc, a district of France, whence the cherries first came to us.

Mayflower. The name of the ship that took the Pilgrim Fathers (q.v.) from Southampton to Massachusetts in 1620. It was about 180 tons. Some of the timbers of the old Mayflower are said to have been discovered as forming part of a barn at Jordans, Bucks.

Mayonnaise. A sauce made with pepper, salt, oil, vinegar, and the yolk of an egg beaten up together. The word is French; its origin is unknown, but it has been conjectured that it was originally called mahonnaise in honour of the capture of Mahon, Minorca, by the Duc de Richelieu in 1756.

Mayor. The chief magistrate of a city, elected by the citizens, and holding office for twelve months.

The chief magistrate of London is The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, one of the Privy Council.

Since 1389 the magistracy of York has been headed by a Lord Mayor, and the other English towns in which the chief magistrate is Lord Mayor are Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, Bristol, Hull, Bradford and Newcastle-on-Tyne.

At the Conquest the sovereign appointed the chief magistrates of cities. That of London was called the Port-Reeve, but Henry II changed the word to the Norman maire (our mayor). John made the office annual; and Edward III (in 1354) conferred the title of "The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor of London."

The first Lord Mayor's Show was in 1458, when Sir John Norman went by water in state, to be sworn in at Westminster; and the cap and sword were given by Richard II to Sir William Walworth, for killing Wat Tyler.

Mayor of Garratt. See GARRATT.

Mayor of the Bull-ring (Old Dublin). This official and his sheriffs were elected on May Day and St. Peter's Eve "to be captains and guardians of the batchelers and the unwedded youth of the civitie." For the year the "Mayor" had authority to punish those who frequented houses of ill-fame. He was termed "Mayor of the Bull-ring" because he conducted any bachelor who married during his term of office to an iron ring that used to hang in the market place and to which bulls were tied for baiting, and make him kiss it.

Mayor of the Palace (Maire du Palais). The superintendent of the king's household, and steward of the royal leudes (companies) of France, before the accession of the Carolingian dynasty.

Mazarin, Cardinal Jules (1602-61), was an Italian-born French statesman, trained by and successor to Cardinal Richelieu, and minister to the Queen-Regent during the minority of Louis XIV.

Mazarine Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Mazarin Library. The first public Library in Paris. The great Cardinal Mazarin left his collection of 40,000 books to the city on his death in 1661, and himself composed the rules for its conduct.

Mazarinades. Pamphlets in prose or verse published against Cardinal Mazarin by supporters of the Fronde (the armed opposition to Louis XIV during his minority, 1648-53).

Mazeppa, Ivan (mä zep' ä) (1644-1709). The hero of Byron's poem was born of a noble Polish family in Podolia, became a page in the court of John Casimir, King of Poland, but intrigued with Theresia, the young wife of a Podolian count, who had the young page lashed naked to a wild horse, and turned adrift. The horse dropped dead in the Ukraine, where Mazeppa was released and cared for by Cossacks. He became secretary to the hetman, and at his death was appointed his successor. Peter I created him Prince of the Ukraine, but in the wars with Sweden Mazeppa deserted to Charles XII and fought against Russia at Pultowa. After the loss of this battle, Mazeppa fled to Valentia, and then to Bender, where he committed suicide. Byron makes Mazeppa tell his tale to Charles after the battle of Pultowa.

Adah Isaacs Menken (1835-68) was famous for her equestrian performance in the stage version of Mazeppa at Astley's, in 1844.

Mazer (mä' zer). A large drinking vessel originally made of maple-wood, and so called from O.Fr. masere, O.H. Ger. masar, a knot in wood, maple wood.

A mazer wrought of the maple ware.

SPENSER: Shepherd's Calendar (August).

Mazikeen or Shedeen (mäz' i kën). A species of beings in Jewish mythology resembling the Arabian Jinn (q.v.), and said to be the agents of magic and enchantment. When Adam fell, says the Talmud, he was excommunicated for 130 years, during which time he begat demons and spectres, for, it is written "Adam lived 130 years and (i.e. before he) begat children in his own image" (Gen. v, 3). (Rabbi Jeremiah ben Eliezar.)

And the Mazikeen shall not come nigh thy tents.—Ps. xci, 5 (Chaldee version).

Swells out like the Mazikeen ass. The allusion is to a Jewish tradition that a servant, whose duty it was to rouse the neighbourhood to midnight prayer, one night mounted a stray ass and neglected his duty. As he rode along the ass grew bigger and bigger, till at last it towered as high as the tallest edifice, where it left the man, and there next morning he was found.

McCoy. The real McCoy. Something excellent; something genuine. From an early 20th-century American prize-fighter known as "Kid McCoy," whose fame was so great that other less able fighters adopted his name to gain some of his glory. There were many McCoy's but only one "real" one.

Meal. In meal or in malt. Directly or indirectly; in one way or another. If much money passes through the hand, some profit will be sure to accrue either "in meal or in malt," and a certain percentage of one or the other is the miller's perquisite.

Meal-tub Plot. A pretended conspiracy against Protestants, fabricated by Thomas Dangerfield (c. 1650-85) in 1679, so called because he said that the papers relating to it were concealed in a meal-tub in the house of Mrs. Elizabeth Cellier, a Roman Catholic. She was tried for high treason and acquitted, while Dangerfield was convicted of libel, whipped, and pilloried.

Mealy-mouthed is the Greek meli-muthos (honey-speech), and means velvet-tongued, afraid of giving offence, hypocritical, "smarmy."

Meander (mē ān' der). To wind, to saunter about at random; so called from the Mæander, a winding river of Phrygia. The term is also applied to an ornamental pattern of winding lines, used as a border on pottery, wall decorations, etc.

Means Test. By the 1934 revision of the Unemployment Act, the claimant for insurance benefit was called upon to undergo an inquisition, known as the Means Test, and furnish information as to the total amount of money coming into the household from any source whatsoever, thus laying before the officials the private affairs of every member of his family. The purpose of this was, of course, to safeguard public funds and ensure that the minimum relief should be furnished, but its application was felt by the unemployed to attach an odious stigma to an already unfortunate situation. The Means Test was abolished by the Labour Government in the National Insurance Act that came into force in 1948.

Measure (O.Fr. mesure, Lat. mensura, metiri, to measure). Beyond measure, or out of all measure. Beyond all reasonable degree; exceedingly, excessively.

Thus out of measure sad.—Much Ado About Nothing, i, 3.

To measure one's length on the ground. To fall flat on the ground; to be knocked down.

If you will measure your lubber's length, tarry.—King Lear, i, 4.

To measure other people's corn by one's own bushel. See BUSHEL.

To measure strength. To wrestle together; to fight, to contest.

To measure swords. To try whether or not one is strong enough or sufficiently equally matched to contend against another. The phrase is from duelling, in which the seconds measure the swords to see that both are of one length.

So we measured swords and parted.—As You Like It, v, 4.

To take the measure of one's foot. To ascertain how far a person will venture; to make a shrewd guess of another's character. The allusion is to "Ex pede Herculem."

Measure for Measure. The plot of Shakespeare's play (acted 1604, first printed 1623) is founded on Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra (1582), which was taken from the 85th tale in Cinthio's Hecatommithi (1565). Promos is called by Shakespeare, "Lord Angelo"; and Cassandra is "Isabella." Her brother, called by Shakespeare "Claudio," is named Andrugio in the story.

Meat, Bread. These words tell a tale; for both can connote food in general. The Italians and Asiatics eat little animal food, and with them the word bread stands for food; so also with the poor, whose chief diet it is; but the English once consumed meat very plentifully, and this word, which simply means food, almost exclusively implies animal food. In the banquet given to Joseph's brethren, the viceroy commanded the servants "to set on bread" (Gen. xliii, 31). In Ps. civ, 27, it is said of fishes, creeping things, and crocodiles, that God giveth them their meat in due season.

To carry off meat from the graves. To be as poor as a church mouse; to be so poor as to descend to robbing the tombs of offerings. The Greeks and Romans used to make feasts at certain seasons, when spirits were supposed to return to their graves, and the fragments were left on the tombs for the use of the ghosts. Hence the Latin proverb Eleemosynam sepulcri patris tui (Alms on your father's grave).

Mecca. The birthplace of Mohammed in Arabia. It is one of the two holy cities, the other being Medina. Derivatively it means "a place one longs to visit."

Mecklenberg Declaration. The first declaration of independence in the U.S.A., made at Mecklenberg, N. Carolina, on May 20th, 1775.

Medal of Honor. A U.S.A. medal awarded by Congress to soldiers, sailors, and marines who have shown conspicuous gallantry in the face of the enemy and have risked their lives beyond any call that duty may have made upon their services.

Médard, St. (mā'dar). The French "St. Swithin"; his day is June 8th.

Quand il pleut à la Saint-Médard
Il pleut quarante jours plus tard.

He was Bishop of Noyon and Tournai in the 6th century, and founded the Festival of the Rose at Salency, which is kept up to this day, the most virtuous girl in the parish receiving a crown of roses and a purse of money.

Legend says that a sudden shower once fell which wetted everyone to the skin except St. Médard; he remained dry as toast, for an eagle had spread its wings over him, and ever after he was termed maître de la pluie.

Medea (me dē' à). In Greek legend, a sorceress, daughter of Ætes, King of Colchis. She married Jason, the leader of the Argonauts, whom she aided to obtain the golden fleece, and was the mother of Medus, whom the Greeks regarded as the ancestor of the Medes. See HARMONIA.

Medea's kettle or cauldron. A means of restoring lost youth. Medea cut an old ram to pieces, threw the pieces into her cauldron, and a young lamb came forth. The daughters of Pelias thought to restore their father to youth in the same way; but Medea refused to utter the magic words, and the old man ceased to live.

Get thee Medea's kettle and be boiled anew.—CONGREVE: Love for Love, iv.

Medes and Persians. See LAW.

Mediæval Ages. See MIDDLE AGES.

Medici (med' i chi). A great and powerful family that ruled in Florence in the 15th and 16th centuries. It was founded by Giovanni Medici, a banker, whose son, Cosimo (1389-1464) was famous as a patron of art and learning. His grandson, Lorenzo the Magnificent (1448-92) was one of the outstanding figures of the Renaissance. His illegitimate son Alessandro (1492-1519) was made Duke of Florence in 1530, and in 1569 his son Cosimo became Grand Duke of Tuscany.

His granddaughter, Marie de Medici (1573-1642) was Queen Consort of Henry IV of France and one of the great and sinister figures of French history. The Medici family gave three Popes to the Church, Leo X (1475-1521; pope 1513-21) in whose reign the Reformation began under Martin Luther; Leo XI who reigned as Pope only a few months in 1605; and Clement VII (1478-1534; pope 1523-34) who refused to grant Henry VIII a divorce from Catherine of Aragon.

Medicine. From the Lat. medicina, which meant both the physician's art and his laboratory, and also a medicament. The alchemists applied the word to the philosopher's stone, and the elixir of life; hence Shakespeare's How much unlike art thou, Mark Antony!

Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
With his unction gilded thee.

Antony and Cleopatra, i, 5.

And the word was—and is—frequently used in a figurative sense, as—

The miserable have no other medicine

But only hope. Measure for Measure, iii, 1.

Among the North American Indians medicine is a spell, charm, or fetish, and sometimes even Manitou (q.v.) himself, hence Medicine-man, a witch-doctor or magician.

The Father of Medicine. Aretæus of Capadocia, who lived at the close of the first and beginning of the second centuries, and Hippocrates of Cos (460-377 B.C.) are both so called.

Medicine ball. A large, leather-covered ball—usually of some weight—tossed from one person to another as a form of exercise.

Medicine lodge. A tent or other form of structure used by North American Indians for ceremonial purposes.

Medicinal days. In ancient practice the sixth, eighth, tenth, twelfth, sixteenth, eighteenth, etc., of a disease; so called because, according to Hippocrates, no "crisis" (q.v.) occurs on these days, and medicine may be safely administered.

Medicinal-finger. Also the leech-finger or leechman. The finger next to the little finger, the ring finger; so called in mediæval times because of the notion that it contained a vein that led direct to the heart.

Medina (me dī' nā). In Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, ii) the typification of "the golden mean" (Lat. medium). She was step-sister of Perissa (excess) and Elissa (deficiency), who could never agree upon any subject.

The Arabian city of Medina (mē dē' nā) is the second holy city of the Mohammedans, called "Yathrib" before Mohammed fled thither from Mecca, but afterwards Medinal-Nabi (the city of the prophet), whence its present name. In Spain there are four or five Medinas, Medina-Sidonia was so called by the Moors because it was believed to be on the site of the city Asidur, which was founded by Phenicians from Sidon.

Mediterranean. The midland sea; the sea in the middle of the (Roman) earth (Lat. medius, middle, terra, land).

The Key of the Mediterranean. The Rock of Gibraltar, which commands the entrance between Europe and Africa. It was taken from the Spaniards by a combined British and Dutch force under Sir George Rooke, July 24th, 1704. Spain attempted to retake the Rock in 1705, 1736, and 1779-83 when it was held throughout the lengthy siege by Lord Heathfield (1717-90). See also MARE NOSTRUM.

Medusa (me dū' zā). The chief of the Gorgons, (q.v.) of Greek mythology. Legend says that she was a beautiful maiden, specially famous for her hair; but that she violated the temple of Athene, who thereupon transformed her hair into serpents and made her face so terrible that all who looked on it were turned to stone. Perseus, assisted by Athene (who lent him her shield wherein he looked only on the reflection of Medusa during his attack), struck off her head, and by its means rescued Andromeda (q.v.) from the monster. Medusa was the mother by Poseidon of Chrysaor and Pegasus. The story of Perseus is well told in Charles Kingsley's Heroes.

Meerscham (mēr' shawm) (Ger., sea-froth). This mineral (used for making tobacco-pipes), from having been found on the seashore in rounded white lumps, was ignorantly supposed to be sea-froth petrified; but it is a compound of silica, magnesia, lime, water, and carbonic acid. When first dug it lathers like soap, and is used as a soap by the Tartars.

Meg. Formerly slang for a guinea, but now signifying a halfpenny. Cp. MAG.

No, no; Meggs are Guineas; Smelts are half-guineas.—SHADWELL: Squire of Alsatia, I, i (1688).

Mons Meg. A great 15th-century piece of artillery in Edinburgh Castle, made at Mons, in Flanders. It was considered a palladium by the Scotch. Cp. LONG MEG.

Roaring Meg. Formerly any large gun that made a great noise when let off was so called, as Mons Meg herself and a cannon given by the Fishmongers of London, and used in 1689. Burton says: "Music is a roaring Meg against melancholy."

Drowning the noise of their consciences . . . by ringing their greatest Bells, discharging their roaring-megs.—TRAPP: Comment on Job (1656).

Megarians. The inhabitants of Megara and its territory, Megaris, Greece, proverbial for their stupidity; hence the proverb, "Wise as a Megarian"—i.e. not wise at all; yet see below.

Megarian School (me gār' i ān). A philosophical school, founded by Euclid, a native of Megara, and disciple of Socrates. It combined the ethical doctrines of Socrates with the metaphysic of the Eleatics (q.v.).

Megrims (mē' grimz). A corruption of the Greek hemi-crania (half the skull), through the French migraine. A neuralgic affection generally confined to one brow, or to one side of the forehead; whims, fancies.

Meinie, or Meiny (mī' nī). A company of attendants; a household; from O.Fr. meynē, mesnie, from Lat. mansionem, mansio, a house. Our word menial has much the same derivation and significance.

With that the smiling Kriemhild forth stepped a little space.

And Brunhild and her meiny greeted with gentle grace. Letisom's Nibelungenlied, stanza 604.

Mein Kampf (mīn kām̃f). The political and half mystical thesis in which Adolf Hitler embodied his social and racial theories; his doctrine of anti-Semitism; and his call for revenge for the disasters of 1918 and the revision of the Versailles treaty. He wrote My Fight—as the title may be translated—while undergoing a sentence of imprisonment at Landeck-am-Lech for his part in the abortive "Beer Hall Putsch" of 1923; it was published in 1925 and as he increased in power so did Mein Kampf become increasingly the Nazi bible.

Meiosis (mī ō' sis). This word, coming from the Greek and meaning "lessening" is applied to the ironical form of speech in which a negative is used for the affirmation of its contrary, as "no small quantity" meaning "a considerable quantity" or "not so bad," meaning "quite good." It is also known as litotes.

Meistersingers (mī' ster sing' erz). Burgher poets of Germany, who attempted, in the 14th to 16th centuries, to revive the national minstrelsy of the Minnesingers (q.v.), which had fallen into decay. Hans Sachs, the cobbler (1494-1576), was the most celebrated.

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg. An opera by Wagner (1868) in which he satirized his critics.

Melampod (mel' am pod). Black hellebore; so called from Melampus, a famous soothsayer and physician of Greek legend, who with it cured the daughters of Prætus of their melancholy (Virgil: Georgics, iii, 550).

My seely sheep, like well below,
They need not melampode;
For they been hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode.

SPENSER: Eclogue, vii.

Melancholy. Lowness of spirits, supposed at one time to arise from a redundancy of black bile (Gr. melas chole).

Melancholy Jacques. So Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-78) was called for his morbid sensibilities and unhappy spirit. The expression is from As You Like It, ii, 1.

Melanchthon (mel lāngk' thon) is the Greek for Schwarzerde (black earth), the real name of this reformer (1497-1560). Similarly, Æcolampadius is the Greek version of the German name Hauschein, and Desiderius Erasmus is one Latin and one Greek rendering of the name Gheraerd Gheraerd.

Melba. Pêche Melba, a confection of fruit (usually peach), cream and icecream. Melba toast, narrow slices of thin toast. These take their name from Dame Nellie Melba (1861-1931) the great Australian operatic soprano.

Meleager (mel ē ā' ger). A hero of Greek legend, son of Æneus of Calydon and Althæa, distinguished for throwing the javelin, for slaying the Calydonian boar, and as one of the Argonauts. It was declared by the Fates that he would die as soon as a piece of wood then on the fire was burnt up; whereupon his mother snatched the log from the fire and extinguished it; but after Meleager had slain his maternal uncles, his mother threw the brand on the fire again, and Meleager died.

The death of Meleager was a favourite subject in ancient reliefs. The famous picture of Charles le Brun is in the Musée Impériale of Paris.

Melibæus or Melibe (mel i bē' us, mel' i bi). The central figure in Chaucer's prose Tale of Melibæus (Canterbury Tales), which is a translation of a French rendering of Albertano da Brescia's Latin Liber Consolationis et Concilii. Melibæus is a wealthy young man, married to Prudens. One day, when gone "into the fields to play," enemies beat his wife and left his daughter for dead. Melibæus resolved upon vengeance, but his wife persuaded him to call together his enemies, and he told them he forgave them "to this effect and to this end, that God of His endles mercy wole at the tyme of oure deyninge forgive us oure giltes that we have trespassed to Him in this wretched world."

Melbean Dye. A rich purple. Melibæa, in Thessaly, was famous for the ostrum, a fish used in dyeing purple.

A military vest of purple flowered,
Lovelier than Melbean.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, xi, 242.

Melicertes (mel i sēr' tēz). Son of Ino, a sea deity of Greek legend (see LEUCOTHEA). Athamas imagined his wife to be a lioness, and her two sons to be lion's cubs. In his frenzy he slew one of the boys, and drove the other (named Melicertes) with his mother into the sea. The mother became a sea goddess, and the boy the god of harbours.

Melisande (mel' i sänd). The same as Melusina (q.v.).

Mell Supper. Harvest supper; in Scotland and the northern counties the last sheaf of corn cut is called the mell, and when the harvest is borne a woman carries a mell-doll, i.e. a straw image dressed up like a young girl, on top of a pole among the reapers.

Mellifluous Doctor, The. St. Bernard (1091-1153), whose writings were called a "river of Paradise."

Melodrama. Properly (and in the early 19th cent.) a drama in which song and music were introduced (Gr. melos, song), an opera. These pieces were usually of a sensational character, and now—the musical portions having been gradually dropped—the word denotes a lurid, sensational play, highly emotional, and with a happy ending in which the villain gets all he so richly deserves.

Melon. The Mohammedans say that the eating of a melon produces a thousand good works. There are certain stones on Mount Carmel called Stone Melons. The tradition is that Elijah saw a peasant carrying melons, and asked him for one. The man said they were not melons but stones, and Elijah instantly converted them into stones.

A like story is told of St. Elizabeth of Hungary. She gave so bountifully to the poor as to cripple her own household. One day her husband met her with her lap full of something, and demanded of her what she was carrying. "Only flowers, my lord," said Elizabeth, and to save the lie God converted the loaves into flowers.

Melpomene (mel pom' e ni). The muse of tragedy
Up then Melpomene, thou mournfullest Muse of mine.

Such cause of mourning never hadst afore.

SPENSER: Shepherd's Calendar, November.

Melusina, or Melisande (mel ūs' i nā, mel' i sänd). The most famous of the fées of French romance, looked upon by the houses of Lusignan, Rohan, Luxembourg, and Sassenaye as their ancestor and founder. Having enclosed her father in a high mountain for offending her mother, she was condemned to become every Saturday a serpent from her waist downward. She married Raymond, Count of Lusignan, and made her husband vow never to visit her on a Saturday; but the count hid himself on one of the forbidden days, and saw his wife's transformation. Melusina was now obliged to quit her husband, and was destined to wander about as a spectre till the day of doom, though some say that the count immured her in the dungeon of his castle. Cp. UNDINE.

A sudden scream is called un cri de Mélusine, in allusion to the scream of despair uttered by Melusina when she was discovered by her husband; and in Poitou certain gingerbread cakes bearing the impress of a beautiful woman "bien coiffée," with a serpents' tail, made by confectioners for the May fair in the neighbourhood of Lusignan, are still called Melusines.

Memento mori (me men' tō mōr' ī) (Lat., remember you must die). An emblem of mortality, such as a skull; something to put us in mind of the shortness and uncertainty of life.

I make as good use of it [Bardolph's face] as many a man doth of a death's head or a memento mori.—Henry IV, iii, 3.

Memnon. The Oriental or Ethiopian prince who, in the Trojan War, went to the assistance of his uncle Priam and was slain by Achilles. His mother Eos (the Dawn) was inconsolable for his death, and wept for him every morning.

The Greeks called the statue of Amenophis III, in Thebes, that of Memnon. When first struck by the rays of the rising sun it is said to have produced a sound like the snapping asunder of a cord. Poetically, when Eos kissed her son at daybreak, the hero acknowledged the salutation with a musical murmur.

Memnon's sister, in Il Penseroso, is perhaps the Himera, mentioned by Dictys Cretensis; but Milton is supposed to have invented her, because it might be presumed that any sister of the black but comely Memnon would be likewise.

Black, but such as in esteem
Prince Memnon's sister might besem.

Il Penseroso, 18.

Probably all that is meant is this: Black so delicate and beautiful that it might besem a sister of Memnon the son of Aurora or the early day-dawn.

The legend given by Dictys Cretensis (Bk. vi) is that Himera, on hearing of her brother's death, set out to secure his remains, and encountered at Paphos a troop laden with booty, and carrying Memnon's ashes in an urn. Pallas, the leader of the troop, offered to give her either the urn or the booty, and she chose the urn.

Memory. The Bard of Memory. Samuel Rogers (1763-1855), the banker-poet; author of The Pleasures of Memory (1792).

Memory Woodfall, William Woodfall (1746-1803), brother of the Woodfall of Junius, and editor of the Morning Chronicle, would attend a debate, and, without notes, report it accurately next morning.

The ever memorable. John Hales, of Eton (1584-1656), scholar and Arminian divine.

Memorial Day, also known as Decoration Day, May 30th, observed in U.S.A. since the Civil War to commemorate the soldiers and sailors who fell in action. In some of the Southern States April 26th, May 10th or June 3rd are kept as Memorial Day.

Menah (mē' nā). A large stone worshipped by certain tribes of Arabia between Mecca and Medina. Like most other Arabian idols it was demolished in the eighth year of "the flight." It is, in fact, a rude stone brought from Mecca, the sacred city, by pilgrims who wished to carry away with them some memento of their Holy Land.

Menalcas (me nāl' kās). Any shepherd or rustic. The name figures in the Eclogues of Virgil and the Idyls of Theocritus.

Menamber (me nām' ber). A rocking-stone in the parish of Sithney (Cornwall) which at one time a little child could move. Cromwell's soldiers thought it fostered superstition, and rendered it immovable.

Mendelism. The theory of heredity promulgated by Gregor Johann Mendel (1822-84), the Austrian scientist and Abbot of Brunn, showing that the characters of the parents of cross-bred offspring reappear in certain proportions in successive generations according to definite laws. Mendel's Law was discovered by him in 1865 through experiments with peas.

Mendicant Orders, or Begging Friars. The orders of the Franciscans (Grey Friars), Augustines (Austin Friars), Carmelites (White Friars), and Dominicans (Black Friars).

Menechmians (me nek' mi anz). Persons exactly like each other; so called from the Menechmi of Plautus, the basis of Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, in which not only the two Dromios are exactly like each other, but Antipholus of Ephesus is the facsimile of his brother, Antipholus of Syracuse.

Menelaus (men e lā' ūs). Son of Atreus, brother of Agamemnon, and husband of Helen, through whose desertion of him was brought about the Trojan War. He was the King of Sparta or of Lacedæmon.

Menevia (me nē' vi a). A form of the old name, Mynyw, of St. David's (Wales). Its present name is from Dewi, or David, the founder of the episcopal see in the 6th century.

Meng-tse. The fourth of the sacred books of China; so called from the name of its author (d. about 290 B.C.). Latinized into Mencius. It was written in the 4th century B.C. Confucius or Kung-fu-tse wrote the other three; viz. Ta-heo (School of Adults), Chong-yong (The Golden Mean), and Lun-yu (or Book of Maxims).

Mother of Meng. A Chinese expression, meaning "an admirable teacher." Meng's father died soon after the birth of the sage, and he was brought up by his mother.

Menippus (men ip' ūs), the cynic, was born at Gadara, Syria, in the 3rd century B.C. He was called by Lucian "the greatest snarler and snapper of all the old dogs" (cynics).

Varro wrote the Satyræ Menippeæ, and in imitation of it a political pamphlet, in verse and prose, designed to expose the perfidious intentions of Spain in regard to France, and the criminal ambition of the Guise family, was published in 1593 as The Menippean Satire. The authors were Pierre Leroy (d. 1593), Pithou (1539-96), Passerat (1534-1602), and Rapin, the poet (1540-1608).

Mennonites. Followers of Simon Menno (1492-1559), a native of Friesland, who modified the fanatical views of the Anabaptists. The sect still survives, in the United States as well as in Holland and Germany.

Mensheviks (men' she viks). A Russian word for a minority party. After the Russian Revolution of November, 1917, the less radical socialists who were in opposition to the more violent Bolshevik government, took this name.

Menthū. See BAKHA.

Mention in Dispatches. British term given to a reference by name in official dispatches to an officer who has done well in battle. An officer so mentioned is entitled to wear a small bronze oak leaf on the left breast or upon the medal ribbon for that particular campaign.

Mentor. A guide, a wise and faithful counsellor; so called from Mentor, a friend of Ulysses, whose form Minerva assumed when she accompanied Telemachos in his search for his father.

Menu or Manu (mē' nū). In Hindu philosophy, one of a class of Demiurges of whom the first is identified with Brahma. Brahma divided himself into male and female, these produced Viraj, from whom sprang the first Menu, a kind of secondary creator. He gave rise to ten Prajapatis ("lords of all living"); from these came seven Menus, each presiding over a certain period, the seventh of these being Menu Vaivasvata ("the sun-born") who is now reigning and who is looked upon as the creator of the living races of beings. To him are ascribed the Laws of Menu, now called the Manavadharmashastra, a section of the Vedas containing a code of civil and religious law compiled by the Manavans.

Meo periculo (mē ō per ik' ū lō) (Lat. at my own risk). On my responsibility; I being bond.

Mephibosheth (me fib' ō sheth), in Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, Pt. ii, (q.v.) is meant for Samuel Pordage (d. 1691), a poetaster.

Mephistopheles (mef is tof' è lēz). A manufactured name (possibly from three Greek words meaning "not loving the light") of a devil or familiar spirit which first appears in the late mediæval Faust legend; he is well known as the sneering, jeering, leering tempter in Goethe's Faust. He is mentioned by Shakespeare (Merry Wives, i, 1) and Fletcher as Mephostophilus, and in Marlowe's Faustus as Mephostophilus.

Mercator's Projection is Mercator's chart or map for nautical purposes. The meridian lines are at right angles to the parallels of latitude. It is so called because it was devised by Gerhard Kremer (= merchant, pedlar) (1512-94), whose surname Latinized is Mercator.

Merchant Adventurers were a guild of traders originally established in Brabant in 1296. Henry VII granted a patent for the Adventurers in England in 1505 and they were incorporated in 1564.

Merchant of Venice. The interwoven stories of Shakespeare's comedy (written 1598, published 1600) are drawn from mediæval legends the germs of which are found in the Gesta Romanorum. The tale of the bond is ch. xlviii, and that of the caskets is ch. xcix. Much of the plot is also given in the 14th century Il Pecorone of Ser Giovanni; but Shakespeare could not read Italian, there was no translation in his day, and it is more than doubtful whether he ever saw or was aware of it.

Mercia (mēr' si à). One of the ancient Anglian kingdoms of the Heptarchy, founded soon after the middle of the 6th century. It flourished under Penda in the 7th century; in the 8th, under Ethelbald and Offa, it became overlord, but in 827 was incorporated with Wessex, to be revived again as an earldom until the Norman Conquest. It embraced a large part of the Midlands, stretching from the Humber to the Thames, and westward to the Welsh Marches.

Mercilla. See SOLDAN.

Mercury (mēr' kū ri). The Roman equivalent of the Greek Hermes (q.v.), son of Maia and Jupiter, to whom he acted as messenger. He was the god of science and commerce, the patron of travellers and also of rogues, vagabonds, and thieves. Hence, the name of the god is used to denote both a messenger and a thief:

Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary.
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.

Richard III, iv, 3.
My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles.—Winter's Tale, iv, 2.

Mercury is represented as a young man with winged hat and winged sandals (talaria), bearing the caduceus (q.v.), and sometimes a purse.

Posts with a marble head of Mercury on them used to be erected where two or more roads met, to point out the way. (Juvenal, viii, 53.)

In astrology, Mercury "signifieth subtil men, ingenious, inconstant: rymers, poets, advocates, orators, phylosophers, arithmeticians, and busie fellows," and the alchemists credited it with great powers and used it for a large number of purposes. See Ben Jonson's masque, Mercury Vindicated.

Mercury fig (Lat. Ficus ad Mercurium). The first fig gathered off a fig-tree was by the Romans devoted to Mercury. The proverbial saying was applied generally to all first fruits or first works.

You cannot make a Mercury of every log. Pythagoras said: Non ex quovis ligno Mercurius fit. That is, "Not every mind will answer equally well to be trained into a scholar." The proper wood for a statue of Mercury was box—vel quod hominis pultorem præ se ferat, vel quod materies sit omnium maxime æterna. (Erasmus.)

Mercurial (mer kū' ri àl). Light-hearted, gay, volatile; because such were supposed by the astrologers to be born under the planet Mercury.

Mercurial finger. The little finger, which, if pointed denotes eloquence, if square sound judgment.

The thumb, in chromiancy, we give to Venus,
The forefinger to Jove, the midst to Saturn,
The ring to Sol, the least to Mercury.

BEN JONSON: Alchemist, i, 1.

Mercy. The seven corporal works of mercy are:—

- (1) To tend the sick.
- (2) To feed the hungry.
- (3) To give drink to the thirsty.
- (4) To clothe the naked.
- (5) To house the homeless.
- (6) To visit the fatherless and the afflicted.
- (7) To bury the dead.

Matt. xxv, 35-40.

Merciless (or Unmerciful) Parliament, The (from February 3rd to June 3rd, 1388). A junto of fourteen tools of Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, which assumed royal prerogatives, and attempted to depose Richard II.

Meridian. Sometimes applied, especially in Scotland, to a noonday dram of spirits.

He received from the hand of the waiter the meridian, which was placed ready at the bar.—SCOTT: Redgumtlet, ch. i.

Merino Sheep (me rē' nō). A Spanish breed of sheep, very valuable for their wool. The word is the Latin majorinus, and may originally have indicated a specially large breed of sheep, or have been the official designation of the overseer of the pastures.

Merit, Order of. This is a British order for distinguished service in all callings. It was founded by Edward VII in 1902, with two classes, civil and military. The Order is limited to 24 members—men and women—and confers no precedence; it is designated by the letters O.M., following the first class of the Order of the Bath and precedes all letters designating membership of other Orders. The badge is a red and blue cross pattee, with a blue medallion in the centre surrounded by a laurel wreath, and bears the words "For Merit"; the ribbon is blue and crimson. Crossed swords are added to the badge for military members.

Merlin. The historical Merlin was a Welsh or British bard, born towards the close of the 5th century, to whom a number of poems have been very doubtfully attributed. He is said to have become bard to King Arthur, and to have lost his reason and perished on the banks of the river after a terrible battle between the Britons and their Romanized compatriots about 570.

His story has been mingled with that of the enchanter Merlin of the Arthurian romances, which, however, proceeds on different lines. This Prince of Enchanters was the son of a damsel seduced by a fiend, but was baptized by Blaise, and so rescued from the power of Satan. He became an adept in necromancy, but was beguiled by the enchantress Nimue, who shut him up in a rock, and later Vivien, the Lady of the Lake, entangled him in a thorn-bush by means of spells, and there he still sleeps, though his voice may sometimes be heard.

He first appears in Nennius (as Ambrosius); Geoffrey of Monmouth wrote the Vita Merlini

(about 1145); this was worked upon by Wace and Robert de Borron, and formed the basis of the English prose romance Merlin, and of most of the Merlin episodes in the Arthurian cycle. See also Spenser's Faerie Queene (III, iii), and Tennyson's Idylls.

Now, though a Mechanist, whose skill
Shames the degenerate grasp of modern science,
Grave Merlin (and belike the more
For practising occult and perilous lore)
Was subject to a freakish will
That sapped good thoughts, or scared them with defiance.

WORDSWORTH: The Egyptian Maid.

The English Merlin. William Lilly (1602-81), the astrologer, who published two tracts under the name of "Merlinus Anglicus" and was the most famous charlatan of his day.

Merlin chair. An invalid's chair, which can be propelled by the hands of the occupant. So called from the inventor, J. J. Merlin (d. 1803).

Mermaid. The popular stories of the mermaid, a fabulous marine creature half woman and half fish—allied to the Siren (g.v.) of classical mythology—probably arose from sailors' accounts of the dugong, a cetacean whose head has a rude approach to the human outline. The mother while suckling her young holds it to her breast with one flipper, as a woman holds her infant in her arm. If disturbed she suddenly dives under water, and tosses up her fish-like tail.

In Elizabethan plays the term is often used for a courtesan. See Massinger's Old Law, iv, 1, Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, iii, 2, etc.

The Mermaid Tavern. The famous meeting-place (in Bread Street, Cheapside) of the wits, literary men, and men about town in the early 17th century. Among those who met there at a sort of early club were Ben Jonson, Sir Walter Raleigh, Beaumont, Fletcher, John Selden, and in all probability Shakespeare.

What things have we seen
Done at the Mermaid! Heard words that have been
So numble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that everyone from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest.

BEAUMONT: Lines to Ben Jonson.

Mermaid's glove. The largest of the British sponges (Halichondria palmata), so called because its branches resemble fingers.

Mermaid's purses. The horny cases of the eggs of the ray, skate, or shark, frequently cast up by the waves on the sea-beach.

Merope (mer'ō pe). One of the Pleiades; dimmer than the rest, because, according to Greek legend, she married a mortal. She was the mother of Glaucus.

Merops' Son. One who thinks he can set the world to rights, but can't. Agitators, demagogues, and Bolsheviks, are sons of Merops. The allusion is to Phaeton, son of Merops, who thought himself able to drive the car of Phœbus, but, in the attempt, nearly set the world on fire.

Merovingian Dynasty (mer ò ving' gí àn). The dynasty of Merovius, a Latin form of Merwig (great warrior), who is said to have ruled over the Franks in the 5th century. The dynasty rose to power under Clovis (d. 511), and gradually gave way before the Mayors of the Palace (q.v.), until in 751 the Merovingians were deposed by Pepin the Short, grandson of Pepin of Herstal.

Merrie England. See MERRY.

Merrow (Irish, muirrhgach). A mermaid, believed by Irish fishermen to forebode a coming storm.

It was rather annoying to Jack that, though living in a place where the merrows were as plenty as lobsters, he never could get a right view of one.—W. B. YEATS: Fairy and Folk Tales, p. 63.

Merrows are of human shape above but from the waist like a fish. The females are attractive, but the males have green teeth, green hair, pig's eyes, and red noses. Fishermen dread to meet them.

Merry. The original meaning is pleasing, delightful; hence, giving pleasure; hence mirthful, joyous.

The old phrase Merrie England (Merry London, etc.) merely signified that these places were pleasant and delightful, not necessarily bubbling over with merriment; and so with the merry month of May.

Thou Saint George shalt called bee,
Saint George of merry England, the signe of victoree.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, I, x, 61.

Thus all through merry Islington

These gambols did he play.

COWPER: John Gilpin.

The phrase merry men, meaning the companions at arms of a knight or outlaw (especially Robin Hood), is really for merry meinie. See MEINIE.

Merry Andrew. A buffoon, jester, or attendant on a quack doctor at fairs. Said by Thomas Hearne (1678-1735)—with no evidence—to derive from Andrew Boorde (c. 1490-1549), physician to Henry VIII, who to his vast learning added great eccentricity. Prior has a poem on "Merry Andrew." Andrew is a common name in old plays for a manservant, as Abigail is for a waiting-woman.

Merry as a cricket, grig. See GRIG.

Merry Dancers. The northern lights, so called from their undulatory motion. The French also call them chèvres dansantes (dancing goats).

Merry Dun of Dover. In Scandinavian folk-tale, an enormous ship which knocked down Calais steeple in passing through the Straits of Dover, while the pennant swept a flock of sheep off Dover cliffs into the sea. The masts were so lofty that a boy who ascended them would grow grey before he could reach deck again.

Merry Greek. See GRIG.

Merry Maidens. The ancient stone circle (of 19 stones) in St. Buryan parish, 5 miles from Penzance, Cornwall. It is 76 ft. in diameter. Also called Rosemodris Circle.

Merry men. See MERRY, above.

Merry Men of Mey. An expanse of broken water which boils like a cauldron in the southern side of the Stroma channel, in the Pentland Firth.

Merry Monarch. Charles II.

Merry Monday. An old name for the day before Shrove Tuesday.

Merrythought. The furcula or wishing-bone in the breast of a fowl; sometimes broken by two persons, when the one who holds the larger portion has his wish, as it is said.

'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all (2 Henry IV, v, 3). It is a sure sign of mirth when the beards of the guests shake with laughter.

To make merry. To be jovial, festive; to make merry over, to treat with amusement or ridicule, to make fun of.

Merse. The south-easterly part of Berwickshire was so called because it was the mere, march, or frontier of England and Scotland. It gives the second half of the title, to the Earl of Wemyss and March.

Merton College. Founded by Walter de Merton (d. 1277), Bishop of Rochester, and Lord High Chancellor in 1264. He was, through this foundation, the originator of the collegiate system still maintained in the older English Universities.

Meru (me' roo). The "Olympus" of the Hindus; a fabulous mountain in the centre of the world, 80,000 leagues high, the abode of Vishnu, and a perfect paradise.

Merveilleuse (mâr vî yers) (Fr., marvellous). The sword of Doolin of Mayence (q.v.). It was so sharp that when placed edge downwards it would cut through a slab of wood without the use of force.

The term is also applied to the dress worn by the fops and ladies of the Directory period in France, who were noted for their extravagance and aping of classical Greek modes.

Mesa. Spanish and Mexican term for grassy table-land.

Meschino. See GUERINO MESCHINO.

Mesmerism (mez' mēr izm). So called from Friedrich Anton Mesmer (1733-1815), of Meersburg, Baden, who introduced his theory of "animal magnetism" into Paris, in 1778. It is the basis or forerunner of hypnotism, the therapeutic employment of which is being increasingly studied by the medical and psychiatric professions.

Mesopotamia (mes ô pot âm' i à) (Gr., the land between the rivers, i.e. the Euphrates and Tigris). The territory bounded by Kurdistan on the N. and NE., the Persian Gulf on the S. and SE., Persia on the E., and Syria and the Arabian Desert on the W. Since World War I—as a consequence of which it was freed from Turkish rule and constituted a separate kingdom—its name has been changed to Irak (q.v.), or Iraq.

The true "Mesopotamia" ring. Something high-sounding and pleasing, but wholly past comprehension. The allusion is to the story of an old woman who told her pastor that she "found great support in that blessed word Mesopotamia."

Mess. The usual meaning to-day is a dirty, untidy state of things, a muddle, a difficulty (to get into a mess); but the word originally signified a portion of food (Lat. missum, mittere, to send; cp. Fr. mets, viands, Ital. messò, a course of a meal; thence it came to mean mixed food—especially for an animal—and so a confusion, medley, jumble.

Another meaning was a small group of persons (usually four) who at banquets sat together and were served from the same dishes. This use gave rise not only to the army and navy mess (used also at the Inns of Court), but to the Elizabethans using it in place of “four” or “a group of four.” Thus, Lyly says, “Foure makes a messe, and we have a messe of masters.” (Mother Bombie, ii, 1), and Shakespeare calls the four sons of Henry his “mess of sons” (2 Henry VI, i, 4); and says (Love’s Labour’s Lost, iv, 3), “You three fools lacked me . . . to make up the mess.”

Messalina (mes à lē’ nà). Wife of the Emperor Claudius of Rome; she was executed by order of her husband in A.D. 48. Her name has become a byword for lasciviousness and incontinency. Catherine II of Russia (1729-96) has sometimes been called The Modern Messalina.

Messiah (me sī’ à), from the Hebrew mashiach, one anointed. It is the title of an expected leader of the Jews who shall deliver the nation from its enemies and reign in permanent triumph and peace. Equivalent to the Greek word Christ, it is applied by Christians to Jesus. Messiah (incorrectly The Messiah) is the title of an oratorio by Handel, first produced in Dublin in 1742.

Mestizo. Spanish-Mexican phrase for a half-breed.

Metals. Metals used to be divided into two classes—Noble, and Base. The Noble, or Perfect, Metals were gold and silver, because they were the only two known that could be not changed or “destroyed” by fire; the remainder were Base, or Imperfect.

The seven metals in alchemy.

Gold, Apollo or the sun.

Silver, Diana or the moon.

Quicksilver, Mercury.

Copper, Venus.

Iron, Mars.

Tin, Jupiter.

Lead, Saturn.

The only metals used in heraldry are or (gold) and argent (silver).

Metamorphic Rocks (met à mōr’ fīk). Sedimentary or eruptive rocks whose original character has been more or less altered by changes beneath the surface of the earth. These include gneiss, mica-schist, clay-slate, marble, and the like, which have become more or less crystalline.

Metaphysics (met à fīz’ icks) (Gr., after-physics, so called because the disciples of Aristotle held that matter or nature should be studied before mind). The science of metaphysics is the consideration of things in the abstract—that is, divested of their accidents, relations, and matter; the philosophy of being and knowing; the theoretical principles forming the basis of any particular science; the philosophy of mind.

Metathesis (met à thē’ sis). A figure of speech in which letters or syllables are transposed, as “You occupew my pie [py],” instead of “You occupy my pew”; daggle-trail for “draggletail,” etc.; the same as a Spoonerism (q.v.).

Methodists. A name given (1729) by a student of Christ Church to the brothers Wesley and their friends, who used to assemble on given evenings for religious conversation, because of the methodical way in which they observed their principles. The word was in use many centuries earlier for those (especially physicians) who attached great importance to method, and the name was at one time applied to the Jesuits, because they were the first to give systematic representations of the method of polemics. Theophilus Gale (1628-78) speaks of a religious sect called “the New Methodists” (Court of the Gentiles).

Primitive Methodists. A secession from the Methodists, led by Hugh Bourne in 1810. They adopted this name because they reverted to the original methods of preaching of the Wesleys.

Methuselah (me’ thū zē lā). Old as Methuselah. Very old indeed, almost incredibly old. He is the oldest man mentioned in the Bible, where we are told (Gen. v, 27) that he died at the age of 969.

Metonic Cycle, The (me ton’ ik). A cycle of nineteen years, at the end of which period the new moons fall on the same days of the year; so-called because discovered by the Greek astronomer, Meton, 432 B.C. In 330 a slight error in it was put right by Calippus, who, to allow for odd hours, laid down that at the end of four cycles (76 years) one day was to be omitted.

Metonymy (me ton’ i mi). The use of the name of one thing for another, as “the Bench” for the magistrates or judges sitting in court, “a silk” for a King’s Counsel, “the bottle” for alcoholic liquor. The word is Greek, meaning a change of name.

Metropolitan. A prelate who has suffragan bishops subject to him. The two metropolitans of England are the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the two of Ireland the archbishops of Armagh and Dublin. The word does not mean the prelate of the metropolis (Gr. meter, mother, polis, city) in a secular sense, but the prelate of a “mother city” in an ecclesiastical sense—i.e. a city which is the mother or ruler of other cities. Thus, the Bishop of London is not a metropolitan, but the Archbishop of Canterbury is metropolitanus et primus totius Angliæ, and the Archbishop of York primus et metropolitanus Angliæ.

In the Greek Church a metropolitan ranks next below a patriarch and next above an archbishop.

Meum and tuum (mē’ ūm, tū’ ūm). That which belongs to me and that which is another’s. Meum is Latin for “what is mine,” and tuum is Latin for “what is thine.” If a man is said not to know the difference between meum and tuum, it is a another way of saying he is a thief.

"Meum est propositum in taberna mori." A famous drinking song usually credited to Walter Map, who died in 1210.

Meum est propositum in taberna mori;
Vinum sit oppositum morientis ori
Ut dicant cum venerint angelorum chori:
Deus sit propitius huic potatori (etc.).

It is my intention to die in a tavern. May wine be placed to my dying lips, that when the choirs of angels shall come they may say, God be merciful to this drinker."

Mews. Stables, but properly a cage for hawks when moulting (O.F. mue, Lat. mūtāre, to change). The word has acquired its present meaning because (in the 17th cent.) the royal stables were built upon the site (now occupied by the National Gallery) where formerly the king's hawks were kept; and the name was transferred from the establishment for hawks to that of horses.

Mexitl, or Mexltli (meks' itl). The principal god of the ancient Mexicans (whence the name of their country), to whom enormous sacrifices, running into many thousands of human beings, were offered at a time. Also called Huitzilopochtli.

Mezzotint, or Mezzo tinto (Ital., medium tint). A process of engraving in which a copper plate is uniformly roughened so as to print a deep black, lights and half-lights being then produced by scraping away the burr; also a print from this, which is usually a good imitation of an Indian-ink drawing.

Micah Rood's Apples. Apples with a spot of red in the heart. The story is that Micah Rood was a prosperous farmer at Franklin, Pa. In 1693 a pedlar with jewellery called at his house, and next day was found murdered under an apple-tree in Rood's orchard. The crime was never brought home to the farmer, but next autumn all the apples of the fatal tree bore inside a red blood-spot, called "Micah Rood's Curse," and the farmer died soon afterwards.

Micawber (mi caw' bā). An incurable optimist; from Dickens's Mr. Wilkins Micawber (David Copperfield), a great speechifier and letter-writer, and projector of bubble schemes sure to lead to fortune, but always ending in grief. Notwithstanding his ill success, he never despaired, but felt certain that something would "turn up" to make his fortune. Having failed in every adventure in the old country, he emigrated to Australia, where he became a magistrate.

Michael, St. The great prince of all the angels and leader of the celestial armies.

And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not.—Rev. xii, 7, 8.

Go, Michael, of celestial armies prince,
And thou, in military prowess next,
Gabriel; lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible; lead forth my armed Saints
By thousands and by millions ranged for fight.
MILTON: Paradise Lost, vi, 44.

His day ("St. Michael and All Angels") is Sept. 29th (see MICHAELMAS), and in the Roman Catholic Church he is also commemorated on May 8th, in honour of his apparition in 492 to a herdsman of Monte Gargano. In the Middle Ages he was looked on as the presiding spirit of the planet Mercury, and bringer to man of the gift of prudence.

The planet Mercury, whose place '
Is nearest to the sun in space,
Is my allotted sphere;
And with celestial ardour swift
I bear upon my hands the gift
Of heavenly prudence here.

LONGFELLOW: Golden Legend, The Miracle Play, in.

In art St. Michael is depicted as a beautiful young man with severe countenance, winged, and clad in either white or armour, bearing a lance and shield, with which he combats a dragon. In the final judgment he is represented with scales, in which he weighs the souls of the risen dead.

St. Michael's chair. It is said that any woman who sits on St. Michael's Chair, Cornwall, will rule the roost as long as she lives.

The Order of St. Michael and St. George. A British order of knighthood, instituted in 1818 (enlarged and extended on four occasions since), and conferred on natural-born British subjects who hold, or have held, high official rank in the Colonies, or as a reward for services in relation to the foreign affairs of the Empire. It is limited to one hundred Knights Grand Cross, three hundred Knights Commanders, and six hundred Companions; and its chapel is in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Michael Angelo. The celebrated painter, born 1474, died 1564, his full name was Michelangelo Buonarroti.

The Michael-Angelo of battle-scenes. Michael-Angelo Cerquozzi (1600-60), a native of Rome, famous for his battle scenes and shipwrecks.

Michel-Ange des Bamboches. Peter van Laar (1613-73), the Dutch painter.

Michael-Angelo of Music. Christoph Willibald von Gluck (1714-87), the German musical composer.

Michael-Angelo of Sculptors. Pierre Puget (1622-94), the French sculptor. Also René Michael Slodtz (1705-64).

Michaelmas Day. September 29th, the Festival of St. Michael and All Angels (see MICHAEL, above), one of the quarter-days when rents are due, and the day when magistrates are elected.

The custom of eating goose at Michaelmas (see also ST. MARTIN'S GOOSE) is many centuries old, and probably arose solely because geese were plentiful and in good condition at this season, and we are told that tenants formerly presented their landlords with one to keep in their good graces. The popular story, however, is that Queen Elizabeth, on her way to Tilbury Fort on September 29th, 1588, dined at the seat of Sir Neville Umfreville, and partook of geese, afterwards calling for a bumper of Burgundy, and giving as a toast, "Death to the Spanish Armada!" Scarcely had she spoken when a messenger announced the destruction of the fleet by a storm. The queen demanded a second bumper, and said, "Henceforth shall a goose commemorate this great victory." This tale is marred by the awkward circumstances that the fleet was dispersed by the winds in July, and the thanksgiving sermon for the victory was preached at St. Paul's on August 20th. Gascoigne, who died 1577, refers to the custom of goose-eating at Michaelmas as common:—At Christmas a capon, at Michaelmas a goose, And somewhat else at New Yere's tide, for feare the lease flies loose.

Miching Malicho (mich'ing māl-i kō).

Oph.: What means this, my lord?

Ham.: Marry, this is Miching Malicho; it means mischief.

Oph.: Belike this show imports the argument of the play. Hamlet, iii, 2.

The meaning of this phrase is not at all certain, but it is usually taken that muching is "skulking" (miche, from O.Fr. muchier, mucier, to hide), and malicho is a form of Span. malhecho, a misdeed, mischief; hence skulking or sneaking mischief. The form we give is that of the First Folio; in the First Quarto the words appear as myching Mallico, and in the Second Quarto munching Mallico.

Michon (mi' shon), according to Cotgrave, is a "block, dunce, dolt, jobbernot, dullard, loggerhead." Michon, mikel, and Cousin Michel, are the Italian miccio, an ass.

Mickey Mouse, one of the most famous and popular characters of Walt Disney's animated cartoons. Steamboat Willie (1928) starring Mickey Mouse was the first animated cartoon in colours.

Mickleton Jury. A corruption of mickle-tourn (magnus turnus), i.e. the jury of court leets, which were visited at Easter and Michaelmas by the county sheriffs in their tourns. In Anglo-Saxon times the great council of the kings was known as the Mickle moot (great assembly).

Microcosm (mi krō kozm) (Gr., little world). So man is called by Paracelsus. The ancients considered the world (see MACROCOSM) as a living being; the sun and moon being its two eyes, the earth its body, the ether its intellect, and the sky its wings. When man was looked on as the world in miniature, it was thought that the movements of the world and of man corresponded, and if one could be ascertained, the other could be easily inferred; hence arose the system of astrology, which professed to interpret the events of a man's life by the corresponding movements, etc., of the stars. Cp. DIAPASON.

Micronesia (mi krō nē' zhā). The name given to the groups of small Pacific islands north of the Equator and east of the Philippines, including the Marianas, the Caroline and the Marshall Islands.

Midas (mi' dās). A legendary king of Phrygia who requested of the gods that everything he touched might be turned to gold. His request was granted, but as his food became gold the moment he touched it, he prayed the gods to take their favour back. He was then ordered to bathe in the Pactolus, and the river ever after rolled over golden sands.

Another story told of him is, that when appointed to judge a musical contest between Apollo and Pan, he gave judgment in favour of the satyr; whereupon Apollo in contempt gave the king a pair of ass's ears. Midas hid them under his Phrygian cap; but his barber discovered them, and, not daring to mention the matter, dug a hole and relieved his mind by whispering in it "Midas has ass's ears," then covering it up again. Budæus gives a different version. He says that Midas kept spies to tell him everything that transpired throughout his kingdom, and the proverb "kings have long arms" was changed to "Midas has long ears."

A parallel of this tale is told of Portzmach, king of a part of Brittany. He had all the barbers of his kingdom put to death, lest they should announce to the public that he had the ears of a horse. An intimate friend was found willing to shave him, after swearing profound secrecy; but not able to contain himself, he confided his secret to the sands of a river bank. The reeds of this river were used for pan-pipes and haut-bois, which repeated the words "Portzmach—King Portzmach has horse's ears."

Midden. The midden or refuse heaps of prehistoric and other ancient encampments have yielded a great amount of archaeological information as to the habits and state of civilization of the people who made them.

Better marry over the midden than over the moor. Better seek a wife among your neighbours whom you know than among strangers of whom you know nothing.

Ilka cock crawls loudest on its ain midden. In English, "Every cock crows loudest on his own dunghill."

Kitchen midden. See KITCHEN.

Middle. Middle Ages. The period from about 476 (the fall of the Roman Empire) to 1453 (the capture of Constantinople by the Turks). It varies a little with almost every nation; in France it is usually dated from Clovis to Louis XI (481 to 1461); in England, from the Heptarchy to the accession of Henry VII (409 to 1485). The earlier part of this time (to about 1200) is usually referred to as the Dark Ages (q.v.).

Middle Kingdom is the Chinese term for China proper, the eighteen inner provinces; anciently for the Chinese Empire as being situated in the centre of the world. The Middle Empire in Egyptian history is the great period from 2200 to 1690 B.C. comprising the XI to the XIV Dynasties.

Middlesex. The territory of the Middle Saxons—that is, between Essex, Sussex, and Wessex.

Midgard. In Scandinavian mythology, the abode of the first pair, from whom sprang the human race. It was made of the eyebrows of Ymer, and was joined to Asgard by the rainbow bridge called Bifrost.

Asgard is the abode of the celestials.

Utgard is the abode of the giants.

Midgard is between the two—better than Utgard, but inferior to Asgard.

Mid-Lent Sunday. The fourth Sunday in Lent. It is called dominica refecionis (Refection Sunday), because the first lesson is the banquet given by Joseph to his brethren, and the gospel of the day is the miraculous feeding of the five thousand. It is the day on which sinnet cakes (q.v.) are eaten, and it is also called Mothering Sunday (q.v.).

Midnight Oil. Late hours.

Burning the midnight oil. Sitting up late, especially when engaged on literary work.

Smells of the midnight oil. See IT SMELLS OF THE LAMP under LAMP.

Midrash (mid' rash). The rabbinical investigation into and interpretation of the Old Testament writings, which began when the Temple at Jerusalem was destroyed and was committed to writing in a large number of commentaries between the 2nd and 11th centuries A.D. The three ancient Midrashim (Mechilta, Sifre, and Sifra—first half of the 2nd century) contain both the Halachah and the Haggadah (q.v.).

Midsummer. The week or so round about the summer solstice (June 21st). Midsummer Day is June 24th, St. John the Baptist's Day, and one of the quarter days.

Midsummer ale. Festivities which used to take place in rural districts at this season. Here Ale has the same extended meaning as in "Church-ale" (q.v.).

Midsummer madness. Olivia says to Malvolio, "Why, this is very midsummer madness" (Twelfth Night, iii, 4). The reference is to the rabies of dogs, which was supposed to be brought on by midsummer heat. People who were a bit inclined to be mad used to be said to have but a mile to midsummer.

Midsummer men. Orpine or Live-long, a plant of the Sedum tribe; so called because it used to be set in pots or shells on midsummer eve, and hung up in the house to tell damsels whether their sweethearts were true or not. If the leaves bent to the right, it was a sign of fidelity; if to the left, the "true-love's heart was cold and faithless."

Midsummer moon. "'Tis midsummer moon with you"; you are stark mad. Madness was supposed to be affected by the moon, and to be aggravated by summer heat; so it naturally follows that the full moon at midsummer is the time when madness would be most outrageous.

What's this midsummer moon?

Is all the world gone a-madding?

DRYDEN: Amphitryon, iv, 1.

Midsummer Night's Dream. A. Shakespeare's comedy (acted 1595, first printed 1600) is indebted to Chaucer's Knights' Tale for the Athenian setting, and to Ovid's Metamorphoses for the Pyramus and Thisbe interlude; but its airy grace and the ingenious inter-weaving of the four separate threads are all Shakespeare's own.

Midway Islands are a cluster of islands in the North Pacific, about 1200 miles NW. of Hawaii and forming part of that Territory. The Japanese suffered a heavy naval defeat near the islands in June, 1942.

Midwife (A.S., mid, with; wif, woman). The nurse who is with the mother in her labour.

Midwife of men's thoughts. So Socrates termed himself; and, as Mr. Grote observes, "No other man ever struck out of others so many sparks to set light to original thought." Out of his intellectual school sprang Plato and the Dialectic system; Euclid and the Megaric; Aristippus and the Cyrenaic; Antisthenes and the Cynic.

Mihrab. See KEBLAH.

Mikado (mik à 'dō) (Jap. mi, exalted; kado, gate or door). The title of the Emperor of Japan (cp. SHOGUN).

Mike. To mike, or to do a mike. To idle away one's time, pretending to be waiting for a job, or just hanging about and avoiding one. The word may be from miche, to skulk (see MICHING MALICHO). More recently mike has been a short name for the microphone.

Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher [truant loiterer]?—1 Henry IV, ii, 4.

Milan (mi län'). The English form of Milano, the capital city of Lombardy, in Latin Mediolanum, in the middle of the plain, i.e. the Plain of Lombardy. In the Middle Ages Milan was famous for its steel, used for making swords, chain armour, etc.

The edict of Milan. Proclaimed by Constantine, after the conquest of Italy (313), to secure to Christians the restitution of their civil and religious rights.

The Milan Decree. A decree made by Napoleon, dated "Milan, Dec. 27th, 1807," declaring "the whole British Empire to be in a state of blockade, and forbidding all countries either from trading with Great Britain or from even using an article of British manufacture."

This decree was killing the goose which laid the golden eggs, for England was the best customer of the very countries thus restricted from dealing with her.

Milanion. See ATALANTA'S RACE.

Mile. A measure of length; in the British Empire and the United States, 1,760 yd.; so called from Lat. mille, a thousand, the Roman lineal measure being 1,000 paces, or about 1,680 yds. The old Irish and Scottish miles were a good deal longer than the standard English, that in Ireland (still in use in country parts) being 2,240 yd.

The Nautical or Geographical Mile, is supposed to be one minute of a great circle of the earth; but as the earth is not a true sphere the length of a minute is variable, so a mean length—6,080 ft. (2,026 yd. 2 ft.)—has been fixed by the British Admiralty. The Geographical Mile varies slightly with different nations, so there is a further International Geographical Mile, which is invariable at one-fiftieth of a degree of the earth's equator, equal to about 4.61 statute miles of 5,280 ft.

Milesian Fables (mī lē' zi àn). A Greek collection of witty but obscene short stories by Antonius Diogenes, and compiled by Aristides, of Miletus (2nd cent. B.C.), whence the name. They were translated into Latin by Sidenna about the time of the civil wars of Marius and Sylla, and were greedily read by the luxurious Sybarites, but are no longer extant. Similar stories however, are still sometimes called Milesian Tales.

Milesians. Properly, the inhabitants of Miletus; but the name has been given to the ancient Irish because of the legend that two sons of Milesius, a fabulous king of Spain, conquered the country and repeople it after exterminating the Firbolgs—the aborigines.

My family, by my father's side, are all the true old Milesians, and related to the O'Flahertys, and O'Shaughnesses, and the M'Lauchlins, the O'Donnaghans, O'Callaghans, O'Geogaghans, and all the thick blood of the nation; and I myself am an O'Brallaghan, which is the oldest of them all—MACKLIN: Love à la Mode.

Milk, To. Slang for to get money out of somebody in an underhand way; also, to plunder one's creditors, and (in mining) to exhaust the veins of ore after selling the mine.

A land of milk and honey. One abounding in all good things, or of extraordinary fertility. Joel iii, 18, speaks of "the mountains flowing with milk and honey." Figuratively used to denote the blessings of heaven.

Jerusalem the golden,

With milk and honey blest.

Milk and water. Insipid, without energy or character, baby-pap (of literature, etc.);

Milk teeth. The first, temporary, teeth of a child.

The milk of human kindness. Sympathy, compassion. The phrase is from Macbeth, i, 5

... yet I do fear thy nature

It is too full o' th' milk of human kindness.

So that accounts for the milk in the coconut! Said when a sudden discovery of the reason for some action or state of things is made.

To cry over spilt milk. See CRY.

Milk-run. R.A.F. and A.A.F. expression during World War II for any sortie flown regularly day after day, or a sortie against an easy target on which inexperienced pilots could be used with impunity.

Milksop. An effeminate person; one without energy, one under petticoat government. The allusion is to young, helpless children, who are fed on pap.

Milky Way. A great circle of stars entirely surrounding the heavens, apparently so crowded together that they look to the naked eye like a "way" or stream of faint "milky" light. See GALAXY.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy—that Milky Way,
Thick, nightly, as a circling zone, thou seest
Powdered with stars.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, vii, 577, etc.

Mill. To fight, or a fight. It is the same word as the mill that grinds flour (from Lat. molere, to grind). Grinding was anciently performed by pulverizing with a stone or pounding with the hand. To mill is to beat with the fist, as persons used to beat corn with a stone.

To mill about is to move aimlessly in a circle, like a herd of cattle.

The mill cannot grind with water that is past. An old proverb, given in Herbert's Collection (1639). It implies both that one must not miss one's opportunities and that it is no good crying over spilt milk.

And a proverb haunts my mind,

As a spell is cast;

"The mill cannot grind

With the water that is past."

SARAH DOUDNEY: Lesson of the Watermill.

The mills of God grind slowly. Retribution may be delayed, but it is sure to overtake the wicked. The Adagia of Erasmus puts it, Sero moluit deorum mola, and the sentiment is to be found in many authors, ancient and modern. The mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small;

Though with patience He stands waiting, with exactness He grinds all. LONGFELLOW: Retribution.

Millennium (mi len' i um). A thousand years (Lat.,  mille annus). In Rev. xx, 2, it is said that an angel bound Satan a thousand years, and in verse 4 we are told of certain martyrs who will come to life again, and "reign with Christ a thousand years." "This," says St. John, "is the first resurrection"; and this is what is meant by the millennium.

Millenarians, or Chiliasts, is the name applied to an early Christian sect who held this opinion strongly. In the 19th century belief in this doctrine was revived by various sects such as the Plymouth Brethren.

Millennial Church. See SHAKERS.

Miller. A Joe Miller. A stale jest. A certain John Mottley compiled a book of facetiæ in 1739, which he, without permission, entitled Joe Miller's Jests, from Joseph Miller (1684-1738), a popular comedian of the day who could neither read nor write. A stale jest is called a "Joe Miller," implying that it is stolen from Mottley's compilation.

A man must serve his time to every trade

Save censure—critics all are ready made,

Take hackney'd jokes from Miller, got by rote,

With just enough of learning to misquote . . .

Care not for feeling—pass your proper jest,

And stand a critic, hated yet caress'd.

BYRON: English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

More water glideth by the mill than wots the miller of (Titus Andronicus, ii, 1). Many things are done in a house which the master and mistress never dream of.

To drown the miller. To put too much water into spirits, or tea. The idea is that the supply of water is so great that even the miller, who uses a water wheel, is drowned with it.

To give someone to the miller. To engage him in conversation till enough people have gathered round to set upon the victim with stones, dirt, garbage, and all the arms which haste supplied a mob with (see MILL).

Miller's thumb. A small freshwater fish four or five inches long, Cottus gobio, also called the Bullhead, from its large head.

To put the miller's eye out. To make broth or pudding so thin that even a miller's eye would be puzzled to find the flour.

Lumps of unleavened flour in bread are sometimes called miller's eyes.

Millerites. Followers of William Miller of Massachusetts (1782-1849) who in 1831 preached that the end of the world would come in 1843—now called Adventists.

Milliner. A corruption of Milaner; so called from Milan, in Italy, which at one time gave the law to Europe in all matters of taste, dress, and elegance.

Nowadays one nearly always means a woman when one speaks of a milliner, but it was not always so; Ben Jonson, in Every Man in his Humour, i, 3, speaks of a "milliner's wife," and the French have still une modiste and un modiste.

Man-Milliner. An effeminate fellow, or one who busies himself over trifles.

The Morning Herald sheds tears of joy over the fashionable virtues of the rising generation, and finds that we shall make better man-milliners, better lacqueys, and better courtiers than ever.—HAZLITT: Political Essays (1814).

Millstone. Hard as the nether millstone. Unfeeling, obdurate. The lower or "nether" of the two millstones is firmly fixed and very hard; the upper stone revolves round it on a shaft, and the corn, running down a tube inserted in the upper stone, is ground by the motion of the upper stone upon the lower one.

The millstones of Montisci. They produce flour of themselves, whence the proverb, "Grace comes from God, but millstones from Montisci." (Boccaccio: Decameron, day viii, novel 3.)

To look (or see) through a millstone. To be wonderfully sharp-sighted.

Then . . . since your eyes are so sharp that you can not only look through a millstone, but cleane through the minde . . . —LYLY: Euphues.

To see through a millstone as well as most means that in a complicated problem one can see as reasonable a solution as the most clear-sighted person, though that may not be far.

To weep millstones. Not weep at all.

Bid Glos'ter think on this, and he will weep—
Aye, millstones, as he lessoned us to weep.

SHAKESPEARE: Richard III, i, 6.

Millwood, Sarah. See BARNWELL.

Milo (mī' lō). A celebrated Greek athlete of Crotona (q.v.) in the late 6th cent. B.C. It is said that he carried through the stadium at Olympia a heifer four years old, and ate the whole of it afterwards. When old he attempted to tear in two an oak-tree, but the parts closed upon his hands, and while held fast he was devoured by wolves. See POLYDAMUS.

Milton. "Milton," says Dryden, in the preface to his Fables, "was the poetical son of Spenser. . . . Milton has acknowledged to me that Spenser was his original."

Milton of Germany. Friedrich G. Klopstock (1724-1803), author of The Messiah (1773). Coleridge says he is "a very German Milton indeed."

Mimosa (mī mō' zà). Niebuhr says the Mimosa "droops its branches whenever anyone approaches it, seeming to salute those who retire under its shade." The name reflects this notion, as the plant was thought to mimic the motions of animals, as does the Sensitive Plant.

Mince Pies at Christmas time are said to have been emblematical of the manger in which our Saviour was laid. The paste over the "offering" was made in form of a cratch or hay-rack. Southey speaks of—

Old bridges dangerously narrow, and angles in them like the corners of an English mince-pie, for the foot-passengers to take shelter in.—Esprinella's Letters, III. 384 (1807)

Mince pies. Rhyming slang for "the eyes."

To make mincemeat of. Utterly to demolish; to shatter to pieces. Mincemeat is meat minced, i.e. cut up very fine.

Mincing Lane (London). Called in the 13th century Menechinelane, Monechenlane, etc., and in the time of Henry VIII Mynchyn Lane. The name is from A.S. mynechem, a nun (fem. of munuc, monk), and the street is probably so called from the tenements held there by the nuns of St. Helen's, in Bishopsgate Street. Mincing Lane is the centre of the tea trade, for which it is often used as a generic term.

Mind. Mind your own business; mind your eye, etc. See these words.

To have a mind for it. To desire to possess it; to wish for it. Mind meaning desire, intention, is by no means uncommon: "I mind to tell him plainly what I think." (2 Henry VI, iv, 1.) "I shortly mind to leave you." (2 Henry VI, iv, 1.)

Minden Boys. The 20th Foot, now the Lancashire Fusiliers; so called from their noted bravery at Minden, Prussia, Aug. 1st, 1759, when the British and Hanoverian army under Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick defeated the French.

Minerva (mī nēr' vā). The Roman goddess of wisdom and patroness of the arts and trades, fabled to have sprung, with a tremendous battle-cry, fully armed from the head of Jupiter. She is identified with the Greek Athene, and was one of the three chief deities, the others being Jupiter and Juno. She is represented as grave and majestic, clad in a helmet and with drapery over a coat of mail, and bearing the ægis on her breast. The most famous statue of this goddess was by Phidias, and was anciently one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

Invita Minerva. Against the grain. Thus, Charles Kean acted comedy invita Minerva, his forte lying another way. Sir Philip Sidney attempted the Horatian metres in English verse invita Minerva. The phrase is from Horace's Ars Poetica, l, 385—Tu nihil invita dices faciesve Minerva (Beware of attempting anything for which nature has not fitted you).

The Minerva Press. A printing establishment in Leadenhall Street, London, famous in the late 18th century for its trashy, ultra-sentimental novels, which were characterized by complicated plots, and the labyrinths of difficulties into which the hero and heroine got involved before they could be married.

Miniature. Originally, a rubrication or a small painting in an illuminated MS., which was done with minium or red lead. Hence, the word came to express any small portrait or picture on vellum or ivory; but it is in no way connected with the Latin minor or minimus.

Minimalist is a term applied in Russian politics to a less radical member of the Social Revolutionary party.

Minims (Lat. Fratres Minimi, least of the brethren). A term of self-abasement assumed by a mendicant order founded by St. Francis of Paula, in 1453; they went bare-footed, and wore a coarse, black woollen stuff, fastened with a woollen girdle, which they never put off, day or night. The order of St. Francis of Assisi had already engrossed the "humble" title of Fratres Minores (inferior brothers). The superior of the minims is called corrector.

Minister. Literally, an inferior person, in opposition to magister, a superior. One is connected with the Latin minus, and the other with magis. Our Lord says, "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister," where the antithesis is well preserved; and Gibbon mentions—a multitude of cooks, and inferior ministers, employed in the service of the kitchens.—Decline and Fall, ch. xxxi.

The minister of a church is a man who serves the parish or congregation; and the minister of the Crown is the sovereign's or state's servant.

Florimond de Remond, speaking of Albert Babinot, one of the disciples of Calvin, says, "He was a student of the Institutes, read at the hall of the Equity school in Poitiers, and was called la Ministerie." Calvin, in allusion thereto, used to call him "Mr. Minister," whence not only Babinot but all the other clergy of the Calvinistic Church were called ministers.

Minnehaha (min e ha' ha) (Laughing-water). The lovely daughter of the old arrow-maker of the Dakotahs, and wife of Hiawatha in Longfellow's poem. She died of famine.

Minnesingers (min' e sing erz). Minstrels. The lyric poets of 12th- to 14th-century Germany were so called, because the subject of their lyrics was minne-sang (love-ditty). The chief minnesingers were Heinrich von Ofterdingen, Wolfram von Eschenbach, Walther von der Vogelweide, and (the earliest) Heinrich von Velecke. All of them were men of noble birth, and they were succeeded by the Meistersingers (q.v.).

Minoan. See MINOS.

Minories (min' ô riz) (London). So called from the Abbey of the Minorettes of St. Mary of the Order of St. Clare which, till the Dissolution of the Monasteries, stood on the site.

Minorities, or Minors. See FRANCISCANS.

Minos (mi' nos). A legendary king and law-giver of Crete, made at death supreme judge of the lower world, before whom all the dead appeared to give an account of their stewardship, and to receive the reward of their deeds. He was the husband of Pasiphaë and the owner of the labyrinth constructed by Dædalus. From his name we have the adjective Minoan, pertaining to Crete: the Minoan period is the Cretan bronze age, roughly about 2500-1200 B.C.

Minotaur (min' ô tôr). A mythical monster with the head of a bull and the body of a man, fabled to have been the offspring of Pasiphaë and a bull that was sent to her by Poseidon. Minos kept it in his labyrinth and fed it on human flesh, 7 youths and 7 maidens being sent as tribute from Athens every year for the purpose. Theseus slew this monster.

Minstrel. Originally, one who had some official duty to perform (Lat. ministerialis), but quite early in the Middle Ages restricted to one whose duty it was to entertain his employer with music, story-telling, juggling, etc.; hence a travelling gleeman and entertainer.

Mint. The name of the herb is from Lat. menth (Gr. mintha), so called from Minthe, daughter of Cocytus, and a favourite of Pluto. This nymph was metamorphosed by Pluto's wife (Proserpine) out of jealousy, into the herb called after her name. The fable means that mint is a capital medicine. Minthe was a favourite of Pluto, or death, that is, was sick and on the point of death; but was changed into the herb mint, that is, was cured thereby.

Could Pluto's queen, with jealous fury storm

And Minthe to a fragrant herb transform? OVID.

Mint sling. A mixed drink found in the U.S.A. as early as 1804.

The Mint, a place where money is coined, gets its name from A.S. mynet, representing Lat. moneta, money.

Minute. A minute of time (one-sixtieth part of an hour) is so called from the mediæval Latin pars minuta prima, which, in the old system of sexagesimal fractions, denoted one-sixtieth part of the unit. In the same way, in Geometry, etc., a minute is one-sixtieth part of a degree.

A minute of a speech, meeting, etc., is a rough draft taken down in minute or small writing, to be afterwards engrossed, or written larger. It is from the Fr. minute.

Minute gun. A signal of distress at sea, or a gun fired at the death of a distinguished individual; so called because a minute elapses between the discharges.

Minute-men. Men who are ready to turn out and fight at a minute's notice. The expression was first generally used in connexion with the Connecticut farmers who fought against the British in 1775.

Minute (mī nūt'), from the same Latin word, describes something very small.

Miocene (mī' ô sên). The geological period immediately preceding the Pliocene, when the mastodon, dinotherium, protohippus and other creatures flourished.

Miramolin. The title in the Middle Ages of the Emperor of Morocco.

Mirror. Alasnam's mirror. The "touchstone of virtue," showed if the lady beloved was chaste as well as beautiful. (Arabian Nights; Prince Zeyn Alasnam.)

Cambuscan's mirror. Sent to Cambuscan by the King of Araby and Ind; it warned of the approach of ill fortune, and told if love was returned. (Chaucer: Canterbury Tales; The Squire's Tale.)

Lao's mirror reflected the mind and its thoughts, as an ordinary mirror reflects the outward seeming. (Goldsmith: Citizen of the World, xlv.)

Merlin's magic mirror, given by Merlin to King Ryence. It informed the king of treason, secret plots, and projected invasions. (Spenser: Faerie Queene, iii, 2.)

Reynard's wonderful mirror. This mirror existed only in the brain of Master Fox; he told the queen lion that whoever looked in it could see what was done a mile off. The wood of the frame was not subject to decay, being made of the same block as King Crampart's magic horse. (Reynard the Fox, ch. xii.)

Vulcan's mirror showed the past, the present, and the future. Sir John Davies tells us that Cupid gave it to Antinous, and Antinous gave it to Penelope, who saw therein "the court of Queen Elizabeth."

The Mirror for Magistrates. A large collection of poems, published 1555-59, by William Baldwin, George Ferrers, and many others, with an "Induction" (1563) by Thomas Sackville. It contained in metrical form biographical accounts of the Falls of Princes. It was much extended in four later editions up to 1587.

The Mirror of Human Salvation. See SPECULUM, etc.

The Mirror of Knighthood. One of the books in Don Quixote's library, a Spanish romance (Cavallero del Febo, "The Knight of the Sun"), one of the Amadis group. It was at one time very popular.

The barber, taking another book, said, "This is the Mirror of Knighthood."—Pt. 1, bk. i, 6.

Butler calls Hudibras "the Mirror of Knighthood" (bk. i, 15).

Mirza (mēr' zā) (Pers., royal prince). The term is used in two ways by the Persians; when prefixed to a surname it is simply a title of honour: but when annexed to the surname, it means a prince of the blood royal.

Miscreant means a false believer. (Fr., mis-crédence.) A term first applied to the Mohammedans, who, in return, call Christians infidels, and associate with the word all that we mean by "miscreants."

Mise (mēz) (O.Fr., expenses), means an honorarium, especially that given by the people of Wales to a new Prince of Wales on his entrance upon his principality, or by the people of the county palatine of Chester on change of an Earl (the Prince of Wales is Earl of Chester). At Chester a mise-book is kept, in which every town and village is rated to this honorarium.

Littleton (Dict.) says the usual sum is £500.

Mise en scène (Fr., setting on stage). The stage setting of a play, including the scenery, properties, etc., and the general arrangement of the piece. Also used metaphorically.

Misère (mi zâr) (Fr., misery, poverty). In solo whist and some other card games the declaration made when the caller undertakes to lose every trick.

Miserere (miz e rē' re). The fifty-first psalm is so called because its opening words are Miserere mei Deus (Have mercy upon me, O God. See NECK-VERSE). One of the evening services of Lent is called miserere, because this penitential psalm is sung, after which a sermon is delivered. The under side of a folding seat in choir-stalls is called a miserere, or, more properly, a misericord; when turned up it forms a ledge-seat sufficient to rest the aged in a kneeling position.

Misers. The most renowned are:—

Baron Aguilar or Ephraim Lopes Pereira d'Aguilar (1740-1802), born at Vienna and died at Islington, worth £200,000.

Daniel Dancer (1716-94). His sister lived with him, and was a similar character, but died before him, and he left his wealth to the widow of Sir Henry Tempest, who nursed him in his last illness.

Sir Harvey Elwes, who died worth £250,000, but never spent more than £110 a year. His sister-in-law inherited £100,000, but actually starved herself to death, and her son John (1714-89), M.P., an eminent brewer in Southwark, never bought any clothes, never suffered his shoes to be cleaned, and grudged every penny spent in food.

Thomas Guy, founder of Guy's Hospital (q.v.).

William Jennings (1701-97), a neighbour and friend of Elwes, died worth £200,000. See HARPAGON.

Mishna (mish' nā) (Heb., repetition or instruction). The collection of moral precepts, traditions, etc., forming the basis of the Talmud; the second or oral law (see GEMARA). It is divided into six parts: (1) agriculture; (2) Sabbaths, fasts, and festivals; (3) marriage and divorce; (4) civil and penal laws; (5) sacrifices; (6) holy persons and things.

Misnomers. In English nomenclature we have many words and short phrases that can be called "misnomers"; some of these have arisen through pure ignorance (and when once a useful word has been adopted and taken to our bosoms nothing—not even conviction of etymological errors—will eradicate it), some through confusion of ideas or the taking of one thing for another, and some through the changes that time brings about. Caigut, for instance, was in all probability, at one time made from the intestines of a cat, and now that sheep, horses, asses, etc., but never cats, are used for the purpose the name still remains.

A large number of these "misnomers" will be found scattered throughout this book (see especially CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE, GERMAN SILVER, HONEYDEW, HUMBLE PIE, INDIANS (AMERICAN), JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, MEERSCHAUM, MOTHER OF PEARL, POMPEY'S PILLAR, SAND-BLIND, SLUG-HORN, VENTRILOQUEISM, WOLF'S-BANE, and WORMWOOD); and we give a few more below:—

Black beetles are neither black nor beetles; their alternative name, cockroach, is from the Span. cucaracha.

Blacklead is plumbago or graphite, a form of carbon, and has no lead in its composition. See under LEAD.

Blind worms are no more blind than moles are; they have very quick and brilliant eyes, though somewhat small.

Brazilian grass does not come from Brazil or even grow in Brazil, nor is it a grass. It consists of strips of a palm-leaf (Chamerops argentea), and is chiefly imported from Cuba.

Burgundy pitch is not pitch, nor is it manufactured or exported from Burgundy. The best is a resinous substance prepared from common frankincense, and brought from Hamburg; but by far the larger quantity is a mixture of resin and palm oil.

China, as a name for porcelain, gives rise to the contradictory expressions British china, Sèvres china, Dresden china, Dutch china, Chelsea china, etc.; like wooden or iron milestones, brass shoe-horns, coppers for our bronze coinage, etc.

Dutch clocks are not of Dutch but German (Deutsch) manufacture.

Elements. Fire, air, earth, and water, still often called "the four elements," are not elements at all.

Forlorn hope (q.v.) is not etymologically connected with hope, though the term is usually employed in connexion with almost hopeless enterprises. The actual derivation is the Dutch verloren houp, a lost troop.

Galvanized iron is not galvanized. It is simply iron coated with zinc, and this is done by dipping the iron into molten zinc.

Guernsey lily (Nerine or Imbrofia sarniensis) is not a native of Guernsey but of Japan and South Africa. It was discovered by Kämpfer in Japan, and the ship which was bringing specimens of the new plant to Europe was wrecked on the coast of Guernsey; some of the bulbs that were washed ashore took root and germinated, hence the misnomer.

Guinea-pigs (q.v.) have no connexion with the pig family, nor do they come from Guinea.

Honeysuckle. So named because of the old but entirely erroneous idea that bees extracted honey therefrom. The honeysuckle is useless to the bee.

Indian ink comes from China, not from India.

Rice paper is not made from rice, but from the pith of the Formosan plant, Aralia papyrifera, or hollow plant, so called because it is hollow when the pith has been pushed out.

Running the gauntlet (see GAUNTLET) has nothing to do with gauntlets (gloves), though these may be used in the process.

Salt of lemon is in reality potassium acid oxalate, or potassium quadroxalate.

Silver paper, in which chocolates, etc., are sometimes wrapped, is not, of course, made from silver. It is usually composed of tin-foil.

Slow-worm. Not so called because it is slow; the first syllable is corrupted from slay and it was called the slay-worm (= serpent) from the idea that this perfectly harmless creature was venomous.

Titmouse. Nothing to do with mouse, though the erroneous plural titmice—has now probably come to stay. The second syllable represents A.S. mase, used of several small birds. Tit is Scandinavian, and also implies "small," as in titbit.

Tonquin beans. A geographical blunder, for they are the seeds, the Dipteryx odorata, from Tonka, in Guiana, not Tonquin, in Asia.

Turkeys do not come from Turkey, but North America, through Spain, or India. The French call them "dindon," i.e. d'Inde or coq d'Inde, a term equally incorrect.

Turkey rhubarb neither grows in Turkey, nor is it imported from Turkey. It grows in the great mountain chain between Tartary and Siberia, and is a Russian monopoly.

Turkish baths are not of Turkish origin though they were introduced from the Near East, popularly associated with Turkish rule and customs. The correct name of Hammam was commonly used in England in the 17th century, and for many years there was a Hummum's Hotel in Covent Garden on the site of a 17th-century Turkish Bath.

Whalebone is no bone at all, nor does it possess any properties of bone. It is a substance attached to the upper jaw of the whale, and serves to strain the algæ and small life from the water which the creature takes up in large mouthfuls.

Misprision. (Fr. mépris). Concealment, neglect of; in law, an offence bordering on a capital offence.

Misprision of felony. Neglecting to reveal a felony when known.

Misprision of treason. Neglecting to disclose or purposely concealing a treasonable design.

Misrule, Feast of. See KING OF MISRULE.

Miss, Mistress, Mrs. (masteress, lady-master). Miss used to be written Mis, and is the first syllable of Mistress; Mrs. is the contraction of mistress, called Mis'ess. So late as the reign of George II unmarried women used to be styled Mrs., as, Mrs. Lepel, Mrs. Bellenden, Mrs. Blount, all unmarried women. (See Pope's Letters.)

Mistress was originally an honourable term for a sweetheart or lover—"Mistress mine, where are you roaming". It has since come to mean a woman who lives with a man as his wife but without being so.

Mistress Roper. The Marines, or any one of them; so called by the regular sailors, because they handle the ropes as unhandily as girls.

The mistress of the night. The tuberose is so called because it emits its strongest fragrance after sunset.

In the language of flowers, the tuberose signifies "the pleasures of love."

The mistress of the world. Ancient Rome was so called, because all the known world gave her allegiance.

To kiss the mistress. To make a good hit, to shoot right into the eye of the target; in bowls to graze another bowl with your own; the Jack used to be called the "mistress," and when one ball just touches another it is said "to kiss it."

Rub on, and kiss the mistress.—Troilus and Cressida, iii, 2.

Miss. To fail to hit, or—in such phrases as I miss you now you are gone—to lack, to feel the want of.

A miss is as good as a mile. A failure is a failure be it ever so little, and is no more be it ever so great; a narrow escape is an escape. An old form of the phrase was An inch in a miss is as good as an ell.

The missing link. A popular term for the hypothetical being that is supposed, according to the theory of evolution, to bridge the gap between man and the anthropoid apes. Haeckel held it to be Pithecanthropus erectus; but scientists are not agreed, either on this or on the number of "missing links" there may be. Professor Woodward, in a lecture on the Rhodesian skull discovered at Broken Hill in 1921, said—

The Rhodesian man was one of the links in the chain of which many species would be found. It would be a long time before a connecting series of missing links would be discovered which would be convincing.

Mississippi Bubble. The French "South Sea Scheme," and equally disastrous. It was projected by the Scots financier, John Law (1671-1729), and had for its object the payment of the National Debt of France, which amounted to 208 millions sterling, on being granted the exclusive trade of Louisiana, on the banks of the Mississippi. Inaugurated in 1717, it was taken up by the French Government, and in 1719 the shares were selling at forty times their original value. But in 1720 the "bubble" burst, France was almost ruined, Law fled to Russia, and his estates were confiscated.

Missouri (mis oo' ri, rá miz oo'). I'm from Missouri is equivalent to "I'm hard-headed and you have to show me" or "I won't believe anything without proof." First used in a speech in 1899 by Willard D. Vandiver, Congressman from Missouri.

Missouri Compromise. An arrangement whereby Missouri was in 1820 admitted to the Union as a Slave State, but that at the same time there should be no slavery in the state north of 36° 30'.

Mistletoe (mis' èl tò) (A.S. mistiltan; mist, being both basil and mistletoe, and tan, a twig). The plant grows as a parasite on various trees, especially the apple tree, and was held in great veneration by the Druids when found on the oak. Shakespeare calls it "the baleful mistletoe" (Titus Andronicus, ii, 3), perhaps in allusion to the Scandinavian legend that it was with an arrow made of mistletoe that Balder (q.v.) was slain, but probably with reference either to the popular but erroneous notion that mistletoe berries are poisonous, or to the connexion of the plant with the human sacrifices of the Druids. It is in all probability for this latter reason that mistletoe is rigorously excluded from church decorations.

Kissing under the mistletoe. An English Christmas-time custom, dating back at least to the early 17th century. The correct procedure, now rarely observed, is that as the young man kisses a girl under the mistletoe he should pluck a berry, and that when the last berry is gone there should be no more kissing.

The Mistletoe Bough. This old song is about the daughter of a Lord Lovel who, on her wedding-day, was playing at hide and seek, and selected an old oak chest for her hiding-place. The chest closed with a spring lock, and many years later her skeleton was discovered.

Marwell Old Hall, once the residence of the Seymours and afterwards of the Dacre family, has a similar tradition attached to it.

Mistpoeffers. See BARISAL GUNS.

Mistral, The. A violent north-west wind blowing down the Gulf of Lyons; felt particularly at Marseilles and the south-east of France.

Mistress. See Miss.

Mithra or Mithras (mith' rà). The god of light of the ancient Persians, one of their chief deities, and the ruler of the universe. Sometimes used as a synonym for the sun. The word means friend, and this deity is so called because he befriends man in this life, and protects him against evil spirits after death. He is represented as a young man with a Phrygian cap, a tunic, a mantle on his left shoulder, and plunging a sword into the neck of a bull (see Thebais, i). The Mithraic rites—have been maintained by a constant tradition, with their penances and tests of the courage of the candidate for admission, through the Secret Societies of the Middle Ages and the Rosicrucians, down to the modern faint reflex of the latter, the Freemasons.—KNIGHT: Symbolical Language.

Sir Thomas More called the Supreme Being of his Utopia "Mithra."

Mithridate (mith' ri dāt). A confection named from Mithridates IV, King of Pontus and Bithynia (d. about 63 B.C.), who is said to have made himself immune from poisons by the constant use of antidotes. It was supposed to be an antidote to poison, and contained seventy-two ingredients.

What brave spirit could be content to sit in his shop . . . selling Mithridatum and dragon's water to infested houses?—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Knight of the Burning Pestle (1608).

Mitre (mí' tēr) (Gr. and Lat. mitra, a 'head-band, turban'). The episcopal mitre symbolizes the cloven tongues of fire which descended on the apostles on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii, 1-12). Dean Stanley tells us that the cleft represents the crease made when the mitre is folded and carried under the arm, like an opera hat.

The Mitre Tavern. A place of resort in the time of Shakespeare; it was in Mitre Court, leading south of Cheapside, and was in existence from before 1475 till the Great Fire (1666), when it was destroyed and not rebuilt. There are several other taverns of the same name in London (see Barrey's Ram Alley, v 1611).

Mitten. To give one the mitten. To reject a sweetheart; to jilt. Possibly with punning allusion to Lat. mitto, to send (about your business), whence dismissal; to get your dismissal.

There is a young lady I have set my heart on, though whether she is going to give me hern, or give me the mitten I ain't quite satisfied.—SAM SLICK: Human Nature, p. 90.

Mittimus (mit' i mūs) (Lat., we send). A command in writing to a jailer, to keep the person named in safe custody. Also a writ for removing a record from one court to another. So called from the first word of the writ.

Mitton. The Chapter of Mitton. So the battle of Mitton was called, because so many priests took part therein. It was fought in 1319, and the Scots defeated the forces of the Archbishop of York.

Mizentop, maintop, foretop. A "top" is a platform fixed over the head of a lower mast, resting on the trestle-trees, to spread the rigging of the topmast. The mizenmast is the aftermost mast of a ship; the foremast is in the forward part of a ship; the mainmast is between these two.

He was put into the mizentop, and served three years in the West Indies; then he was transferred to the maintop, and served five years in the Mediterranean; and then he was made captain of the foretop, and served six years in the East Indies; and at last he was rated captain's coxswain in the Druid frigate.—CAPT. MARRYAT: Poor Jack, ch. i.

Mnemonics (ne mon' iks). The art of improving the memory by artificial aids and methods. Such methods usually depend on the association of ideas and are chiefly based on the principles of localization and analogy. The word comes from the Greek mnemonikos, of memory.

Mnemosyne (ne mos' i ni). Goddess of memory and mother by Zeus of the nine Muses of Greek mythology. She was the daughter of Heaven and Earth (Uranus and Ge).

To the Immortals every one
A portion was assigned of all that is;
But chief Mnemosyne did Maia's son
Clothe in the light of his loud melodies.
SHELLEY: Homer's Hymn to Mercury, lxxiii.

Moabite Stone, The. An ancient stele, bearing the oldest extant Semitic inscription, now in the Louvre, Paris. The inscription, consisting of thirty-four lines in Hebrew-Phœnician characters, gives an account of the war of Mesha, King of Moab, who reigned about 850 B.C., against Omri, Ahab, and other kings of Israel (see 2 Kings, iii). Mesha sacrificed his eldest son on the city wall in view of the invading Israelites. The stone was discovered by F. Klein at Dibhan in 1868, and is 3 ft. 10 in. high, 2 ft. broad and 14½ in. thick. The Arabs resented its removal, and splintered it into fragments, but it has been restored.

Moaning Minnie. World War II term for a six-barrelled German mortar, so named from the rising shriek it gave when the six projectiles were simultaneously released. The name was also given popularly to the air-raid warning siren.

Mob. A contraction of the Latin mobile vulgus (the fickle crowd). The term was first applied to the people by the members of the Green-ribbon Club, in the reign of Charles II. (Northern Examiner, p. 574.)

In subsequent years the word was applied to an organized criminal gang.

Mob-cap. A cap worn indoors by women and useful for concealing hair that is not yet "done." It was formerly called mob-cap, from the old verb mab, to dress untidily.

Mock. Mock-beggar Hall or Manor. A grand, ostentatious house, where no hospitality is afforded, neither is any charity given.

No times observed, nor charitable laws,
The poor receive their answer from the daws
Who, in their cawing language, call it plain
Mock-beggar Manor, for they come in vaine.
TAYLOR: The Water Cormorant (1622)

Mockery. "It will be a delusion, a mockery, and a snare." Thomas, Lord Denman, observed this in his judgment on the case of The Queen v. O'Connell (1844).

Mock-up. Phrase originating in World War II for a model or any full-size working model. (2) American phrase for panels mounted with models of aircraft parts used by the A.A.F. for instructional purposes.

Modality, in scholastic philosophy, means the mode in which anything exists. Kant divides our judgment into three modalities: (1) Problematic, touching possible events; (2) Assertoric, touching real events; (3) Apodictic, touching necessary events.

Modernism. A movement in the Catholic Church which sought to interpret the ancient teachings of the Church in the light of the scientific knowledge of modern times. It was condemned by Pope Pius X in 1907 in the encyclical Pascendi, which stigmatized it as the "synthesis of all heresies."

Modred. One of the Knights of the Round Table in Arthurian romance, nephew and betrayer of King Arthur. He is represented as the treacherous knight. He revolted from the king, whose wife he seduced, was mortally wounded in the battle of Camlan, in Cornwall, and was buried in the island of Avalon. The story is told, with a variation, in Tennyson's Guinevere (Idylls of the King).

Mods. In Oxford a contracted form of moderation. The three necessary examinations in Oxford are the Smalls, the Mods, and the Greats. No one can take a class till he has passed the Mods.

Modus operandi (Lat.). The mode of operation; the way in which a thing is done or should be done. Modus vivendi (Lat., way of living). A mutual arrangement whereby persons not at the time being on friendly terms can be induced to live together in harmony. The term may be applied to individuals, to societies, or to peoples.

Mofussil (East Indies). The subordinate divisions of a district; the rural divisions of a district; the rural districts as apart from the chief city or seat of government, which is called the sudder; provincial.

To tell a man that fatal charges have been laid against him, and refuse him an opportunity for explanation, this is not even Mofussil justice.—The Times.

Mogul (mō' gūl). The Mogul Empire. The Mohammedan-Tartar Empire in India which began in 1526 with Baber, great-grandson of Timur, or Tamerlane, and split up after the death of Aurungzebe in 1707, the power passing to the British and the Maharrattas. The Emperor was known as the Great or Grand Mogul; besides those mentioned, Akbar, Jahangir, and Shah Jehan are the most noteworthy.

Mogul cards. The best-quality playing-cards were so called because the wrapper, or the "duty-card" (cards are subject to excise duty) was decorated with a representation of the Great Mogul. Inferior cards were called "Harrys," "Highlanders," and "Merry Andrews" for a similar reason.

Mohair (mō' hār) (Probably the Arabic mukhayyar, goat's-hair cloth). It is the hair of the Angora goat, introduced into Spain by the Moors, and thence brought into Germany.

Mohammed, Mahomet (Arab., "the praised one"). The titular name of the founder of Islam (q.v.), or Mohammedanism (born at Mecca about 570, died at Medina, 632), which was adopted by him about the time of the Hegira to apply to himself the Messianic prophecies in the Old Testament (Haggai ii, 7, and elsewhere). His original name is given both as Kotham and Halabi.

Angel of. When Mohammed was transported to heaven, he says: "I saw there an angel, the most gigantic of all created beings. It had 70,000 heads, each had 70,000 faces, each face had 70,000 mouths, each mouth had 70,000 tongues, and each tongue spoke 70,000 languages; all were employed in singing God's praises." This must not, of course, be taken as a definition of belief, but as a mode of Oriental emphasis.

Banner of. Sanjaksherif, kept in the Eyab mosque, at Constantinople.

Bible of. The Koran.

Camel (swiftest). Adha.

Cave. The cave in which Gabriel appeared to Mohammed (610) was in the mountain of Hirâ, near Mecca.

Coffin. Legend used to have it that Mohammed's coffin is suspended in mid-air at Medina without any support.

Spiritual men are too transcendent . . .
To hang, like Mahomet, in the air,
Or St. Ignatius at his prayer,
By pure geometry.

BUTLER: Hudibras, III, ii, 602.

Daughter (favourite). Fatima.

Dove. Mohammed had a dove which he fed with wheat out of his ear. When it was hungry it used to light on the prophet's shoulder, and thrust its bill into his ear to find its meal. Mohammed thus induced the Arabs to believe that he was divinely inspired.

Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?

1 Henry VI, i, 2.

Father. Abdallah, of the tribe of Koreish. He died a little before or a little after the birth of Mohammed.

Father-in-law (father of Ayesha), Abu-Bekr. He succeeded Mohammed and was the first calif.

Flight from Mecca (called the Hegira), A.D. 622. He retired to Medina.

Horse. Al Borak (The Lightning). It conveyed the prophet to the seventh heaven.

Miracles. Several are traditionally mentioned, but many of the True Believers hold that he performed no miracle. That of the moon is best known.

Habib the Wise asked Mohammed to prove his mission by cleaving the moon in two. Mohammed raised his hands towards heaven, and in a loud voice summoned the moon to do Habib's bidding. Accordingly, it descended to the top of the Kaaba (q.v.), made seven circuits, and, coming to the prophet, entered his right sleeve and came out of the left. It then entered the collar of his robe, and descended to the skirt, clove itself into two plaits, one of which appeared in the east of the skies and the other in the west; and the two parts ultimately reunited and resumed their usual form.

Mother of. Amina, of the tribe of Koreish. She died when Mohammed was six years old.

Paradise of. The ten animals admitted to the Moslem's paradise are:—

(1) The dog Kratim, which accompanied the Seven Sleepers.

(2) Balaam's ass, which spoke with the voice of a man to reprove the disobedient prophet.

(3) Solomon's ant, of which he said, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard . . ."

(4) Jonah's whale.

(5) The ram caught in the thicket, and offered in sacrifice in lieu of Isaac.

(6) The calf of Abraham.

(7) The camel of Saleb.

(8) The cuckoo of Bilkis.

(9) The ox of Moses.

(10) Mohammed's horse, Al Borak.

Stepping-stone. The stone upon which the prophet placed his foot when he mounted Al Borak on his ascent to heaven. It rose as the beast rose, but Mohammed, putting his hand upon it, forbade it to follow him, whereupon it remained suspended in mid-air, where the True Believer, if he has faith enough, may still behold it.

Tribe. On both sides, the Koreish.

Uncle, who took charge of Mohammed at the death of his grandfather, Abu Tâlib.

Wives. Ten in number, viz. (1) Kadija, a rich widow of the tribe of Koreish, who had been twice married already, and was forty years of age. For twenty-five years she was his only wife, but at her death he married nine others, all of whom survived him.

The nine wives. (1) Ayesha, daughter of Abu Bekr, only nine years old on her wedding-day. This was his youngest and favourite wife.

(2) Sauda, widow of Sokram, and nurse to his daughter Fatma.

(3) Hafsa, a widow twenty-eight years old, who also had a son. She was daughter of Omeia.

(4) Zeinab, wife of Zaid, but divorced in order that the prophet might take her to wife.

(5) Barra, wife of a young Arab and daughter of Al Hareth, chief of an Arab tribe. She was a captive.

(6) Rehana, daughter of Simeon, and a Jewish captive.

(7) Safiya, the epoused wife of Kenana. Kenana was put to death. Safiya outlived the prophet forty years.

(8) Omm Habiba—i.e. mother of Habiba; the widow of Abu Sofian.

(9) Maimuna, fifty-one years old, and a widow, who survived all his other wives.

Also ten or fifteen concubines, chief of whom was Mariyeh, mother of Ibrahim, the prophet's only son, who died when fifteen months old.

Year of Deputations. A.D. 630, the 8th of the Hegira.

If the mountain will not come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain. When Mohammed introduced his system to the Arabs, they asked for miraculous proofs. He then ordered Mount Safa to come to him, and as it did not move, he said, "God is merciful. Had it obeyed my words, it would have fallen on us to our destruction. I will therefore go to the mountain, and thank God that He has had mercy on a stiffnecked generation." The phrase is often used of one who, not being able to get his own way, bows before the inevitable.

Mohocks (mō' hocks). A class of ruffians who in the 18th century, infested the streets of London. So called from the Indian Mohawks. One of their "new inventions" was to roll persons down Snow Hill in a tub; another was to overturn coaches on rubbish-heaps. (See Gay: Trivia, iii.)

A vivid picture of the misdoings in the streets of London by these and other brawlers is given in The Spectator, No. 324.

You sent your Mohocks next abroad,
With razors armed, and knives;
Who on night-walkers made inroad,
And scared our maids and wives;
They scared the watch, and windows broke . . .
Plot upon Plot (about 1713).

Moiræ. Fate, or Necessity, supreme even over the gods of Olympus.

Molinism (mol' i nizm). The system of grace and election taught by Louis Molina, the Spanish Jesuit (1535-1600).

The Pope's great self—Innocent by name . . .
'Twas he who first bade leave those souls in peace.
Those Jansenists, renicknamed Molinists . . .
"Leave them alone," bade he, "those Molinists'
Who may have other light than we perceive,
Or why is it the whole world hates them thus?"
BROWNING: The Ring and the Book, I, 300-17.

His doctrine was that grace is a free gift to all, but that the consent of the will must be present before that grace can be effective.

Moll, Molly. Moll Cutpurse. See CUTPURSE.

Take away this bottle, it has Moll Thomson's mark on it. Moll Thomson is M.T. (empty).

Molly coddle. A pampered creature, afraid that the winds of heaven should visit him too roughly.

Molly Maguires. An Irish secret society organized in 1843. Stout, active young Irishmen dressed up in women's clothes and otherwise disguised themselves to surprise those employed to enforce the payment of rents. Their victims were ducked in bog-holes, and many were beaten most unmercifully.

A similar secret society in the mining districts of Pennsylvania was (about 1877) known by the same name.

The judge who tried the murderer was elected by the Molly Maguires, the jurors who assisted him were themselves Molly Maguires. A score of Molly Maguires came forward to swear that the assassin was sixty miles from the spot on which he had been seen to fire at William Dunn . . . and the jurors returned a verdict of Not Guilty.—W. HEPWORTH DIXON: New America, ii, 28.

Molly Mog. This celebrated beauty was an innkeeper's daughter, at Oakingham, Berks. She was the toast of the gay sparks of the first half of the 18th century, and died unmarried in 1766, at the age of sixty-seven. Gay has a ballad on this Fair Maid of the Inn, in which the "swain" alluded to is Mr. Standen, of Arborfield, who died in 1730. It is said that Molly's sister Sally was the greater beauty. A portrait of Gay still hangs in the inn.

Molmutius or Mulmutius. See MULMUTINE LAWS.

Moloch (mō' lok). Any influence which demands from us the sacrifice of what we hold most dear. Thus, war is a Moloch, king mob is a Moloch, the guillotine was the Moloch of the French Revolution, etc. The allusion is to the god of the Ammonites, to whom children were "made to pass through the fire" in sacrifice (see 2 Kings, xxiii, 10). Milton says he was worshipped in Rabba, in Argob, and Basan, to the stream of utmost Arnon. (Paradise Lost, i, 392-398.)

Mollich, May, or The Maid of the Hairy Arms. An elf of folklore who mingles in ordinary sports, and will even direct the master of the house how to play dominoes or draughts. Like the White Lady of Avenel, May Molloch is a sort of banshee.

Molotov. The name of Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov, the Russian diplomat, was adopted in World War II in several ways:—

Molotov breadbasket. A canister of incendiary bombs which, on being launched from a plane, opened and showered the bombs over a wide area.

Molotov cocktail. A home-made anti-tank bomb, invented and first used by the Finns against the Russians (1940) and developed in England as one of the weapons of the Home Guard. It consisted of a bottle filled with inflammable and glutinous liquid, with a slow match protruding from the top. When thrown at a tank the bottle burst, the liquid ignited and spread over the plating of the tank.

Moly (mō' li). The mythical herb given, according to Homer, by Hermes to Ulysses as an antidote against the sorceries of Circe.

Black was the root, but milky white the flower,
Moly the name, to mortals hard to find.

Pope's Odyssey, x, 365.

That moly

That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave.

MILTON: Comus, 655.

The name is given to a number of plants, especially of the Allium (garlic) family, as the wild garlic, the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, serpents moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly, and Dioscorides' moly.

They all flower in May, except "the sweet moly of Montpellier," which blossoms in September.

Momus (mō' mūs). One who carps at everything. Momus, the sleepy god of the Greeks, son of Nox (Night), was always railing and carping.

Momus, being asked to pass judgment on the relative merits of Neptune, Vulcan, and Minerva, railed at them all. He said the horns of a bull ought to have been placed in the shoulders, where they would have been of much greater force; as for man, he said Jupiter ought to have made him with a window in his breast, whereby his real thoughts might be revealed. Hence Byron's—

Were Momus' lattice in our breasts . . .

Werner, iii, 1.

Monday. The second day of the week; called by the Anglo-Saxons Monandæg, i.e. the day of the Moon.

That Monday feeling. Disinclination to return to work after the week-end break.

Money. Shortly after the Gallic invasion of Rome, in 344 B.C., Lucius Furius (or according to other accounts, Camillus), built a temple to Juno Moneta (the Montress) on the spot where the house of Manlius Capitolinus stood; and to this temple was attached the first Roman mint, as to the temple of Saturn was attached the aerarium (public treasury). Hence the "ases" there coined were called moneta, and hence our word money.

Juno is represented on medals with instruments of coinage, as the hammer, anvil, pincers, and die. See Livy, vii, 28, and Cicero, De Divinitate, i, 15.

The oldest coin of Greece bore the impress of an ox. Hence a bribe for silence was said to be an "ox on the tongue." Subsequently each province had its own impress:—

Athens, an owl (the bird of wisdom).

Baotia, Bacchus (the vineyard of Greece).

Rhodos, a dolphin.

Macedonia, a buckler (from its love of war).

Rhodes, the disc of the sun (the Colossus was an image to the sun).

Rome had a different impress for each coin:—

For the As, the head of Janus on one side, and the prow of a ship on the reverse.

The Semi-as, the head of Jupiter and the letter S.

The Sextans, the head of Mercury, and two points to denote two ounces.

The Triens, the head of a woman (? Rome or Minerva) and three points to denote three ounces.

The Quadrans, the head of Hercules, and four points to denote four ounces.

In every country there are familiar phrases and words for the more commonly used coins and sums of money. The most usual are:—

A bawbee in Scotland means a halfpenny and is applied to money generally. In England:

1d. A copper.

4d. When there was a coin for this sum it was often called a joey.

6d. A tanner, a tizzy.

1s. A bob.

2s. A florin.

2s. 6d. Half a crown, half a dollar, two and a kick.

5s. A crown, a cartwheel.

20s. A quid, a sovereign (esp. the gold coin), a jimmy o'goblin, thick 'un.

21s. A guinea.

£5. A fiver.

£10. A tenner.

£25. A pony.

£500. A monkey.

In North America:—

1c. A penny, a Red Indian.

5c. A nickel.

10c. A dime.

25c. A quarter, two bits.

50c. Four bits.

$1.00. A buck. (In silver, a cartwheel, or a smacker.)

$10.00. A sawbuck.

$100.00. A century.

$1000.00. A grand; a G.

Money makes the mare to go. See MARE.

Money of account is a monetary denomination used in reckoning and often not employed as actual coin. For example, a guinea is in Britain money of account, though no coin of this value is in circulation. The U.S.A. mill, being one-thousandth of a dollar or one-tenth of a cent is money of account.

Money for old rope, or money for jam. An easy job, yielding extravagant reward for very little expenditure of effort.

Mongrel Parliament. The Parliament that met at Oxford in 1681 and passed the Exclusion Bill.

Monism (mō' nizm). The doctrine of the oneness of mind and matter, God and the universe. It ignores all that is supernatural, any dualism of mind and matter, God and creation; and there can be no opposition between God and the world, as unity cannot be in opposition to itself. Monism teaches that "all are but parts of one stupendous whole, whose body nature is, and God the soul"; hence, whatever is, only conforms to the cosmical laws of the universal ALL.

Haeckel explained it thus in 1866: "Monism (the correlative of Dualism) denotes a unitary conception, in opposition to a supernatural one. Mind can never exist without matter, nor matter without mind." As God is the same "yesterday, to-day, and for ever," creation must be the same, or God would not be unchangeable.

Monitor. So the Romans called the nursery teacher. The Military Monitor was an officer to tell young soldiers of the faults committed against the service. The House Monitor was a slave to call the family of a morning, etc.

A shallow-draught ironclad with a flat deck, sharp stern, and one or more movable turrets, was so called. They were first used in the American War of Secession, and were so named by the inventor, Captain Ericsson, because they were to be "severe monitors" to the leaders of the Southern rebellion.

The word is also used to designate a broadcasting official employed to listen in to foreign (esp. enemy) radio transmissions in order to analyse the news announced and to study propaganda. In normal circumstances the duties of a monitor include checking the quality of transmissions.

Monk. The word monk is often employed loosely and incorrectly for any religious living in community or belonging to an order. In the Western Church only members of the following orders are monks: Benedictines, Cistercians, Carthusians, and four smaller orders. Members of the great orders of Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustinians are friars.

In printing, a black smear or blotch made by leaving too much ink on the part. Caxton set up his printing-press in the scriptorium of Westminster Abbey (see CHAPEL); and the association gave rise to the slang expressions monk and friar (q.v.) for black and white defects.

Monk Lewis. Matthew Gregory Lewis (1775-1818) is so called from his highly coloured "Gothic" novel Ambrosio, or the Monk (1795).

Monkey. Slang for £500 or (in America) $500; also for a mortgage (sometimes extended to a monkey with a long tail), and among sailors the vessel which contains the full allowance of grog for one mess. A child, especially an active, meddlesome one, is often called "a little monkey"—for obvious reasons.

Monkey's allowance. More kicks than halfpence. The allusion is to the monkeys formerly carried about for show; they picked up the halfpence, but carried them to the master, who kept kicking or ill-treating the poor creatures to urge them to incessant tricks.

Monkey board. In the old-fashioned horsed knifeboard omnibuses, the step on which the conductor stood, and on which he often skipped about like a monkey.

Monkey jacket. A short coat worn by seamen; so called because it has "no more tail than a monkey," or, more strictly speaking, an ape.

Monkey puzzle. The Chilean pine, Araucaria imbricata, whose twisted and prickly branches puzzle even a monkey to climb.

Monkey spoons. Spoons having on the handle a heart surmounted by a monkey, at one time given in Holland at marriages, christenings, and funerals. At weddings they were given to some immediate relative of the bride; at christenings and funerals to the officiating clergyman. Among the Dutch, drinking is called "sucking the monkey," because the early morning appetizer of rum and salt was taken in a monkey spoon.

Monkey tricks. Mischievous, ill-natured, or deceitful actions.

To get one's monkey up. To be riled or enraged; monkeys are extremely irritable and easily provoked.

To monkey with or about. To tamper with or play mischievous tricks. To monkey with the cards is to try to arrange them so that the deal will not be fair; to monkey with the milk is to add water to it and then sell it as pure and unadulterated.

To pay in monkey's money (en monnaie de singe)—in goods, in personal work, in mummbling and grimace. In Paris when a monkey passed the Petit Pont, if it was for sale four deniers' toll had to be paid; but if it belonged to a showman and was not for sale, it sufficed if the monkey went through his tricks.

It was an original by Master Charles Charnois, principal painter to King Mægistus, paid for in court fashion with monkey's money.—RABELAIS: Gargantua and Pantagruel, iv, 3.

To suck the monkey. Sailor's slang for surreptitiously sucking liquor from a cask through a straw (see MONKEY, above); and when milk has been taken from a coconut, and rum has been substituted, "sucking the monkey" is drinking this rum.

What the vulgar call "sucking the monkey"

Has much less effect on a man when he's funky.

Ingoldsby Legends: The Black Mousquetaire.

Monkey suit, in the U.S.A. services, is the term applied to full dress uniform, also to an aviator's overalls. The phrase is often used for men's formal dress on important occasions.

Monmouth. The town at the mouth of the Monnow, surname of Henry V of England, who was born there.

Monmouth cap. A soldier's cap.

The soldiers that the Monmouth wear,

On castles' tops their ensigns rear.

The best caps were formerly made at Monmouth, where the cappers' chapel doth still remain.—FULLER: Worthies of Wales, p. 50.

Monmouth Street (London) takes its name from the unfortunate son of Charles II, executed for rebellion in 1685. Later Dudley Street, St. Giles, and now forming part of Shaftesbury Avenue close to Soho Square, where the Duke of Monmouth had his town house, it was formerly noted for its second-hand clothes shops; hence the expression Monmouth Street finery for tawdry, pretentious clothes.

[At the Venetian carnival] you may put on whate'er

You like by way of doublet, cape, or cloak,

Such as in Monmouth-street, or in Rag Fair

Would rig you out in seriousness or joke.

BYRON: Beppo, v.

Monongahela (mò nong' gà hē' là). A river flowing into the Ohio at Pittsburgh, Pa., near which whisky is distilled. The term is sometimes applied to American whisky generally.

Monophysites (mo nòf' i sítz) (Gr. monos phusis, one nature). A religious sect in the Levant who maintained that Jesus Christ had only one nature, and that divine and human were combined in much the same way as the body and soul in man. They arose upon the condemnation of the Eutychian heresy at the Council of Chalcedon, 451, and are still represented by the Coptic, Armenian, Abyssinian, and Jacobite Churches.

Monotheism (mon' ò thē izm) (Gr. monos theos, one God). The doctrine that there is but one God.

The only large monotheism known to historic times is that of Mahomet.—GLADSTONE, in Contemporary Review, June, 1876.

Monroe Doctrine (mùn rō'). The doctrine first promulgated in 1823 by James Monroe (President of the U.S.A., 1817-25), to the effect that the American States are never to entangle themselves in the broils of the Old World, nor to suffer it to interfere in the affairs of the New; and they are to account any attempt on the part of the Old World to plant their systems of government in any part of North America not at the time in European occupation dangerous to American peace and safety. The capture of Manila and the cession of the Philippine Islands to the United States in 1898, and still more the part the States took in the two World Wars has abrogated a large part of this famous Doctrine.

Mons Meg. See MEG.

Monsieur. The eldest brother of the king of France was formerly so called, especially Philippe, Duc d'Orléans, brother to Louis XIV (1640-1701).

Monsieur de Paris. The public executioner or Jack Ketch of France.

Riccardo de Albertes was a personal friend of all the "Messieurs de Paris," who served the Republic. He attended all capital executions.—Newspaper Paragraph, January 25th, 1893.

Monsieur le Grand. The Great Equerry of France.

The Peace of Monsieur. The peace that the Huguenots, the Politiques, and the Duke d'Alençon ("Monsieur") obliged Henri III of France to sign in 1576. By it the Huguenots and the Duke gained great concessions.

Monsignor (mon sē' nyôr) (pl. monsignori). A title pertaining to all prelates in the R.C. Church, which includes all prelates of the Roman court, active or honorary. Used with the surname, as Monsignor So-and-so it does away with the barbarism of speaking of Bishop So-and-so, which is as incorrect as calling the Duke of Marlborough "Duke Churchill."

Monsoon (Arab. mausim, time, season). A periodical wind; especially that which blows off S.W. Asia and the Indian Ocean from the south-west from April to October, and from the north-east during the rest of the year.

Mont (Fr., hill). The technical term in palmistry for the eminences at the roots of the fingers.

That at the root of the thumb is the Mont de Mars.
index finger is the Mont de Jupiter.
long finger is the Mont de Saturne.
ring finger is the Mont de Soleil.
little finger is the Mont de Venus.

The one between the thumb and index finger is called the Mont de Mercure and the one opposite the Mont de Lune.

Mont de Piété. A pawnshop in France; first instituted as monti di pietà (charity loans) under Leo X (reigned 1513-21), at Rome, by charitable persons who wished to rescue the poor from usurious moneylenders. They advanced small sums of money on the security of pledges, at a rate of interest barely sufficient to cover the working expenses of the institution. Both the name and system were introduced into France and Spain. Public granaries for the sale of corn are called in Italian Monti frumentarii. "Monte" means a public or state loan; hence also a "bank."

Montage (mon' tazh). In cinematography the final arrangement and assembling of photos to make a continuous film; also the art of film-cutting.

Montagnards. See MOUNTAIN, THE.

Montanists (mon ta' nists). Heretics of the 2nd century; so called from Montanus, a Phrygian, who asserted that he had received from the Holy Ghost special knowledge that had not been vouchsafed to the apostles. They were extremely ascetic, believed in the speedy coming of the Second Advent, and quickly died out.

Monter Cap. See MONTERO.

Monteith (mon tēth). A scalloped basin to cool and wash glasses in; a sort of punch-bowl, made of silver or pewter, with a movable rim scalloped at the top; so called, according to Anthony Wood, in 1683 from "a fantastical Scot called 'Monsieur Monteigh' who at that time or a little before wore the bottom of his coat so notched ~ ~ ~ ~ ~"
New things produce new names, and thus Monteith
Has by one vessel saved his name from death.—KING.

Montem (mon' tem). A custom observed every three years till 1847 by the boys of Eton College, who proceeded on Whit Tuesday ad montem (to a mound called Salt Hill), near Slough, and exacted a gratuity called salt money from all who passed by. Sometimes as much as £1,000 was thus collected, and it was used to defray expenses of the senior scholar at King's College, Cambridge.

Montero or Montere Cap (mon tē' rō). So called from the headgear worn by the monteros d'Espinosa (mountaineers), who once formed the interior guard of the palace of the Spanish king. It had a spherical crown, and flaps that could be drawn over the ears, not unlike a Victorian shooting-cap.

Montgomery (mün güm' er i). A Norman name, not Welsh. The town was founded by a Norman named Baldwin, and was in Welsh called Tiefaldwyn, "house of Baldwin": in 1086 it was taken by Roger Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, Count of the Marches to William the Conqueror, and it was given his name—which is a French place-name, the Hill of Gomerie.

Montgomery's division, all on one side. This is a French proverb, and refers to the Free Companies of the 16th century, of which a Montgomery was a noted chief. The booty he took he kept himself.

Month. One of the twelve portions into which the year is divided. Anciently a new month started on the day of the new moon, or the day after; hence the name (A.S. monath), which is connected with moon. See LUNAR MONTH; and, for the months themselves see their names throughout this DICTIONARY.

The old mnemonic for remembering the number of days in each month runs—

Thirty days hath September,
April, June, and November,
February eight-and-twenty all alone
And all the rest have thirty-one,
Unless that Leap Year doth combine
And give to February twenty-nine.

This, with slight variations, is to be found in Grafton's Chronicles (1590), the play The Return from Parnassus (1606), etc. In Harrison's Description of England (prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicle, 1577) is the Latin version:—

Junius, Aprilis, Septēq; Novēq; tricenos,
Unum plus reliqu; Febru tenet octo vicenos,
At si bissextus fuerit superadditur unus.

A month of Sundays. An indefinite long time; never. See NEVER.

A month's mind. Properly the Mass, or lesser funeral solemnities, that in pre-Reformation days was said for a deceased person on the day one month from his death. The term often occurs in old wills in connexion with charities to be disbursed on that day.

Shakespeare uses the term figuratively for an irresistible longing (for something); a great desire:—

I see you have a month's mind for them.—Two Gentlemen of Verona, i, 2.

As also does Samuel Butler:—

For if a trumpet sound or drum beat,
Who hath not a month's mind to combat?
Hudibras, i, ii, 111.

And others; and it has been conjectured that here the allusions are to the longings of a pregnant woman, which start in the first month of pregnancy.

Montjoie St. Denis. The war-cry of the French. Montjoie is a corruption of Mons Jovis, as the little mounds were called which served as direction-posts in ancient times; hence it was applied to whatever showed or indicated the way, as the banner of St. Denis, called the Oriflamme. The Burgundians had for their war-cry, "Montjoie St. André"; the dukes of Bourbon, "Montjoie Notre Dame"; and the kings of England used to have "Montjoie St. George."

Montjoie was also the cry of the French heralds in the tournaments, and the title of the French king of arms.

Where is Mountjoy the herald? speed him hence:

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.

SHAKESPEARE: Henry V, iii, 5.

Montserrat (mont ser' ät'). The Catalonians aver that this mountain was riven and shattered at the Crucifixion. Every rift is filled with evergreens. (Lat., mons serratus, the mountain jagged like a saw.) The monastery of Montserrat is famous for its printing-press and for its Black Virgin.

Monument. The fluted Roman-Doric column of Portland stone (202 ft. high) built by Sir Christopher Wren to commemorate the Great Fire of London in 1666 is known as The Monument. It stands near the north end of London Bridge, about the spot where the fire started.

The old inscription (effaced in 1831) maintained that the fire had been caused—by ye treachery and malice of ye popish faction, in order to ye carrying on their horrid plot for extirpating the Protestant religion and old English liberty, and the introducing popery and slavery.

and it was this that made Pope refer to it as—

London's column, pointing at the skies

Like a tall bully, lifts the head, and lies.

Moral Essays, III, 339.

When looking at monuments and effigies, etc., in our churches, it may be useful to remember the following points which must not, however, be taken as invariable rules:—

Founders of chapels, etc., lie with their monument built into the wall.

Figures with their hands on their breasts, and chalice, represent priests.

Figures with crozier, mitre, and pontificals, represent prelates.

Figures with armour represent *knight*s.

Figures with legs crossed represent either crusaders or married men, but those with a scallop shell are certainly crusaders.

Female figures with a mantle and large ring represent nuns.

In the age of chivalry the woman was placed on the man's right hand; but when chivalry declined she was placed on his left hand.

It may usually be taken that inscriptions in Latin, cut in capitals, are of the first twelve centuries; those in Lombardic capitals and French, of the 13th; those in Old English text, of the 14th; while those in the English language and Roman characters are subsequent to the 14th century.

Tablets against the wall came in with the Reformation; and brasses are for the most part subsequent to the 13th century.

Monumental City. Baltimore, Maryland, is so called because it abounds in monuments; witness the obelisk, the 104 churches, etc.

Moon. The word is probably connected with the Sanskrit root me-, to measure (because time was measured by it). It is common to all Teutonic languages (Goth. mena, O.Frisian mona, O.Norm. mane, A.S. mona, etc.), and is almost invariably masculine. In the Edda the son of Mundilfœri is Mani (moon), and daughter Sól (sun); so it is still with the Lithuanians and Arabians, and so was it with the ancient Slavs, Mexicans, Hindus, etc., and the Germans to this day have Frau Sonne (Mrs. Sun) and Herr Mond (Mr. Moon).

The Moon is represented in five different phases: (1) new; (2) full; (3) crescent or crescent; (4) half; and (5) gibbous, or more than half. In pictures of the Assumption it is shown as a crescent under Our Lady's feet; in the Crucifixion it is eclipsed, and placed on one side of the cross, the sun being on the other; in the Creation and Last Judgment it is also introduced by artists.

In classical mythology the moon was known as Hecate before she had risen and after she had set; as Astarte when crescent; as Diana or Cynthia (she who "hunts the clouds") when in the open vault of heaven; as Phæbe when looked upon as the sister of the sun (i.e. Phæbus); and was personified as Selene or Luna, the lover of the sleeping Endymion, i.e. moonlight on the fields (see these names).

The moon is called triform, because it presents itself to us either round, or waxing with horns towards the east, or waning with horns towards the west.

One legend connected with the moon was that there was treasured everything wasted on earth, such as misspent time and wealth, broken vows, unanswered prayers, fruitless tears, abortive attempts, unfulfilled desires and intentions, etc. In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso Astolpho found on his visit to the Moon (Bk. xviii and xxxiv, 70) that bribes were hung on gold and silver hooks; princes' favours were kept in bellows; wasted talent was kept in vases, each marked with the proper name, etc.; and in The Rape of the Lock (canto v) Pope tells us that when the Lock disappeared—

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasured there,
There heroes' wits are kept in pond'rous vases,
And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases.
There broken vows and death-bed alms are found
And lovers' hearts with ends of ribbon bound,
The courtier's promises, and sick man's prayers,
The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

Hence the phrase, the limbus of the moon.

I know no more about it than the man in the moon. I know nothing at all about the matter.

It's all moonshine. Bunkum; nonsense. The light of the moon was formerly held to have very deleterious effects on mental stability. See LUNATIC.

Mahomet and the Moon. See MOHAMMED.

Minions of the moon. Thieves who rob by night (see 1 Henry IV, i, 2).

Moon-calf. An inanimate, shapeless abortion formerly supposed to be produced prematurely by the cow owing to the malign influence of the moon.

A false conception, called mola, i.e. moon-calf . . . a lump of flesh without shape or life.—HOLLAND: Pliny, vii, 15.

Moon-drop. In Latin, virus lunare, a vaporous foam supposed in ancient times to be shed by the moon on certain herbs and other objects, when influenced by incantations.

Upon the corner of the moon,
There hangs a vaporous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground.

Macbeth, iii, 5.

Cp. Lucan's Pharsalia, vi, 669, where Erichtho is introduced using it:—

Et virus large lunare ministrat.

Moonlight flit. A clandestine removal of one's furniture during the night, to avoid paying one's rent or having the furniture seized in payment thereof.

Moon-rakers. A nickname of people of Wiltshire. The absurd story offered to account for the name is that in the "good old times" they were noted smugglers, and one night, seeing the coastguard on the watch, they sank some smuggled whisky in the sea. When the coast was clear they employed rakes to recover their goods, when the coastguard reappeared and asked what they were doing. Pointing to the reflection of the moon in the water, they replied, "We are trying to rake out that cream cheese yonder."

Moon's men. Thieves and highwaymen who ply their trade by night.

The fortune of us that are but Moon's-men doth ebb and flow like the sea.—1 Henry IV, i, 2.

Moonstone. A variety of feldspar, so called on account of the play of light which it exhibits. It contains bluish white spots, which, when held to the light, present a silvery play of colour not unlike that of the moon.

Once in a blue moon. See BLUE MOON.

The cycle of the moon. See CYCLE.

The Island of the Moon. Madagascar is so named by the natives.

The limbus of the moon. See above.

The man in the moon. Some say it is a man leaning on a fork, on which he is carrying a bundle of sticks picked up on a Sunday. The origin of this fable is from Numb. xv, 32-36. Some add a dog also; thus the prologue in Midsummer Night's Dream says, "This man with lantern, dog, and bush of thorns, presenteth moonshine"; Chaucer says "he stole the bush" (Test. of Cresseide). Another tradition says that the man is Cain, with his dog and thorn bush; the thorn bush being emblematical of the thorns and briars of the fall, and the dog being the "foul fiend." Some poets make out the "man" to be Endymion, taken to the moon by Diana.

The Mountains of the Moon means simply White Mountains. The Arabs call a white horse "moon-coloured."

To aim or level at the moon. To be very ambitious; to aim in shooting at the moon.

To cast beyond the moon. See CAST.

To cry for the moon. To crave for what is wholly beyond one's reach. The allusion is to foolish children who want the moon for a plaything. The French say, "He wants to take the moon between his teeth" (Il veut prendre la lune avec les dents), alluding to the old proverb about "the moon," and a "green cheese."

You have found an elephant in the moon—found a mare's nest. Sir Paul Neal, a conceited virtuoso of the 17th century, gave out that he had discovered "an elephant in the moon." It turned out that a mouse had crept into his telescope, and had been mistaken for an elephant in the moon. Samuel Butler has a satirical poem on the subject called The Elephant in the Moon.

You would have me believe that the moon is made of green cheese—i.e. the most absurd thing imaginable.

You may as soon persuade some Country Peasants, that the Moon is made of Green-Cheese (as we say) as that 'us bigger than his Cart-wheel.—WILKINS: New World, i (1638).

Moonlighting. Riding after cattle by night in Australia.

Moonshine. A U.S.A. colloquial term for illicitly distilled liquor.

Moor. The word comes from Gr. and Lat. Mauros, an inhabitant of Mauretania (q.v.). In the Middle Ages, the Europeans called all Mohammedans Moors, in the same manner as the Eastern nations called all inhabitants of Europe Franks. Camoëns, in the Lusiad (Bk. viii), gives the name to the Indians.

Moor-slayer or Mata-moros. A name given to St. James, the patron saint of Spain, because, as the legends say, in encounters with the Moors he came on his white horse to the aid of the Christians.

Moot. In Anglo-Saxon times, the assembly of freemen in a township, tithing, etc. Cp. WITENAGEMOT. In legal circles the name is given to the students' debates on supposed cases which formerly took place on the halls of Inns of Court. The benchers and the barristers, as well as the students, took an active part. In a few towns, e.g. Aldeburgh, Suffolk, the town hall is still called the Moot Hall.

Hence, moot case or moot point, a doubtful or unsettled question, a case that is open to debate.

Mop. A statute fair at which servants seek to be hired. Carters fasten to their hats a piece of whipcord; shepherds, a lock of wool; grooms, a piece of sponge; and others a broom, pail, or mop, etc. When hired a cockade with streamers is mounted. The origin of the name—which was in use in the 17th century—is not certain, but is probably an allusion to the mops carried by domestics.

Mop. One of Queen Mab's attendants.

All mops and brooms. Intoxicated.

Mops and mows. Grimaces; here mop is connected with the Dutch mopken, to pout.

Moral. The moral Gower. John Gower (c. 1325-1408), the poet, is so called by Chaucer (Troilus and Criseyde, v, 1, 1856).

Father of moral philosophy. St. Thomas Aquinas (1227-74).

Morality Play. An allegorical dramatic form in vogue from the 14th to the 16th centuries in which the vices and virtues were personified and the victory of the last clearly established. One of the best known morality plays was Everyman, a 15th-century English play translated from the Dutch Elckerlyk.

Moran's Collar. In Irish folk-tale, the collar of Moran, the wise councillor of Feredach the Just, an early king of Ireland, before the Christian era, which strangled the wearer if he deviated from the strict rules of equity.

Moratorium (mor à tôr' i ùm) (Lat. morari, to delay). A legal permission to defer for a stated time the payment of a bond, debt, or other obligation. This is done to enable the debtor to pull himself round by borrowing money, selling effects, or otherwise raising funds to satisfy obligations. The device was adopted in 1891 in South America during the panic caused by the Baring Brothers' default of some twenty millions sterling, and the word came into popular use during World War I, and afterwards in connexion with the inability of Germany to pay to date the stated amount due as reparations under the Treaty of Versailles.

In Great Britain, on Aug. 6th, 1914, a moratorium was proclaimed giving the banks power to retain certain sums credited to them and putting off the payment of Bills of Exchange and other debts for a month; this was later extended to Oct. 4th, and a partial renewal to assist certain interests was allowed to Nov. 4th.

Moravians (mo ră' vi ănz). A religious community tracing its origin to John Huss (see BOHEMIAN BRETHREN), expelled by persecution from Bohemia and Moravia in the 17th century. They are often called The Bohemian Brethren.

More. More or less. Approximately; in round numbers; as "It is ten miles, more or less, from here to there," i.e. it's about ten miles.

The more one has, the more he desires. In French, Plus il en a, plus il en veut. In Latin, Quo plus habent, eo plus cupiunt.

My more having would be a source
To make me hunger more.

Macbeth, iv, 3.

The more the merrier, the fewer the better cheer, or fare. The proverb is found in Ray's Collection (1742), and in Heywood's (1548).

To be no more. To exist no longer; to be dead.

Cassius is no more.

Julius Cæsar.

More of More Hall. See WANTLEY, DRAGON OF.

Morgan le Fay (môr' gân le fâ). The fairy sister of King Arthur; one of the principal characters in Arthurian romance and in Celtic legend generally; also known as Morgane and (especially in Orlando Furioso) as Morgana (see FATA MORGANA).

In the Arthurian legends it was Morgan le Fay who revealed to the King the intrigues of Lancelot and Guinevere. She gave him a cup containing a magic draught, and Arthur had no sooner drunk it than his eyes were opened to the perfidy of his wife and friend.

In Orlando Furioso she is represented as living at the bottom of a lake, and dispensing her treasures to whom she liked; and in Orlando Innamorato, she first appears as "Lady Fortune," but subsequently assumes her witch-like attributes. In Tasso her three daughters, Morganetta, Nivetta, and Carvilia, are introduced.

In the romance of Ogier the Dane Morgan le Fay receives Ogier in the Isle of Avalon when he is over one hundred years old, restores him to youth, and becomes his bride.

Morganatic Marriage (môr gân ât' ik). A marriage between a man of high (usually royal) rank and a woman of inferior station, by virtue of which she does not acquire the husband's rank and neither she nor the children of the marriage are entitled to inherit his title or possessions; often called a "left-handed marriage" (q.v.) because the custom is for the man to pledge his troth with his left hand instead of the right. George William, Duke of Zell, married Eleanor d'Esmeirs in this way, and she took the name and title of Lady of Harburg; her daughter was Sophia Dorothea, the wife of George I. An instance of a morganatic marriage in the British Royal Family is that of George, Duke of Cambridge (1819-1904), cousin of Queen Victoria, who married morganatically in 1840. His children took the surname Fitz-George.

The word comes from the mediæval Latin phrase matrimonium ad morganaticam, the last word representing the O.H.Ger. morgan geba, morning-gift, from husband to wife on the morning after the consummation of the marriage, hence the wife's only claim to her husband's possessions.

Morgane; Morganetta. See MORGAN LE FAY.

Morgante Maggiore (môr gân' te mâ jôr' è). A serio-comic romance in verse, by Pulci of Florence (1485). The characters had appeared previously in many of the old romances; Morgante is a ferocious giant, converted by Orlando (the real hero) to Christianity. After performing the most wonderful feats, he dies at last from the bite of a crab.

Pulci was practically the inventor of this species of poetry, called by the French bernesque, from Berni, who greatly excelled in it.

Morgiana (môr ji ăn' à). The clever, faithful, female slave of Ali Baba, who pries into the forty jars, and discovers that every jar, but one contains a man. She takes oil from the only one containing it, and, having made it boiling hot, pours enough into each jar to kill the thief concealed there. At last she kills the captain of the gang, and marries her master's son. (Arabian Nights; Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves.)

Morgue (môrg). A mortuary, a building, especially that in Paris, where the bodies of persons found dead are exposed to view so that people may come and identify them. The origin of the name is unknown; it does not seem to be connected in any way with mors, death, and is probably the same word as morgue, meaning of stately or haughty mien. It was formerly applied to prison vestibules, where new criminals were placed to be scrutinized, that the prison officials might become familiar with their faces and general appearance.

On me conduit donc au petit chastelet, ou du guichet étant passé dans la morgue, un homme gros, court, et carré, vint à moy.—ASSOUCY: La Prison de M. Dassouch (1674), p. 35.

Morgue. Endroit où l'on tient quelque temps ceux que l'on écroue, afin que les guichetiers puissent les reconnaître ensuite.—Fleming and Tibbins, vol. ii, p. 688.

Morgue la Faye. The form taken by the name Morgan le Fay (q.v.) in Ogier the Dane.

Morley, Mrs. The name under which Queen Anne corresponded with "Mrs. Freeman" (Sarah Churchill, Duchess of Marlborough).

Mormonism. The religious and social system of the Mormons, or Latter-day Saints; largely connected in the minds of most people with the practice of polygamy, which became part of the Mormon code in 1852, but is now a diminishing—if not vanished—quantity. Hence the phrase a regular Mormon, for a flighty person who cannot keep to one wife or sweetheart.

The fraternity takes its name from The Book of Mormon, or Golden Bible, which is alleged to have been written on golden plates by the angel Mormon, but was possibly abstracted from a romance (1811) by the Rev. Solomon Spaulding (1761-1816). Joseph Smith (1805-44), adapted this and claimed it as a direct revelation. Smith was born in Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, and founded the denomination in 1830. He was cited thirty-nine times into courts of law, and was at last assassinated by a gang of ruffians while in prison at Carthage, Ill. His successor was Brigham Young (1801-77), a carpenter, who led the "Saints," driven from home by force, to the valley of the Salt Lake, 1,500 miles distant, generally called Utah, but by the Mormons themselves Deseret (Bee-country), the New Jerusalem, where they have been settled, despite many disputes with the United States Government, since 1848.

The Mormons accept the Bible as well as the Book of Mormon as authoritative, they hold the doctrines of repentance and faith (putting a curious construction on the latter); and they believe in baptism, the Eucharist, the physical resurrection of the dead, and in the Second Coming, when Christ will have the seat of His power in Utah. Marriage may be either for time or for eternity; in the latter case consummation is unnecessary, for the man and the wife or wives he has taken in this way will spend the whole of the afterlife together; in the former case the rite is gone through solely that the community may be increased and multiplied.

Morning. The first glass of whisky drunk by Scottish fishermen in salutation to the dawn. One fisherman will say to another, "Hae ye had your morning, Tam?"

Morning Star, The. Byron's name for Mary Chaworth, his charming neighbour at Newstead, with whom he was in love early in his life.

Morning Star of the Reformation. John Wyclif (1324-84).

Morocco (mò rok' ò). Strong ale made from burnt malt, used in the annual feast at Levens Hall, Westmorland (the seat of Sir Alan Desmond Bagot), on the opening of Milnthorpe Fair. It is put into a large glass of unique form, and the person whose turn it is to drink is called the "coit." He has to "drink the constable," i.e. stand on one leg and say "Luck to Levens as long as Kent flows," then drain the glass or forfeit one shilling. See also MAROCCO.

Morocco men. Men who, about the end of the 18th century, used to visit public-houses touting for illegal lottery insurances. Their rendezvous was a tavern in Oxford Market, at the Oxford St. end of Great Portland Street.

Morpheus (môr' füs). Ovid's name for the son of Sleep, and god of dreams; so called from Gr. morphe, form, because he gives these airy nothings their form and fashion. Hence the name of the narcotic, morphine, or morphia.

Morrice, Gil (or Childe). The hero of an old Scottish ballad, a natural son of an earl and the wife of Lord Barnard, and brought up "in the gude grene wode." Lord Barnard, thinking the Childe to be his wife's lover, slew him with a broad-sword, and setting his head on a spear gave it to "the meanest man in a' his train" to carry to the lady. When she saw it she said to the baron, "Wi' that same spear, O pierce my heart, and put me out o' pain"; but the baron replied, "Enouch of blood by me's bin spilt, sair, sair I rew the deid," adding—

I'll ay lament for Gil Morrice,
As gin he were mine ain;
I'll neir forget the dreiry day
On which the youth was slain.

Percy's Reliques, ser. iii, 1.

Percy says this pathetic tale suggested to Home the plot of his tragedy, Douglas.

Morris Dance. A dance, popular in England in the 15th century and later, in which the dancers usually represented characters from the Robin Hood stories (see MAID MARIAN). Other stock characters were Friar Tuck, Bavarian the fool, hobby horse and foreigners, probably Moors or Moriscos. It was brought from Spain in the reign of Edward III, and was originally a military dance of the Moors, or Moriscos—hence its name.

Morse Code. A system of sending messages by telegraph, heliograph, flags, etc., invented in 1835 by the American S. F. B. Morse (1791-1872). Each letter, figure, and punctuation mark is represented by dots, dashes, or a combination of them; thus dot, dash (.-) stands for a, dash, dot, dot, dot (---.) for b, a single dot for e, four dots and a dash (....-) for d, etc. The first message in Morse code was sent May 24th, 1844, from Washington to New York, reading, "What hath God wrought?" In visual signalling a short flash or a rapid dip of the flag corresponds with the dot, and a long or slow with the dash.

Mortal. A mortal sin. A "deadly" sin, one which deserves everlasting punishment; opposed to venial.

Earth trembled from her entrails, . . . some sad drops wept at completing of the mortal Sin Original; while Adam took no thought.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, ix, 1003.

In slang and colloquial speech the word is used to express something very great—as "He's in a mortal funk," "There was a mortal lot of people there," or as an emphatic expletive—"You can do any mortal thing you like."

Mortar. Originally a short gun with a large bore for throwing bombs. Said to have been used at Naples in 1435; first made in England in 1543. To-day mortars take the form of a long smooth-bored pipe which throws a bomb with a high trajectory with extreme accuracy.

Mortar-board. A college cap surmounted by a square "board" covered with black cloth. The word is possibly connected with Fr. mortier, the cap worn by the ancient kings of France, and still used officially by the chief justice or president of the court of justice, but is more likely an allusion to the small square board on which a bricklayer carries his mortar—frequently balanced on his head.

Morte d'Arthur, Le (môrt dar' thêr) (see Arthurian romances), was compiled by Sir Thomas Malory from French originals, and printed by Caxton in 1485. It contains—

The Prophecies of Merlin.

The Quest of the St. Graal.

The Romance of Sir Lancelot of the Lake.

The History of Sir Tristram; etc., etc.

Tennyson's Morte d'Arthur gives a poetic version of some of these poems, not always following the originals and rarely preserving their mediæval atmosphere.

Morther. See MAUTHER.

Mortimer. Fable has it that this family name derives from an ancestor in crusading times, noted for his exploits on the shores of the Dead Sea (De Mortuo Mari). Fact, however, is not so romantic. De Mortemer was one of William the Conqueror's knights and is mentioned in the Roll of Battle Abbey; he was tenant in chief of Mortemer, a township in Normandy.

Mortmain (môrt' mân) (O.Fr., Lat. mortua manus, dead hand). A term applied to land that was held inalienably by ecclesiastical or other corporations. In the 13th century it was common for persons to make over their land to the Church and then to receive it back as tenants, thus escaping their feudal obligations to the king. In 1279 the Statute of Mortmain prohibiting grants of land to the "dead hand" of the Church was passed.

Morton's Fork. John Morton (c. 1420-1500), Cardinal Archbishop of Canterbury, introduced a plan for increasing the royal revenues, in the time of Henry VII, so arranged that nobody should escape. Those who were rich were forced to contribute on the ground that they could well afford it, those who lived without display on the ground that their economies must mean that they were saving money.

Mortstone. A rock of Morte Point, Devon.

He may remove Mortstone. A Devonshire proverb, said incredulously of husbands who pretend to be masters of their wives. It also means, "If you have done what you say, you can accomplish anything."

Morven (môr' ven). The Scottish mainland over the sound from Mull. Much mentioned in the Ossian legends.

Moses. The horns of Moses' face. Moses is conventionally represented with horns, owing to a blunder in translation. In Ex. xxxiv, 29, 30, where we are told that when Moses came down from Mount Sinai "the skin of his face shone," the Hebrew for this shining may be translated either as "sent forth beams" or "sent forth horns"; and the Vulgate took the latter as correct, rendering the passage—quod cornuta esset facies sua. Cp. Hab. iii, 4, "His brightness was as the light; He had horns [rays of light] coming out of His hand."

Michael Angelo followed the earlier painters in depicting Moses with horns.

Moses boat. U.S.A. A type of boat made at Salisbury, Mass., by a famous boat-builder, Moses Lowell, in the 18th century. Farther south (in the West Indies), it is said to have been a boat of sufficient capacity to take a hog'shead of sugar from shore to ship in one trip.

Moses' rod. The divining-rod (q.v.) is sometimes so called, after the rod with which Moses worked wonders before Pharaoh (Ex. vii, 9), or the rod with which he smote the rock to bring forth water (Ex. xvii, 6).

Moslem or Muslim (moz' lem, müz' lim). A Mohammedan, the pres. part. of Arab. aslama, to be safe or at rest, whence Islam (q.v.). The Arabic plural Moslemin is sometimes used, but Moslems is more common, and in English more correct.

Mosstrooper. A robber, a bandit; applied especially to the marauders who infested the borders of England and Scotland, who encamped on the mosses (A.S. mos, a bog.)

Mother. Properly a female parent (Sansk. mātr, Gr. mētēr, Lat. mater, A.S. mōdor, Ger. mutter, Fr. mère, etc.); hence, figuratively, the source or origin of anything, the head or headquarters of a religious or other community, etc.

Mother Ann, Bunch, Goose, Shipton, etc. See these names.

Mother Carey's chickens. Stormy petrels. Mother Carey is mata cara, dear mother. The French call these birds oiseaux de Notre Dame or aves Sanctæ Mariæ. See Captain Marryat's Poor Jack, where the superstition is fully related.

Mother Carey's Goose. The great black petrel or fulmar of the Pacific.

Mother Carey is plucking her goose. It is snowing. Cp. HULDA. Sailors call falling snow Mother Carey's chickens.

Mother Church. The Church considered as the central fact, the head, the last court of appeal in all matters pertaining to conscience or religion. St. John Lateran, at Rome (see LATERAN), is known as the Mother and Head of all Churches. Also, the principal or oldest church in a country or district; the cathedral of a diocese.

Mother country. One's native country; or the country whence one's ancestors have come to settle. England is the Mother country of Australia, New Zealand, Canada, etc. The German term is Fatherland.

Mother's Day. In U.S.A. the second Sunday in May is observed as an occasion for each person to remember his mother by some act of grateful affection. In schools Mother's Day is observed on the Friday preceding the above date.

Mothering Sunday. Mid-Lent Sunday, a great holiday, when the Pope blesses the golden rose, children go home to their mothers to feast on "mothering cakes," and "simnel cakes" (q.v.) are eaten. It is said that the day received its appellation from the ancient custom of visiting the "mother church" on that day; but to school-children it always meant a holiday, when they went home to spend the day with their mother or parents.

Mother Earth. When Junius Brutus (after the death of Lucretia) formed one of the deputation to Delphi to ask the Oracle which of the three would succeed Tarquin, the response was, "He who should first kiss his mother." Junius instantly threw himself on the ground, exclaiming, "Thus, then, I kiss thee, Mother Earth," and he was elected consul.

Mother-of-pearl. The inner iridescent layers of the shells of many bivalve molluscs, especially that of the pearl oyster.

Mother-sick. Hysterical. Hysteria in women used to be known as "the mother."

She [Lady Bountiful] cures rheumatisms, ruptures and broken shins in men; green-sickness, obstructions, and fits of the mother in women; the king's evil, . . . etc.—FARQUHAR: The Beaux Stratagem, I, i.

Mother-wit. Native wit, a ready reply; the wit which "our mother gave us."

Mother's meeting. A meeting of mothers held periodically in connexion with some church or denomination, at which the women can get advice or religious instruction, drink tea, gossip, and sometimes do a little needlework. Hence, applied facetiously to any gossiping group of people—men, as well as women.

The Mother of Believers. Among Mohammedans, Ayesha, the second and favourite wife of Mohammed, who was called the "Father of Believers."

The Mother of Cities (Amu-al-Bulud). Balkh is so called.

Mother of Presidents. The State of Virginia.

Does your mother know you're out? A jeering remark addressed to a presumptuous youth or to a simpleton. The phrase is the title of a comic poem published in the Mirror,

April 28th, 1838. It became a catch phrase both in England and in America, and occurs in the Ingoldsby Legends, "Misadventures at Margate."

Oh, mother, look at Dick! Said in derision when someone is showing off, or doing something easy with the idea of being applauded for his skill.

Tied to one's mother's apron-strings. See APRON.

Mother, a stringy, gummy substance, sometimes called mother of vinegar which forms on the surface of a liquor undergoing acetous fermentation, consisting of the bacteria which are causing that fermentation.

Motion. The laws of motion, according to Galileo and Newton.

(1) If no force acts on a body in motion, it will continue to move uniformly in a straight line.

(2) If force acts on a body, it will produce a change of motion proportionate to the force, and in the same direction (as that in which the force acts).

(3) When one body exerts force on another, that other body reacts on it with equal force.

Motley. Men of motley. Licensed fools; so called because of their dress.

Motley is the only wear.

As You Like It, ii, 7.

Motu proprio (mō' tū prop' ri ō) (Lat.). Of one's own motion; of one's own accord. Always applied to a rescript drawn up and issued by the pope on his own initiative without the advice of others, and signed by him.

Mountain. Mountain ash. See ROWAN-TREE.

Mountain dew. Scotch whisky; formerly that from illicit stills hidden away in the mountains.

If the mountain will not come to Mohammed, etc. See MOHAMMED.

The mountain (La Montagne). The extreme democratic party in the French Revolution, the members of which were known as Les Montagnards because they seated themselves on the highest benches of the hall in which the National Convention met. Their leaders were Danton and Robespierre, Marat, St. André, Legendre, Camille Desmoulins, Carnot, St. Just, and Collot d'Herbois, the men who introduced the "Reign of Terror." Extreme Radicals in France are still called Montagnards.

The mountain in labour. A mighty effort made for a small effect. The allusion is to the celebrated line "Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus (Ars Poetica, 139), which Horace took from a Greek proverb preserved by Athenæus.

The story is that the Egyptian King Tachos sustained a long war against Artaxerxes Ochus, and sent to the Lacedæmonians for aid. King Agesilaus went with a contingent, but when the Egyptians saw a little, ill-dressed lame man, they said, "Parturebat mons; formidabat Jupiter; ille vero murem peperit." ("The mountain laboured, Jupiter stood aghast, and a mouse ran out.") Agesilaus replied, "You call me a mouse, but I will soon show you I am a lion."

Creech translates Horace, "The travelling mountain yields a silly mouse"; and Boileau, "La montagne en travail enfante une souris."

The Old Man of the Mountains (Sheikh-al-Jabal). Hassan ben Sabbah, the founder of the Assassins (q.v.), who made his stronghold in the mountain fastnesses of Lebanon. He died in 1124, and in 1256 his dynasty, and nearly all the Assassins, were exterminated by the Tartar prince, Hulaku.

To make mountains of molehills. To make a difficulty of trifles. Arcem ex cloaca facere. The corresponding French proverb is, Faire d'un mouche un éléphant.

Mountebank (mount' e bāngk). A vendor of quack medicines at fairs, etc., who attracts the crowd by doing juggling feats or other antics from the tail of a cart or other raised platform; hence, any charlatan or self-advertising pretender. The bank or bench was the counter on which shopkeepers displayed their goods, and street-vendors used to mount on their bank to patter to the public. The Italian word, from which ours comes, is montabanco, and the French salimbanque.

Mourning (mōrn' ing). Black. To express the privation of light and joy, the midnight gloom of sorrow for the loss sustained. The colour of mourning in Europe; also in ancient Greece and the Roman Empire.

Black and white striped. To express sorrow and hope. The mourning of the South Sea Islanders.

Greyish brown. The colour of the earth, to which the dead return; used for mourning in Ethiopia.

Pale brown. The colour of withered leaves. The mourning of Persia.

Sky blue. To express the assured hope that the deceased has gone to heaven; used in Syria, Armenia, etc.

Deep blue. The colour of mourning in Bokhara, also that of the Romans of the Republic.

Purple and violet. To express royalty, "kings and priests to God." The colour of mourning for cardinals and the kings of France; in Turkey the colour is violet.

White. Emblem of "white-handed hope." Used by the ladies of ancient Rome and Sparta, also in Spain till the end of the 15th century. Henry VIII wore white for Anne Boleyn.

Yellow. The sear and yellow leaf. The colour of mourning in Egypt and in Burma, where also it is the colour of the monastic order. In Brittany, widows' caps among the paysannes are yellow. Anne Boleyn wore yellow mourning for Catherine of Aragon. Some say yellow is in token of exaltation. See also BLACK CAP.

Mournival. See GLEEK.

Mouse. The soul was often supposed in olden times to make its way at death through the mouth of man in the form of some animal, sometimes a pigeon, sometimes a mouse or rat. A red mouse indicated a pure soul; a black mouse, a soul blackened by pollution; a pigeon or dove, a saintly soul.

Exorcists used to drive out evil spirits from the human body, and Harsnet gives several instances of such expulsions in his Popular Impositions (1604).

Mouse is slang for a black eye, and was formerly in common use as a term of endearment. Similar terms from animals are, bird or birdie, duckie, and lamb. "You little monkey" is an endearing reproof to a child. Dog and pig are used in a bad sense, as "You dirty dog"; "You filthy pig." Brave as a lion, surly as a bear, crafty as a fox, proud as a peacock, fleet as a hare, and several phrases of a like character are in common use.

"God bless you, mouse," the bridegroom said,
And smakt her on the lips.

WARNER: Albion's Eng., p. 17.

It's a bold mouse that nestles in the cat's ear. Said of one who is taking an unnecessary risk. An old proverb, given by Herbert (1639).

Poor as a church mouse. See POOR.

The mouse that hath but one hole is quickly taken. Have two strings to your bow. The proverb appears in Herbert's Collection (1639), and is found in many European languages. In Latin it was Mus non uni fidet antro, the mouse does not trust to one hole.

When the cat's away the mice will play. See CAT.

Mouse Tower, The. A mediæval watch-tower on the Rhine, near Bingen, so called because of the tradition that Archbishop Hatto (q.v.) was there devoured by mice. The tower, however, was built by Bishop Siegfried, two hundred years after the death of Hatto, as a toll-house for collecting the duties upon all goods which passed by. The German maut means "toll," (mouse is maus), and the similarity of the words together with the great unpopularity of the toll on corn gave rise to the tradition.

Mouth. Down in the mouth. See DOWN.

His mouth was made. He was trained or reduced to obedience, like a horse trained to the bit.

At first, of course, the fireworker showed fight . . . but in the end "his mouth was made," his paces formed, and he became a very serviceable and willing animal.—LE FANU: House in the Churchyard, ch. xcix.

That makes my mouth water. The fragrance of appetizing food excites the salivary glands. The phrase means—that makes me long for or desire it.

Hold your mouth! A rougher equivalent of "hold your tongue!"; keep silent.

To laugh on the wrong side of one's mouth. See LAUGH.

To mouth one's words. To talk affectedly or pompously; to declaim.

He mouths a sentence as curs mouth a bone.

CHURCHILL: The Rosciad, 322.

To open one's mouth wide. To name too high a price; to strain after too big a prize.

Moutons (moo' tong). Revenons à nos moutons (Fr.). Literally "Let us come back to our sheep," but used to express "let us return to the subject." The phrase is taken from the 14th-century French comedy La Farce de Maître Pathelin, or l'Avocat Pathelin (line 1282), in which a woollen-draper charges a shepherd with ill-treating his sheep. In telling his story he kept for ever running away from his subject; and to throw discredit on the defendant's attorney (Pathelin), accused him of stealing a piece of cloth. The judge had to pull him up every moment, with "Mais, mon ami, revenons à nos moutons." The phrase is frequently quoted by Rabelais. See PATELIN: SANS SOUCI.

Move. Give me where to stand, and I will move the world. So said Archimedes of Syracuse; and the instrument he would have used is the lever.

The first movable. See PRIMUM MOBILE.

To move the adjournment of the House (i.e. the House of Commons). To bring forward a motion of adjournment, which can only be done in certain special circumstances. This is the only method by which the rules of the House allow a member to bring up, without notice, business which is not on the order paper.

To move the previous question. See QUESTION.

Mow (mō). The three mows in English are altogether different words, though spelt alike. Mow, a heap of hay, etc. ("the barley-mow") is A.S. māga, connected with Icel. múge, a swath. Mow to cut down grass, corn, and so on, is A.S. māwan, connected with Ger. māhen, Gr. amān, and Lat. mēlere, to reap; and Mow a grimace (in "mops and mows," q.v.) is Fr. moue, a pout or grimace.

Much. The miller's son in the Robin Hood stories. In the morris-dances he played the part of the Fool, and his great feat was to bang the head of the gaping spectators with a bladder of peas.

Much Ado about Nothing. Shakespeare's comedy, named from a proverbial saying of the time, and with only the slightest relevance to the plot, was probably written in 1599, and was published in 1600.

The story first appears (about 1550) in Bandello's Novelle (No. xxi), where the slandered heroine is Fenicia, and a French translation of this was given in Belleforest's Les Histoires Tragiques (1559), with which Shakespeare was well acquainted. Ariosto also, calling the injured bride Ginevra and her lover Ariodante, used the story in his Orlando Furioso (canto v), and it appears again in Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, iv), where Clari-bell is the name of the heroine. A lost play called A Historie of Ariodante and Ginevra was given at Court by the boys of Merchant Taylors' School in 1583; this may have formed the groundwork of Shakespeare's comedy, but many of the episodes—especially those in which Dogberry and the rustic watchmen are concerned—bear all the marks of originality.

Muckle. Many a mickle makes a muckle. See under LITTLE.

Muff. A person who is awkward at outdoor sports, or who is effeminate, dull, or stupid; probably so called as a sneering allusion to the use of muffs to keep one's hands warm. The term does not seem to be older than the early part of last century, but there is a Sir Henry Muff in Dudley's interlude, The Rival Candidates (1774), a stupid, blundering dolt, who is not only unsuccessful at the election, but finds that his daughter has engaged herself during his absence.

Muffins and Crumpets. Muffins is probably pain-moufflet, soft bread. Du Cange describes the pamis mofietus as bread of a more delicate nature than ordinary, for the use of prebends, etc., and says it was made fresh every day. Crumpets is a word of ancient but unknown origin. Crumpet is also slang for the head—I caught him one on the crumpet—I gave him a blow on the head.

Mufti (mūf' tī). An Arabic word meaning an official expounder of the Koran and Mohammedan law; but used in English to denote civil, as distinguished from military or official costume. Our meaning dates from the early 19th century, and probably arose from the resemblance that the flowered dressing-gown and tasseled smoking-cap worn by officers at that time when in their quarters off duty bore to the stage get-up of an Eastern mufti.

Mug. This word, used as slang for a face, is of obscure origin, possibly coming from the gypsy meaning a simpleton or muff. To mug up, meaning to study hard for a specific purpose, e.g. to pass an examination, is an old university phrase; it has been suggested that it comes from the theatre where an actor, while making up his face or "mug," would hurriedly con over his words.

Mug-house. An ale-house was so called in the 18th century where some hundred persons assembled in a large tap-room to drink, sing, and spout. One of the number was made chairman. Ale was served to the guests in their own mugs, and the place where the mug was to stand was chalked on the table.

Muggins. Slang for a fool or simpleton—a Jiggins is the same thing; also for a pettifogging magnate, a village leader. Muggins is a surname, and those bearing it sometimes like to hear it pronounced mū' ginz.

Muggletonian (mūg el tō' nī ān). A follower of Lodovic Muggleton (1609-98), a journeyman tailor, who, about 1651, set up for a prophet. He was sentenced for blasphemous writings to stand in the pillory, and was fined £500. The members of the sect—which maintained a sort of existence till about 1865—believed that their two founders, Muggleton and John Reeve, were the "two witnesses" spoken of in Rev. xi, 3.

Mugwump (mūg' wūmp). An Algonquin word meaning a chief; in Eliot's Indian Bible the word "centurion" in the Acts is rendered mugwump. It is now applied in the United States to independent members of the Republican party, those who refuse to follow the dictum of a caucus, and all political Pharisees whose party vote cannot be relied on.

"I suppose I am a political mugwump," said the Englishman. "Not yet," replied Mr. Reed. "You will be when you have returned to your allegiance."—The Liverpool Echo, July 19th, 1886.

Mulatto (mūlāt' ō) (Span., from mulo, a mule). The offspring of a negress by a white man; loosely applied to any halfbreed. Cp. CREOLE.

Mulberry. Fable has it that the fruit was originally white, and became blood-red from the blood of Pyramus and Thisbe (se PYRAMUS). The botanical name is Morus, from the Greek moros (a fool); so called, we are told in the Hortus Anglicus, because "it is reputed the wisest of all flowers, as it never buds till the cold weather is past and gone." Ludovic Sforza, who prided himself on his prudence, chose a mulberry-tree for his device, and was called "Il Moro."

In the Seven Champions (Pt. i, ch. iv) Eglantine, daughter of the King of Thessaly, was transformed into a mulberry-tree.

Here we go round the mulberry bush. An old game in which children take hands and dance round in a ring, singing a song of which this is the refrain.

In World War II Mulberry was the code name given to the engineering feat of making a pre-fabricated port and towing it across to the Normandy coast to make possible the supply of the Allied armies in France in 1944. Submersible sections of concrete formed a breakwater and quay alongside which the transports were tied up for the stores to be unloaded. The name was chosen because at the time it was the next in rotation on the British Admiralty's list of names available for war ships.

Mulciber (mül'si ber). A name of Vulcan (q.v.) among the Romans; it means the softener, because he softened metals.

Round about him [Mammon] lay on every side
Great heaps of gold that never could be spent:
Of which some were rude ore, not purified
Of Mulciber's devouring element.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, II, vii, 5.

Mule. The offspring of a male ass and a mare, hence, a hybrid between other animals (or plants), as a mule canary, a cross between a canary and a goldfinch. The offspring of a stallion and a she-ass is not, properly speaking, a mule, but a hinny.

Very stubborn or obstinate people are sometimes called mules, in allusion to the well-known characteristic of the beast; and the spinning-mule was so called because it was—a kind of mixture of machinery between the warp-machine of Mr. Arkwright and the woof-machine or hand-jenny of Mr. Hargrave.—Encyc. Britannica, 1797.

To shoe one's mule. To appropriate moneys committed to one's trust.

He had the keeping and disposall of the moneys, and yet shod not his own mule.—History of Francion (1655).

Mull. To make a mull of a job is to fail to do it properly. It is either a contraction of muddle, or from the old verb to mull, to reduce to powder.

Among Anglo-Indians members of the service in the Madras Presidency were known as Mulls. Here the word stands for mulligatawny.

Mulla. The Bard of Mulla's silver stream. So Spenser was called by Shenstone, because at one time his home in Ireland was on the banks of the Mulla, or Awbeg, a tributary of the Blackwater.

Mulmutine Laws (mül' mū tīn). The code of Dunvallo Mulmutus, the sixteenth legendary King of the Britons (about 400 B.C.), son of Cloten, King of Cornwall. It is said to have been translated by Gildas from British into Latin, and to have formed the basis of King Alfred's code, which obtained in England till the Conquest. (Holnshed: History of England, iii, 1.)

Mulmutus made out laws,
Who was the first of Britain which did put
His brows within a golden crown, and called Himself a king. Cymbeline, iii, 1.

Mulready Envelope (mül red' i). An envelope resembling a half-sheet of letter-paper, when folded, having on the front an ornamental design by William Mulready (1786-1863), the artist. When the penny postage envelopes were first introduced (1840), these were the stamped envelopes of the day; they remained in circulation for one year only. They are prized by stamp-collectors.

A set of those odd-looking envelope-things,
Where Britannia (who seems to be crucified) flings
To her right and her left, funny people with wings
Amongst elephants, Quakers, and Catabaw kings,—
And a taper and wax, and small Queen's-heads in packs,
Which, when notes are too big you must stick on their backs. Ingoldsby Legends.

Multipliers. So alchemists, who pretended to multiply gold and silver, were called. An Act was passed (2 Henry IV, c. iv) making the "art of multiplication" felony. In the Canterbury Tales, the Canon's Yeoman (see Prologue to his Tale) says he was reduced to poverty by alchemy, adding: "Lo, such advantage is't to multiply."

Multitude, Nouns of. Dame Juliana Berners, in her Booke of St. Albans (1486), says, in designating companies we must not use the names of multitudes promiscuously, and examples her remark thus:—

"We say a congregacyon of people, a hoost of men, a felyshpyppynge of yeomen, and a bevy of ladies; we must speak of a herde of dere, swannys, cransys, or wrenys, a sege of herons or bytoursys, a muster of peccokes, a watche of nyghtyngales, a flyghte of doves, a claterynge of choughes, a pryde of lyons, a slawthe of beeres, a gagle of geys, a skulke of foxes, a sculle of frerys, a ponitficalyte of prestys, and a superfluyte of nonnes.—Booke of St. Albans (1486).

She adds, that a strict regard to these niceties better distinguishes "gentylmen from ungentylmen," than regard to the rules of grammar, or even to the moral law. (See ASSEMBLAGE, NOUNS OF.)

Multum in parvo (mül 'tüm in par' vō) (Lat.). Much "information" condensed into few words or into a small compass.

Mum. A strong beer made in Brunswick; said to be so called from Christian Mumme, by whom it was first brewed in the late 15th century.

Mum's the word. Keep what is told you a profound secret. See MUMCHANCE.

Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum.
2 Henry VI, i, 2.

Mumbudget. An old exclamation meaning "Silence, please"; perhaps from a children's game in which silence was occasionally necessary. Cp. BUDGET, CRY; and MUMCHANCE, below.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled?
Nor did I ever winch or grudge it,
For thy dear sake. Quoth she, Mumbudget.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, iii, 208.

Mumchance. Silence. Mumchance was a game of chance with dice, in which silence was indispensable. Mum is connected with mumble (Ger. mummeln; Dan. mumle, to mumble). Cp. MUMBUDGET.

And fro "mumchance," howe'er the chance may fall,
You must be mum for fear of spoiling all.

Machiavelli's Dogg.

Mumbo Jumbo (müm' bō jüm' bō). The name given by Europeans (possibly from some lost native word) to a boggy or grotesque idol venerated by certain African tribes; hence, any object of blind and unreasoning worship.

Mungo Park in his Travels in Africa says that Mumbo Jumbo is not an idol, any more than the American Lynch, but merely one disguised to punish unruly wives. It not infrequently happens that a house which contains many wives becomes unbearable. In such a case, either the husband or an agent disguises himself as "Mumbo Jumbo" and comes at dusk with a following, making the most hideous noises possible. When the women have been sufficiently scared, "Mumbo" seizes the chief offender, ties her to a tree, and scourges her, amidst the derision of all present.

Mummer. A contemptuous name for an actor; from the parties that formerly went from house to house at Christmas-time mumming, i.e. giving a performance of St. George and the Dragon and the like, in dumb-show.

Peel'd, patch'd, and piebald, linsey-woolsey brothers.
Grave mummies! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

POPE: Dunciad, III, 115.

Mummy is the Arabic mun, wax used for embalming; from the custom of anointing the body with wax and wrapping it in cerecloth.

Mummy wheat. Wheat said to have been taken from ancient Egyptian tombs, which, when sown, fructifies. No seed, however, will preserve its vitality for centuries, and what is called mummy wheat is a species of corn commonly grown on the southern shores of the Mediterranean.

Mumpers. Beggars; from the old slang to mump, to cheat or to sponge on others, probably from Dutch moppen. to cheat. In Norwich, Christmas wails used to be called "Mumpers."

A parcel of wretches hopping about by the assistance of their crutches, like so many Lincoln's Inn Fields mumpers, drawing into a body to attack the coach of some charitable lord.—NED WARD: The London Spy, Pt. v.

Mumping day. St. Thomas's Day, December 21st, is so called in some parts of the country, because on this day the poor used to go about begging, or, as it was called, "a-gooding," that is, getting gifts to procure good things for Christmas.

In Lincolnshire the name used to be applied to Boxing Day (q.v.); in Warwickshire the term used was "going a-corning," i.e. getting gifts of corn.

Mumpsimus. Robert Graves, in Impenetrability, gives this word as an example of the practice of making new words by declaration. With the meaning, "an erroneous doctrinal view obstinately adhered to," mumpsimus was put into currency by Henry VIII in a speech from the throne in 1545. He remarked, "Some be too stiff in their old mumpsimus, others be too busy and curious in their sumpsimus." He referred to a familiar story in the jest-books of a priest who always read in the Mass "quod in ore mumpsimus" instead of "sumpsimus," as his Missal was incorrectly copied. When his mistake was pointed out, he said that he had read it with an m for forty years, "and I will not change my old mumpsimus for your new sumpsimus." The word no longer has its doctrinal meaning, and is now used to mean "an established manuscript-reading that, though obviously incorrect, is retained blindly by old-fashioned scholars."

Munchausen, Baron (mün' chou zen). A traveller who meets with the most marvellous adventures, the hero of a collection of stories by Rudolph Erich Raspe, published in English in 1785. The incidents were compiled from various sources, including the adventures of an actual Hieronymus Karl Friedrich von Münchhausen (1720-97), a German officer in the Russian army, noted for his marvellous stories, Bebel's Facetiae, Castiglione's Cortegiano, Bildermann's Utopia, etc. The book is a satire either on Baron de Tott, or on Bruce, whose Travels in Abyssinia were looked upon as mythical when they first appeared.

Mundane Egg. See EGG.

Mundungus (mün dūng' gūs). Bad tobacco; originally offal, or refuse, from Span. mondongo, black pudding.

In Sterne's Sentimental Journey (1768) the word is used as a name for Samuel Sharp, a surgeon, who published Letters from Italy; and Smollett, who published Travels through France and Italy (1766), "one continual snarl," was called "Smelfungus."

Mungo, St. (mūng' gō). An alternative name for St. Kentigern (q.v.).

A superior kind of shoddy, made from second-hand woollens, is known as mungo.

Munich Pact or Agreement. The pact signed by Germany, France, Great Britain, and Italy on September 29th, 1938, whereby the Sudetenland of Czechoslovakia was ceded to Germany. From this unfortunate act of appeasement the phrase has come to mean any dishonourable appeasement.

Murderer's Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Murrumbidgee Whaler (mū rūm' bi jē). The Australian term for a tramp, the origin of which is obscure. Many derive the term from the fact that tramps camped for long periods by rivers such as the Murrumbidgee and then told lies about the fish or "whales" they had caught. It may be connected more specifically with New South Wales where horses exported to the Indian Army were called "walers."

Muscadins (mūs' kā dinz). Parisian exquisites who aped those of London about the time of the French Revolution. They wore top-boots with thick soles, knee-breeches, a dress-coat with long tails, and a high stiff collar, and carried a thick cudgel called a constitution. It was thought "John Bullish" to assume a huskiness of voice, a discourtesy of manners, and a swaggering vulgarity of speech and behaviour.

Cockneys of London, Muscadins of Paris.

BYRON: Don Juan, viii, 124.

Muscular Christianity. Hearty or strong-minded Christianity, which braces a man to fight the battle of life bravely and manfully. The term was applied to the teachings of Charles Kingsley—somewhat to his annoyance.

It is a school of which Mr. Kingsley is the ablest doctor; and its doctrine has been described fairly and cleverly as "muscular Christianity."—Edinburgh Review, Jan., 1858.

Muses. In Greek mythology the nine daughters of Zeus and Mnemosyne; originally goddesses of memory only, but later identified with individual arts and sciences. The paintings of Herculaneum show all nine in their respective attributes. They are:—

Calliope: the chief of the Muses.

Clio: heroic exploits and history.

Euterpe: Dionysiac music and the double flute

Thalia: gaiety, pastoral life, and comedy.

Melpomene: song, harmony, and tragedy.

Terpsichore: choral dance and song.

Erato: the lyre and erotic poetry.

Polyhymnia: the inspired and stately hymn.

Urania: celestial phenomena and astronomy.

See these names.

Museum. Literally, a home or seat of the Muses. The first building to have this name was the university erected at Alexandria by Ptolemy Soter about 300 B.C.

Mushroom. Slang for an umbrella, on account of the similarity in shape; and as mushrooms are of a very rapid growth, applied figuratively to almost anything that "springs up in the night," as a new, quickly built suburb, an upstart family, and so on. In 1787 Bentham said—somewhat unjustly—"Sheffield is an oak; Birmingham is a mushroom."

To mushroom. To expand into a mushroom shape; said especially of certain soft-nosed rifle-bullets used in big-game shooting, or of a dense cloud of smoke that spreads out high in the sky.

Music. Father of modern music. Mozart (1756-91) has been so called.

Father of Greek music. Terpander (fl. 676 B.C.).

The prince of music. Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (1524-94).

Music hath charms, etc. The opening line of Congreve's Mourning Bride.

Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast,
To soften rocks, or bend a knotted oak.

The allusion is to Orpheus (q.v.), who—

With his lute made trees,

And the mountain tops that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing.

Henry VIII, iii, 1.

And the lines are among those most frequently misquoted in the whole of English poetry, the words "a savage breast" being turned into "the savage beast." James Bramston, in his Man of Taste (1733), wittily substituted for the second line, "And therefore proper at a sheriff's feast."

The music of the spheres. See SPHERES.

To face the music. See FACE.

Musical Notation. See DOH.

Musical Small-coal Man. Thomas Britton (1654-1714), a coal-dealer of Clerkenwell, who established a musical club in a loft over his shop in which all the musical celebrities of the day took part. The club met every Thursday night and was frequented by professional musicians such as Handel, talented amateurs such as Roger L'Estrange, and lovers of music generally.

Father of musicians. Jubal, "the father of all such as handle the harp and organ" (Gen. iv, 21).

Musits or Musets. Gaps in a hedge; places through which a hare makes his way to escape the hounds.

The many musits through the which he goes

Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

SHAKESPEARE: Venus and Adonis.

The passing of the hare through these gaps is termed musung. The word is from O.Fr. muce, a hiding-place.

Muslim. See MOSLEM.

Muslin. So called from Mosul, in Asia, where it was first manufactured (Fr. mousseline, Ital. mussolino).

Mustang (U.S.A.). A wild horse.

Mustard. So called because originally must, new wine (Lat. mustus, fresh, new) was used in mixing the paste. Fable, however, alleges that the name arose because in 1382 Philip the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, granted to the town of Dijon, noted for its mustard, armorial bearings with the motto MOULT ME TARDE 'Multum ardeo, I ardently desire'. The arms and motto, engraved on the principal gate, were adopted as a trade-mark by the mustard merchants, and got shortened into Moul-tarde (to burn much).

Mustard, ground and sifted to a flour, is said to have been the invention of an old Durham woman named Clements, who came to London in 1720 with her concoction, which pleased the palate of George I and hence became popular.

After meat, mustard. Expressive of the sentiment that something that would have been welcome a little earlier has arrived too late, I have now no longer need of it. C'est de la moutarde après dîner.

Mussulman. A Mohammedan, a Moslem (q.v.). The plural is Mussulmans.

Mutantur. See TEMPORA MUTANTUR.

Mute. To stand. An old legal term for a prisoner who, when arraigned for treason or felony, refused to plead or gave irrelevant answers.

Mutton (Fr. mouton, a sheep). In old slang, a prostitute, frequently extended to laced mutton.

Speed: Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me, a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.—SHAKESPEARE: Two Gentlemen of Verona, i, 1.

The old lecher hath gotten holy mutton to him, a Nunne, my lord.—GREENE: Friar Bacon.

It was with this suggestion that Rochester wrote his mock epitaph on Charles II:—

Here lies our mutton-eating king,
Whose word no man relies on;
He never said a foolish thing,
And never did a wise one.

Come and eat your mutton with me. Come and dine with me.

Dead as mutton. Absolutely dead.

Mutton fist. A large, coarse, red fist.

To return to our muttons. To come back to the subject. See MOUTONS.

Mutton Lancers. The Queen's Royal Regiment (West Surrey), the 2nd Foot; raised in 1661. The nickname comes from the regimental badge—the Pascal Lamb bearing a lance.

Mutual Friends. Can people have mutual friends? Strictly speaking no; but since Dickens adopted the solecism in the title of his novel, Our Mutual Friend (1864), many people have objected to the correct term, common friends. Mutual implies reciprocity from one to the other (Lat. mutare, to change); the friendship between two friends should be mutual, but this mutuality cannot be extended to a third party.

A mutual flame was quickly caught,
Was quickly, too, revealed;
For neither bosom lodged a thought
Which virtue keeps concealed.

Edwin and Emma.

Mynheer (mĭn hēr'). The Dutch equivalent for "Mr."; hence, sometimes used for a Dutchman.

'Tis thus I spend my moments here,
And wish myself a Dutch mynheer.

COWPER: To Lady Austin.

Myrmidons of the Law. Bailiffs, sheriffs' officers, and other law servants. Any rough fellow employed to annoy another is the employer's myrmidon.

The Myrmidons were a people of Thessaly who followed Achilles to the siege of Troy, and were distinguished for their savage brutality, rude behaviour, and thirst for rapine.

Myrrha. The mother of Adonis, in Greek legend. She is fabled to have had an unnatural love for her own father, and to have been changed into a myrtle tree.

Myrrhophores (Gr., myrrh bearers). The three Marys who went to see the sepulchre, bearing myrrh and spices (see Mark xvi, 1). In Christian art they are represented as carrying vases of myrrh in their hands.

Myrtle. If you look at a leaf of myrtle in a strong light, you will see that it is pierced with innumerable little punctures. According to fable, Phædra, wife of Theseus, fell in love with Hippolytus, her stepson; and when Hippolytus went to the arena to exercise his horses, Phædra repaid to a myrtle-tree in Træzen to await his return, and beguiled the time by piercing the leaves with a hairpin. The punctures referred to are an abiding memento of this legend.

In Orlando Furioso Astolpho is changed into a myrtle-tree by Acrisia. See also MYRRHA above.

The ancient Jews believed that the eating of myrtle leaves conferred the power of detecting witches; and it was a superstition that if the leaves cracked in the hands the person beloved would prove faithful.

The myrtle which dropped blood. Æneas (Æneid, Bk. iii) is represented as tearing up the myrtle which dropped blood. Polydorus tells us that the barbarous inhabitants of the country pierced the myrtle (then a living being) with spears and arrows. The body of the myrtle took root and grew into the bleeding tree.

Mysterium. The letters of this word which, until the time of the Reformation, was engraved on the Pope's tiara, are said to make up the number 666 (see NUMBER OF THE BEAST). See also Rev. xvii, 5.

Mystery. In English two totally distinct words have been confused here: mystery, the archaic term for a handicraft, as in the art and mystery of printing, is the same as the French métier (trade, craft, profession), and is the M.E. mistere, from mediæval Lat. misterium, ministerium, ministry.

Mystery, meaning something beyond human comprehension, is (through French) from the Lat. mysterium and Gr. mustes, from muen, to close the eyes or lips. It is from this sense that the old miracle-plays, mediæval dramas in which the characters and story were drawn from sacred history, were called Mysteries, though, as they were frequently presented by members of some single guild, or mystery in the handicraft sense, even here the words were confused and opening made for many puns.

The three greater mysteries. In ecclesiastical language, the Trinity, Original Sin, and the Incarnation.

N

N. The fourteenth letter of our alphabet; represented in Egyptian hieroglyph by a water-line (—). It was called nun (a fish) in Phœnician, whence the Greek nu.

N, a numeral. Gr.  $\nu$  = 50, but  $\rho$  = 50,000. N (Lat.) = 90, or 900, but  $\tilde{N}$  = 90,000, or 900,000.

n. The sign  $\sim$  (tilde) over an "n" indicates that the letter is to be pronounced as though followed by a "y," as cañon = canyon. It is used thus almost solely in words from Spanish. In Portuguese the accent (called til) is placed over vowels to indicate that they have a nasal value.

nth, or nsh plus one. The expression is taken from the index of a mathematical formula, where n stands for any number, and n + 1, one more than any number. Hence, n-dimensional, having an indefinite number of dimensions.

n-tuple (on the analogy of quadruple, quintuple, etc.), having an indefinite number of duplications.

n ephelkustic. The Greek nu (ν) added for euphony to the end of a word that terminates with a vowel when the next word in the sentence begins with a vowel.

N or M. The answer given to the first question in the Church of England Catechism; and it means that here the person being catechized gives his or her name or names. Lat. nomen vel nomina. The abbreviation for the plural nomina was—as usual—the doubled initial (cp. “LL.D.” for Doctor of Laws); and this, when printed (as it was in old Prayer Books) in black-letter and close together, nn, came to be taken for fn.

In the same way the N in the marriage-service (“I M. take thee N. to my wedded wife”) merely indicates that the name is to be spoken in each case; but the M. and N. in the publication of banns (“I publish the Banns of Marriage between M. of — and N. of —”) stand for maritus, bridegroom, and nupta, bride.

Nab. Colloquial for to seize suddenly, without warning. (Cp. Norw. and Swed. nappa, Dan., nappe). Hence nabman, a sheriff's officer or police-constable.

AY, but so be if a man's nabbed, you know.

GOLDSMITH: The Good-natured Man.

Nabob (nā' bob). Corruption of the Hindu nawab, plural of naib, a deputy-governor under the Mogul Empire. These men acquired great wealth and lived in splendour; hence, Rich as a nabob came to be applied to a merchant who had attained great wealth in the Indies, and returned to live in his native country.

Nabonassar, Era of (nāb on ās' ār). An era that was in use for centuries by the Chaldean astronomers, and was generally followed by Hipparchus and Ptolemy. It commenced at midday, Wed., Feb. 26th, 747 B.C., the date of the accession of Nabonassar (d. 733 B.C.), as King of Babylonia. The year consisted of 12 months of 30 days each, with 5 complementary days added at the end. As no intercalary day was allowed for, the first day of the year fell one day earlier every four years than the Julian year; consequently, to transpose a date from one era to another it is necessary to know the exact day and month of the Nabonassarian date, and to remember that 1460 Julian years are equal to 1461 Babylonian.

Naboth's Vineyard (nā' both). The possession of another coveted by one able to possess himself of it. (1 Kings xxi.)

Nabu. See NEBO.

Nacelle (nā sel'). This French word meaning a skiff or wherry is applied to the body of an aircraft—aeroplane, glider, or airship—which holds the crew, load, or motors.

Nadir (nād' ir). An Arabic word, signifying that point in the heavens which is directly opposite to the zenith, i.e. directly under our feet; hence, figuratively, the lowest depths of degradation. See also ZENITH.

Nævius. See ACCIUS NÆVIUS.

Nag, Nagging. Constant fault-finding. (A.S. gnag-an, to gnaw, bite.) We call a slight but constant pain, like a toothache, a nagging pain.

Nag's Head Consecration. On the passing of the second Act of Uniformity in Queen Elizabeth's reign (1559), fourteen bishops vacated their sees, and all the other sees, except Llandaff, were at the time vacant. The question was how to obtain consecration so as to preserve the apostolic succession unbroken, as Llandaff refused to officiate at Matthew Parker's consecration as Archbishop of Canterbury. In this dilemma (the story runs) John Scory, the deposed Bishop of London, was sent for, and officiated at the Nag's Head tavern, in Cheapside, thus transmitting the succession. This is the story that was circulated some forty years later by certain Roman Catholics.

Strype refutes it, and so does Dr. Hook. We are told that it was not the consecration which took place at the Nag's Head, but only that those who took part in it dined there subsequently. Bishops Barlow, Scory, Coverdale, and Hodgkins, all officiated at the consecration which was properly performed at Lambeth Palace on December 17th, 1559.

Naiad (nī' ād). Nymph of lake, fountain, river, or stream in classical mythology.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wand'ring brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever-harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.

Tempest, iv, 1.

Nail. The nails with which Our Lord was fastened to the cross were, in the Middle Ages, objects of great reverence. Sir John Mandeville says, “He had two in his hondes, and two in his feet; and of on of theise the emperour of Constantynoble made a brydille to his hors, to bere him in bataylle; and throghe vertue thereof he overcam his enemyes” (c. vii). Fifteen are shown as relics. See IRON CROWN.

In ancient Rome a nail was driven into the wall of the temple of Jupiter every 13th September. This was originally done to tally the year, but subsequently it became a religious ceremony for warding off calamities and plagues from the city. Originally the nail was driven by the prætor maximus, subsequently by one of the consuls, and lastly by the dictator (see Livy, vii, 3).

A somewhat similar ceremony took place in Germany in World War I when patriotic Germans drove nails into a large wooden statue of Field-Marshal Hindenburg, buying each nail in support of a national fund.

A nail was formerly a measure of weight of 8 lb. It was used for wool, hemp, beef, cheese, etc. It was also a measure of length, = 2½ in.

Motto: You shall have . . . a dozen beards, to stuff two dozen cushions.

Licio: Then they be big ones.

Dello: They be halfe a yard broad, and a nayle, three quarters long, and a foote thick.

LYLY: Midas, V, ii (1589).

For want of a nail. “For want of a nail, the shoe is lost; for want of a shoe, the horse is lost; and for want of a horse, the rider is lost." (Herbert: Jacula Prudentum.)

Hard as nails. Stern, hard-hearted, unsympathetic; able to stand hard blows like nails. The phrase is used with both a physical and a figurative sense; a man in perfect training is "as hard as nails," and bigotry, straitlacedness, rigid puritanical pharisaism, make people "hard as nails."

I know I'm as hard as nails already; I don't want to get more so.—EDNA LYALL. Donovan, ch. xxiii.

Hung on the nail. Put in pawn. The custom referred to is the old one of hanging each pawn on a nail, with a number attached, and giving the customer a duplicate thereof.

I nailed him (or it). I pinned him, meaning I secured him. Is. (xxii, 23) says, "I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place."

On the nail. At once; without hesitation; as, "to pay down on the nail."

In O'Keefe's Recollections we are told that in the centre of Limerick Exchange is a pillar with a circular plate of copper about 3 ft. in diameter, called The Nail, on which the earnest of all Stock Exchange bargains has to be paid, there were four pillars called Nails and used for a similar purpose at Bristol; and at the Liverpool Exchange there was a plate of copper called The Nail on which bargains were settled. But the phrase cannot come from any such source, as it was common in England by the 16th century, long before Exchanges were in existence. Cp. SUPERNACULUM.

To drive a nail into one's coffin. See COFFIN.

To hit the nail on the head. To come to a right conclusion. In Latin, Rem tenes.

To nail to the counter. To convict and expose as false or spurious; as, "I nailed that lie to the counter at once." From the custom of shopkeepers nailing to the counter false money that is passed to them as a warning to others.

Tooth and nail. See TOOTH.

With colours nailed to the mast. See COLOURS.

Nail-paring. Superstitious people are very particular as to the day on which they cut their nails. The old rhyme is:—

Cut them on Monday, you cut them for health;
Cut them on Tuesday, you cut them for wealth;
Cut them on Wednesday, you cut them for news;
Cut them on Thursday, a new pair of shoes;
Cut them on Friday, you cut them for sorrow;
Cut them on Saturday, you see your true love to-morrow;
Cut them on Sunday, your safety seek
The devil will have you the rest of the week.

Another rhyme conveys an even stronger warning on the danger of nail-cutting on a Sunday:—

A man had better ne'er be born
As have his nails on a Sunday shorn.

Nain Rouge (nān roozh) (Fr., red dwarf). A lutin or house spirit of Normandy, kind to fishermen. There is another called Le petit homme rouge (the little red man).

Naked. A.S. nacod, a common Teutonic word, connected with Lat. nudus, nude. Destitute of covering; hence, figuratively, defenceless, exposed; without extraneous assistance, as with the naked eye, i.e. without a telescope or other optical aid.

Naked boy, or lady. The meadow saffron (Colchicum autumnale); so called because, like the almond, peach, etc., the flowers come out before the leaves. It is poetically called "the leafless orphan of the year," the flowers being orphaned or destitute of foliage.

The Naked Boy Courts and Alleys, of which there are more than one in the City of London, are named from the public-house sign of Cupid.

The naked truth. The plain, unvarnished truth; truth without trimmings. The fable says that Truth and Falsehood went bathing; Falsehood came first out of the water, and dressed herself in Truth's garments. Truth, unwilling to take those of Falsehood, went naked.

Namby-pamby. Wishy-washy; insipid, weakly sentimental; said especially of authors. It was the nickname of Ambrose Philips (1671-1749), bestowed upon him by Harry Carey, the dramatist, for his verses addressed to Lord Carteret's children, and was adopted by Pope.

Name.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet.

Romeo and Juliet, ii, 2.

Give a dog a bad name. See DOG.

Give it a name. Tell me what it is you would like, said when offering a reward, a drink, etc.

In the name of. In reliance upon; or by the authority of.

Their name liveth for evermore. These consolatory words, so often seen on war memorials are from the Apocrypha:—

Their bodies are buried in peace; but their name liveth for evermore.—Ecclesi. xlv, 14.

To call a person names. To blackguard him by calling him nicknames, or hurling opprobrious epithets at him.

Sticks and stones

May break my bones,

But names can never hurt me.

Old Rhyme.

To name the day. To fix the day of the wedding—which is a privilege belonging to the bride to be.

To take God's name in vain. To use it profanely, thoughtlessly, or irreverently.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.—Exod. xx, 7.

Among all primitive peoples, and the ancient Hebrews were no exception, the name of a deity is regarded as his manifestation, and is treated with the greatest respect and veneration; and among savage tribes there is a widespread feeling of the danger of disclosing one's name, because this would enable an enemy by magic means to work one some deadly injury; the Greeks were particularly careful to disguise or reverse uncomplimentary names (see ERINYES; EUMENIDES; EUXINE).

Nancy, Miss. An effeminate, foppish youth. The celebrated actress, "Mrs." Anne Oldfield (see NARCISSA) was nicknamed "Miss Nancy."

Nancy Boy is applied to a homosexual.

Nankeen. So called from Nankin, in China. It is the natural yellow colour of Nankin cotton.

Nansen (năn'sen). Fridtjof Nansen (1861-1930) was a prominent figure at the close of the 19th and beginning of the present centuries. In 1888-89 he was the first to cross the continent of Greenland, and four years later made an attempt to reach the North Pole in the Fram, reaching the farthest north recorded at that time, 86° 14'. He is now chiefly remembered for the work he did in repatriating prisoners and displaced persons in 1919-20. Under the League of Nations he devised a comprehensive scheme, called the Nansen Scheme, for this purpose which gained international support and did great ameliorative work. For this he received the Nobel Prize in 1922.

Nantes (nântz). Edict of Nantes. The decree of Henri IV of France, published from Nantes in 1598, securing freedom of religion to all Protestants. Louis XIV revoked it in 1685.

Nap. The doze or short sleep gets its name from A.S. hnæppian, to sleep lightly; the surface of cloth is probably so called from Mid. Dutch noppe; and Nap, the card game, is so called in honour of Napoleon III.

To catch one napping. See CATCH.

To go nap. To set oneself to make five tricks (all one can) in the game of Nap; hence, to risk all you have on some venture, to back it through thick and thin.

Naphtha (năf' thă). The Greek name for an inflammable, bituminous substance coming from the ground in certain districts; in the Medea legend it is the name of the drug used by the witch for anointing the wedding robe of Glaucē, daughter of King Creon, whereby she was burnt to death on the morning of her marriage with Jason.

Napier's Bones (nă' pēr). The little slips of bone or ivory invented in 1615 by John Napier of Merchiston (1550-1617). He had, the previous year, invented logarithms, and by the use of these on his strips of ivory, he shortened the labour of trigonometrical calculations. By shifting these rods the result required is obtained.

Napoleon Bonaparte. For all his many glaring faults and ambitions, Napoleon was one of the greatest men modern civilization has produced. Within the short space of 15 years his campaigns and victories changed the aspect of Europe and made him the master of kings and peoples from Spain to the borders of Russia. His influence is felt to this day in the Code Napoleon, the code of laws prepared under his direction, which forms the substance of the laws of France and Belgium and in importance is only second to the code of Justinian. Equality in the eyes of the Law, justice, and common sense may be called its keystones.

Napoleon III. Few men have had so many nicknames.

MAN OF DECEMBER, so called because his coup d'état was December 2nd, 1851, and he was made emperor December 2nd, 1852.

MAN OF SEDAN, and, by a pun, M. Sedantaire. It was at Sedan he surrendered his sword to William I King of Prussia (1870).

MAN OF SILENCE, from his great taciturnity.

COMTE D'ARENENBERG, the name and title he assumed when he escaped from the fortress of Ham.

BADINGUET, the name of the mason who changed clothes with him when he escaped from Ham. The emperor's partisans were called Badingueux, those of the empress were Montijoyeux.

BOUSTRAPA is a compound of Bou[logne], Str[asbourg], and Pa[r]is the places of his noted escapades.

RANTIPOLE, harum-scarum, half-fool and half-madman.

There are some curious numerical coincidences connected with Napoleon III and Eugénie. The last complete year of their reign was 1869. (In 1870 Napoleon was dethroned and exiled.)

Now, if to the year of coronation (1852), you add either the birth of Napoleon, or the birth of Eugénie, or the capitulation of Paris, or the date of marriage, the sum will always be 1869. For example:—

1852	Coro- na- tion.	1852	1852	1852
1	Birth	1	Birth	1
8	of	8	of	8
0	Napo-	2	Eugé-	5
8	leon.	6	nie.	3
			Date	1
			of	Capit-
			mar-	ulat'n
			riage.	of
				1 Paris.
1869		1869		1869

And if to the year of marriage (1853) these dates are added, they will give 1870, the fatal year.

Napoleon of the Ring. James Belcher, the pugilist (1781-1811), who was remarkably like Napoleon in looks.

Napoo (na poo'). Soldier slang introduced during World War I for something that is of no use or does not exist. It represents the French phrase il n'y en a plus, there is no more of it.

Nappy Ale. Strong ale has been so called for many centuries, probably because it contains a nap or frothy head.

Naraka (nar' à kâ). The hell of Hindu mythology. It has twenty-eight divisions, in some of which the victims are mangled by ravens and owls; in others they are doomed to swallow cakes boiling hot, or walk over burning sands.

Narcissa (nar sis' à), in the Night Thoughts, was Elizabeth Lee, Dr. Young's stepdaughter.

In Pope's Moral Essays "Narcissa" stands for the actress, Anne Oldfield (1683-1730). When she died her remains lay in state attended by two noblemen. She was buried in Westminster Abbey in a very fine Brussels lace head-dress, a holland shift, with a tucker and double-ruffles of the same lace, new kid gloves, etc.

"Odious! In woollen? 'Twould a saint provoke!"

Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke.

POPE: Moral Essays, i, 246.

"In woollen" is an allusion to a law enacted for the benefit of the wool trade, that all shrouds were to be made of wool.

Narcissus (nar sis' us). The son of Cephisus in Greek mythology; a beautiful youth who saw his reflection in a fountain, and thought it the presiding nymph of the place. He tried to reach it, and jumped into the fountain, where he died. The nymphs came to take up the body that they might pay it funeral honours, but found only a flower, which they called by his name. (Ovid's Metamorphoses, iii, 346, etc.)

Plutarch says the plant is called Narcissus from the Greek narke (numbness), and that it is properly narcosis, meaning the plant which produces numbness or palsy.

Echo fell in love with Narcissus.

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen . . .
Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair,
That liketh thy Narcissus are?

MILTON: Comus, 235.

Narcissism is the psychoanalytical term for sexual excitement through admiration of one's own body.

Nark. A police spy or informer; from a Romany word nak, a nose, on the analogy of Nosey Parker.

Narrowdale Noon. To defer a matter till Narrowdale noon is to defer it indefinitely. Narrowdale is the local name for the narrowest part of Dovedale, Derbyshire, in which dwell a few cottagers, who never see the sun all the winter, and when its beams first pierce the dale in the spring it is only for a few minutes in the afternoon.

Nary. U.S.A. colloquial expression for "never" or "never a"; as in "They take everything, and nary dollar do you get." Nary a red is "never a red cent."

Naseby (nāz' bi). Fable has it that this town in Northamptonshire is so called because it was considered the navel (A.S. nafela) or centre of England, just as Delphi (q.v.) was considered "the navel of the earth." Fact, however, must destroy the illusion: the town's name in Domesday Book is Navesberi, showing that it was the burgh or dwelling of Hnæf, a Dane.

Naso (nā' zō). Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso, 43 B.C.-A.D. 18), the Roman poet, author of Metamorphoses. Naso means "nose," hence Holofernes' pun; "And why Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy." (Shakespeare: Love's Labour's Lost, iv, 2.)

Natheless (nāth' les). An archaic form of nevertheless.

Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.

Natheless he so endured.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, i.

National Anthem. It is said by some that both the words and music of "God save the Queen," the British national anthem, were composed by Dr. John Bull (d. 1628), organist at Antwerp cathedral 1617-28, where the original MS. is still preserved. Others attribute them to Henry Carey, author of Sally in our Alley. The words, "Send her victorious," etc., look like a Jacobite song, and Sir John Sinclair tells us he saw that verse cut in an old glass tankard, the property of P. Murray Threpland, of Fingask Castle, whose predecessors were staunch Jacobites.

No doubt the words have often been altered. The air and opening words were probably suggested by the Domine Salvum of the Catholic Church. In 1605 the lines, "Frustrate their knavish tricks," etc., were perhaps added in reference to Gunpowder Plot; and in 1740

Henry Carey reset both words and music for the Mercers' Company on the birthday of George II.

The National Anthems or principal patriotic songs of the leading nations follow:—

Argentina: Oid mortales, el grito sagrado Libertad.

Australia: Advance Australia.

Austria: (Republic) Osterreichische Bundes-hymne. (Nazi) Lied der Jugend.

Belgium: The Brabançonne (q.v.).

Brazil: Ouviram do Ypiranga as margens placidas.

Canada: The Maple Leaf Forever. (French) O Canada terre de nos aïeux.

Chile: Dulce patria.

Denmark: The Song of the Danebrog (see DANEBROG); Kong Christian stod ved høien Mast, Røg og Damp (King Christian stood beside the lofty mast, In mist and smoke).

Eire: Let Erin remember the days of old.

France: The Marseillaise (q.v.).

Germany: Deutschland über alles (Germany over all), and Die Wacht am Rhein (The watch—or guard—on the Rhine). (Nazi) Horst Wessel Lied.

Greece: Se gnorizo apo ten kopsi tu spati'iu ten tromere.

Holland: Wien Neerlandsch bloed in de aders vloeit, Van vreemde smetten vrij . . . (Let him in whose veins flows the blood of the Netherlands, free from an alien strain . . .)

Italy: (Kingdom) Marcia Reale; (Fascist) Giovinetza; (Republic) Garibaldi's Hymn.

Mexico: Mexicanos al grito guerra.

New Zealand: God defend New Zealand.

Norway: Ja, vi elsker det te Landet som det stiger frem (Yes, we love our country, just as it is).

Peru: Somos libros, seamos lo siempre.

Portugal: Heiros do mar.

Russia: (1917-44) The Internationale; (since 1944) Gymn Sovietskogo Soiuza.

Scotland: Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled.

South Africa: Die Stem van Suid-Afrika.

Spain: Marcha grandera.

Sweden: Du gamla du friska, du fjellhog Nord, Du tysta, du glädjrika sköna! (Thou ancient, free, and mountainous North! Thou silent, joyous, and beautiful North!)

Switzerland: Rufst du, mein Vaterland. Sieh uns mit Herz und Hand, All dir geweiht! (Thou call'st, my Fatherland! Behold us, heart and hand, all devoted to thee!)

The United States: The Star-spangled Banner. See STARS AND STRIPES.

Wales: Mae hen wlad fy nhadau (Land of my fathers); also Men of Harlech.

National Colours. (See COLOURS.)

National Convention. The assembly of deputies which assumed the government of France on the overthrow of the throne in 1792. It succeeded the National Assembly (cp. CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY).

National Debt. Money borrowed by a Government, on the security of the taxes, which are pledged to the lenders for the payment of interest. The portion of our National Debt which is converted into bonds or annuities is known as the Funded Debt, and the portion that is repayable at a stated time or on demand as the Floating Debt.

The National Debt in William III's reign was £15,730,439.

At the commencement of the American war, £128,583,635.

At the close thereof, £249,851,628.

At the close of the French war, £840,850,491.

The existence of National Debts is almost entirely due to wars, as the following figures will show in the case of the British Debt.

Just before the Revolution of 1688 it stood at £664,263; the Revolution added nearly £16,000,000; the Marlborough campaigns in Queen Anne's reign added nearly £38,000,000, the American War, in George III's, £121,000,000, and the Napoleonic Wars (1793-1816) over £600,000,000, bringing the total debt in 1816 to £900,436,000. At Queen Victoria's accession (1837) this had been reduced to £788,000,000; the Crimean War added £33,000,000, and thereafter reductions were made annually (with only five exceptions) till 1899, the year of the outbreak of the Boer War, when the Debt stood at £628,021,572. This war added over £160,000,000, but from 1904 to the outbreak of World War I reductions were made annually (with one exception), so that in 1914 the Debt was £651,270,091. On March 31st, 1951, the British National Debt stood at £26,000,000,000.

National Guard. Military forces raised in each State but partly trained, equipped and quartered by the U.S.A. Federal government. When called up by the President these forces become an integral part of the armed forces.

Nations, Battle of the. A name given to the great battle of Leipzig in the Napoleonic wars (Oct. 16th-19th, 1813), when the French under Napoleon were defeated by the coalition armies, consisting of the Prussians, Russians, Austrians, and Swedes.

Native (Lat., nativus, produced by birth, natural). In feudal times, one born a serf. After the Conquest, the natives were the serfs of the Normans. Wat Tyler said to Richard II:

The first peticion was that he scholde make alle men fre thro Ynglonde and quiete, so that there scholde not be eny native man after that time—HIGDEN: Polychronicon, viii, 457.

Legally, a person is a native of the place of his parents' domicile, wherever he himself may have happened to be born.

Oysters raised in artificial beds are called natives, though they may be, and frequently are, imported. This is because artificially reared oysters are the best, and for centuries the best oysters were those actually taken from British waters. It is a case of the transference of a convenient name.

Nativity, The. Christmas Day, the day set apart in honour of the Nativity or Birth of Christ.

The Cave of the Nativity. The tradition that the rock cave near Constantine's basilica, S. Maria a Præsepio, is the birthplace of the Saviour dates from the time of St. Jerome (d. 420), when Bethlehem had been a wood-covered wilderness since it was devastated by Hadrian three hundred years earlier. The chancel of the basilica was subsequently built over it. In the recess, a few feet above the ground is a stone slab with a star cut in it, to mark the supposed spot where Christ was born, and near it is a hollow scraped out of the rock, said to be the place where the Infant was laid.

To cast a man's nativity. The astrologers' term for constructing a plan or map of the position, etc., of the twelve "houses" which belong to him, and explaining the significance.

Natter, To. To talk aimlessly, foolishly or without sense. It is a Scots word of long standing, probably deriving from the Icelandic knetta, to grumble.

Nature. In a state of nature. Nude or naked.

Natural. A born idiot; one on whom education can make no impression. As nature made him, so he remains.

A natural child. One not born in lawful wedlock. The Romans called the children of concubines naturales, children according to nature, and not according to law.

Cui pater est populus, pater est sibi nullus omnes; Cui pater est populus non habet ille patrem.—OVID.

In Music a natural is a white key on the pianoforte, etc., as distinguished from a black key. In musical notation the sign  $\natural$  is employed to counteract the following note from a sharp or flat in the signature.

Natural Philosophy. See EXPERIMENTAL.

Naught, Nought. These are merely variants of the same word, naught representing A.S. na whit and nought, no whit. In most senses they are interchangeable; but nowadays naught is the more common form, except for the name of the cipher, which is usually nought.

Naught was formerly applied to things that were bad or worthless, as in 2 Kings ii, 19, "The water is naught and the ground barren," and it is with this sense that Jeremiah (xxiv, 2) speaks of "naughty figs";—

One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe. . . . The other basket had very naughty figs which could not be eaten.

The Revised Version did away with the old "naughty" and substituted "bad"; and in the next verse, where the Authorized calls the figs "evil," the Douai Version has:—

The good figges, exceeding good, and the naughty figges, exceeding naught: which can not be eaten because they are naughty.

Nausicaa (naw sik ā' a). The Greek heroine whose story is told in the Odyssey. She was the daughter of Alcinous, king of the Phæaciens, and the shipwrecked Odysseus found her playing at ball with her maidens on the shore. Pitying his plight she conducted him to her father, by whom he was entertained.

Nautical Mile. See MILE.

Navaho (nāv' ā' hō). The largest tribal group of N. American Indians in the U.S.A. Their reservations are in New Mexico and Arizona, where they retain much of their traditional way of life and eschew contact with the white men. The Navahos belong to the southern division of the Athapascan stock, to which belong the Apache tribes.

Navicert. Contraction of Navigation Certificate, issued by the British authorities to merchant ships carrying non-contraband cargo to facilitate their passage through the blockade. First used (at any rate in modern times) during the Spanish Civil War, and continued during World War II.

Navy. A contraction of navigator. One employed to make railways.

Canals were thought of as lines of inland navigation, and a tavern built by the side of a canal was called a "Navigation Inn." Hence it happened that the men employed in excavating canals were called "navigators," shortened into navvies.—SPENSER: Principles of Sociology, vol. 1, appendix C, p. 834.

Nay-word. Password. Slender, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, says:—

We have a nay-word how to know each other. I come to her in white and cry Mum, she cries Budget, and by that we know one another.

Nazareans or Nazarenes (nāz' ā rēnz). A sect of Jewish Christians, who believed Christ to be the Messiah, that He was born of the Holy Ghost, and that He possessed a Divine nature, but who, nevertheless, conformed to the Mosaic rites and ceremonies.

Nazarene. A native of Nazareth; Our Lord is so called (John xviii, 5, 7; Acts xxiv, 5), though He was born in Bethlehem.

Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? (John i, 46). A general insinuation against any family or place of ill repute. Can any great man come from such an insignificant village as Nazareth?

Nazarite (nāz' a rīt). One separated or set apart to the Lord by a vow. They refrained from strong drink, and allowed their hair to grow. (Heb. nazar, to separate. Numb. vi, 1-21.)

Nazi (nat' zi, naz' i). The shortened form of National-Sozialist, the name given to the party of Adolf Hitler and its members.

Ne plus ultra (nē plūs ūl' trā) (Lat., nothing further, i.e. perfection). The most perfect state to which a thing can be brought. See PLUS ULTRA.

Neera (ne ē' rā). Any sweetheart or lady-love. She is mentioned by Horace, Virgil, and Tibullus.

To sport with Amaryllys in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neera's hair.
MILTON: Lycidas.

Neanderthal Man (ni ān' dēr tal). A palæolithic race inhabiting Europe during the Mousterian period. It was first revealed by the discovery of a human burial in a grotto of the Neanderthal ravine near Dusseldorf, in 1856. Its fossil remains have since been found in widely scattered caves.

Neap Tide. The tide between spring tides which attains the least height at or near the first and last quarters of the moon. The high water rises little more than half as high above the mean level as it does at spring tide, and the low water sinks about half as little below it.

Near, meaning mean, is rather a curious play on the word close (close-fisted). What is "close by" is near.

side. "Near wheel" means that to the driver's left hand; and "near horse" (in a pair) means that to the left hand of the driver. In a four-in-hand the two horses on the left side of the coachman are the near wheeler and the near leader. Those on the right-hand side are "off" horses. This, which seems an anomaly, arose when the driver walked beside his team. The teamster always walks with his right arm nearest the horse, and therefore, in a pair of horses, the horse on the left side is nearer than the one on his right. See also OFF-SIDE.

Nebo (nē' bō). A god of the Babylonians (properly, Nabu) mentioned in Is. xlvii, 1, and corresponding more or less with the classical Hermes. He was the patron of Borsippa, near Babylon, and was regarded as the inventor of the art of writing, as well as the god of wisdom and the herald of the gods. The name occurs in many Babylonian royal names (Nebuchadrezzar, Nebushasban [Jer. xxxix, 13], Nebuzaradan [2 Kings, xxv, 8], etc.), but it is very doubtful whether it is present, as has been stated, in the place-name Nebo, or the personal name Barnabas.

Nebuchadnezzar (neb ū kād nez' ār). This name which is now firmly fixed in English, is a mistake, for it is a misrendering in the Hebrew of Daniel (and consequently in English and other translations) of the Babylonian Nabu-kudur-usur, and should be Nebuchadrezzar, as indeed it is given in Jer. xxi, 2, etc. The French call him Nabuchodonosor, or Nabuchodoroser, which are nearer the Greek transliteration. The name means Nebo protects the crown. See NEBO.

Nebuchadnezzar was the greatest king of Assyria, and reigned for forty-three years (604-561 B.C.). He restored his country to its former prosperity and importance, practically rebuilt Babylon, restored the temple of Bel, erected a new palace, embanked the Euphrates, and probably built the celebrated Hanging Gardens. His name became the centre of many legends, and of the story related by Daniel (iv, 29-33) that he was one day walking—in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon and said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built . . . by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" And "the same hour . . . he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws."

This is an allusion to the suspension of his interest in public affairs, which lasted, as his inscription records, for four years.

Necessary. The 17th- and 18th-century term for a privy. In large houses the emptying and cleaning of this was carried out by a servant known as the Necessary Woman.

Necessitarians. See AGENT.

Necessity. Necessity knows no law. These were the words used by Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German Imperial Chancellor, in the Reichstag on August 4th, 1914, as a justification for the German infringement of Belgian neutrality:—

Gentlemen, we are now in a state of necessity (Notwehr), and necessity (Nor) knows no law. Our troops have occupied Luxembourg and perhaps have already entered Belgian territory.

To quote Milton—

So spake the Fiend, and with necessity,
The tyrant's plea excused his devilish deeds.
Paradise Lost, iv, 393.

The phrase is, of course, not original. Cromwell used it in a speech to Parliament on September 12th, 1654, but to very different purpose:—

Necessity hath no law. Feigned necessities, imaginary necessities, are the greatest cozenage men can put upon the Providence of God, and make pretences to break known rules by.

It is common to most languages. Publius Syrus has Necessitas dat legem, non ipsa accipit (Necessity gives the law, but does not herself accept it), and the Latin proverb Necessitas non habet legem appears in Piers Plowman (14th century) as "Neede hath no lawe."

To make a virtue of necessity. To "grin and bear it"; what can't be cured must be endured.

Thanne is it wisdom, as it thinketh me
To maken vertu of necessitee.

CHAUCER: Knight's Tale, 3041.

Are you content to be our general?

To make a virtue of necessity

And live, as we do, in this wilderness?

Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv, 1.

Quintilian has laudem virtutis necessitati damus; St. Jerome (epistle 54, section 6), Fac de necessitate virtutem. In the Roman de la Rose, line 14058, we find S'il ne faut de necessite virtutis, and Boccaccio has Si come savia fatta della necessita.

Neck. Slang for brazen impudence, colossal cheek.

Neck and crop. Entirely. The crop is the gorge of a bird; a variant of the phrase, is, neck and heels, as I bundled him out neck and heels. There was a punishment formerly in vogue which consisted in bringing the chin and knees of the culprit forcibly together, and then thrusting him into a cage.

Neck and neck. Very near in merit; very close competitors. A phrase used in horse races, when two or more horses run each other very closely.

Neck of woods. (U.S.A.). A settlement in the forest.

Neck or nothing. Desperate. A racing phrase; to win by a neck or to be nowhere—i.e. not counted at all because unworthy of notice.

Oh that the Roman people had but one neck! The words of Caligula, the Roman emperor. He wished that he could slay them all with one stroke.

Stiff-necked. Obstinate and self-willed. In the Psalms we read: "Speak not with a stiff neck" (lxxv, 5); and Jer. xvii, 23, "They obeyed not, but made their necks stiff"; and Isaiah (xlviii, 4) says: "Thy neck is an iron sinew." The allusion is to a wilful horse, ox, or ass, which will not answer to the reins.

To break the neck of an enterprise. To begin it successfully, and overcome the first difficulties. Well begun is half done.

To get it in the neck. To be completely defeated, thoroughly castigated, soundly rated, etc. The phrase is an Americanism, from the picturesque expression of one who has just been "through it"—I got it where the chicken got the axe—which, of course, is "in the neck."

To stick one's neck out. To expose oneself to being hurt, as a chicken might stick out its neck for the axe.

Neck-tie party. (U.S.A.). A hanging, particularly by lynch law (q.v.).

Neck-verse. The first verse of Ps. li. See MISERERE. "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy loving-kindness: according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions."

He [a treacherous Italian interpreter] by a fine cunny-catching corrupt translation, made us plainly to confesse, and cry Miserere, ere we had need of our necke-verse.—NASH: The Unfortunate Traveller (1594).

This verse was so called because it was the trial-verse of those who claimed Benefit of Clergy (q.v.), and if they could read it, the ordinary of Newgate said, "Legit ut clericus," and the prisoner saved his neck, being only burnt in the hand and set at liberty.

If a clerk had been taken

For stealing of bacon,

For burglary, murder, or rape.

If he could but rehearse

(Well prompt) his neck-verse,

He never could fail to escape.

British Apollo (1710).

Necklace. A necklace of coral or white bryony beads used to be worn by children to aid their teething. Necklaces of hyoscyamus or henbane-root have been recommended for the same purpose.

Diamond necklace. See DIAMOND.

The fatal necklace. Cadmus received on his wedding-day the present of a necklace, which proved fatal to everyone who possessed it. Some say that Vulcan, and others that Europa, gave it to him. Harmonia's necklace (q.v.) was a similar fatal gift.

Necromancy (nek' rō măn' sī). Prophesying by calling up the dead, as the witch of Endor called up Samuel (1 Sam. xxviii, 7 ff.) (Gr. nekros, the dead; manteia, prophecy.)

Nectar (Gr.). The drink of the gods of classical mythology. Like their food, Ambrosia, it conferred immortality. Hence the name of the nectarine, so called because it is "as sweet as nectar."

The Koran tells us "the righteous shall be given to drink pure wine sealed with musk."

Neddy. An old familiar name for a donkey.

Needfire. Fire obtained by friction; formerly supposed to defeat sorcery, and cure diseases ascribed to witchcraft, especially cattle diseases. In Henderson's Agricultural Survey of Caithness (1812) we are told that as late as 1785—when the stock of any considerable farmer was seized with the murrain, he would send for one of the charm doctors to superintend the raising of a need-fire.

Needful, The. Ready money, cash.

Needham. You are on the high-road to Needham—to ruin or poverty. The pun is on the need, and there is no reference to Needham in Suffolk. Cp. LAND OF NOD.

Needle. Looking for a needle, etc. See BOTTLE.

The eye of a needle. See EYE.

To get the needle. To become thoroughly vexed, or even enraged, and to show it. A variant of the phrase is to get the spike.

To hit the needle. Hit the right nail on the head, to make a perfect hit. A term in archery, equal to hitting the bull's-eye.

Negative. The answer is in the negative. The circumlocutory Parliament way of enouncing the monosyllable No.

Negro. Negro offspring. White father and negro mother: mulatto.

White father and mulatto mother: quadroon.

White father and quadroon mother: quintero.

White father and quintero mother; white.

Negro drunk (U.S.A.). Very drunk indeed.

Negus (nē' gus). The drink—port or sherry, with hot water, sugar, and spices—is so called from a Colonel Francis Negus (d. 1732), who first concocted it.

The supreme ruler of Abyssinia is entitled the Negus, from the native n'gus, meaning crowned.

Neiges d'Antan, Les (nāzh don tan) (Fr.). A thing of the past. Literally, "last year's snows," from the refrain of Villon's well-known Ballade des Dames du Temps Jadis—

Prince, n'enquez de semaine

Où elles sont, ni de cet an,

Que ce refrain ne vous remaine;

Mais où sont les neiges d'antan!

(Where are the snows of yester-year?)

Nemea (nem' ē ān). Pertaining to Nemea, the ancient name of a valley in Argolis, Greece, about 10 m. SW. of Corinth.

The Nemean Games. One of the four great national festivals of Greece, celebrated at Nemea every alternate year, the second and fourth of each Olympiad. Legend states that they were instituted in memory of Archemorus, who died from the bite of a serpent as the expedition of the Seven against Thebes was passing through the valley.

The victor's reward was at first a crown of olive leaves, but subsequently a garland of ivy. Pindar has eleven odes in honour of victors.

The Nemean Lion. A terrible lion which kept the people of the valley in constant alarm. The first of the twelve Labours of Hercules was to slay it; he could make no impression on the beast with his club, so he caught it in his arms and squeezed it to death. Hercules ever after wore the skin as a mantle.

My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.

Hamlet, i, 4.

Nemesis (nem' ē sis). The Greek goddess who allotted to men their exact share of good, or bad fortune, and was responsible for seeing that everyone got his due and deserts; the personification of divine retribution. Hence, retributive justice generally, as the Nemesis of nations, the fate which, sooner or later, has overtaken every great nation of the ancient and modern world.

And though circuitous and obscure
The feet of Nemesis how sure!

SIR WILLIAM WATSON: Europe at the Play.

Nemine contradicente (usually contracted to nem. con.). No one opposing.

Nemine dissente (nem. diss.). Without a dissentient voice.

Nemo me impune lacessit (nē' mō mē im pū nī la ses' it) (Lat.). No one injures me with impunity. The motto of the Order of the Thistle (q.v.).

Neolithic Age, The (nē ō lith' ik) (Gr. neos, new, lithos, a stone). The later Stone Age of Europe, the earlier being called the Palæolithic (Gr. palaïos, ancient). Stone implements of the Neolithic age are polished, more highly finished, and more various than those of the Palæolithic, and are found in kitchen-middens and tombs, with the remains of recent and extinct animals, and sometimes with bronze implements. Neolithic man knew something of agriculture, kept domestic animals, used boats, and caught fish.

Nepenthe or Nepenthes (ne pen' thē) (Gr. ne, not, penthos, grief). An Egyptian drug mentioned in the Odyssey (iv, 228) that was fabled to drive away care and make persons forget their woes. Polydamna, wife of Thonis, king of Egypt, gave it to Helen, daughters of Jove and Leda.

That nepenthes which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave the Jove-born Helena.

MILTON: Comus, 695-6.

Nephew (Fr. neveu, Lat. nepos). Both in Latin and in archaic English the word means a grandchild, or descendant. Hence, in the Authorized Version of 1 Tim. v, 4, we read—"If a widow have children or nephews," but in the Revised "grandchildren." Propertius has it, Me inter seros laudabit Roma nepotes (posterity).

Niece (Lat. neptis) also means a granddaughter or female descendant. See NEPOTISM.

Nepman. This is the term applied in the U.S.S.R. to a man who engaged in private business under the New Economic Policy (N.E.P.) This was a programme begun in 1921 to revive the wage system and private ownership of certain factories and businesses, at the same time relinquishing the requisitions of grain.

Nepomuk. See ST. JOHN OF NEPUMUK, under JOHN.

Nepotism (Lat. nepos, a nephew or kinsman). An unjustifiable elevation of one's own relations to places of wealth and trust at one's disposal.

Neptune (nep' tūn). The Roman god of the sea, corresponding with the Greek Poseidon (q.v.), hence used allusively for the sea itself. Neptune is represented as an elderly man of stately mien, bearded, carrying a trident, and sometimes astride a dolphin or a horse. See HIPPOCAMPUS.

... great Neptune with this threefork mace,
That rules the Seas, and makes them rise or fall;
His dewy lockes did drop with brine apace,
Under his Diademe imperiall.

SPENSER: Faerie Queene, IV, xi, 11.

Neptunian or Neptunist. The name given to certain 18th-century geologists, who held the opinion of Werner (1750-1817), that all the great rocks of the earth were once held in solution in water, and were deposited as sediment. The Vulcanists or Plutonians ascribed them to the agency of fire.

Nereus (nē rūs). A sea-god of Greek mythology, represented as a very old man. He was the father of the fifty Nereids (q.v.), and his special dominion was the Ægean Sea.

Nereids were the sea-nymphs of Greek mythology, the fifty daughters of Nereus and "grey-eyed" Doris. The best known are Amphitrite, Thetis, and Galatea; Milton refers to another, Panope—in Lycidas (line 99)—

The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope with all her sisters played.

And the names of all will be found in Spenser's Faerie Queene, Bk. iv, c. xi, verses 48-57.

Neri. See BIANCHI.

Nero, A. Any bloody-minded man, relentless tyrant, or evil-doer of extraordinary savagery; from the depraved and infamous Roman Emperor, C. Claudius Nero (A.D. 54-68), who set fire to Rome to see, it is said, "what Troy would have looked like when it was in flames," and is reported to have fiddled as he watched the conflagration.

Nero of the North. Christian II of Denmark (1481-1559), also called "The Cruel." He massacred the Swedish nobility at Stockholm in 1520, and thus prepared the way for Gustavus Vasa and Swedish freedom.

Nerthus or Hertha. The name given by Tacitus to a German or Scandinavian goddess of fertility, or "Mother Earth," who was worshipped on the island of Rugen. She roughly corresponds with the classical Cybele; and is probably confused with the Scandinavian god Njorthr or Njordhr, the protector of sailors and fishermen. Nerthus and Njorthr alike mean "benefactor."

Nessus. Shirt of Nessus. A source of misfortune from which there is no escape; a fatal present. The legend is that Hercules ordered Nessus (the centaur) to carry his wife Dejanira across a river. The centaur attempted to carry her off, and Hercules shot him with a poisoned arrow. Nessus, in revenge, gave Dejanira his tunic, deceitfully telling her that it would preserve her husband's love, and she gave it to her husband, who was devoured by the poison still remaining in it from his own arrow as soon as he put it on. He was at once taken with mortal pains; Dejanira hanged herself from remorse, and the hero threw himself on a funeral pile, and was borne away to Olympus by the gods. Cp. HARMONIA'S ROBE.

While to my limbs th' envenomed mantle clings,
Drenched in the centaur's black, malignant gore.
WEST: Triumphs of the Gout (Lucian).

Nest-egg. Money laid by. The allusion is to the custom of placing an egg in a hen's nest to induce her to lay her eggs there. If a person has saved a little money, it serves as an inducement to him to increase his store.

Nestor. King of Pylos, in Greece; the oldest and most experienced of the chieftains who went to the siege of Troy. Hence the name is frequently applied as an epithet to the oldest and wisest man of a class or company. Samuel Rogers, for instance, who lived to be 92, was called "the Nestor of English poets."

Nestorians. Followers of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, 428-431. He maintained that Christ had two distinct natures, and that Mary was the mother of His human nature, which was the mere shell or husk of the divine. They spread in India and the Far East, and remains of the Nestorian Christians, their inscriptions, etc., are still found in China, but the greater part of their churches were destroyed by Timur (Tamerlane) about 1400.

Net. On the Old Boy net. To arrange something through a friend (originally, someone known at school) instead of through the usual channels—a British military expression in World War II.

Neustria (nū' strīa). The western portion of the ancient Frankish kingdom, corresponding roughly to the northern and north-western provinces of France.

Never. There are numerous locutions to express this idea; as—

At the coming of the Coquecigrues (RABELAIS: Pantagruel).

At the Latter Lammas.

On the Greek Calends.

In the reign of Queen Dick.

On St. Tib's Eve.

In a month of five Sundays.

When two Fridays or three Sundays come together.

When Dover and Calais meet.

When Dudman and Ramehead meet.

When the world grows honest.

When the Yellow River runs clear.

Never Never Land. An Australian term for North Queensland.

New. New Deal. The name given to President Roosevelt's policy, announced in his first presidential campaign (1932) when he said "we are going to think less about the producer and more about the consumer . . . and bring about a more equitable distribution of the national income." The New Deal took shape in the National Industrial Recovery Act which empowered the President to lay down codes regulating industry, child labour, minimum wages and maximum hours. In 1935 these codes were judged unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Newfangled. Applied to anything of a quite new or different fashion; a novelty. The older word was newfangle—

Men loven of propre kinde newfangelnesse

As briddes doon that men in cages fede . . .

So newfangel ben they of hir mete,

And loven novelryes of propre kinde.

CHAUCER: Squire's Tale, 602, 610.

M.E. fangel, from A.S. fang, past part. of fōn, to take, meaning "always ready to take, or grasp at, some new thing."

New Learning. The name sometimes given to the revival of Greek and Latin classical learning during the 15th and 16th centuries. It was the chief motive of the Renaissance and was at its zenith from the fall of Constantinople in 1453 to the sack of Rome in 1527.

New Lights. See CAMPBELLITES.

New Style. The reformed or Gregorian Calendar, adopted in England in 1752. See GREGORIAN YEAR.

New Theology. An interpretation of Christian teaching based on broader views than that of the older fundamental reading of the Bible. It was first expounded in 1907 by R. J. Campbell, at the time Congregational minister at the City Temple. He later entered the Church of England.

New Thought. A general term for a system of therapeutics based on the theory that the mental and physical problems of life should be met, regulated and controlled by the suggestion of right thoughts. This system has nothing in common with Christian Science, auto-suggestion or psycho-therapy.

New World. America: the Eastern Hemisphere is called the Old World.

New Year's Day. January 1st. The Romans began their year in March; hence September, October, November, December for the 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th months. Since the introduction of the Christian era, Christmas Day, Lady Day, Easter Day, March 1st and March 25th have in turns been considered as New Year's Day; but at the reform of the calendar in the 16th century (see CALENDAR), January 1st was accepted by practically all Christian peoples.

In England the civil and legal year began on March 25th till after the alteration of the style, in 1752, when it was fixed, like the historic year, to January 1st. In Scotland the legal year was changed to January 1st as far back as 1600.

New Year's gifts. The giving of presents at this time was a custom among both the Greeks and the Romans, the latter calling them strenæ, whence the French term étrenne (a New Year's gift). Nonius Marcellus says that Tattius, King of the Sabines, was presented with some branches of trees cut from the forest sacred to the goddess Strenia (strength), on New Year's Day, and from this incident the custom arose.

Our forefathers used to bribe the magistrates with gifts on New Year's Day—a custom abolished by law in 1290, but even down to the reign of James II the monarchs received their tokens.

Newcastle upon Tyne was so called (Noef-Chastel-sur-Tine, or Novum Castellum) from the castle built there by Robert, son of the Conqueror, in 1080, to defend the neighbourhood from the Scots. Previous names were, in Roman times, Pons Ælii, and, by the Anglo-Saxons, Munchechaster (Monks' castle).

Newcastle was the first coal port in the world and the first charter granted to the town for the digging of coal was given by Henry III in 1239.

To carry coals to Newcastle. See COAL.

Newcastle under Lyme was known as Novum Oppidum (Lat., New Town) till about 1200, when the new castle was built to supply the place of an older one which stood at Chester-ton-under-Lime, about two miles distant.

New England. The name given collectively to the north-eastern States of the U.S.A.—Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. The name was given by Captain John Smith to what was then part of "North Virginia," granted to the Plymouth Company by James I, in 1606. Between 1643 and 1684 the New England Confederation of the colonies of Massachusetts Bay, Plymouth, Connecticut, and New Haven was in force to secure a united defence against the Dutch and the Indians.

Newgate. According to Stow this was first built in the city wall of London in the time of Henry I, but excavations have shown that there was a Roman gate here, about 31 ft. in width. It may have fallen into disuse, and have been repaired by Henry I, the present name being given at the time.

Newgate Gaol was originally merely a few cells over the gate; the first great prison here was built in 1422, and the last in 1770-83. For centuries it was the gaol for the City and for the County of Middlesex; it was demolished in 1902, and the Central Criminal Court (opened 1905) erected on its site.

From its prominence, Newgate came to be applied as a general name for gaols, and Nash, in his Pierce Penilesse (1592) says it is "a common name for all prisons, as homo is a common name for a man or woman."

Newgate Calendar. The. A biographical record of the more notorious criminals confined at Newgate; begun in 1773 and continued at intervals for many years. In 1824-28 A. Knapp and Wm. Baldwin published, in 4 vols., The Newgate Calendar, comprising Memoirs of Notorious Characters, partly compiled by George Borrow; and in 1886 C. Pelham published his Chronicles of Crime, or the New Newgate Calendar (2 vols.). The term is often used as a comprehensive expression embracing crime of every sort.

I also felt that I had committed every crime in the Newgate Calendar.—DICKENS: Our Mutual Friend, ch. xiv.

Newgate fashion. Two by two. Prisoners used to be conveyed to Newgate coupled together in twos.

Must we all march?

Yes, two and two, Newgate fashion.

SHAKESPEARE: 1 Henry IV, iii, 3.

Newgate fringe. The hair worn under the chin, or between the chin and the neck. So called because it occupies the position of the rope when men are about to be hanged.

Newgate knocker. A lock of hair twisted into a curl, worn by costermongers and persons of similar status. So called because it resembles a knocker, and the wearers were too often inmates of Newgate.

New Jerusalem. The city of heaven foretold in Rev. xxi, "coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

The New Jerusalem Church was the name chosen by Richard Hindmarsh in 1787 for the sect founded by him on the doctrines of Emanuel Swedenborg.

New South Wales is the oldest state in the Commonwealth of Australia. It was so named in 1770 by Captain Cook from its fancied resemblance from the sea to the northern shores of the Bristol Channel. The famous penal settlement of Botany Bay was founded there in 1787, five miles south of the present city of Sydney, itself named after Thomas Townshend, 1st Viscount Sydney, at that time secretary of state in charge of colonial affairs.

New York. The first settlements here were made on Manhattan Island by the Dutch in 1614. Manhattan Island was bought from the Indians for cloth and trinkets to the total value of about £5. Under the name of New Amsterdam it was held by the Dutch until 1644. In that year the whole of the Atlantic seaboard was granted by Charles II to his brother James, Duke of York. Col. Richard Nicolls sailed there at once with four ships and 30 soldiers, and overcoming the gallant resistance of the Dutch governor, Peter Stuyvesant, captured the place and renamed it after his patron, New York. It has, thus no connection with the English city of York.

N

News. The letters e w used to be prefixed to s

newspapers to show that they obtained information from the four quarters of the world, and the supposition that our word news is thence derived is at least ingenious; the old-fashioned way of spelling the word, newes, is alone fatal to the conceit. Fr. nouvelles is the real source.

News is conveyed by letter, word or mouth
And comes to us from North, East, West and South.
Witt's Recreations.

The word is now nearly always construed as singular ("the news is very good this morning"), but it was formerly treated as a plural, and in the Letters of Queen Victoria the Queen, and most of her correspondents, followed that rule:—

The news from Austria are very sad, and make one very anxious.—To the King of the Belgians, 20 Aug., 1861.

Newscast. The American term for the radio broadcast of news.

Newt. See NICKNAMES.

Newtonian Philosophy. The astronomical system that in the late 17th century displaced the Copernican (see COPERNICANISM), together with the theory of universal gravitation. So called after Sir Isaac Newton (1642-1727), who established the former and discovered the latter.

Nature and Nature's laws lay hid in night
God said, "Let Newton be," and all was light.
POPE.

Next of Kin. The legal term for a person's nearest relative, more especially where estate is left by an intestate. In English law the next of kin in priority is:—

Husband or wife; children; father or mother (equally if both alive); brothers and sisters; half brothers and sisters; grandparents; uncles and aunts; half uncles and aunts; the Crown.

Next Friend, in law, is an adult who brings an action in a court of law on behalf of a minor.

Nibelungenlied, The (nē be lung'en lēd). A Middle High German poem, the greatest monument of early German literature, founded on old Scandinavian legends contained in the Volsunga Saga and the Edda, and written in its present form by an anonymous South German of the early part of the 13th century.

Nibelung was a mythical king of a race of Scandinavian dwarfs dwelling in Nibelheim (i.e. "the home of darkness, or mist"). These Nibelungs, or Nibelungers, were the possessors of the wonderful "Hoard" of gold and precious stones guarded by the dwarf Alberich; and their name passed to later holders of the Hoard, Siegfried's following and the Burgundians being in turn called "the Nibelungs."

Siegfried, the hero of the first part of the poem, became possessed of the Hoard and gave it to Kriemhild as her marriage portion. After his murder Kriemhild carried it to Worms, where it was seized by Hagen and Gunther. They buried it in the Rhine, intending later to enjoy it; but they were both slain for refusing to reveal its whereabouts, and the Hoard remains for ever in the keeping of the Rhine Maidens. The second part of the Nibelungenlied tells of the marriage of the widow Kriemhild with King Etzel (Attila), the visit of the Burgundians to the court of the Hunnish king, and the death of all the principal characters, including Gunther, Hagen, and Kriemhild.

Nic Frog. See FROG.

Nice, Nicæa, Nicene (nī'si, nī sē'ā, nī sēn). An ancient city of Asia Minor, now known as Iznik.

This ancient city should be distinguished from Nice (nēs) on the French Riviera, an old port and modern holiday resort that until 1860 formed part of the kingdom of Sardinia.

The Council of Nice. The first œcumenical council of the Christian Church, held under Constantine the Great in 325 at Nice, or Nicæa, in Bithynia, Asia Minor, to condemn the Arian heresy, to affirm the consubstantiality of the Son of God, and to deal with points of discipline. The seventh œcumenical council was also held at Nice (787).

Nicene Creed. The Creed formulated at the great Council of Nice (325). It is used in the Holy Communion Service of the Church of England, and was first adopted in the Roman Church in 1014. In the Eastern Church it was first introduced in 471, and still forms part of the Baptism Service as well as of the Eucharist.

The Nicene, or more correctly, the Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, from the solemn sanction thus given to it by the great Ecumenical Councils, stands in a position of greater authority than any other; and amid their long-standing divisions is a blessed bond of union between the three great branches of the one Catholic Church—the Eastern, the Roman, and the Anglican, of all whose Communion Offices it forms a part.—J. H. BLUNT: Annotated Book of Common Prayer.

Nicholas, St. One of the most popular saints in Christendom, especially in the East. He is the patron saint of Russia, of Aberdeen, of parish clerks, of scholars (who used to be called clerks), of pawnbrokers (because of the three bags of gold—transformed to the three gold balls—that he gave to the daughters of a poor man to save them from earning their dowers in a disreputable way), of little boys (because he once restored to life three little boys who had been cut up and pickled in a salting-tub to serve for bacon), and is invoked by sailors (because he allayed a storm during a voyage to the Holy Land) and against fire. Finally, he is the original of Santa Claus (q.v.).

Little is known of his life, but he is said to have been Bishop of Myra (Lycia) in the early 4th century, and one story relates that he was present at the Council of Nice (325) and there buffeted Arius on the jaw. His day is December 6th, and he is represented in episcopal robes with either three purses of gold, three gold balls, or three small boys, in allusion to one or other of the above legends.

St. Nicholas's Clerks. Old slang for thieves, highwaymen. St. Nicholas was the patron saint of scholars.

Gadshill: Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas's clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

Chamberlain: No. I'll none of it; I prithee, keep that for the hangman; for I know thou worship'st Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

SHAKESPEARE: 1 Henry IV, ii, 1.

I think there came prancing down the hill a couple of St. Nicholas's clerks.—ROWLEY: Match at Midnight, 1633.

St. Nicholas's Bishop. See BOY BISHOP.

Nick. Slang for to pilfer; and, in the 18th century, for to break windows by throwing coppers at them:—

His scattered pence the flying Nicker flings,
And with the copper shower the casement rings.

GAY: Trivia, iii.

He nicked it. Won, hit, accomplished it. A nick is a winning throw of dice in the old game of "hazard."

In the nick of time. Just at the right moment. The allusion is to tallies marked with nicks or notches. Cp. PRICK OF NOON.

To nick the nick. To hit the exact moment. Tallies used to be called "nicksticks." Hence, to make a record of anything is "to nick it down," as publicans nick a score on a tally.

Old Nick. The Devil. The term was in use in the 17th century, and is perhaps connected with the German Nickel, a goblin (see NICKEL), or in some forgotten way with St. Nicholas. Butler's derivation from Nicholas Machiavelli is, of course, poetical licence:—

Nick Machiavel had ne'er a trick
(Though he gives name to our old Nick)
But was below the least of these.

Hudibras, iii, 1.

Nicka-Nan Night. The night preceding Shrove Tuesday is so called in Cornwall, because boys play tricks and practical jokes on that night. On the following night they go round again from house to house singing—

Nicka, nicka nan,
Give me some pancake and then I'll be gone;
But if you give me none
I'll throw a great stone
And down your doors shall come.

Nickel. The metal is so called from the German kupfernickel, the name given to the ore from which it was first obtained (1754) by

Axel F. von Cronstedt. Kupfer means copper, and Nickel is the name of a mischievous goblin fabled to inhabit mines in Germany; the name was given to it because, although it was copper-coloured, no copper could be got from it, and so the Nickel was blamed.

In U.S.A. a nickel is a coin of 5 cents, and is so termed from being composed of an alloy of nickel and copper.

Nicker, or Nix. In Scandinavian folklore, a water-wraith, or kelpie, inhabiting sea, lake, river, and waterfall. They are sometimes represented as half-child, half-horse, the hoofs being reversed, and sometimes as old men sitting on rocks wringing the water from their hair. The female nicker is a nixy.

Another tribe of water-fairies are the Nixes, who frequently assume the appearance of beautiful maidens.—DYER: Folk-lore of Plants, ch. vii.

Nickname. Originally an eke-name, eke being an adverb meaning "also," A.S. eac, connected with iecan, to supply deficiencies in or to make up for. A newt in the same way was originally "an eft" or "an evt"; "v" and "u" being formerly interchangeable gave us "neut," or "newt."

The "eke" of a beehive is the piece added to the bottom to enlarge the hive.

National Nicknames:

For an American of the United States, "Brother Jonathan." For America as a national entity, "Uncle Sam."

For a Dutchman, "Nic Frog" and "Myn-heer Closh."

For an Englishman, "John Bull."

For a Frenchman, "Crapaud," "Johnny" or "Jean," "Robert Macaire."

For French Canadians, "Jean Baptiste."

For French reformers, "Brissoins."

For French peasantry, "Jacques Bon-homme."

For a German, "Cousin Michael" or "Michel"; "Hun"; "Jerry"; "Fritz."

For an Irishman, "Paddy."

For an Italian, "Antonio," or "Tony."

For a Scot, "Sandy" or "Mac."

For a Spaniard or Portuguese, "Dago" (Diégo).

For a Welshman, "Taffy."

Nickneven (nik'nev en). A gigantic malignant hag of Scotch superstition. Dunbar has well described this spirit in his Flying of Dunbar and Kennedy.

Nicodemus, Gospel of (nik ò dě mūs). See GOSPEL.

Nicodemused into nothing. To have one's prospects in life ruined by a silly name; according to the proverb, "Give a dog a bad name and hang him." It is from Sterne's Tristram Shandy (vol. i, 19):—

How many Cæsars and Pompeys . . . by mere inspiration of the names have been rendered worthy of them; and how many . . . might have done . . . well in the world . . . had they not been Nicodemused into nothing.

Nicotine (nik' ò tēn). So named from Nico-rana, the Latin name of the tobacco-plant, given to it in honour of Jean Nicot (c. 1530-1600), Lord of Villemain, who was French ambassador in Madrid and introduced tobacco into France in 1560.

Niflheim (nif'él him) (i.e. mist-home). The region of endless cold and everlasting night of Scandinavian mythology, ruled over by Hela. It consisted of nine worlds, to which were consigned those who die of disease or old age; it existed "from the beginning" in the North, and in its middle was the well Hvergelmir, from which flowed the twelve rivers.

Nigger. An offensive—and obsolescent—term for a Negro or any member of a dark-skinned race.

A nigger in the woodpile. Originally a way of accounting for the disappearance of fuel, this phrase now denotes something underhanded or wrong, or a concealed motive.

Nightcap. A drink before going to bed.

Nightingale. The Greek legend is that Tereus, King of Thrace, fetched Philomela to visit his wife, Procne, who was her sister; but when he reached the "solitudes of Heleas" he dishonoured her, and cut out her tongue that she might not reveal his conduct. Tereus told his wife that Philomela was dead, but Philomela made her story known by weaving it into a peplus, which she sent to Procne. Procne, in revenge, cut up her own son and served it to Tereus, and as soon as the king discovered it he pursued his wife, who fled to Philomela; whereupon the gods changed all three into birds; Tereus became the hawk, his wife, the swallow, and Philomela the nightingale, which is still called Philomel (lit. lover of song) by the poets.

Youths and maidens most poetical. . .
Full of meek sympathy must heave their sighs
O'er Philomela's pity-pleading strains.

COLERIDGE: The Nig! tingle.

The Swedish Nightingale. The operatic singer, Jenny Lind (1820-87), afterwards Mme. Goldschmidt. She was a native of Stockholm.

Nightmare. A sensation in sleep as if something heavy were sitting on one's breast; formerly supposed to be caused by a monster (see INCUBUS) who actually did this; it was not unfrequently called the night-hag, or the riding of the witch. The second syllable is the A.S. mare (old Norse mara), an incubus, and appears again in the French equivalent cauchemar, "the fiend that tramples." The word is now more often employed to describe a frightening dream, a night terror.

Nightmare of Europe. The. Napoleon Bonaparte was so called.

Nihilism (nī' hīl izm) (Lat. nihil, nothing). An extreme form of Socialism, the prelude to Bolshevism (see BOLSHEVIST), which took form in Russia in the 50s of last century, and was specially active in the 70s, and later, under Bakounin. It aimed at the complete overthrow of law, order, and all existing institutions, with the idea of re-forming the world de novo.

The name was given by the novelist, Ivan Turgenieff (1818-83).

Nīl admirari (Lat.). To be stolidly indifferent. Neither to wonder at anything nor yet to admire anything. The tag is from Horace (Ep. I, vi, 1):—

Nīl admirari prope res est una, Numici,
Solaque, quæ possit facere et servare beatum.
(Not to admire, Numicius, is the best—
The only way to make and keep men blest.)

Connington.

Nil desperandum. Never say die; never give up in despair; another tag from Horace (Carmen, I, vii, 27):—

Nil desperandum Teucro duce et auspice Teucro
(There is naught to be despaired of when we are under Teucer's leadership and auspices).

Nile. The Egyptians used to say that the rising of the Nile was caused by the tears of Isis. The feast of Isis was celebrated at the anniversary of the death of Osiris, when Isis was supposed to mourn for her husband.

The hero of the Nile. Horatio, Lord Nelson (1758-1805).

Nimbus (nim' būs) (Lat., a cloud). In Christian art a halo of light placed round the head of an eminent personage. There are three forms: (1) Vesica piscis, or fish form (cp. ICTHUS), used in representations of Christ and occasionally of the Virgin Mary, extending round the whole figure; (2) a circular halo; (3) radiated like a star or sun. The enrichments are: (1) for Our Lord, a cross; (2) for the Virgin, a circlet of stars; (3) for angels, a circlet of small rays, and an outer circle of quatrefoils; (4) the same for saints and martyrs, but with the name often inscribed round the circumference; (5) for the Deity the rays diverge in a triangular direction. Nimbi of a square form signify that the persons so represented were living when they were painted.

The nimbus was used by heathen nations long before painters introduced it into sacred pictures of saints, the Trinity, and the Virgin Mary. Proserpine was represented with a nimbus; the Roman emperors were also decorated in the same manner, because they were divi.

Nimini-pimini (nim' i nī pim' i nī). Affected simplicity. Lady Emily, in General Burgoyne's The Heiress, III, ii (1786), tells Miss Alscrip to stand before a glass and keep pronouncing nimini-pimini—"The lips cannot fail to take the right plie."

The conceit was borrowed by Dickens in Little Dorrit, where Mrs. General tells Amy Dorrit—

Papa gives a pretty form to the lips. Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes, and prism are all very good words for the lips; especially prunes and prism.

The form miminy-piminy is also in use:—

A miminy-piminy, Je-ne-sais-quoi young man.—
W. S. GILBERT: Patience, II.

Nimrod (nim' rod). Any daring or outstanding hunter; from the "mighty hunter before the Lord" (Gen. x, 9), which the Targum says means a "sinful hunting of the sons of men." Pope says of him, he was "a mighty hunter, and his prey was man" (Windsor Forest, 62); so also Milton interprets the phrase (Paradise Lost, xii, 24, etc.).

The legend is that the tomb of Nimrod still exists in Damascus, and that no dew ever falls upon it, even though all its surroundings are saturated.

C. J. Apperley (1779-1843), a well-known sporting writer, used Nimrod as his pseudonym in widely-read books and essays on racing.

Nincompoop (nin' kóm poop). A poor thing of a man. Said to be a corruption of the Latin non compos (mentis), but of this there is no evidence. The last syllable is probably connected with Dut. poep, a fool.

Nine. Nine, five, and three are mystical numbers—the diapason (q.v.), diapente, and diatriton of the Greeks. Nine consists of a trinity of trinities. According to the Pythagoreans man is a full chord, or eight notes, and Deity comes next. Three, being the trinity, represents a perfect unity; twice three is the perfect dual; and thrice three is the perfect plural. This explains why nine is a mystical number.

From the earliest times the number nine has been regarded as of peculiar significance. Deucalion's ark, made by the advice of Prometheus, was tossed about for nine days, when it stranded on the top of Mount Parnassus. There were the nine Muses (q.v.), frequently referred to as merely "the Nine"—

Descend, ye Nine! Descend and sing
The breathing instruments inspire.

POPE: Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

There were nine Gallicenæ or virgin priestesses of the ancient Gallic oracle; and Lars Porsena swore by the nine gods—

Lars Porsena of Clusium

By the nine gods he swore

That the great house of Tarquin

Should suffer wrong no more.

MACAULAY: Lays of Ancient Rome (Horatius, i).

who were Juno, Minerva, and Tinia (the three chiefs), Vulcan, Mars, Saturn, Hercules, Summanus, and Vedio; while the nine of the Sabines were Hercules, Romulus, Esculapius, Bacchus, Æneas, Vesta, Santa, Fortuna, and Fides.

Niobe's children lay nine days in their blood before they were buried; the Hydra had nine heads; at the Lemuria, held by the Romans on May 9th, 11th, and 13th, persons haunted threw black beans over their heads, pronouncing nine times the words: "Avaunt, ye spectres, from this house!" and the exorcism was complete (see Ovid's Fasti).

There were nine rivers of hell, or, according to some accounts the Styx encompassed the infernal regions in nine circles; and Milton makes the gates of hell "thrice three-fold; three folds are brass, three iron, three of adamant rock." They had nine folds, nine plates, and nine linings. (Paradise Lost, ii, 645).

Vulcan, when kicked from Olympus, was nine days falling to the island of Lemnos; and when the fallen angels were cast out of heaven, Milton says "Nine days they fell" (Paradise Lost, vi, 871).

In the early Ptolemaic system of astronomy, before the Primum Mobile (q.v.) was added, there were nine spheres; hence Milton, in his Arcades, speaks of the "celestial syrens' harmony that sit upon the nine enfolded spheres." They were those of the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Firmament or that of the fixed stars, and the Crystalline Sphere. In Scandinavian mythology there were nine earths, Hel (q.v.) being the goddess of the ninth; there were nine worlds in Niflheim, and Odin's ring dropped eight other rings (nine rings of mystical import) every ninth night.

In folk-lore nine appears many times. The Abracadabra was worn nine days, and then flung into a river; in order to see the fairies one is directed to put "nine grains of wheat on a four-leaved clover"; nine knots are made on black wool as a charm for a sprained ankle; if a servant finds nine green peas in a peascod, she lays it on the lintel of the kitchen door, and the first man that enters in is to be her cavalier; to see nine magpies is most unlucky; a cat has nine lives (see also CAT O' NINE TAILS); and the nine of Diamonds is known as the Curse of Scotland (q.v.).

The weird sisters in Macbeth sang, as they danced round the cauldron, "Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, and thrice again to make up nine"; and then declared "the charm wound up"; and we drink a Three-times-three to those most highly honoured.

Leases are sometimes granted for 999 years, that is three times three-three-three. Even now they run for ninety-nine years, the dual of a trinity of trinities.

See also the Nine Points of the Law, in PHRASES, below, and the Nine Worthies, under WORTHIES.

There are nine orders of angels (see ANGELS); in Heraldry there are nine marks of cadency and nine different crowns recognized; and among ecclesiastical architects there are nine crosses, viz., altar, processional, roods on lofts, reliquary crosses, consecration, marking, pectoral, spire crosses, and crosses pendent over altars.

A nine days' wonder. Something that causes a great sensation for a few days, and then passes into the limbo of things forgotten. An old proverb is: "A wonder lasts nine days, and then the puppy's eyes are open," alluding to dogs which, like cats, are born blind. As much as to say, the eyes of the public are blind in astonishment for nine days, but then their eyes are open, and they see too much to wonder any longer.

King: You'd think it strange if I should marry her.
Gloster: That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.

King: That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.

3 Henry VI, iii, 2.

Dressed up to the nines. To perfection from head to foot.

Nine-tail bruiser. Prison slang for the cat-o'-nine-tails (q.v.).

Nine tailors make a man. See TAILORS.

Nine times out of ten. Far more often than not; in a great preponderance.

Possession is nine points of the law. It is every advantage a person can have short of actual right. The "nine points of the law" have been given as—

(1) A good deal of money; (2) a good deal of patience; (3) a good cause; (4) a good lawyer; (5) a good counsel; (6) good witnesses; (7) a good jury; (8) a good judge; and (9) good luck.

To look nine ways. To squint.

Nice as ninepence. A corruption of "Nice as nine-pins." In the game of nine-pins, the "men" are set in three rows with the utmost exactitude or nicety.

Nimble as ninence. Silver nineneces were common till the year 1696, when all unmilld coin was called in. These nineneces were very pliable or "nimble," and, being bent, were given as love tokens, the usual formula of presentation being To my love, from my love. There is an old proverb, A nimble ninence is better than a slow shilling.

Right as ninence. Perfectly well, in perfect condition.

Ninus. Son of Belus, husband of Semiramis, and the reputed builder of Nineveh. It is at his tomb that the lovers meet in the Pyramid and Thisbe travesty:—

Pyr.: Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straight way?

This.: 'Tide life, 'tide death, I come without delay.
Midsummer Night's Dream, v, 1.

Niobe. The personification of maternal sorrow. According to Grecian fable. Niobe, the daughter of Tantalus and wife of Amphion, King of Thebes, was the mother of twelve children, and taunted Latona because she had only two—Apollo and Diana. Latona commanded her children to avenge the insult, and they caused all the sons and daughters of Niobe to die. Niobe was inconsolable, wept herself to death, and was changed into a stone, from which ran water, "Like Niobe, all 'ears" (Hamlet, i, 2).

The Niobe of nations. So Byron styles Rome, the "lone mother of dead empires," with "broken thrones and temples"; a "chaos of ruins"; a "desert where we steer stumbling o'er recollections." (Childe Harold, iv, 79.)

Nip. Nip of whisky, etc. Short for Nipperkin. A small wine and beer measure containing about half a pint, or a little under; now frequently called "a nip."

His hawk-economy won't thank him for't

Which stops his petty nipperkin of port.

PETER PINDAR: Hair Powder.

The traditional Devon and Cornish song The Barley Mow starts with drinking the health out of the "jolly brown bowl," and at each chorus increases the size of the receptacle until in the sixteenth and last we have—

We'll drink it out of the ocean, my boys,

Here's a health to the barley-mow!

The ocean, the river, the well, the pipe, the hogshead, the half-hogshead, the anker, the half-anker, the gallon, the half-gallon, the pottle, the quart, the pint, the half a pint, the quarter-pint, the nipperkin, and the jolly brown bowl!

Nip and tuck. A neck-and-neck race; a close fight.

Number Nip. Another name for Rubezahl (q.v.).

To nip in the bud. To destroy before it has had time to develop; usually said of bad habits, tendency to sin, etc. Shakespeare has—

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;

And, when he thinks, good easy man, full surely

His greatness is a-ripening, nips his root,

And then he falls, as I do. Henry VIII, iii, 2.

Nip-cheese or Nip-farthing. A miser, who nips or pinches closely his cheese and farthings.

Among sailors the purser is nicknamed "Nip-cheese." (Dutch, nypen.)

Nipper. Slang for a small boy.

Nippon (ni pon'). The Japanese name of Japan.

Nirvana (ner van' ä) (Sansk., a blowing out, or extinction). Annihilation, or rather the final deliverance of the soul from transmigration (see BUDDHISM).

Nisei (nē' sā). A person born in the U.S.A. of Japanese descent but a loyal American.

Nisi (nī' sī) (Lat., unless). In Law a "rule nisi" is a rule unless cause be shown to the contrary.

Decree nisi. A decree of divorce granted on the condition that it does not take effect until made absolute, which is done in due course unless reasons why it should not have meantime come to light. Every decree of divorce is, in the first instance, a decree nisi.

Nisi prius (unless previously). Originally a writ commanding a sheriff to empanel a jury which should be at the Court of Westminster on a certain day unless the judge of assize previously come to his county, as—

"We command you to come before our justices at Westminster on the morrow of All Souls', NISI PRIUS iusticiarii domini regis ad assisas capiendas venerint—i.e. unless previously the justices of our lord the king come to hold their assizes at (the court of your own assize town).

The second Statute of Westminster (1285) instituted Judges of nisi prius, who were appointed to travel through the shires three times a year to hear civil causes; and such causes tried before Judges of Assize are still known as "Causes of nisi prius."

Nisroch (nis' rok). The Assyrian god in whose temple Sennacherib was worshipping when he was slain (2 Kings xix, 37). Nothing is known of the god, and the name is probably a corruption either of Asur or of Nusku, a god connected with Nebo (q.v.).

Nissen hut. A long, iron-roofed hut, semi-circular in section, easily portable and largely used by armies, etc. The name comes from the original designers and makers.

Nitouche (ni toosh'). Faire la Sainte Nitouche, to pretend to great sanctity, to look as though butter would not melt in one's mouth. Sainte Nitouche is the name given in France to a hypocrite; it is a contraction of n'y touche.

Nitwit. A slow-witted person, one who is irresponsible and is liable to say or do foolish and irrelevant things.

Nivetta. See MORGAN LE FAY.

Nix. See NICKER. The word is also slang for "nothing." "You can't get him to work for nix," i.e. without paying him. In this sense it is from Ger. nichts, nothing.

Nizam (nī zām'). A title of sovereignty in Hyderabad (India), contracted from Nizam-ul-mulk (regulator of the state), the style adopted by Asaf Jah, who obtained possession of the Deccan in 1713.

Njorthr. See NERTHUS.

No. No dice (U.S.A.). Nothing doing.

No Man's Land. The name applied to the area between hostile entrenched lines or to any space contested by both sides and belonging to neither.

No-popery Riots. Those of Edinburgh and Glasgow, February 5th, 1779, and those of London instigated by Lord George Gordon, of 1780. A stirring account of these is given in Dickens's Barnaby Rudge.

Noachian (nō ā' ki ān). The adjective formed from the name of the patriarch Noah, hence the Noachian deluge, i.e. The Flood.

Noah's Ark. A name given by sailors to a white band of cloud spanning the sky like a rainbow and in shape something like the hull of a ship. If east and west expect dry weather, if north and south expect wet.

Noah's Wife. According to legend she was unwilling to go into the ark, and the quarrel between the patriarch and his wife forms a prominent feature of Noah's Flood, in the Chester and Townley Mysteries.

Hastow nought herd, quod Nicholas, also
The sorwe of Noe with his felawshipe
Er that he mighte gete his wyf to shipe?
CHAUCER: Miller's Tale, 352.

Nob. Slang for the head (probably from knob); also for a person of rank and position (contraction of noble or nobility). Cp. SNOB.

Nobbler. Australian colloquial term for a short drink, one-fifth of a gill or a fluid ounce.

Nobel Prizes. Prizes established by the will of Alfred Bernard Nobel (1833-96), the Swedish chemist and inventor of dynamite, etc., to encourage work in the cause of humanity. There are five prizes given annually, each of about £7,000, as follows: (1) for the most noteworthy work in physics, (2) in chemistry, (3) in medicine or physiology, (4) in idealistic literature, and (5) in the furtherance of universal peace. W. C. Röntgen, Mme. Curie, A. Carrel, Rudyard Kipling, Maeterlinck, Hauptmann, Rabindranath Tagore, Romain Rolland, Elihu Root, Woodrow Wilson, F. G. Banting, W. B. Yeats, Albert Einstein, Sir A. Fleming, Luigi Pirandello, Sinclair Lewis, G. B. Shaw, Pearl Buck, Sir Norman Angell, The Society of Friends (Quakers), T. S. Eliot, Earl Russell, Mr. Ralph Bunche, are among those to whom the prizes have been awarded.

Noble. A former English gold coin, so called on account of the superior excellency of its gold. Nobles were originally disposed of as a reward for good news, or important service done; first minted by Edward III, they remained in use till the time of Henry VIII; their nominal value was 6s. 8d. to 10s.

Noble. The Lion, the King of all the Beasts, in Caxton's edition of Reynard the Fox (q.v.).

The Noble. Charles III of Navarre (1361-1425). Soliman Tchelibî, Turkish prince at Adrianople (d. 1410).

The Noble Science. The old epithet for fencing or boxing, now usually called "The Noble Art of Self-Defence."

... a bold defiance

Shall meet him, were he of the noble science.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Knight of the Burning Pestle, ii, 1.

Noblesse oblige (nō bles' ō blēzh) (Fr.). Noble birth imposes the obligation of high-minded principles and noble actions.

Noctes Ambrosianæ (nok' tēz am bro zi ā' nē). A series of papers on literary and topical subjects, in the form of dialogues, contributed to Blackwood's Magazine, 1822-35. They were written principally by Professor Wilson, "Christopher North." See AMBROSIAN NIGHTS.

Nod. A nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse. However obvious a hint or suggestion may be it is useless if the other person is unable to see it.

On the nod. On credit. To get a thing on the nod is to get it without paying for it at the time—and often without any definite intention of paying for it at all. The phrase is from the auction-room; one buys articles by a mere nod of the head to the clerk, and the formalities are attended to later.

The Land of Nod. See LAND.

Noddy. A Tom Noddy is a very foolish or half-witted person, "a noodle." The marine birds called noddies are so silly that anyone can go up to them and knock them down with a stick. It seems more than likely that the word is connected with to nod, but it has been suggested that it was originally a pet form of Nicodemus.

Noel (nō' el). In English (also written Nowell), a Christmas carol, or the shout of joy in a carol; in French, Christmas Day. The word is Provençal nadal, from Lat. natalē, natal.

Nowells, nowells, nowells!

Sing all we may,

Because that Christ, the King,

Was born this blessed day.—Old Carol.

Nokes. See JOHN-A-NOKES.

Nolens volens (nō' lenz vō' lenz). Whether willing or not. Two Latin participles meaning "being unwilling (or) willing." Cp. WILLY-NILLY.

Noli me tangere (nol' i me tăn' jer i) (Lat., touch me not). The words Christ used to Mary Magdalene after His resurrection (John xx, 17), and given as a name to a plant of the genus Impatiens. The seed-vessels consist of one cell in five divisions, and when the seed is ripe each of these, on being touched, suddenly folds itself into a spiral form and leaps from the stalk. See Darwin's Loves of the Plants, ii, 3.

Noll. Old Noll. Oliver Cromwell was so called by the Royalists. Noll is a familiar form of Oliver.

Nolle prosequi (nol' i prō sek' wi) (Lat., to be unwilling to prosecute). A petition from a plaintiff to stay a suit. Cp. NON PROS.

Nolo episcopari (nō' lō ep isk ō pā' ri) (Lat., I am unwilling to be made a bishop). The formal reply supposed to be returned to the royal offer of a bishopric. Chamberlayne says (Present

State of England, 1669) that in former times the person about to be elected modestly refused the office twice, and if he did so a third time his refusal was accepted.

Nom. Nom de guerre is French for a "war name," but really means an assumed name. It was customary at one time for everyone who entered the French army to assume a name; this was especially the case in the times of chivalry, when knights were known by the device on their shields.

Nom de plume. English-French for "pen name," or pseudonym, the name assumed by a writer, cartoonist, etc., who does not choose to give his own to the public; as Currer Bell (Charlotte Brontë), Fiona McLeod (William Sharp), Henry Seton Merriman (Hugh Stowell Scott), etc. Occasionally, as in the case of Voltaire (François Marie Arouet) and De Stendhal (Marie Henri Beyle), the assumed name quite replaces the true name.

Nominalist (nom' i nal ist). The schoolmen's name for one who—following William of Occam—denied the objective existence of abstract ideas; also, the name of a sect founded by Roscelin, Canon of Compiègne (1040-1120), who maintained that if the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, they cannot be three distinct persons, but must be simply three names of the same being; just as father, son, and husband are three distinct names of one and the same man under different conditions. Abélard, Hobbes, Locke, Bishop Berkeley, Condillac, and Dugald Stewart are noted Nominalists. Cp. REALISTS.

Non. The Latin negative, not; adopted in English, and very widely employed, as a prefix of negation, e.g. in non-abstainer, non-conformist, non-existent, non-resident, non-sense, nonsuit, etc.

Non amo te, Sabidi. See I DO NOT LIKE THEE, DR. FELL, under DOCTOR.

Non Angli sed angeli (Lat., Not Angles, but angels). See ANGELS.

Non assumpsit (Lat., he has not undertaken). The legal term for a plea denying promise or undertaking by the defendant.

Non compos mentis (Lat., not of sound mind). Said of a lunatic, idiot, drunkard, or one who has lost memory and understanding by accident or disease.

The prisoner not denying the fact, and persisting before the court that he looked upon it as a compliment, the jury brought him in non compos mentis.—ADDITION: Taiter, 5 Dec., 1710.

Non dolet. See ARRIA.

Non-ego. See EGO.

Non est. A contraction of Lat. non est inventus (not to be found). They are the words which the sheriff writes on a writ when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick.

Non mi ricordo (Ital., I do not remember). A shuffling way of saying "I don't choose to answer that question." It was the usual answer of the Italian witnesses when under examination at the trial of Queen Caroline, wife of George IV, in 1820.

Non placet (Lat., it is displeasing). The formula used, especially by the governing body of a University, for expressing a negative vote.

Non pros. for Lat. non prosequi (not to prosecute). The judgment of non pros. is one for costs, when the plaintiff stays a suit.

Non sequitur (Lat., it does not follow). A conclusion which does not follow from the premises stated; an inconsequent statement, such as Artemus Ward's—

I met a man in Oregon who hadn't any teeth—not a tooth in his head,—yet that man could play on the bass drum better than any man I ever met.

Non-com. A non-commissioned officer in the army.

Nonconformists. In England, members of Protestant bodies who do not conform to the doctrines of the Church of England (also called Dissenters); especially the 2,000 clergy who, in 1662, left the Church rather than submit to the conditions of the Act of Uniformity—i.e. "unfeigned assent to all and everything contained in the Book of Common Prayer."

Nonjurors. Those clergymen who refused to take the oath of allegiance to the new government after the Revolution (1690). They were Archbishop Sancroft with eight bishops, and four hundred clergymen, all of whom were ejected from their livings. The non-juring bishops ordained clergy and kept up the "succession" until the death of the last "bishop" in 1805. Cp. SEVEN BISHOPS, THE.

Nonplus (Lat., no more). A quandary: a state of perplexity when "no more" can be said on the subject. When a man is nonplussed or has come to a nonplus in an argument, it means that he is unable to deny or controvert what is advanced against him. To nonplus a person is to put him into such a fix.

Nonce-word. A temporary word that is coined for the occasion. Birrellism, coupioneer, Limehouse, Puseyite, and many others to be found throughout this DICTIONARY, are examples.

Nones (nōnz). In the ancient Roman calendar, the ninth (Lat. nonus) day before Ides; in the Roman Catholic Church, the office for the ninth hour after sunrise, i.e. between noon and 3 p.m.

Norfolk Island. A South Pacific island belonging to Australia. It was discovered by Captain Cook in 1774 and was for many years a penal settlement for the most desperate convicts who had to be segregated from the other penal transportees in Australia. In 1856 Norfolk Island was colonized by the people from Pitcairn Island who were descended from the mutineers of the Bounty (q.v.).

Norman French. The Old French dialect spoken in Normandy at the time of the conquest of England and spoken by the dominant class in the latter country for some two centuries after the conquest. Vestiges of it remain in the formal words of the royal assent given to Bills that have passed through Parliament—"La Reine le veult"—and in the "Fitz" (filis, son) that precedes certain family surnames.

Norns, The. The three giant goddesses who, in Scandinavian mythology, presided over the fates of both men and gods.

Norrisian Professor (nor is' i an). A Professor of Divinity in Cambridge University. This professorship was founded in 1760 by John Norris (1734-77), of Whitton, Norfolk. The four divinity professors are Lady Margaret's, the Regius, the Norrisian, and the Hulsean.

Norroy (i.e. north roy, or king). The third king of arms is so called, because his office is on the north side of the river Trent; that of the south side is called Clarenceux (q.v.).

North. It is said that villagers have a great objection to being buried on the north side of a churchyard. They seem to think only evil-doers should be there interred. Probably the chief reason is the want of sun; but the old idea is that the east is God's side, where His throne is set; the west, man's side, the Galilee of the Gentiles; the south, the side of the "spirits made just" and angels, where the sun shines in his strength; and the north, the devil's side. Cp. THE DEVIL'S DOOR, under DEVIL.

As men die, so shall they arise; if in faith, in the Lord, towards the south . . . and shall arise in glory; if in unbelief . . . towards the north, then are they past all hope.—COVERDALE: Praying for the Dead.

He's too far north for me. Too canny, too cunning to be taken in; very hard in making a bargain. The inhabitants of Yorkshire are supposed to be very canny, especially in driving a bargain; and when you get to Aberdeen—!

North Briton. A periodical founded in 1762 by John Wilkes (1727-97) to air his animosity against Lord Bute and the Scottish nation. On April 23rd, 1763 appeared No. 45 which attacked the royal speech at the close of the late session of Parliament. Wilkes was arrested and sent to the Tower, but claiming his prerogative as a member of Parliament he obtained his release and went to Paris. The House passed a resolution that No. 45 was a "false, scandalous and malicious libel," and in his absence Wilkes was expelled the House.

North-east Passage, The. A way to India from Europe round the north extremity of Asia. It had been often attempted even in the 16th century. Hence Beaumont and Fletcher: That everlasting cassock, that has worn

As many servants out as the North-east Passage
Has consumed sailors. The Woman's Prize, II, 2.

North Pole. For two or three centuries men tried to reach the North Pole, and many were the speculations as to what would be found when they got there. It was not until April 6th, 1909, that the American sailor and explorer Robert Edwin Peary (1856-1920) reached the Pole, by that time known to be the central point of the shallow Arctic basin wherein lies the Arctic Ocean, of which the surface near the Pole is floating and moving ice. In May, 1933, the North Pole was claimed by the Russians as a Soviet possession and four years later they established a Polar station there, under Prof. Otto Schmidt.

North-west Passage. The name given to an assumed passage to China and the Orient round the north of the American continent. Attempts to find it were made in the 16th and 17th century by such sailors as the Cabots, Frobisher, Gilbert, Davis, Hudson and Baffin. In the 19th century the quest was followed by Ross, Parry, and Sir John Franklin who lost his life and the lives of his crew in the attempt. It was not until 1903-05 that Roald Amundsen made the complete voyage.

The Northern Bear. Tsarist Russia was so called.

The Northern Gate of the Sun. The sign of Cancer, or summer solstice; so called because it marks the northern tropic.

The Northern Lights. The Aurora Borealis (q.v.).

The Northern Wagoner. The genius presiding over the Great Bear, or Charles's Wain (q.v.), which contains seven large stars.

By this the northern wagoner has set
His sevenfold team behind the steadfast star [the pole-star].
SPENSER: Faerie Queene, I, ii, 1.

Dryden calls the Great Bear the Northern Car, and similarly the crown in Ariadne has been called the Northern Crown.

Northamptonshire Poet. John Clare (1793-1864), son of a farmer at Helpstone.

Norway, Maid of. See MAID.

Nose. A nose of wax. See WAX.

As plain as the nose on your face. Extremely obvious, patent to all.

Bleeding of the nose. According to some, a sign that one is in love. Grose says if it bleeds one drop only it forebodes sickness, if three drops the omen is still worse; but Melton, in his Astrologaster, says, "If a man's nose bleeds one drop at the left nostril it is a sign of good luck, and vice versa."

Cleopatra's nose. See CLEOPATRA.

Golden nose. Tycho Brahe (d. 1601), the Danish astronomer. He lost his nose in a duel, so adopted a golden one, which he attached to his face by a cement which he carried about with him.

The bloodthirsty emperor Justinian II, nicknamed Rhinotmetus, had a golden nose in place of the nose that had been cut off by his general Leontius before he ascended the imperial throne. It used to be said that when Justinian cleansed this golden nose, those who were present knew that the death of someone had been decided upon.

Led by the nose. Said of a person who has no volition of his own but follows with docility the guidance of a stronger character. In another sense it appears in Isaiah xxxvii, 29:—"Because thy rage against me . . . is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose . . . and will turn thee back. . . ." Horses, asses, etc., led by bit and bridle, are led by the nose. Hence Iago says of Othello, he was "led by the nose as asses are" (I, 3). But buffaloes, camels, and bears are actually led by a ring inserted in their nostrils.

Though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is often led by the nose with gold.—Winter's Tale, iv, 4.

Nose tax. It is said that in the 9th century the Danes imposed a poll tax in Ireland, and that this was called the "Nose Tax," because those who neglected to pay were punished by having their noses slit.

On the nose. An American expression meaning exactly on time. It originated in the broadcasting studio, where the producer, when signalling to the performers, puts his finger on his nose when the programme is running to schedule time.

The Pope's nose. The rump of a fowl, which is also called the parson's nose. The phrase is said to have originated during the years following James II's reign, when anti-Catholic feeling was high.

To count noses. A horse-dealer counts horses by the nose, as cattle are counted by the head; hence, the expression is sometimes ironically used of numbering votes, as in the Division lobbies.

To cut off your nose to spite your face, or to be revenged on your face. To act out of pique in such a way as to injure yourself.

To follow one's nose. To go straight ahead; to proceed without deviating from the path.

Juan, following honour and his nose,
Rush'd where the thickest fire announced most foes.
BYRON: Don Juan, VIII, xxxii.

To keep one's nose to the grindstone. To keep hard at work. Tools, such as scythes, chisels, etc., are constantly sharpened on a stone or with a grindstone.

Be to the poor like onie whunstone,
And haud their noses to the grunstone.

BURNS: Dedication to Gavin Hamilton.

To pay through the nose. To pay an excessive price, or at an exorbitant rate. There may be some connexion between this old phrase, "rhino" (q.v.), slang for money, and Gr. rhinos, the nose; or there may be an allusion to nose-bleeding and being bled for money.

To poke or thrust one's nose in. Officially to intermeddle with other people's affairs; to intrude where one is not wanted.

To put one's nose out of joint. To supplant a person in another's good graces; to upset one's plans; to humiliate a conceited person.

To snap one's nose off. To speak snappishly. To pull (or wring) the nose is to affront by an act of indignity; to snap one's nose is to affront by speech. Snarling dogs snap at each other's noses.

To take pepper in the nose. See PEPPER.

To turn up one's nose. To express contempt. When a person sneers he turns up the nose by curling the upper lip.

To wipe one's nose. See WIPE.

Under one's very nose. Right before one; in full view.

Nosey. Very inquisitive; given to overmuch poking of the nose into other people's business. One who does this is often called a Nosey Parker, an epithet of unknown origin.

The Duke of Wellington was familiarly called "Nosey" by the soldiery. His "commander's face" with its strongly accentuated aquiline nose, was a very distinguishing feature of the Iron Duke. The nickname was also given to Oliver Cromwell. See COPPER-NOSE.

Nostradamus, Michel (nos' trā dā' mūs). A French astrologer (1503-66) who published an annual "Almanack" as well as the famous Centuries (1555) containing prophecies which, though the book suffered papal condemnation in 1781, still occasion controversy from time to time. His prophecies are couched in most ambiguous language, hence the saying as good a prophet as Nostradamus—i.e. so obscure that none can make out your meaning.

Nostrum (nos' trūm) (Lat., our own). A term applied to a quack medicine, the ingredients of which are supposed to be a secret of the compounders; also, figuratively, to any political or other scheme that savours of the charlatan.

Notables. An assembly of nobles or notable men, in French history, selected by the king to form a parliament. They were convened in 1626 by Richelieu, and not again till 1787 when Louis XVI called them together with the view of relieving the nation of some of its pecuniary embarrassments. The last time they ever assembled was November 6th, 1788.

Notarikon (nō tār' i kon). A cabalistic word (Gr. notarikon, Lat. notarius, a shorthand-writer) denoting the old Jewish art of using each letter in a word to form another word, or using the initials of the words in a sentence to form another word, etc., as Cabal itself (q.v.) was fabled to have been formed from Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale, and as the term Ichthus (q.v.) was applied to the Saviour. Other instances will be found under A.E.I.O.U.; CLIO; HEMPE; LIMP; and SMECTYMNUS; cp. also HIP.

Notch. Out of all notch. See SCOTCH.

Note-sharer (U.S.A.). A bill discounter, usurer.

Nothing. Mere nothings. Trifles; unimportant things or events.

You shapeless nothing in a dish,

You that are but almost a fish—

COWPER: The Poet, the Oyster, etc.

Next to nothing. A very little. As "It will cost next to nothing," "He eats next to nothing."

Nothing doing! A slang expression, generally implying that you are disappointed in your expectations, or refuse some request.

Nothing venture, nothing have. If you don't throw a sprat you mustn't expect to catch a mackerel; don't be afraid of taking a risk now and then. A very old proverb.

Out of nothing one can get nothing; the Latin Ex nihilo nihil fit—i.e. every effect must have a cause. It was the dictum by which Xenophanes, founder of the Eleatic School (q.v.), postulated his theory of the eternity of matter. Persius (Satires, iii, 84) has De nihilo nihilum, in nihilum nil posse reverti. From nothing nothing, and into nothing can nothing return.

We now use the phrase as equivalent to "You cannot get blood from a stone," or expect good work from one who has no brains.

That's nothing to you, or to do with you. It's none of your business.

There's nothing for it but . . . There's no alternative; take it or leave it.

To come to nothing. To turn out a failure; to result in naught.

To make nothing of. To fail to understand; not to succeed in some operation.

Nourmahal (noor ma hal') (Arab., The Light of the Harem). One of the women in the harem of the Caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, afterwards called Nourjehan (Light of the World). The story of her love for Selim and how she regained his lost affections by means of a love-spell is told in Moore's Lalla Rookh.

Nous (nous) (Gr., mind, intellect). Adopted in English and used more or less loosely for intelligence, "horse-sense."

This is the genuine head of many a house,
And much divinity without a NOUS.

POPE: Dunciad, iv, 244.

Nous was the Platonic term for mind, or the first cause, and the system of divinity here referred to is that which springs from blind nature.

Nous avons changé tout cela (noo zäv ong shon' jä too sla) (Fr., we have changed all that). A facetious reproof to one who lays down the law upon everything, and talks contemptuously of old customs, old authors, old artists, and old everything. The phrase is taken from Molière's Médecin Malgré Lui, ii, 6 (1666).

Nova Scotia. See ACADIA.

Novatians (nō vä shänz). Followers of Novatianus, a presbyter of Rome in the 3rd century. They differed little from the orthodox Catholics, but maintained that the Church had no power to allow one who had lapsed to be readmitted.

Novella (nō vel' lä). A short story of the kind contained in Boccaccio's Decameron. These novelle were immensely popular in the 16th and 17th centuries and were the forerunners of the long novel that later developed from them, as also of the short story of more recent times.

November (Lat. novem, nine). The ninth month in the ancient Roman calendar, when the year began in March, now the eleventh. The old Dutch name was Slaght-maand (slaughter-month, the time when the beasts were slain and salted down for winter use); the old Saxon, Wind-monath (wind-month, when the fishermen drew their boats ashore, and gave over fishing till the next spring); it was also called Blot-monath—the same as Slaght-maand. In the French Republican calendar it was called Brumaire (fog-month, October 22nd to November 21st).

Novena (nō vē' nä). In R.C. devotions a prayer for some special object or occasion extended over a period of nine days. Various reasons have been adduced for the choice of nine days, but at root the custom seems to have been taken over from Roman paganism.

Nowell. See NOEL.

Noyades (nwa' yad) (Fr., drownings). A means of execution adopted by Carrier at Nantes, in the French Revolution (1793-4). Prisoners to be "removed" were first bound and then stowed in the hold of a vessel which had a movable bottom. This was sent to the middle of the Loire, the vessel was scuttled, and the victims drowned. Nero, at the suggestion of Anicetus, attempted to drown his mother in the same manner.

Nubbin (U.S.A.). A spoiled ear of corn.

Nude, Naked. Rabelais (iv, xxix) says that a person without clothing is dressed in "grey and cold" of a comical cut, being "nothing before, nothing behind, and sleeves of the same." King Shrovetide, monarch of Sneak Island, was so arrayed.

Nulla linea. See NO DAY WITHOUT ITS LINE under LINE.

Nulli secundus (nül' I se kün' dūs) (Lat., second to none). The motto of the Coldstream Guards, which regiment is hence sometimes spoken of as the Nulli Secundus Club.

Nullification (U.S.A.). In a political sense this term is said to have first been used by Thomas Jefferson in 1798. In 1832 South Carolina said they would nullify tariffs by not allowing duty to be collected at Charleston; hence those who set State rights above Federal Law are called nullifiers.

Numbers, Numerals. Pythagoras looked on numbers as influential principles; in his system—

1 was Unity, and represented Deity, which has no parts.

2 was Diversity, and therefore disorder; the principle of strife and all evil.

3 was Perfect Harmony, or the union of unity and diversity.

4 was Perfection; it is the first square ( $2 \times 2 = 4$ ).

5 was the prevailing number in Nature and Art.

6 was Justice.

7 was the climacteric number in all diseases; called the Medical Number. See CLIMACTERIC.

With the ancient Romans 2 was the most fatal of all the numbers; they dedicated the second month to Pluto, and the second day of the month to the Manes.

In old ecclesiastical symbolism the numbers from 1 to 13 were held to denote the following:—

1 The Unity of God.

2 The hypostatic union of Christ, both God and man.

3 The Trinity.

4 The number of the Evangelists.

5 The wounds of the Redeemer: two in the hands, two in the feet, one in the side.

6 The creative week.

7 The gifts of the Holy Ghost (Rev. i, 12), and the seven times Christ spoke on the cross.

8 The number of beatitudes (Matt. v, 3-11).

9 The nine orders of angels.

10 The number of the Commandments.

11 The number of the Apostles who remained faithful.

12 The original college.

13 The final number after the conversion of Paul.

Apocalyptic number, 666. See NUMBER OF THE BEAST below.

Back number. A number of a paper or periodical issued previously to the current one; hence an out-of-date or old-fashioned person or thing.

Cyclic number. A number the final digit of whose square is the same, 5 (25) and 6 (36) are examples.

Golden number. See GOLDEN.

His days are numbered. They are drawing to a close; he is near death.

God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.—Dan. v, 26.

Irrational number. A definite number not expressible in a definite number of digits, as the root of a number that cannot be exactly extracted.

Medical number. In the Pythagorean system (see above), 7.

Number of the Beast, The. 666; a mystical number of unknown meaning but referring to some man mentioned by St John.

Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.—Rev. xiii, 18.

One of the most plausible suggestions is that it refers to Neron Cæsar, which in Hebrew characters with numerical value gives 666, whereas Nero, without the final "n," as in Latin, gives 616 ( $n = 50$ ), the number given in many early MSS., according to Irenæus.

Among the Cabalists every letter represented a number, and one's number was the sum of these equivalents to the letters in one's name. If, as is probable, the Revelation was written in Hebrew, the number would suit either Nero, Hadrian, or Trajan—all persecutors; if in Greek, it would fit Caligula or Lateionos, i.e. the Roman Empire; but almost any name in any language can be twisted into this number, and it has been applied to many persons assumed to have been Antichrist, or Apostates, Diocletian, Evanthas, Julian the Apostate, Luther, Mohammed, Paul V, Silvester II, Napoleon Bonaparte, Charles Bradlaugh, William II of Germany, and several others, as well as to certain phrases supposed to be descriptive of "the Man of Sin," as Vicar-General of God, Kakos Odegos (bad guide), Abinu Kadescha Papa (our holy father the pope), e.g.—

M	a	o	m	e	t	i	s
40,	1,	70,	40,	5,	300,	10,	200	= 666
L	a	t	e	i	n	o	s
30,	1,	300,	5,	10,	50,	70,	200	= 666

One suggestion is that St. John chose the number 666 because it just fell short of the holy number 7 in every particular; was straining at every point to get there, but never could. See also MYSTERIUM.

Odd numbers. See ODD.

To consult the Book of Numbers. A facetious way of saying, "to put it to the vote," "to call for a division."

Your number's up. You are in a very serious position or, sometimes, about to die. A soldier's phrase; in the American army a soldier who has just been killed or has died is said to have "lost his mess number." An older phrase used in the British Navy was "to lose the number of his mess."

Numerals. All our numerals and ordinals up to a million (with one exception) are Anglo-

Saxon. The one exception is Second, which is French. The Anglo-Saxon word was other, as First, Other, Third, etc., but as this was ambiguous the Fr. seconde was early adopted. Million is from Lat. mille, a thousand.

The primitive method of counting was by the fingers (cp. DIGIT); thus in the Roman system of numeration the first four were simply i, ii, iii, iii; five was the outline of the hand simplified into a v; the next four figures were the two combined, thus, vi, vii, viii, viii; and ten was a double v, thus, x. At a later period iiiii and viiii were expressed by one less than five (i-v) and one less less than ten (i-x); nineteen was ten-plus-nine (x + ix), etc. See also ARABIC FIGURES.

Numawadding Messiah. This was Andrew Fisher, of Nunawadding, Victoria, Australia, who declared himself to be the Messiah, in 1871. His hundred followers were polygamous, he himself having three wives.

Nunc dimittis (nūngk di mit' is). The Song of Simeon (Luke ii, 29), "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," so called from the opening words of the Latin version, Nunc dimittis servum tuum, Domine.

Hence, to receive one's Nunc dimittis, to be given permission to go; to sing one's Nunc dimittis, to show satisfaction at departing.

The Canticle is sung in the Evening Service of the Church of England, and has been used at Compline or Vespers throughout the Church from the earliest times.

Nuncheon (nūn' chūn). Properly, "the noon-tide draught"; M.E. noneschenh (none, noon, and schench, a cup or draught); hence, light refreshments between meals, lunch. The word luncheon has been affected by the older nuncheon. Cp. BEVER.

Laying by their swords and truncheons,

They took their breakfasts, or their nuncheons.

BUTLER: Hudibras, I, i, 345.

Nunky. Slang for "Uncle" (q.v.), especially as meaning a pawnbroker; or for "Uncle Sam" (see SAM).

Nunky pays for all. The American Government (see SAM) has to "stand the racket."

Nuremberg (nū' rem bērg). One of the principal cities of Bavaria (in German Nuernberg), with a long and honorable history, among other things famous as the home of Albrecht Dürer. After 1933 the Nazi party held its annual September conventions there, and in 1935 the infamous Nuremberg Laws were promulgated, dividing the people of Germany into three classes: Aryans (with full civic rights); Jews (with no rights); and mixed Aryans and Jews (who might acquire Aryan rights by marrying Germans). As the centre of Nazi Germany Nuremberg was chosen as the venue for the trial of the 23 chief Nazi leaders which opened November 21st, 1945 and concluded October 1st, 1946, when 3 were acquitted, 11 were condemned to death and the remainder sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

Nuremberg Eggs. Watches, which were invented at Nuremberg about 1500, and were egg-shaped.

Nurr and Spell. See KNURR.

Nursery. A room set apart for the use of young children (Lat. nutrire, to nourish); hence, a garden for rearing plants (tended by a nursery-man).

In horse-racing, Nurseries are races for two-year-olds; and figuratively the word is used of any place or school of training for the professions, etc.

Under William Rufus the Chancery became a nursery of clever and unscrupulous churchmen.—FREEMAN: The Norman Conquest, V, 135.

Nursery cannons. In billiards, a series of cannons played so that the balls move as little as possible.

Nursery slopes. Easy hillsides on which beginners learn to ski.

Nut. Slang for the head; perhaps so called from its resemblance to a nut.

Also slang for a swell young man about town, a dude (in this sense frequently written—and pronounced—with an initial k, knut); from a music-hall song of the early 20th century, sung by Basil Hallam, "I'm Gilbert the Filbert, the colonel of the K-nuts."

A hard nut to crack. A difficult question to answer; a hard problem to solve.

He who would eat the nut must first crack the shell. The gods give nothing to man without great labour.

To lie in a nutshell. To be explained in a few words; to be capable of easy solution.

Here we go gathering nuts in May. This burden of the old children's game is a perversion of "Here we go gathering knots of may," referring to the old custom of gathering knots of flowers on May-day, or, to use the ordinary phrase, "to go a-maying." There are no nuts to be gathered in May.

It is time to lay our nuts aside (Lat. relinquere nucas). To leave off our follies, to relinquish boyish pursuits. The allusion is to an old Roman marriage ceremony, in which the bridegroom, as he led his bride home, scattered nuts to the crowd, as if to symbolize to them that he gave up his boyish sports.

Off one's nut. Crazy, daft.

That's nuts to him. A great pleasure, a fine treat.

To edge his way along the crowded paths of life, warning all human sympathy to keep its distance, was what the knowing ones call nuts to Scrooge.—DICKENS: A Christmas Carol, i.

To be dead nuts on. To be very much pleased with, highly gratified with.

My aunt is awful nuts on Marcus Aurelius; I beg your pardon, you don't know the phrase; my aunt makes Marcus Aurelius her Bible.—WM. BLACK: Princess of Thule, xi.

To be off one's nut, to be nuts. Crazy, demented. Hence, Nut house. A lunatic asylum.

Nut-brown Maid, The. An English ballad, dating (probably) from the late 15th century, first printed in Arnolde's Chronicle (Antwerp, 1502). It tells how the "Not-browne Mayd" was wooed and won by a knight who gave out that he was a banished man. After describing the hardships she would have to undergo if she married him, and finding her love true to the test, he revealed himself to be an earl's son, with large hereditary estates in Westmorland.

The ballad is given in Percy's Reliques, and forms the basis of Prior's Henry and Emma.

Nutcrack Night. All Hallows' Eve, when it is customary in some places to crack nuts in large quantities.

Nutcrackers. The East Kent Regiment, the old 3rd Foot; so called because at Albuera (1811) they opened and retreated, but in a few minutes came again into the field, cracked the heads of the Polish Lancers, and did most excellent service.

The "Iliad" in a nutshell. Pliny (vii, 21) tells us that the Iliad was copied in so small a hand that the whole work could lie in a walnut shell; his authority is Cicero (Apud Gellium, ix, 421).

Whilst they (as Homer's Iliad in a nut)

A world of wonders in one closet shut.

On the Tradescants' Monument, Lambeth Churchyard.

Huet, Bishop of Avranches (d. 1721), proved by experiment that a parchment 27 by 21 centimetres would contain the entire Iliad, and that such a parchment would go into a common-sized nut; he wrote eighty verses of the Iliad (which contains in all 501,930 letters) on a single line of a page similar to this DICTIONARY. This would be 19,000 verses to the page, or 2,000 more than the Iliad contains.

In the Harleian MSS. (530) is an account of Peter Bales, a clerk of the Court of Chancery about 1590, who wrote out the whole Bible so small that he inclosed it in a walnut shell of English growth. Lalanne describes, in his Curiosités Bibliographiques, an edition of Rochefoucault's Maximes, published by Didot in 1829, on pages one inch square, each page containing 26 lines, and each line 44 letters. Charles Toppan, of New York, engraved on a plate one-eighth of an inch square 12,000 letters; the Iliad would occupy 42 such plates engraved on both sides. George P. Marsh says, in his Lectures, he has seen the entire Koran in a parchment roll four inches wide and half an inch in diameter.

Nutmeg State. The nickname of Connecticut. The story is that the inhabitants at one time manufactured wooden nutmegs for export.

O

O. The fifteenth letter of our alphabet, the fourteenth of the ancient Roman, and the sixteenth of the Phœnician and Semitic—in which it was called "the eye." Its name in Anglo-Saxon was oedel, home.

A headless man had a letter [o] to write,
He who read it [naught] had lost his sight.
The dumb repeated it [naught] word for word,
And deaf was the man who listened and heard [naught].

Dr. Whewell.

Round as Giotto's O. Said of work that is perfect and complete, but done with little labour. See GIOTTO.

The Fifteen O's, or the O's of St. Bridget. Fifteen meditations on the Passion, composed by St. Bridget. Each begins with O Jesu, or a similar invocation.

The Seven O's, or the Great O's of Advent. The seven antiphons to the Magnificat sung during the week preceding Christmas. They commence respectively with O Sapientia, O Adonai, O Radix Jesse, O Clavis David, O Oriens Splendor, O Rex gentium, and O Emmanuel. They are sometimes called The Christmas O's.

O'. An Irish patronymic. (Gael. ogha, Ir. oa, a descendant.)

O' in tam-o'-shanter, what's o'clock? cat-o'-nine-tails, etc., stands for of; but in such phrases as He comes home late o' night, I go to church o' Sundays, it represents M.E. on.

O.K. All correct, all right; a reassuring affirmative that, coming from the U.S.A. to England has spread colloquially throughout several European languages. It derives probably from the Choctaw oke, meaning, "It is so." Andrew Jackson (1767-1845), who was notoriously illiterate, used the phrase. In the presidential campaign of 1828 Jackson's opponents asserted that he derived the abbreviation from his own spelling "orl korrekt."

O.P. Riots. When Covent Garden Theatre was reopened in 1809 after the disastrous fire of the preceding year, the charges of admission were increased; but night after night for three months a throng crowded the pit, shouting "O.P." (old prices); much damage was done, and the manager was obliged at last to give way.

O tempora! O mores! (ō tem' pōr ā ō mōr' ēz) (Lat. from Cicero's In Catilinam i, 2). Alas! how the times have changed for the worse! Alas! how the morals of the people are degenerated!

O Yes! O Yes! O Yes! See OYEZ.

Oaf. A corruption of ouph (elf). A foolish lout or dolt is so called from the notion that idiots are changelings, left by the fairies in place of the stolen ones.

This guiltless oaf his vacancy of sense
Supplied, and amply too, by innocence.

BYRON: Verses found in a Summer-house.

Then ye returned to your trinkets; then ye contented your souls

With the flannelled fools at the wicket, or the muddled

RUDYARD KIPLING: The Islanders.

Oak. The oak was in ancient times sacred to the god of thunder because these trees are said to be more likely to be struck by lightning than any other. Among the Druids the oak was held in the greatest veneration.

Royal Oak Day. See OAK-APPLE DAY.

To sport one's oak. To be "not at home." At the Universities, chambers have two doors, the usual room-door and another, made of oak, outside it; when the "oak" is shut or "sporting" it indicates either that the occupant of the room is out, or that he does not wish to be disturbed by visitors.

Oak before ash, in for a splash; Ash before oak, in for a soak. The tradition is, if the oak gets into leaf before the ash we may expect a fine and productive year; if the ash precedes the oak in foliage, we may anticipate a wet summer and unproductive autumn.

Some Famous Oaks:

The Abbot's Oak, near Woburn Abbey, is so called because the Woburn abbot was hanged on one of its branches, in 1537, by order of Henry VIII.

The Bull Oak, Wedgenock Park, was growing at the time of the Conquest.

Cowthorpe Oak, near Wetherby, in Yorkshire, will hold seventy persons in its hollow. It is said to be over 1,600 years old.

The Ellerslie Oak, near Paisley, is reported to have sheltered Sir William Wallace and 300 of his men.

Fairlop Oak, in Hainault Forest, was 36 ft. in circumference a yard from the ground. It was blown down in 1820.

Owen Glendower's Oak, at Shelton, near Shrewsbury, was in full growth in 1403, for in this tree Owen Glendower witnessed the great battle between Henry IV and Henry Percy. Six or eight persons can stand in the hollow of its trunk. Its girth is 4½ ft.

The Major Oak, Sherwood Forest, Edwinstowe, according to tradition, was a full-grown tree in the reign of King John. The hollow of the trunk will hold fifteen persons, but a new bark has considerably diminished the opening. Its girth is 37 or 38 ft., and the head covers a circumference of 240 ft.

The Parliament Oak, Clipston, in Sherwood Forest, was the tree under which Edward I, in 1282, held his parliament. He was hunting when a messenger came to tell him of the revolt of the Welsh. He hastily convened his nobles under the oak, and it was resolved to march at once against Llewelyn, who was slain. It was standing until early in this century.

The Oak of the Partisans, in Parcy Forest, St. Ouen, in the department of the Vosges, is 107 ft. in height. At the beginning of this century it was 706 years old.

Queen's Oak, Huntingfield, Suffolk, is so named because near this tree Queen Elizabeth I shot a buck.

The Reformation Oak, on Mousehold Heath, near Norwich, is where the rebel Ket held his court in 1549, and when the rebellion was stamped out nine of the ringleaders were hanged on this tree.

Robin Hood's Larder is an oak in Sherwood Forest. The tradition is that Robin Hood used its hollow trunk as a hiding-place for the deer he had slain. Late in the last century some schoolgirls boiled their kettle in it, and burnt down a large part of the tree, but every effort was made to preserve what remained.

The Royal Oak. See OAK-APPLE DAY.

Sir Philip Sydney's Oak, near Penshurst, was planted at his birth in 1554, and was commemorated by Ben Jonson and Waller.

The Swilcar Oak, in Needwood Forest, Staffordshire, is between 600 and 700 years old.

William the Conqueror's Oak, in Windsor Great Park, is 38 feet in girth.

The Winfarthing Oak is said to have been 700 years old at the time of the Conquest.

Oak-apple Day (also called Royal Oak Day). May 29th, the birthday of Charles II, commanded by Act of Parliament in 1664 to be observed as a day of thanksgiving. A special service—expunged only in 1859—was inserted in the Book of Common Prayer.

It was in the month of September that Charles concealed himself in an oak (the "Royal Oak") at Boscobel. The battle of Worcester was fought on Wednesday, September 3rd, 1651, and Charles arrived at Whiteladies, about three-quarters of a mile from Boscobel House, early the next morning. He returned to England on his birthday, when the Royalists displayed a branch of oak in allusion to his hiding in this tree.

Oakes's Oath (Austr.). Unreliable testimony delivered on oath. The phrase is said to derive from one Oakes who was asked in a Court of Law if he could identify a pair of horns as belonging to one of his own cattle. After hesitating a moment he is reported to have said, "I'll chance it; Yes!"

Oakley, Annie. An expert American marks-woman (1860-1926), who in Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, using a playing card as a target, centred a shot in each of the pips. From this performance of hers, and the resemblance of the card to a punched ticket, springs the American use of the name "Annie Oakley" to mean a complimentary ticket to a show, a meal ticket, or a pass on a railway.

Oaks, The. One of the "classic" horse-races; it is for three-year-old fillies, and is run at Epsom shortly before or after the Derby (q.v.). So called by the twelfth Earl of Derby, who established the race in 1779, from an estate of his near Epsom named "The Oaks."

Oakum is the fibre obtained by unravelling and unpicking old rope. It was formerly used for caulking the seams in the timbers of wooden ships. The picking of oakum was once a form of employment forced upon prisoners; the plucking of old, tarred rope with the bare fingernails was little short of a form of torture, and a more sensible attitude towards imprisonment and punishment has made it obsolete.

Oannes (ō ān' ēz). A Babylonian god having a fish's body and a human head and feet. In the daytime he lived with men to instruct them in the arts and sciences, but at night retired to the depths of the Persian Gulf. He has been identified with Ea of the cuneiform inscriptions.

Oar. To put your oar into my boat. To interfere with my affairs. "Paddle your own canoe, and don't put your oar into my boat."

To rest on one's oars. To take an interval of rest after hard work. A boating phrase.

To toss the oars. To raise them vertically, resting on the handles. It is a form of salute.

Oasis (ō ā' sis) (Coptic, ouahe, from ouih, to dwell). A fertile spot in the midst of a desert country, especially in the deserts of Africa where wells of water or small lakes are to be found, and vegetation is pretty abundant. Hence a sudden cessation of pain, or a sudden pleasure in the midst of monotonous existence, is sometimes called "a perfect oasis."

Oaten pipe. A rustic musical pipe made of an oat straw so cut as to be stopped at one end with a knot, the other end being left open. A slit made in the straw near the knot was so cut as to form a reed.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to th' oaten flute.

MILTON: Lycidas.

Oath. See SWEAR.

Oats. He has sown his wild oats. He has left off his gay habits and is become steady. The reference is to the folly of sowing wild, i.e. bad, grain instead of good; but it is worth noting that in Denmark the thick vapours which rise just before the land bursts into vegetation are called Lokkens havre (Loki's wild oats), and when the fine weather succeeds, the Danes say, "Loki has sown his wild oats."

Obadiah (ō be dī' ā). A slang name for a Quaker.

Obeah, Obi (ō 'be ā). The belief in and practice of obeah, i.e., a kind of sorcery or witchcraft prevalent in West Africa and formerly in the West Indies. Obeah is a native word, and signifies something put into the ground, to bring about sickness, death, or other disaster.

Obelisk. A tapering pillar stone, originally erected by the Egyptians, who placed them in pairs before temple portals. They were usually monoliths of pink syenite, with a base width one-tenth of the height and a copper-sheathed, pyramidal apex. Each of the obelisk's four faces bore incised hieroglyphs. The best known in England is Cleopatra's Needle, placed on the Victoria Embankment, London, in 1878, its partner being set up in Central Park, New York. These granite obelisks were erected in Heliopolis by Thothmes III, about 1475 B.C., and removed to Alexandria by Augustus Cæsar in 12 B.C.

The tallest of all obelisks is at Rome, taken there from Heliopolis by the Emperor Caligula and erected in the circus that is now the Piazza of St. Peter's. Although weighing some 320 tons, it was moved bodily on rollers by Pope Sixtus V, in 1586—an astonishing engineering feat, considering the appliances then available. The task was so tricky that spectators were forbidden to utter a sound on pain of death. But at a critical moment, when the immense weight of stone appeared to be straining the ropes to breaking point, one of the workmen, a sailor from San Remo, called "Acqua alle fune!"—Water on the ropes—and saved the situation at the risk of his life.

The Obelisk of Luxor, in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, came from Thebes and was presented to Louis Philippe, in 1831, by the then Khedive of Egypt. Its hieroglyphs record the deeds of Rameses II (13th century, B.C.).

Oberammergau. See PASSION PLAY.

Obermann (ō' bër măn). The impersonation of high moral worth without talent, and the tortures endured by the consciousness of this defect. From Senancour's psychological romance of this name (1804), in which Obermann, the hero, is a dreamer perpetually trying to escape from the actual.

Oberon (ō' bër on). King of the Fairies, husband of Titania. Shakespeare introduces them in his Midsummer Night's Dream. The name is probably connected with Alberich (q.v.), the king of the elves.

He first appears in the mediæval French romance, Huon de Bordeaux, where he is a son of Julius Cæsar and Morgan le Fay. He was only three feet high, but of angelic face, and was lord and king of Mommur. At his birth the fairies bestowed their gifts—one was insight into men's thoughts, and another was the power of transporting himself to any place instantaneously; and in the fullness of time legions of angels conveyed his soul to Paradise.

Obi. See OBEAH.

Obiter dictum (ob' i tēr dik' tūm) (Lat.). An incidental remark, an opinion expressed by a judge, but not judicially. An obiter dictum has no authority beyond that of deference to the wisdom, experience, and honesty of the person who utters it; but a judicial sentence is the verdict of a judge bound under oath to pronounce judgment only according to law and evidence.

Object; Objective. See SUBJECT.

Oblong (U.S.A.). A late 19th-century slang term for a bank note.

Obolus (ob' ō lūs). An ancient Greek copper coin worth five lepta, or about a halfpenny. Also a silver coin of the Byzantine Empire, worth about three times as much. It is to this latter that the phrase "Give an obolus to poor old Belisarius" (see BELISIARIUS) refers.

Observantins. See FRANCISCANS.

Obverse. That side of a coin or medal which contains the principal device. Thus, the obverse of our coins is the side which contains the sovereign's head; the other side is the "reverse."

Occam's Razor. Entia non sunt multiplicanda (entities are not to be multiplied). With this axiom, which means that all unnecessary facts or constituents in the subject being analysed are to be eliminated, Occam dissected every question as with a razor.

William of Occam, the Doctor Singularis et Invincibilis (d. 1347), was a scholastic philosopher, famous as the great advocate and reviver of nominalism (q.v.).

Occasion. A lame old hag in Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, iv), mother of Furor, and symbolical of the cause of anger.

To improve the occasion. To draw a moral lesson from some event which has occurred.

Occult Sciences (Lat. occultus, related to celāre, to hide). Magic, alchemy, and astrology; so called because they were hidden mysteries.

Oceana (ō sē' ā na). A philosophical treatise on the principles of government by James Harrington (1656). See COMMONWEALTHS, IDEAL.

Octavo (ok tā' vō). A book in which each sheet of paper is folded into eight leaves (16 pages); contracted thus—8vo. (Ital. un' ottavo, Fr. in octavo, Lat. octo, eight.) An octavo can be of almost any size, dependent entirely on the size of the sheets before folding.

October. The eighth month of the ancient Roman calendar (Lat. octo, eight) when the year began in March; the tenth of ours. The old Dutch name was Wyn-maand; the Anglo-Saxon, Winmonath (wine-month, or the time of vintage); also Teo-monath (tenth-month) and Winter-sylleth (winter full-moon). In the French Republican calendar it was Vendémiaire (time of vintage, September 22nd to October 21st).

A tankard of October. A tankard of the best and strongest ale, brewed in October.

October Club. A club of extreme Tories founded in 1710, with the password "October"—easily remembered "by a country gentleman who loved his ale." In the last years of Queen Anne's reign the October Club was a staunch supporter of the Jacobites.

Od. See ODYLE.

Odal. See UDAL.

Odd. There's luck in odd numbers. This is a very ancient fancy. According to the Pythagorean system, "all nature is a harmony," man is a full chord; and all beyond is Deity, so that nine represents Deity. A major chord consists of a fundamental or tonic, its major third, and its just fifth. As the odd numbers are the fundamental notes of nature, the last being Deity, it will be easy to see how they came to be considered the great or lucky numbers. Cp. DIAPASON; NUMBER.

Good luck lies in odd numbers. . . . They say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death—Merry Wives of Windsor, v, 1.

The odd numbers 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 (which see) seem to play a far more important part than the even numbers. One is Deity, three the Trinity, five the chief division, seven is the sacred number, and nine is three times three, the great climacteric.

Numerus Deus impare gaudet (the god delights in odd numbers—Virgil, Eclogues, viii, 75). Three indicates the "beginning, middle, and end." The Godhead has three persons; so in classic mythology Hecate had threefold power; Jove's symbol was a triple thunderbolt, Neptune's a sea-trident, Pluto's a three-headed dog; the Fates were three, the Furies three, the Graces three, the Horæ three; the Muses three-times-three. There are seven notes, nine planets, nine orders of angels, seven days a week, thirteen lunar months, or 365 days a year, etc.; five senses, five fingers on the hand and toes on the foot, five continents, etc.

Odd Volumes, Sette of. A literary dining Society in London, founded in 1884.

At odds. At variance.

By long odds. By a great difference; as, "He is the best man by long odds." In horse-racing, odds are the ratio by which the amount staked by one party to a bet exceeds that of the other; hence long odds indicates a big variance in this ratio.

Odds and Ends. See END.

That makes no odds. No difference; never mind; that is no excuse. An application of the betting phrase.

Odd Fellows. A secret society with benevolent aims and of uncertain antiquity. Records go back to 1745, and in the following years it flourished despite considerable persecution on account of its alleged "seditiousness." In 1813 it awakened to new vigour as the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in Manchester; it has since then become the greatest of such benevolent orders, spreading into most of the countries of North Europe and into North America. In 1950 it numbered some 685,000 members in Great Britain alone.

Odin (ô' din). The Scandinavian name of the god called by the Anglo-Saxons Woden (q.v.). Odin was god of wisdom, poetry, war, and agriculture. He was god of the dead, also, and presided over banquets of those slain in battle. See VALHALLA. He became the All-wise by drinking of Mimir's fountain, but purchased the distinction at the cost of one eye, and is often represented as a one-eyed man wearing a hat and carrying a staff. His remaining eye is the Sun.

The promise of Odin. The most binding of all oaths to a Norseman. In making it the hand was passed through a massive silver ring kept for the purpose; or through a sacrificial stone, like that called the "Circle of Stennis."

The vow of Odin. A matrimonial or other vow made before the "Stone of Odin," in the Orkneys. This was an oval stone, with a hole in it large enough to admit a man's hand. Anyone who violated a vow made before this stone was held infamous.

Odium theologicum (ô' di ùm thê ô loj' i kùm) (Lat.). The bitter hatred of rival theologians. No wars so sanguinary as holy wars; no persecutions so relentless as religious persecutions; no hatred so bitter as theological hatred.

Odor lucri (ô' dôr lû' krî) (Lat.). The sweets of gain; the delights of money-making.

Odour. In good odour; in bad odour. In favour, out of favour; in good repute, in bad repute.

The odour of sanctity. In the Middle Ages it was held that a sweet and delightful odour was given off by the bodies of saintly persons at their death, and also when their bodies, if "translated," were disinterred. Hence the phrase, he died in the odour of sanctity, i.e. he died a saint. The Swedenborgians say that when the celestial angels are present at a death-bed, what is then cadaverous excites a sensation of what is aromatic.

There is an "odour of iniquity" as well as an "odour of sanctity," and Shakespeare has a strong passage on the odour of impiety. Antiochus and his wicked daughter were killed by lightning, and the poet says:—

A fire from heaven came and shrivelled up
Their bodies, e'en to loathing; for they so stunk
That all those eyes adored them ere they fall
Scorned now their hand should give them burial.
Pericles, ii, 4.

Od's, used in oaths, as:—

Od's bodikins! or Odsbody! means "God's body."

Od's pittikins! God's pity.

Od's plessed will! (Merry Wives of Windsor, i, 1.)

Od rot 'em! See DRAT.

Od-zounds! God's wounds.

Odyle (od' îl). The name formerly given to the hypothetical force which emanates from a medium to produce the phenomena connected with mesmerism, spirit-rapping, table-turning, and so on. Baron von Reichenbach (1788-1869) called it Od force, and taught that it pervaded all nature, especially heat, light, crystals, magnets, etc., and was developed in chemical action; and also that it streamed from the fingers of specially sensitive persons.

That od-force of German Reichenbach

Which still from female finger-tips burns blue.

MRS. BROWNING: Aurora Leigh, vii, 295.

Odyssey (od' i si). The epic poem of Homer which records the adventures of Odysseus (Ulysses) on his home-voyage from Troy. The word is an adjective formed out of the hero's name, and means the things or adventures of Ulysses.

Œcumenical Councils (ê kû men' ik àl). Ecclesiastical councils whose findings are—or were—recognized as applying to the whole of the Christian world (Gr. oikoumenikos, the inhabited—ge, earth being understood), and the members of which were drawn from the whole Church. They are:—

Nicea, 325, 787; Constantinople, 381, 553, 680-1, 869; Ephesus, 431; Chalcedon, 451; Lateran, 1123, 1139, 1179, 1215, 1512-17; Lyons, 1245, 1274; Vienne, 1311-13, Constance, 1414-18; Basle-Ferrara-Florence, 1431-43; Trent, 1545-1563; Vatican, 1869 (adjourned 1870 and still unfinished).

Of these the Church of England recognizes only six:—

Nicea, 325, against the Arians.
Constantinople, 381, against "heretics."
Ephesus, 431, against the Nestorians and Pelagians.
Chalcedon, 451, when Athanasius was restored.
Constantinople, 553, against Origen.
Constantinople, 680, against the Monothelites.

Œdipus (ê' di pûs) was the son of Laius, King of Corinth, and of Jocasta his wife. To avert the fulfilment of a prophecy Œdipus was exposed on the mountains as an infant and taken in and reared by the shepherds. When grown to manhood he unwittingly slew his father; then, having solved the riddle of the Sphinx, he became King of Thebes, thereby gaining the hand in marriage of Jocasta, his mother, of whose relationship to himself they were both ignorant. When the facts came to light Jocasta hanged herself and Œdipus tore out his own eyes.

An Œdipus complex is the psychoanalytical term for the sexual desire (usually unrecognized by himself) of a son for his mother and conversely an equally unrecognized jealous hatred of his father.

Œil de Bœuf (ô ê de bêrf) (Fr., "bull's-eye"). A large reception room (salle) in the palace of Versailles, lighted by a round, "bull's-eye" window. The ceiling, decorated by Van der Mulen, contains likenesses of the children of Louis XIV. It was the ante-room where courtiers waited and gossiped, and hence the name became associated with backstairs intrigue.

Les Fastes de l'Œil de Bœuf. The annals of the courtiers of the Grand Monarque; hence, anecdotes of courtiers generally.

Off (Lat. ab, from, away). The house is a mile off—i.e. is "away" or "from" us a mile. The word preceding off defines its scope. To be "well off" is to be away or on the way towards well-being; to be badly off is to be away or on the way to the bad.

The off-side of horses when in pairs is that to the right hand of the coachman (cp. NEAR); and a "Soccer" football referee signals Off-side and awards a free kick when a player has kicked the ball—there being none of his opponents except the goal-keeper between himself and his opponents' goal—unless he himself has taken the ball there. The off-side rules vary with the different varieties of football.

An act of behaviour, a thing, a person, etc., is said to be a bit off when it is not quite up to the mark—it is a bit "off colour" (see COLOUR); and a girl is said "to get off with a man" when she sets out to attract him and succeeds.

Offa's Dyke. An entrenchment which runs from Beachley, near the mouth of the Wye, to Flintshire. If not actually the work of Offa, King of Mercia (about 757-96) it was repaired by him, and he availed himself of it as a line of demarcation between him and the Welsh, though it by no means tallied with his territory either in extent or position.

Office, The Divine. See BREVIARY.

Office, The Holy. The Inquisition (q.v.).

Og, King of Bashan, according to Rabbinical mythology was an antediluvian giant, saved from the flood by climbing on the roof of the ark. After the passage of the Red Sea, Moses first conquered Sihon, and then advanced against the giant Og (whose bedstead, made of iron, was above 15 ft. long and nearly 7 ft. broad (Deut. iii, 11)). The legend says that Og plucked up a mountain to hurl at the Israelites, but he got so entangled with his burden that Moses was able to kill him without much difficulty.

In Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.), Og stands for Thomas Shadwell (see MAC-FLECKNOE). He was very large and fat.

Ogham (og' am). The alphabet in use among the ancient Irish and British nations. There were twenty characters, each of which was composed of any number of thin strokes from one to five, which were arranged and grouped above, below, or across a horizontal line.

The word is connected with Ogmus, the name, according to Lucian, of a Gaulish god who presided over speech.

Ogier the Dane (ô'ji ér). One of the great heroes of mediæval romance; a paladin of Charlemagne, and son of Geoffrey, King of Denmark, of which country (as Holger Danske) he is still the national hero. Fairies attended at his birth, and bestowed upon him divers gifts. Among these fairies was Morgan le Fay (q.v.), who when the knight was a hundred years old embarked him for Avalon, "hard by the terrestrial paradise." On reaching the island he entered the castle, where he found a horse sitting at a banquet-table. The horse, who had once been a mighty prince, conducted him to Morgan le Fay, who gave him a ring which removed all infirmities and restored him to ripe manhood, and a crown which made him forget his country and past life, and introduced him to King Arthur. Two hundred years rolled on, and France was invaded by the Paynims. Morgan le Fay now sent Ogier to defend "le bon pays de France"; and when he had routed the invaders she took him back to Avalon, where he remains until the time for him to reappear on this earth of ours has arrived. William Morris gives a rendering of the romance in his Earthly Paradise (August).

Ogpu (og'poo) or G.P.U. (gā pā oo), the secret political police of the U.S.S.R., employed to suppress political crime and root out disaffection among the proletariat. It succeeded the dreaded Cheka in 1922, but proved itself no less tyrannical and feared. The initials stand for Russian Obedinennoe Gosudarstvennoe Politicheskoe Upravlenie, State Political Control.

Ogres of nursery story are giants of very malignant disposition, who live on human flesh. The word was first used (and probably invented) by Perrault in his Contes (1697), and is thought to be made up from Orcus, a name of Pluto, the god of Hades.

Ogygia (ô'ji' i a). See CALYPSO.

Ogygian Deluge. In Greek legend a flood supposed to have taken place two hundred years before Deucalion's flood, when Ogyges was King of Bœotia.

Varro tells us that the planet Venus underwent a great change in the reign of Ogyges. It changed its diameter, its colour, its figure, and its course.

Oi Polloi, properly Hoi Polloi (q.v.). The commonalty, the many. In University slang the "poll men," or those who take degrees without "honours."

Oil. Oil of palms. See PALM-OIL.

To oil the knocker. To fee the porter. The expression is from Racine's Les Plaideurs: "On n'entre point chez lui sans graisser le marteau" ("No one enters his house without oiling the knocker").

To pour oil on troubled waters. To soothe by gentle words; to bring about a state of calm after great anger or excitement, etc., by tact and diplomacy.

The allusion is to the well-known fact that during a storm at sea the force of the waves striking against a ship is very much lessened by pouring out oil. In Bede's Ecclesiastical History (735) it is said that St. Aidan gave a young priest who was to convoy a maiden destined for the bride of King Oswin a cuse of oil to pour on the sea if the waves became stormy. A storm did arise, and the priest, pouring the oil on the waves, actually reduced them to a calm.

To strike oil. To make a happy hit or valuable discovery. The phrase refers to hitting upon or discovering a bed of petroleum or mineral oil.

Old. Used in slang and colloquial talk as a term of endearment or friendship, as in My dear old chap, my old man (i.e. my husband); as a general disparagement, as in Old cat, old foggy, old geezer, old stick-in-the-mud; and as a common intensive, as in Shakespeare's "Here will be an old abusing of God's patience and the king's English," and in the modern Any old thing will do.

For names such as Old Grog, Harry, Noll, Rowley, Scratch, Tom, etc., see these words.

Old and Bold. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Old Bags. John Scott, Lord Chancellor Eldon (1751-1838); so called from his carrying home with him in different bags the cases still pending his judgment.

Old Blood-and-Guts. Nickname of American General George S. Patton (World War II.)

Old Bold. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Old Bold Fifth. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Old Bona Fide. Louis XIV (1638, 1643-1715).

Old boots. See BOOTS.

Old Boy Net. See NET.

Old Braggs. The Gloucestershire Regiment, the 28th Foot, raised in 1694. The name is derived from General Philip Bragg, who was colonel of the regiment from 1734 to 1759.

Old Contemptibles. The British Expeditionary Force that crossed to France in 1914 and fought in the battle and retreat from Mons. The phrase originated in the alleged comment of the Kaiser about "the contemptible British army."

Old Cracow Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Old Dominion. Virginia. Every Act of Parliament up to the Declaration of Independence designated Virginia "the Colony and Dominion of Virginia." Captain John Smith, in his History of Virginia (1629), calls this "colony and dominion" Old Virginia, in contradistinction to New England, and other British settlements.

Old Dozen. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Old Fogs. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Old Glory. The United States Flag. See STARS AND STRIPES.

Old Guard. The Imperial Guard created by Napoleon in 1804 and composed of picked men, the flower of the French army. Devoted to the Emperor, with a magnificent uniform including a huge bearskin hat, with better pay and rationing than the rest of the army, the Old Guard were to be relied upon in any desperate strait of battle, and it was they who made the last charge of the French at Waterloo. Figuratively the phrase Old Guard is used for the stalwarts of any party or movement.

Old Hickory. The nickname of General Andrew Jackson (1767-1845), 7th President of the U.S.A.; it arose from the staunchness and strength of his character.

Old King Cole. See COLE.

Old Lady of Threadneedle Street. See THREADNEEDLE.

Old Man Eloquent. Isocrates; so called by Milton. When he heard of the result of the battle of Charonea, which was fatal to Grecian liberty, he died of grief.

That dishonest victory

At Chæronea, fatal to liberty,

Killed with report that Old Man Eloquent.

MILTON: Sonnets.

This name was also applied to John Quincy Adams (1767-1848), 6th President of the U.S.A., 1825-29.

Old Man of the Mountain. Hassan-ben-Sabah, the sheikh Al Jebal, and founder of the sect called Assassins (q.v.).

Old Man of the Sea. In the Arabian Nights story of Sinbad the Sailor, the Old Man of the Sea hoisted himself on the shoulders of Sinbad and clung there for many days and nights, much to the discomfort of Sinbad, who finally released himself by making the Old Man drunk. Hence, any burden, figurative or actual, of which it is impossible to free oneself without the greatest exertions is spoken of as an Old Man of the Sea.

Old Pretender. James Stuart (1688-1760), son of James II the last Stuart king of Great Britain and Ireland. He was also called the Old Chevalier, and on the death of his father was proclaimed king by his adherents, under the title of James III. The word "Pretender" in this context has its old connotation of one who makes a baseless claim to a title, etc. There was a popular Jacobite toast:

God bless the king, I mean the Faith's Defender;

God bless (no harm in blessing) the Pretender.

But who that Pretender is, and who that king,

God bless us all! is quite another thing.

Old Reekie. See AULD REEKIE.

Old Rough and Ready. General Zachary Taylor (1784-1850), 12th President of the U.S.A., 1849-50.

Old School Tie. Literally a necktie of the colours of the wearer's public school, but more often used figuratively in a pejorative sense as a symbol of the class distinction allegedly assumed by those who went to a public school.

Old Style—New Style. Terms used in chronology; the Old Style being the Julian Calendar (q.v.), and the New Style the Gregorian (q.v.). See also CALENDAR.

Old World. So Europe, Asia, and Africa are called when compared with North and South America (the New World).

Oldenburg Horn. A horn long in the possession of the reigning princes of the House of Oldenburg, but now in the collection of the King of Denmark. According to tradition, Count Otto of Oldenburg, in 967, was offered drink in this silver-gilt horn by a "wild woman," at the Osenborg. As he did not like the look of the liquor, he threw it away, and rode off with the horn.

'Ole, A Better. Old Bill, a walrus-moustached, disillusioned old soldier in the days of trench warfare was the creation of Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, who was doing drawings for London illustrated papers in 1914-18. Covering in a muddy shell-hole in the midst of a withering bombardment, he says to his grouching pal Bert, "If you know of a better 'ole, go to it." The joke and Old Bill struck the public fancy. Old Bill became a national figure—the embodiment of a familiar type of simple, cynical, long-suffering, honest old grumbler.

Olet lucernam (ō 'let loo sēr' nām) (Latin proverb). It smells of the lamp. See LAMP.

Oligarchy (ol' i gar ki) (Gr. oligos, the few; archē, rule). A government in which the supreme power is vested in a small number of families or a few members of a class.

Olio (ō' li ō) (Span. olla, a stew, or the pot in which it is cooked, from Lat. olla, a pot). In Spain a mixture of meat, vegetables, spices, etc., boiled together and highly seasoned; hence, any hotchpotch of various ingredients, as a miscellaneous collection of verses, drawings, pieces of music, etc.

Olive. In ancient Greece the olive was sacred to Pallas Athene, in allusion to the story (see ATHENS) that at the naming of Athens she presented it with an olive tree. It was the symbol of peace, and also an emblem of fecundity, brides wearing or carrying an olive garland as ours do a wreath of orange blossom. A crown of olive was the highest distinction of a citizen who had deserved well of his country, and was the highest prize in the Olympic Games.

In the O.T. the subsiding of the Flood was demonstrated to Noah by the return of a dove bearing an olive leaf in her beak (Gen. viii, 11).

To hold out the olive branch. To make overtures for peace; in allusion to the olive being an ancient symbol of peace. In some of Numa's medals the king is represented holding an olive twig, indicative of a peaceful reign.

Olive branches. A facetious term for children in relation to their parents; the allusion is to "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine . . . thy children like olive plants round about thy table" (Ps. cxxviii, 3).

The wife and olive branches of one Mr. Kenwigs.—DICKENS: Nicholas Nickleby, xiv.

Oliver. Charlemagne's favourite paladin, who, with Roland, rode by his side. He was the son of Regnier, Duke of Genoa (another of the paladins), and brother of the beautiful Aude. His sword was called Hauteclair, and his horse Ferrant d'Espagne.

A Roland for an Oliver. See ROLAND.

Olivetans (oli vet' ānz). Brethren of "Our Lady of Mount Olivet," and offshoot of the Benedictines. The order was founded in 1313 by Bernard Tolomei, of Siena.

Olla Podrida (ol 'yā pod rē' dā) (Span., putrid pot). Odds and ends, a mixture of scraps or pot au feu, into which every sort of eatable is thrown and stewed. Cp. OLIO. Figuratively, the term means an incongruous mixture, a miscellaneous collection of any kind, a medley.

Olympia. The ancient name of a valley in Elis, Peloponnesus, so called because here were held the famous games in honour of the Olympian Zeus (see below). In the valley was built the Altis, an enclosure of about 500 ft. by 600 ft., which contained, besides the temple of Zeus, the Herceum, the Metroum, etc., the Stadium, with gymnasias, baths, etc. Hence, the name has been given to large buildings (more particularly the great halls and amphitheatre near Hammer-smith, London) in which sporting events, spectacles, exhibitions, and so on can be presented under cover.

Olympiad. Among the ancient Greeks, a period of four years, being the interval between the celebrations of the Olympic Games (q.v.). The first Olympiad began in 776 B.C., and the last (the 23rd) in A.D. 393.

Olympian Zeus or Jove. A statue by Phidias, one of the "Seven Wonders of the World." Pausanias (vii, 2) says when the sculptor placed it in the temple at Olympia (433 B.C.), he prayed the god to indicate whether he was satisfied with it, and immediately a thunderbolt fell on the floor of the temple without doing the slightest harm.

It was a chryselephantine statue, i.e. made of ivory and gold, and though seated on a throne, was 60 ft. in height. The left hand rested on a sceptre, and the right palm held a statue of Victory in solid gold. The robes were of gold, and so were the four lions which supported the footstool. The throne was of cedar, embellished with ebony, ivory, gold, and precious stones.

It was removed to Constantinople in the 5th century A.D., and perished in the great fire of 475.

Olympic Games. The greatest of the four sacred festivals of the ancient Greeks, held at Olympia (q.v.) every fourth year, in the month of July. The festival began with sacrifices and included racing, wrestling, and all kinds of contests, ending on the fifth day with processions, sacrifices, and banquets to the victors—who were garlanded with olive leaves.

The Olympic Games were revived in 1896, the first meeting being held at Athens in that year. These were followed at four-yearly intervals: 1900 (Paris), 1904 (St. Louis), 1908 (London), 1912 (Stockholm), 1920 (Antwerp), 1924 (Paris), 1928 (Amsterdam), 1932 (Los Angeles), 1936 (Berlin), 1948 (London), 1952 (Helsinki). The games in 1916, 1940, and 1944 were not held on account of World Wars I and II.

Olympus. The home of the gods of ancient Greece, where Zeus held his court, a mountain about 9,800 ft. high on the confines of Macedonia and Thessaly. The name is used for any pantheon, as "Odin, Thor, Balder, and the rest of the Northern Olympus."

Om. Among the Brahmans, the mystic equivalent for the name of the Deity; it has been adopted by modern occultists to denote absolute goodness and truth or the spiritual essence.

Om mani padme hum ("Om, the jewel, is in the lotus: amen"). The mystic formula of the Tibetans and northern Buddhists used as a charm and for many religious purposes. They are the first words taught to a child and the last uttered on the death-bed of the pious. The lotus symbolizes universal being, and the jewel the individuality of the utterer.

Omar Khayyam (ô' mar kī yām'), Persian poet, astronomer, and mathematician, lived at Nishapur, where he died about the age of 50 in A.D. 1123. He was known chiefly for his work on algebra until Edward Fitzgerald published a poetical translation of his poems in 1859. Little notice of this was taken, however, until the early '90s when the Rubaiyat took Britain and America by storm. It is frankly hedonistic in tone, but touched with a melancholy that attunes with eastern and western pessimism alike. Fitzgerald never pretended that his work was other than a free version of the original; he made several revisions, but did not improve on his first text.

Ombre (om' bër). A card-game, introduced into England from Spain in the 17th century, and very popular till it was supplanted by quadrille, about 1730. It was usually played by three persons, and the eights, nines, and tens of each suit were left out. Prior has an epigram on the game; he was playing with two ladies, and Fortune gave him "success in every suit but hearts." Pope immortalized the game in his Rape of the Lock.

Omega (ô 'meg à). The last letter of the Greek alphabet. See ALPHA.

Omelet (om' lét). You can't make omelets without breaking eggs. Said by way of warning to one who is trying to "get something for nothing"—to accomplish some desired object without being willing to take the necessary trouble or make the necessary sacrifice. The phrase is a translation of the French On ne saurait faire une omelette sans casser des œufs.

Omen (ô' men). Some phenomenon or unusual event taken as a prognostication either of good or evil; a prophetic sign or augury. The Latin word was adopted in the 16th century; its origin is unknown, but it is thought to be connected with audire, to hear. Some well-known examples of accepting omens, apparently evil, as of good augury, are:—

Leotychides II, of Sparta, was told by his augurs that his projected expedition would fail, because a viper had got entangled in the handle of the city key. "Not so," he replied. "The key caught the viper."

When Julius Caesar landed at Adrumetum he happened to trip and fall on his face. This would have been considered a fatal omen by his army; but, with admirable presence of mind, he exclaimed, "Thus I take possession of thee, O Africa!" Told of Scipio also.

When William the Conqueror leaped upon the English shore he fell on his face and a great cry went forth that it was an ill-omen; but the duke exclaimed: "I have taken seisin of this land with both my hands."

Omnibus (om' ni būs) (dative pl. of Lat. omnis, all, for all). The name was first applied to the public vehicle in France in 1828. In the following year it was adopted by Shillibeer for the vehicles which he started on the Paddington (now Marylebone) Road, London. The plural is omnibuses, and the word is generally abbreviated to bus, without any initial apostrophe—just as cabrioler became cab, not cab'.

Omnibus Bill. The Parliamentary term for a Bill embracing clauses that deal with a number of different subjects, as a Revenue Bill dealing with Customs, Taxes, Stamps, Excise, etc.

Omnibus box. A box at a theatre for which the subscription is paid by several different parties, each of which has the right of using it.

Omnibus train. An old name for a train that stops at all stations—a train for all, as apart from the specials and the expresses that ran between only a few stations.

Omnibus volume. A collection in one volume of an author's works, of short stories, essays, etc.

Omnium (om' ni ūm) (Lat., of all). The particulars of all the items, or the assignment of all the securities, of a government loan.

Omnium gatherum. Dog Latin for a gathering or collection of all sorts of persons and things; a miscellaneous gathering together without regard to suitability or order.

Omphale (om' fā lā). In Greek legend, the masculine but attractive Queen of Lydia, to whom Hercules was bound a slave for three years. He fell in love with her, and led an effeminate life spinning wool, while Omphale wore the lion's skin and was lady paramount.

On. A little bit on. Slightly drunk.

It's not on to-day. It's not on the menu, it's not available.

It's not on. Impossible. A phrase from snooker, used when the object ball is obscured.

On dit (ong dē) (Fr., they say). A rumour, a report, a bit of gossip. "There is an on dit that the prince is to marry soon."

One. The word has a good many indefinite applications, as a person or thing of the kind implied or already mentioned (I like those hats; I must buy one), an unspecified person (One doesn't do that sort of thing), someone or something, anyone or anything.

There is One above is a reference to the Deity; the Evil One is the Devil.

By one and one. Singly, one at a time; entirely by oneself.

He was one too many for me. He was a little bit too clever, he outwitted me.

Number one. Oneself; hence, to take care of number one, to look after oneself, to seek one's own interest; to be selfish.

One and all. Everybody individually and jointly. The phrase is the motto of Cornishmen.

One-horse. Third-rate, petty, insignificant; as, a one-horse show, a one-horse town, etc. The phrase is of American origin, and the allusion was to a town so poor and idle that one horse was enough for all its transportation.

One in the eye, on the nose, in the bread-basket, etc. A blow on the spot indicated—the last being slang for the stomach.

One of these days. At some unspecified time in the future, generally the rather remote and uncertain future.

To go one better than he did. To do a little more, etc., than he did. The phrase is from card-playing; at poker if one wishes to continue betting one has to "go" at least "one better," i.e. raise the stake.

Oneida Community, The. See PERFECTIONISTS.

Onomatopoeia (on ō măt ō pē' ā). The grammatical term for forming a word by imitating the sound associated with the object designated, or for a word that appears to suggest its nature or qualities. "Cuckoo" and "tingle" are examples of onomatopoeia. The word itself comes from the Greek for "making of words."

Onus (ō' nus) (Lat.). The burden, the responsibility; as, "The whole onus must rest on your own shoulders."

Onus probandi (Lat., the burden of proving). The obligation of proving some proposition, accusation, etc.; as, "The onus probandi rests with the accuser."

Onyx (on 'iks) is Greek for a finger-nail; so called because the colour of an onyx resembles that of the finger-nail.

Oom Paul. "Uncle" Paul, the name familiarly applied to Paul Kruger (1825-1902), President of the Transvaal Republic and inspirer of the Dutch resistance to the British rule in South Africa.

Opal (Gr. opallios, probably from Sansk. upala, a gem). This semi-precious stone—a vitreous form of hydrous silica—is well known for its play of iridescent colours, and has long been considered to bring ill luck. Alphonso XII of Spain (1874-85) is said to have had one that seemed to be fatal. On his wedding-day he presented it in a ring to his wife, and her death occurred soon afterwards. Before the funeral he gave the ring to his sister, who died a few days later. The king then presented it to his sister-in-law, and she died within three months. Alphonso, astounded at these fatalities, resolved to wear the ring himself, and within a very short time he too was dead. The Queen Regent then suspended it from the neck of the Virgin of Almodena of Madrid.

Not an opal
 Wrapped in a bay-leaf in my left fist,
 To charm their eyes with.

BEN JONSON: New Inn, i, 6.

Open. Open city. A military term for a city which the occupying army declares it will not defend, and from which it guarantees it has withdrawn its armed forces—either because of the place's great historical importance (e.g. Rome), or because it is full of hospitals and wounded.

Open door. In political parlance the principle of admitting all nations to a share in a country's trade, etc. The phrase is also applied to any loophole being left for the possibility of negotiation between contending parties, nations, etc.

Open question. See QUESTION.

Open secret. See SECRET DE POLICHINELLE.

Open, Sesame. See SESAME.

Opera. A production for the stage composed of music and drama. The dialogue is mostly in verse and is sung to orchestral accompaniment; lyrics are an important element and in older operas a ballet was often included. The rise of opera began about 1582, but it was not until the first opera house was opened in Venice, in 1637, that it became popular as a form of entertainment. Alessandro Scarlatti (1659-1725) established the aria as a legitimate form of expressing soliloquy, and introduced the recitativo. In England Henry Purcell (c. 1658-95) was the father of opera, writing some 42 musical works for the stage, some of them, such as Dido and Aeneas (1689) being full operas. In 1930 the British Government allocated a yearly sum of £17,000 for subsidizing opera in London and the provinces.

Opera bouffe is a form of French comic opera or operetta light in construction and of slight musical value. It should be distinguished from:—

Opera buffa, a form of light Italian comedy with musical numbers and dialogue in recitative.

Opera comique is a French type of opera, not necessarily comic, with spoken dialogue and musical numbers. The dialogue is sometimes recitative, as in Bizet's Carmen.

Operetta is a very light opera with spoken dialogue, such as the Gilbert and Sullivan works.

Operations. In World War II operations were given code-names by which they could be known, for reasons of convenience and security. These should be differentiated from names, such as FIDO and PLUTO, which were made up of initials and had a special meaning; these will be found under their separate headings. Among the most important Allied operations were:—

Anvil. American and French landing in Southern France.

Capital. The investing of North and Central Burma by Admiral Lord Mountbatten and General Stilwell.

Crossroads. First atom bomb test at Bikini, May 1946.

Dynamo. British evacuation from Dunkirk.

Eclipse. First plan for Allied occupation of Germany.

Epsom. Major British operation south of Caen to break out of the beachhead, June 1944.

Goldflake. Large-scale switch of British and Canadian troops from the Italian front to that in North-west Europe, February 1945.

Neptune. Naval name for the operations against North-west France, 1944.

Overlord. Allied invasion of North-west Europe, 1944. First known as Roundup.

Torch. Allied invasion of North-west Africa, 1942.

Operations, Base of, Line of. See BASE.

Opinicus (op in' i kūs). A fabulous monster, composed of dragon, camel, and lion, used in heraldry. It forms the crest of the Barber Surgeons of London. The name seems to be a corruption of Ophincus, the classical name of the constellation, the serpent (Gr. ophis).

Opium-eater. Thomas De Quincey (1785-1859), author of The Confessions of an English Opium-Eater (1821).

Oppidan (op' i dān). At Eton College, a student not on the foundation, but who boards in the town (Lat. oppidum, town).

Opponency. See ACT AND OPPONENCY.

Opposition. The constitutional term for which-ever of the great political parties is not in power. In the House of Commons the Opposition sits on the benches on the Speaker's left, on the front bench being the leaders who are, generally, ministers-elect waiting for a change of Government. The Leader of the Opposition, elected by his Party, receives an official salary from the State of £2,000 a year.

Optime (op' tī mē). In Cambridge phraseology a graduate in the second or third division of the Mathematical Tripos, the former being Senior Optimes and the latter Junior Optimes. The term comes from the Latin phrase formerly used—Optime disputasti (You have disputed very well). The class above the Optimes is composed of Wranglers (q.v.).

Optimism. The doctrine that "whatever is, is right," that everything which happens is for the best. It was originally set forth by Leibnitz (1646-1716) from the postulate of the omnipotence of God, and is cleverly travestied by Voltaire in his Candide, ou l'Optimisme (1759), where Dr. Pangloss continually harps on the maxim that "all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds."

Opus (ō' pus) (Lat., a work). See MAGNUM OPUS.

Opus operantis. Ex opere operato is a phrase used by theologians to express the efficiency of acts irrespective of the intention of the agent or patient. Ex opere operantis implies the concurrence of intention on the part of the agent; it is the personal piety of the person who does the act, and not the act itself, that causes it to be an instrument of grace. Thus in the Eucharist, it is the faith of the recipient which makes it efficient for grace.

Opus operatum. The thing done; the theologian's term for expressing the effect of sacraments irrespective of the disposition of the receivers of them. Thus, baptism is said by many to convey regeneration to an infant in arms.

Or. The heraldic term for the metal gold. See HERALDRY.

Oracle (Lat. oraculum, from orāre, to speak, to pray). The answer of a god or inspired priest to an inquiry respecting the future; the deity giving responses; the place where the deity could be consulted, etc.; hence, a person whose utterances are regarded as profoundly wise, an infallible, dogmatical person—

I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips let no dog bark.
Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

In ancient Greece oracles were extremely numerous, and very expensive to those who consulted them. The most famous were the—

Oracle of APOLLO, at Delphi, the priestess of which was called the Pythoness; at Delos, and at Claros.

Oracle of DIANA, at Colchis; of ESCULAPIUS, at Epidaurus, and another in Rome.

Oracle of HERCULES, at Athens, and another at Gades.

Oracle of JUPITER, at Dodona (the most noted); another at Ammon, in Libya; another in Crete.

Oracle of MARS, in Thrace; MINERVA, in Mycenæ; PAN, in Arcadia.

Oracle of TRIPHONIUS, in Bœotia, where only men made the responses.

Oracle of VENUS, at Paphos, another at Aphaca, and many others.

B.D.—22

In most of the temples women, sitting on a tripod, made the responses, many of which were either ambiguous or so obscure as to be misleading: to this day, our word oracular is still used of obscure as well as of authoritative pronouncements.

The difficulty of making head or tail of oracles is well illustrated by the following classic examples:—

When Cæsus consulted the Delphic oracle respecting a projected war, he received for answer, "Cæsus Halyn penetrans magnum, pervertet opum vim" (When Cæsus passes over the river Halys, he will overthrow the strength of an empire) Cæsus supposed the oracle meant he would overthrow the enemy's empire, but it was his own that he destroyed.

Pyrrhus, being about to make war against Rome, was told by the oracle: "Aio te, Æacide, Romanos vincere posse" (I say, Pyrrhus, that you the Romans can conquer), which may mean either You, Pyrrhus, can overthrow the Romans, or Pyrrhus, the Romans can overthrow you.

Another prince, consulting the oracle on a similar occasion, received for answer, "Ibis reditis nunquam per bella peribis" (You shall go you shall return never you shall perish by the war), the interpretation of which depends on the position of the comma; it may be You shall return, you shall never perish in the war, or You shall return never, you shall perish in the war, which latter was the fact.

Philip of Macedon sent to ask the oracle of Delphi if his Persian expedition would prove successful, and received for answer—

The ready victim crowned for death
Before the altar stands.

Philip took it for granted that the "ready victim" was the King of Persia, but it was Philip himself.

When the Greeks sent to Delphi to know if they would succeed against the Persians, they were told—

Seed-time and harvest, weeping sires shall tell
How thousands fought at Salamis and fell.

But whether the Greeks or the Persians were to be the weeping sires," no indication was given, nor whether the thousands "about to fall" were to be Greeks or Persians.

When Maxentius was about to encounter Constantine, he consulted the guardians of the Sibylline Books as to the fate of the battle, and the prophetess told him, "Illo die hostem Romanorum esse periturum," but whether Maxentius or Constantine was "the enemy of the Roman people" the oracle left undecided.

In the Bible we have a similar equivocation: When Ahab, King of Israel, was about to wage war on the king of Syria, and asked Micaiah if Ramoth-Gilead would fall into his hands, the prophet replied, "Go, for the Lord will deliver the city into the hands of the king" (1 Kings xxii, 15, 35).

The Oracle of the Church. St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1091-1153).

The Oracle of the Holy Bottle. The oracle to which Rabelais (Bks. iv and v) sent Panurge and a large party to obtain an answer to a question which had been put to sibyl and poet, monk and fool, philosopher and witch, judge and fortune-teller: "whether Panurge should marry or not?" The oracle was situated at Bacbuc (q.v.), "near Cathay in Upper Egypt," and the story has been interpreted as a satire on the Church. The celibacy of the clergy was for long a moot point, and the "Holy Bottle" or cup to the laity was one of the moving causes of the schisms from the Church. The crew setting sail for the Bottle refers to Anthony, Duke of Vendôme, afterwards king of Navarre, setting out in search of religious truth.

The oracle of the sieve and shears. See SIEVE.

To work the oracle. To induce another to favour some plan or to join in some project, generally by manœuvring behind the scenes. Also—in slang—to raise money.

They fetched a rattling price through Starlight's working the oracle with those swells.—BOLDREWOOD: Robbery Under Arms, ch. xii.

Orange. William III's territorial name came from Orange (anciently Arausio), a town on the Rhone 13 miles north of Avignon, and capital of the former principality of the same name, which dated from the 11th century. From 1373 to 1530 it belonged to the House of Châlons; through failure of male heirs it then fell through a sister of Philibert, the last prince of that House, to William the Silent, Prince of Nassau, who thereupon became Prince of Orange-Nassau, or simply "of Orange." His grandson, William II, married Mary, daughter of our Charles I, and they were the parents of William of Orange, our William III, husband of Mary, daughter of his uncle and enemy, James II.

The principality remained in the hands of the House of Orange-Nassau till 1702, and was finally annexed to France by the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713. The title "Prince of Orange" is still borne by the heir-presumptive to the throne of Holland, which is occupied by the House of Nassau.

Orange. This distinctive epithet of the ultra-Protestants of Northern Ireland and of Ulstermen generally, it is said, became attached to them because in 1795 two members of the famous "Orange Lodge" of Freemasons (which had been revived in Belfast about 1780) were active in raising the Orange Lodges (see below), an armed force of Protestant volunteers—hence called "Orange boys"—in defence of civil and religious liberty.

The Orange Lodge was named in honour of William of Orange (William III), the Protestant opposer of James II in the "Glorious Revolution" of 1689, and the victor at the Battle of the Boyne (1690).

Orange Lodges or Clubs are referred to in print as early as 1769. Thirty years later the Orangemen were a very powerful society, having a "grand lodge" extending over the entire province of Ulster and through all the centres of Protestantism in Ireland.

Orangemen. A name given to the members of an Orange Lodge; originating in their respect for the memory of William III of the House of Orange.

Orange blossom. The conventional decoration for the bride at a wedding, introduced as a custom into England from France about 1820. The orange is said to indicate the hope of fruitfulness, as few trees are more prolific, while the white blossoms are symbolical of innocence.

Hence the phrase, to go gathering orange blossoms, to look for a wife.

Orange Free State. This province of the Union of South Africa originated in 1824 when some Dutch farmers from Cape Colony settled across the Orange River. They had trouble with the Basutos, but they held on and in 1854 formed a republic with this name. In 1899 the Orange Free State joined the Transvaal in making war on Great Britain and it was consequently annexed in 1900. In 1907 it was given responsible government and three years later it joined the Union.

Orange Lilies. See REGIMENTAL NICKNAMES.

Orange Peel. A nickname given to Sir Robert Peel when Chief Secretary for Ireland (1812-18), on account of his strong anti-Catholic proclivities.

Orange-tawny. The ancient colour appropriated to clerks and persons of inferior condition. It was also the colour worn by the Jews. Hence Bacon says, "Usurers should have orange-tawny bonnets, because they do Judaise" (Essay xli). Bottom the weaver asked Quince what colour beard he was to wear for the character of Pyramus:—

I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow."—Midsummer Night's Dream, i, 2.

Orator. Orator Henley. John Henley (1692-1756), who for about thirty years delivered lectures on theological, political, and literary subjects.

Orator Hunt. Henry Hunt (1773-1835), a politician and radical reformer was so named. He presided at the famous "Peterloo" meeting (q.v.) and as M.P. for Preston (1830-33) presented the first petition to Parliament in favour of woman's rights.

Orator of the Human Race, The. See ANACHARSIS.

Oratorio is sacred story or drama set to music, in which solo voices, chorus, and instrumental music are employed. In 1574 St. Philip Neri introduced the acting and singing of sacred dramas in his Oratory at Rome, and it is from this that the term comes. Oratorio has appealed to many of the greatest composers of the past, outstanding among them being Handel.

Orc. A sea-monster fabled by Ariosto, Dryden, Sylvester, etc., to devour men and women. The name was sometimes used for the whale. Milton speaks of the Mount of Paradise being "pushed by the horned flood":—"Down the great river to the opening Gulf, And there take root, an island salt and bare, The haunt of seals, and orcs, and sea-mews' clang." Paradise Lost, xi, 833.

Orchard properly means a garden-yard. Hortyard was one of the old spellings, and in this form its connexion with Lat. hortus, a garden, is clear.

The hortyard entering [he] admires the fair
And pleasant fruits. GEORGE SANDYS.

Orcus (ôr' kûs). A Latin name for Hades, the abode of the dead. Spenser speaks of a dragon whose mouth was—

All set with iron teeth in ranges twain,
That terrified his foes, and armed him,
Appearing like the mouth of Orcus grisly grim.
Fairie Queene, VI, xii, 26.

Ordeal (A.S. ordel, related to adaelan, to deal, allot, judge). The ancient Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic practice of referring disputed questions of criminality to supernatural decision, by subjecting the suspected person to physical tests by fire, boiling water, battle, etc.; hence, figuratively, an experience testing endurance, patience, courage, etc.

This method of "trial" was based on the belief that God would defend the right, even by miracle if needful. All ordeals, except the ordeal of battle, were abolished in England by law in the early 13th century.

In Ordeal of battle the accused person was obliged to fight anyone who charged him with guilt. This ordeal was allowed only to persons of rank.

Ordeal of fire was also for persons of rank only. The accused had to hold in his hand a piece of red-hot iron, or to walk blindfold and barefoot among nine red-hot plough-shares laid at unequal distances. If he escaped uninjured he was accounted innocent, otherwise not. This might be performed by deputy.

Ordeal of hot water was for the common people. The accused was required to plunge his arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and was pronounced guilty if the skin was injured in the experiment.

Ordeal of cold water was also for the common people. The accused, being bound, was tossed into a river; if he sank he was acquitted, but if he floats he was accounted guilty. This ordeal remained in use for the trial of witches to comparatively recent times.

In the Ordeal of the bier a person suspected of murder was required to touch the corpse; if guilty the "blood of the dead body would start forth afresh."

In that of the cross plaintiff and defendant had to stand with their arms crossed over their breasts, and he who could endure the longest won the suit. See also JUDICIUM CRUCIS.

The Ordeal of the Eucharist was for priests. It was supposed that the elements would choke him if taken by a guilty man.

In the Ordeal of the Corsned (q.v.) consecrated bread and cheese was similarly given. Godwin, Earl of Kent, is said to have been choked when, being accused of the murder of the king's brother, he submitted to this ordeal.

In Ceylon, a man suspected of theft is required to bring what he holds dearest before a judge, and placing a heavy stone on the head of his substitute, says, "May this stone crush thee to death if I am guilty of this offence."

In Tartary, an ostiack sets a wild bear and a hatchet before the tribunal, saying, as he swallows a piece of bread, "May the bear devour me, and the hatchet chop off my head, if I am guilty of the crime laid to my charge."

Order! When members of the House of Commons and other debaters call out Order! they mean that the person speaking is in some way breaking the rule or order of the assembly, and has to be called to order.

Architectural orders. See ARCHITECTURE.

Holy orders. A clergyman is said to be in holy orders because he belongs to one of the orders or ranks of the Church. In the Church of England these are three, viz., Deacon, Priest, and Bishop; in the Roman Catholic Church there is a fourth, that of Sub-deacon.

In ecclesiastical use the term also denotes a fraternity of monks or friars (as the Franciscan Order), and also the Rule by which the fraternity is governed.

The order of the day. In the House of Commons the ordinary public business of each day is classified as consisting of notices of motions and orders of the day. A motion becomes an order of the day as soon as the debate on it has been adjourned by order of the House to a particular day. See QUESTION.

To move for the Order of the Day is a proposal to set aside a government measure on a private members' day (Friday), and proceed to the agenda prearranged. This is done by the member concerned raising his hat without rising to address the chair. If the motion is carried, the agenda must be proceeded with, unless a motion "to adjourn" is carried.

Ordinary. In Law an ordinary is one who has an "ordinary or regular jurisdiction" in his own right, and not by deputy. Thus a judge who has authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right is an ordinary. A bishop is an ordinary in his own diocese, because he has authority to take cognizance of ecclesiastical matters therein; an archbishop is the ordinary of his province, having authority in his own right to receive appeals therein from inferior jurisdictions. The chaplain of Newgate was also called the ordinary thereof.

A meal prepared at an inn at a fixed rate for all comers is called an "ordinary"; hence, also, the inn itself:—

'Tis almost dinner; I know they stay for you at the ordinary.—BEAUMONT and FLETCHER: Scornful Lady, IV, 1.

And in Heraldry the "ordinary" is a simple charge, such as the chief, pale, fesse, bend, bar, chevron, cross, or saltire.

Oread (ôr' ē ād) (pl. Oreads or Oreades). Nymphs of the mountains. (Gr. oros, a mountain.)

The Ocean-nymphs and Hamadryades, Oreads and Naiads, with long weedy locks, Offered to do her bidding through the seas, Under the earth, and in the hollow rocks.

SHELLEY: Witch of Atlas, xxii.

Oregon Trail. This was the old American trans-continental route from Independence, Missouri, to The Dalles, on Columbia River, Oregon, a distance of some 2,000 miles. The route was principally used by immigrants to the North-west from the Southern states. It was originally blazed by trappers and the Lewis and Clarke Expedition, and crossed the Rockies at South Pass.

Orellana (or el ā' nā). The name formerly used for the river Amazon, so called from Francisco de Orellana, lieutenant of Pizarro, who was the first to explore it (about 1537-41).

Oremus. See LEGEM PONE

Orestes. See PYLADES.

Orgies (ôr' jēz). Drunken revels, riotous feasts; hence, figuratively, wild or licentious extravagance. So called from the Gr. orgia, the secret, nocturnal festivals in honour of Bacchus (q.v.).

Orgoglio (ôr gô' lyô) (Ital., Arrogant Pride, or Man of Sin). In Spenser's Faerie Queene (I, vii, and viii), a hideous giant as tall as three men, son of Earth and Wind.

He typifies the tyrannical power of the Church of Rome; in slaying him Arthur first cut off his left arm—i.e. Bohemia was first cut off from the Church of Rome; then the giant's right leg—i.e. England, when Orgoglio fell to earth, and was easily dispatched.

Oriana (ôr i än' à). The beloved of Amadis of Gaul, who called himself Beltenebros when he retired to the Poor Rock (Amadis de Gaul, ii, 6).

Queen Elizabeth I is sometimes called the "peerless Oriana," especially in the madrigals entitled the Triumphs of Oriana (1601).

Oriel College, Oxford (ôr' i el). The fifth in age of the Oxford Colleges, founded in 1326 by Edward II and his almoner, Adam de Brome, who was its first Provost. The name comes from a message in Oxford called La Oriole, which was granted to the College at its foundation, but the origin of this name is unknown.

Oriel window is also obscure. The name originally denoted a gallery or balcony, then a gallery in a private chapel, then a small private apartment which had a window looking into the chapel. It may be connected with Late Lat. aulæum, a curtain (aula, hall), but this is by no means certain.

Orientation. The placing of the east window of a church due east (Lat. oriens), that is, so that the rising sun may shine on the altar. Anciently, churches were built with their axes pointing to the rising sun on the saint's day; so that a church dedicated to St. John was not parallel to one dedicated to St. Peter, but in the building of modern churches the saint's day is not, as a rule, regarded.

Figuratively, orientation is the correct placing of one's ideas, mental processes, etc., in relation with themselves and with current thought—the ascertainment of one's "bearings."

Oriflamme (ôr' i flâm) (Fr., "flame of gold"). The ancient banner of the kings of France, first used as a national banner in 1119. It was a crimson flag cut into three "vandykes" to represent "tongues of fire," with a silken tassel between each, and was carried on a gilt staff (un glaive tout doré où est attaché une bannière vermeille). This celebrated standard was the banner of St. Denis; but when the Counts of Vexin became possessed of the abbey it passed into their hands. In 1082 Philippe I united Vexin to the crown, and the sacred Oriflamme fell to the king. It was carried to the field after the battle of Agincourt, in 1415. The romance writers say that "mescreens" (infidels) were blinded by merely looking on it. In the Roman de Garin the Saracens cry, "If we only set eyes on it we are all dead men"; and Froissart records that it was no sooner unfurled at Rosbecq than the fog cleared away from the French, leaving their enemies in misty darkness.

In the 15th century the Oriflamme was succeeded by the blue standard powdered with fleurs-de-lis, and the last heard of the original Oriflamme is a mention in the inventory of the Abbey of St. Denis dated 1534.

Original Sin. See SIN.

Orinda the Matchless (o rin' dâ). Katherine Philips (1631-64), the poetess and letter-writer. She first adopted the signature "Orinda" in her correspondence with Sir Charles Cotterell, and afterwards used it for general purposes. Her praises were sung by Cowley, Dryden, and others.

Dryden's lines—

O double sacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relic and deface the shrine!
But thus Orinda died

Elegy on Mrs. Anne Killigrew.

refer to the fact that both women died of small-pox.

Orion (o ri' ón). A giant hunter of Greek mythology, noted for his beauty. He was blinded by Ænion, but Vulcan sent Cedalion to be his guide, and his sight was restored by exposing his eyeballs to the sun. Being slain by Diana, he was made one of the constellations, and is supposed to be attended with stormy weather. His wife was named Sidê, and his dogs Arctophonus and Ptoophagus.

With fierce winds Orion armed Hath vexed the Red-Sea coast.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, I, 305.

The constellation Orion is the clearest defined in the northern winter sky. Below the "shoulder" stars, Betelgeuse and Bellatrix, are the three stars forming the "sword," close to which is the nebula. The "feet," Rugel and Salph, point to Sirius, the brightest star in the heavens.

Orkneys. The name is probably connected with the old orc (q.v.), a whale, and either Gaelic innis or Norse ey, an island—"the isles of whales." For centuries the Orkneys were a jarldom of Norway or Denmark, and it was not till 1590 that the latter renounced its claim to sovereignty. They had passed to the Scottish crown in 1468 after having been in the possession of the Earls of Angus for nearly 250 years.

Orlando. The Italian form of "Roland" (q.v.), one of the great heroes of mediæval romance, and the most celebrated of Charlemagne's paladins. He appears under this name in the romances mentioned below, and in other works.

Orlando Furioso (Orlando mad). An epic poem in 45 cantos, by Ariosto (published 1515-33). Orlando's madness is caused by the faithlessness of Angelica, but the main subject of the work is the siege of Paris by Agramant the Moor, when the Saracens were overthrown.

The epic is full of anachronisms. We have Charlemagne and his paladins joined by King Edward of England, Richard Earl of Warwick, Henry Duke of Clarence, and the Dukes of York and Gloucester (Bk. vi). Cannon are employed by Cymosco, King of Friza (Bk. iv), and also in the siege of Paris (Bk. vi). We have the Moors established in Spain, whereas they were not invited over by the Saracens for nearly 300 years after Charlemagne's death. In Bk. xvii the late mediæval Prester John (q.v.) appears, and in the last three books Constantine the Great, who died 337.

There are English translations by Sir John Harrington (1591), John Hoole (1783), and W. S. Rose (1823-31).

About 1589 a play (printed 1594) by Robert Greene entitled The History of Orlando Furioso was produced. In this version Orlando marries Angelica.

Orlando Innamorato (Orlando in love). A romance in verse by Boiardo telling the love of Roland (q.v.) and Angelica. Boiardo died in 1494, not having finished the work, and Ariosto wrote his Orlando Furioso (see above) as a sequel to it. In 1541 Berni turned it into burlesque.

Orleans, The House of. There are several younger sons of the great French family of Bourbon who bore this title, but the main branch stems from Philip, son of Louis XIII, who married Henrietta, the daughter of the English King Charles I. By his second wife Philip had a son Philip (1674-1723) known as the Regent Orleans as he acted in that capacity to Louis XV in his minority. His great-grandson became notorious for his career in the French Revolution when he assumed the name of Philippe Egalité and voted for the death of his kinsman Louis XVI. He was guillotined in 1793, at the age of 46. His son, after many vicissitudes, became King of the French in 1830, but was deposed and sought refuge in England in 1848. In 1883 the older branch of the Bourbon family became extinct and since that date the Orleans family are the "legitimate" claimants to the throne of France.

Orlop Deck. The lowest deck in an old sailing ship, and so called from the Dutch overloopen, or spread over, because it covered the ship's hold.

Ormandine (ôr' mán dîn). The necromancer who by his magic arts threw St. David for seven years into an enchanted sleep, from which he was redeemed by St. George. (The Seven Champions of Christendom, i, 9.)

Ormulum (ôr'm' ū lûm). A long poem in Transi-tion, or Early Middle, English, of which only a "fragment" of some 10,000 lines is extant. It is so called from the author, Orm, or Ormin, an Augustinian canon—

This boc iss nemmed Ormulum
Forrthi that Orm itt wrohhte—and in it the Gospel for each day is versified and elaborated with expositions out of Aelfric, Bede, and Augustine. It was written in the early 13th century.

Ormuzd or Ahura Mazda (ôr 'müz'd, a hûr á mǎz' dâ). The principle or angel of light and good, and creator of all things, according to the Magian system. He is in perpetual conflict with Ahriman (q.v.), but in the end will triumph. The Latin form of the name is Oromasdes.

And Oromaze, Joshua, and Mahomet,
Moses and Buddh, Zerdusht, and Brahm, and Foh,
A tumult of strange names, which never met
Before, as watchwords of a single woe
Arose. SHELLEY: Revolt of Islam, X, xxxi.

Ornery (U.S.A.). Mean, purposely difficult.

Orosius (o rô' si ūs). A Latin writer of the early 5th century A.D., whose General History, from the Creation to A.D. 417, is frequently referred to by historians and was translated into Anglo-Saxon by Alfred the Great. Orosius was a native of Tarragona, in Spain, and a friend of St. Augustine's.

Orpheus (ôr' fûs). A Thracian poet of Greek legend (son of Apollo and Calliope), who could move even inanimate things by his music—a power that was also claimed for the Scandinavian Odin. When his wife Eurydice (q.v.) died he went into the infernal regions, and so charmed Pluto that she was released on the condition that Orpheus would not look back till they reached the earth. He was just about to place his foot on the earth when he turned round, and Eurydice vanished from him in an instant.

Orpheus' self may . . . hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto to have quite set free
His half-regained Eurydice.

MILTON: L'Allegro, 145-50.

The prolonged grief of Orpheus at his second loss so enraged the Thracian women that in one of their Bacchanalian orgies they tore him to pieces. The fragments of his body were collected by the Muses and buried at the foot of Mount Olympus, but his head had been thrown into the river Hebrus, whither it was carried into the sea, and so to Lesbos, where it was separately interred.

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament,
When, by the rout that made the hideous roar
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

MILTON: Lycidas, 58.

Orpheus of Highwaymen. So John Gay (1685-1732) has been called on account of his Beggar's Opera (1728).

Orphic. Connected with Orpheus, the mysteries associated with his name, or the doctrines ascribed to him; similar to his music in magic power. Thus, Shelley says—

Language is a perpetual Orphic song,
Which rules with Dædal harmony a throng
Of thoughts and forms, which else senseless and shape-less were. Prometheus Unbound, IV, i, 415.

The Orphic egg. See EGG, THE MUNDANE.

Orrery (or' êr i). A complicated piece of mechanism showing by means of clockwork the movements of the planets, etc., round the sun. It was invented about 1700 by George Graham, who sent his model to Rowley, an instrument maker, to make one for Prince Eugene. Rowley made a copy of it for Charles Boyle (1636-1731), third Earl of Orrery, in whose honour it was named. One of the best is Fulton's, in Kelvin Grove Museum, Glasgow.

Orson. Twin brother of Valentine in the old romance. Valentine and Orson (q.v.). The twins were born in a wood near Orleans, and Orson (Fr. ourson, a little bear) was carried off by a bear, which suckled him with her cubs. When he grew up he was the terror of France, and was called the Wild Man of the Forest. He was reclaimed by Valentine, overthrew the Green Knight, and married Fezon, the daughter of Duke Savary of Aquitaine.

Orthodox. The Orthodox Church. See GREEK CHURCH.

Orthodox Sunday, in the Eastern Church, is the First Sunday in Lent, to commemorate the restoration of images in 843.

I shall not eat your orts—i.e. your leavings.

Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave.

Rape of Lucrece, 985.

Ortus (ôr' tú). Ortus a quercu, non a salice. Latin for "sprung from an oak, and not from a willow"—i.e. stubborn stuff; one that cannot bend to circumstances.

Orvietan or Venice Treacle (ôr vi et' an), once believed to be a sovereign remedy against poison, hence sometimes used of an antidote. It is not now known of what this electuary was concocted; it took its name from a charlatan of Orvieto, Italy, who used to pretend to take poison and cure himself by means of his potion.

Os Sacrum. See LUZ. A triangular bone situate at the lower part of the vertebral column, of which it is a continuation. Some say that this bone was so called because it was in the part used in sacrifice, or the sacred part; Dr. Nash says it is so called "because it is much bigger than any of the vertebrae"; but the Jewish rabbins say the bone is called sacred because it resists decay, and will be the germ of the "new body" at the resurrection. (Hudibras, pt. iii, canto 2.)

Osiris (ô sí' ris). One of the chief gods of Egyptian mythology: judge of the dead, ruler of the kingdom of ghosts, the Creator, the god of the Nile, and the constant foe of his brother (or son), Set, the principle of evil. He was the husband of Isis (q.v.), and represents the setting sun (cp. RA). He was slain, but came to life again and was revenged by Horus and Thoth.

The name means Many-eyed. Osiris was usually depicted as a mummy wearing the crown of Upper Egypt, but sometimes as an ox.

Nor is Osiris seen

In Memphian grove or green,

Trampling the unshowered grass with lowings loud.

MILTON: Christ's Nativity, 213.

Osmand. A necromancer in The Seven Champions of Christendom, I, 19, who by enchantment raised an army to resist the Christians. Six of the Champions fell, whereupon St. George restored them; Osmand tore out his own hair, in which lay his magic power, bit his tongue in two, disembowelled himself, cut off his arms, and then died.

OSS. The U.S. Office of Strategic Services in World War II. It covered and directed all espionage and co-operation with resistance movements in enemy-occupied countries.

Ossa. See PELION.

Ossian (Oisín) (os' i an). The legendary Gaelic bard and warrior of about the end of the 3rd century, son of Finn (Fingal), and reputed author of Ossian's Poems, published 1760-63, by James Macpherson, who professed that he had translated them from MSS. collected in the Highlands. A great controversy as to the authenticity of the supposed originals was aroused; the question has not yet been finally settled, but it is generally agreed that Macpherson, while compiling from ancient sources, was the principal author of the poems as published. The poems are full of Celtic glamour and charm, but are marred by rant and bombast.

Ostend Manifesto. A declaration made in 1857 by the Ministers of the United States in England, France, and Spain, "that Cuba must belong to the United States." Notwithstanding this, until 1898 the island belonged to Spain, when, as one of the results of the Spanish American War, it was freed and was for four years under the military rule of the United States. In 1902 Cuba was formed into an autonomous republic.

Ostler. See HOSTLER.

Ostracism (os' tráz izm) (Gr. ostrakon, an earthen vessel). Black-balling, boycotting, expelling; exclusion from society or common privileges, etc. The word arose from the ancient Greek custom of banishing one whose power was a danger to the state, the voting for which was done by the people recording their votes on tiles or potsherds. The custom of ostracizing is widespread. St. Paul exhorts Christians to "come out from" idolaters (2 Cor. vi, 17); and the Jews ostracized the Samaritans. The Catholic Church anathematizes and interdicts.

Ostrich. At one time the ostrich was fabled, when hunted, to run a certain distance and then thrust its head into the sand, thinking, because it cannot see, that it cannot be seen (cp. CROCODILES); this supposed habit is the source of many allusions, e.g.—

Whole nations, fooled by falsehood, fear, or pride,
Their ostrich-heads in self-illusion hide,

MOORE: Septic.

Another source of literary allusion to the bird is its habit of eating indigestible things such as stones and metals to assist the functions of the gizzard—

Ah, villain! thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king by carrying my head to him: but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.—2 Henry VI, iv. 10.

Hence, ostrich-stomachs, stomachs that will digest anything.

Ostrich eggs are often suspended in Eastern churches as symbols of God's watchful care. It used to be thought that the ostrich hatches her eggs by gazing on them, and if she suspends her gaze even for a minute or so, the eggs are added. Furthermore, we are told that if an egg is bad the ostrich will break it; so will God deal with evil men.

Oh! even with such a look as fables say

The mother ostrich fixes on her eggs,

Till that intense affection

Kindle its light of life.

SOUTHEY: Thalaba.

Ostrog Bible, The. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Othello (o thel' ô). Shakespeare's tragedy (written and performed in 1604, first printed 1622) is founded on a tale in Cithio's Hecatomithi (1565)—Un Capitano Moro (decad. iii, Nov. vii).

Othello's occupation's gone (iii, 3). A phrase sometimes used when one is "laid on the shelf," no longer "the observed of all observers."

Other Day, The. Originally this meant "the second day," either forward or backward, other being the Anglo-Saxon equivalent for second, as in Latin unus, alter, tertius; or proximus, alter, tertius. Starting from to-day, and going backwards, yesterday was the proximus ab illo; the day before yesterday was the altera ab illo, or the other day; and the day preceding that was tertius ab illo, or three days ago. Now the phrase is used to express "a few days ago," "not so long since."

Otium cum dignitate (ō' tī ūm kūm dig nī tā' tī) (Lat., leisure with dignity). Retirement after a person has given up business and has saved enough to live upon in comfort. The words were taken as a motto by Cicero.

Otium cum dignitate is to be had with £500 a year as well as with 5,000.—POPE: Letters (Wks., vol. x, p. 110).

Ottava Rima (o ta' vā rē mā). A stanza of eight ten-syllabled lines, rhyming a b a b c c c, used by Keats in his Isabella, Byron in Don Juan, etc. It was originally Italian and was employed by Tasso (the lines were eleven-syllabled), Ariosto, and many others.

Ottoman Empire. The Turkish Empire, so called from Othman, or Osman, I, the founder, about 1300, of the dynasty. Our ottoman, a kind of sofa having some resemblance to an oriental couch, is, of course, the same word.

Oublette (oo bli et'). Traditionally a secret dungeon in a mediæval castle or monastery, only accessible from a hole in the roof. It used to be supposed that certain prisoners or refractory monks or nuns were incarcerated in these oublettes and on occasions sealed up in them. The real use of these cells is a debated point with archæologists.

Ouija (wē' jā). A device employed by spiritualists for receiving spirit messages. It consists of a small piece of wood on wheels, placed on a board marked with the letters of the alphabet and certain commonly-used words. When the fingers of the communicators are placed on the ouija board it moves from letter to letter and thus spells out sentences. The word is a combination of Fr. oui and German ja, both meaning "yes."

Out. Murder will out. The secret is bound to be revealed; "be sure your sin will find you out."

O blisful god, that art so just and trowel!
Lo, how that thou biwreyest mordre alway,
Mordre wol out, that see we day by day.

CHAUCER: Nun's Priest's Tale, 232.

Out and out. Incomparably, by far, or beyond measure; as, "He was out and out the best man."

Out of it. Left on one side, not included.

Outed. Expelled, ejected.

To go all out. In sport, racing, etc., to do one's very best—to put out every effort to win.

To have it out. To contest either physically or verbally with another to the utmost of one's ability; as, "I mean to have it out with him one of these days"; "I had it out with him"—i.e., "I spoke my mind freely and without reserve." The idea is that of letting loose pent-up disapprobation.

To out-Herod Herod. See HEROD.

To outrun the constable. See CONSTABLE.

Ovation. An enthusiastic display of popular favour, so called from the ancient Roman ovatio or minor triumph, in which the general after a bloodless victory or one over slaves entered the city on horseback or on foot, instead of in a chariot as in the greater triumph, and was crowned with myrtle instead of with gold.

Oven wood. Small firewood. Of English origin, the phrase is there long obsolete, but it survived in the U.S.A. into the 19th century.

Over. Half seas over. See HALF.

It's all over with him. He's finished, he can't go any farther, he's "shot his bolt." Said also of one who has been given up by the doctors.

Over and over again. Very frequently. (In Lat., Iterum iterumque.)

Over the left. See LEFT.

Overlanders. An Australian term for those who drove cattle across country to their destination, as opposed to transporting them by sea. The word is applied particularly to the heroic drive of large herds across the desert into safety during World War II, when a Japanese invasion of N. Australia was expected.

Overture (Fr. ouvert, O.F. overt, past part. of ouvrir, to open). An opening, a preliminary proposal; a piece of music for the opening of an opera. To make overtures is to be the first to make an advance, as with a view to acquaintanceship, some business deal, or a reconciliation.

Overy. The church of St. Mary Overy, Southwark, was, according to Stow, founded by a ferry-woman named Mary Overy, who, long before the age of bridges, devoted her savings to this purpose. This is fable; the name is a contraction of St. Mary's over the river.

Owain (o wān). The hero of a 12th-century legend. The Descent of Owain, written by Henry of Saltrey, an English Benedictine monk. Owain (the name is a form of Welsh Owen) was an Irish knight of Stephen's court who, by way of penance for a wicked life, entered and passed through St. Patrick's Purgatory (q.v.).

Owl, the emblem of Athens, where owls abounded. As Athene (Minerva) and Athenæ (Athenes) are the same word, the owl was given to Minerva for her symbol also.

The Greeks had a proverb, To send owls to Athens, which meant the same as our To carry coals to Newcastle (q.v.). See also MADGE.

I live too near a wood to be scared by an owl. I am too old to be frightened by a bogey.

Like an owl in an ivy-bush. Having a sapient, vacant look, as some persons have when in their cups; having a stupid vacant stare. Owls are proverbial for their judge-like solemnity; ivy is the favourite plant of Bacchus, and was supposed to be the favourite haunt of owls.

Good ivy, say to us what birds hast thou?
None but the owl that cries "How how!"
Carol (time Henry VI).

Gray, in his Elegy, and numerous other poets bracket the two:—

From yonder ivy-mantled tower
The moping owl doth to the moon complain.

Owl light. Dusk; the gloaming, "blind man's holiday." Fr. Entre chien et loup.

The owl was a baker's daughter. According to a Gloucestershire legend, our Saviour went into a baker's shop for something to eat. The mistress put a cake into the oven for Him, but her daughter said it was too large, and reduced it by half. The dough, however, swelled to an enormous size, and the daughter cried out, "Heugh! heugh! heugh!" and was transformed into an owl. Ophelia alludes to the tradition—

Well, God 'ield you! They say the owl was a baker's daughter.—SHAKESPEARE: Hamlet, iv, 5.

Owlglass. See EULENSPIEGEL.

Ox. One of the four figures which made up Ezekiel's cherub (i, 10). It is the emblem of the priesthood, and was assigned to St. Luke (g.v.) as his symbol because he begins his gospel with the Jewish priest sacrificing in the Temple.

In early art the ox is usually given as the emblem of St. Frideswide, St. Leonard, St. Sylvester, St. Medard, St. Julietta, and St. Blandina.

He has an ox on his tongue. See under MONEY.

Off-ox. A stupid or clumsy person. In an ox-team the off-ox is the one farthest away from the driver.

Ox-bow (U.S.A.). A horseshoe bend in a river.

Ox-eye. A sailor's name for a cloudy speck which indicates the approach of a storm. When Elijah heard that a speck no bigger than a "man's hand" might be seen in the sky, he told Ahab that a torrent of rain would overtake him before he could reach home (1 Kings xvii, 44, 45). Thomson alludes to this storm signal in his Summer.

The black ox hath trod on your foot, or hath tamped on you. Misfortune has come to you or your house; sometimes, you are henpecked. A black ox was sacrificed to Pluto, the infernal god, as a white one was to Jupiter.

Venus waxeth old; and then she was a pretie wench, when Juno was a young wife; now crows foote is on her eye, and the blacke ox hath trod on her foot.—LYLY: Sapho and Phao, IV, ii.

The dumb ox. St. Thomas Aquinas (1227-74), so named by his fellow students at Cologne, on account of his dullness and taciturnity. Alberus said: "We call him the dumb ox, but he will give one day such a bellow as shall be heard from one end of the world to the other."

Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn (Deut. xxv, 4). In other words, do not grudge him the mouthful he may snatch when working for you; do not deprive a man of his little perquisites.

To play the giddy ox. To act the fool generally; to behave in an irresponsible or over-hilarious manner. There was an old phrase, to make an ox of one, meaning the same as the modern to make a fool of one; and in the Merry Wives of Windsor (v, 5) we have—

Fal.: I do not begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Oxgang. An Anglo-Saxon land measure of no very definite quantity, but as much as an ox could gang over or cultivate. Also called a bovate. The Latin jugum was a similar term, which Varro defines "Quod juncti boves uno die exarare possunt."

Eight oxgangs made a carucate. If an oxgang were as much as one ox could cultivate, its average would be about fifteen acres.

Oxford. Oxford bags. Wide-bottomed flannel trousers fashionable in Oxford in the 1920s.

Oxford Blues. The Royal Horse Guards were so called in 1690 because of their blue facings.

Oxford frame. A picture frame made so that the wooden sides cross each other at the corners and project an inch or two; much used for photographs of college groups and so on.

Oxford Group or Buchmanites. A religious group named after its founder, Frank Buchman, and in no way connected with Oxford. In main its principles are Christian fellowship, public confession of sins, group "sharings" of spiritual experiences, and dependence on divine guidance in the everyday affairs of life.

Oxford Movement. A successful effort to arouse the Church of England from a period of inertia and indifference that had lasted through much of the 18th century. It was begun in 1833 at Oxford by Dr. Keble and carried on there by Hurrell Froude, Dr. Pusey, Isaac Williams, Charles Marriott, J. H. Newman, F. W. Faber, J. D. Dalgairns, and W. G. Ward (the last four afterwards went over to the Church of Rome). The Movement insisted on the Catholic character of the Church of England and the resulting necessity for a reformation in its faith and worship. The Movement was condemned by the Church authorities and after the secession of some of its leaders it may be said to have ended, but the results were very great; the Church was transformed and its life renewed, a large and powerful Anglo-Catholic party being formed. See TRACTS for the TIMES.

Oxymoron (oks i môr' on). A rhetorical figure in which effect is produced by apparent self-contradictions, such as "More haste less speed," "Cruel to be kind." The word is the Gr. for pointedly foolish.

Oyer and terminer (oi 'ër, tēr' min 'ër). An Anglo-French legal phrase meaning "to hear and determine." Commissions or Writs of oyer and terminer as issued to judges on circuit twice a year in every county directing them to hold courts for the trial of offences.

Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! (ō yes') (O.Fr., hear ye!). The call made by a public crier, court officer, etc., to attract attention when a proclamation is about to be read out. Sometimes written O yes!

Fame with her loud'st O yes!

Cries, "This is he."

SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, iv, 5.

But when the Crier cried "O Yes!" the people cried "O No!"—BARHAM: Misadventures at Margate.

Oyster. And did you ever see an oyster walk upstairs? A satirical query sometimes addressed to one who has been telling unbelievable yarns about his own experiences.

Close as a Kentish oyster. Absolutely secret; hermetically sealed. Kentish oysters are proverbially good, and all good oysters are fast closed.

Never eat an oyster unless there's an R in the month. Good advice; which limits the eating of oysters to the months from September to April inclusive. The legal close-time for oysters in England and Scotland, however, extends only from June 15th to Aug. 4th, thus freeing all May and parts of June and August.

Who eats oysters on St. James's Day will never want. St. James's Day is the first day of the oyster season (August 5th), when oysters are an expensive luxury eaten only by the rich.

Oz. The abbreviation for an ounce is the 15th-century contraction of Ital. onza. The "z" here does not play the same part as that in "viz." (q.v.). See also WIZARD OF OZ.

P

P. The sixteenth letter in the English alphabet; called pe, "mouth," by the Phœnicians and ancient Hebrews, and represented in Egyptian hieroglyph by a shutter.

In the 16th century Placentius, a Dominican monk, wrote a poem of 253 hexameter verses called Pugna Porcorum, every word of which begins with the letter p. It opens thus:—

Plaudite, Porcelli, porcorum pigra propago—which may be translated—

Praise Paul's prize pig's prolific progeny

The Four P's. A "merry interlude" by John Heywood, written about 1540. The four principal characters are "a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Poticary (apothecary), and a Pedlar."

The five P's. William Oxberry (1784-1824) was so called, because he was Printer, Poet, Publisher, Publican, and Player.

P.C. The Roman patres conscripti. See CONSCRIPT FATHERS.

P., P.P., P.P.P. (in music). P=piano, pp=pianissimo, and ppp=pianississimo. Sometimes pp means piu piano (more softly).

So f=forte, ff=fortissimo, and fff=fortississimo.

P.P.C. See CONGÉ.

P.S. (Lat., post-scriptum). Written afterwards—i.e. after the letter or book was finished.

P's and Q's. Mind your P's and Q's. Be very circumspect in your behaviour.

Several explanations have been suggested, but none seems to be wholly satisfactory. One is that it was an admonition to children learning the alphabet—and still more so to printers' apprentices sorting type—because of the similar appearance of these tailed letters; another that in old-time bar-parlours in the accounts that were scored up for beer "P" stood for "pints" and "Q" for "quarts," and of course the customer when settling up would find it necessary "to mind his P's and Q's," or he would pay too much; and yet another—from France—is that in the reign of Louis XIV, when huge wigs were worn, and bows were made with great formality, two things were specially required: a "step" with the feet, and a low bend of the body. In the latter the wig would be very apt to get deranged, and even to fall off. The caution, therefore, of the French dancing-master to his pupils was, "Mind your P's (i.e. pieds, feet) and Q's (i.e. queues, wigs)."

Peace (pā'si). From the Latin pax, meaning peace or pardon, this word is used in the sense of "with the permission of" when preceding the mention of some person who disagrees with what is being said or done.

Pacific Ocean. So named by Magellan in 1520, because there he enjoyed calm weather and a placid sea after the stormy and tempestuous passage of the adjoining straits.

The Pacific.

Amadeus VIII, Duke of Savoy (1383, 1391-1439; d. 1451). He was an anti-pope, as Felix V, from 1440 to 1449.

Frederick III, Emperor of Germany (1415, 1440-93).

Olaf III of Norway (1030-93).

Pacifico, Don. In 1850 the name of Don Pacifico was on everyone's lips. David Pacifico was a Portuguese Jew born at Gibraltar but in trade at Athens. In the course of some religious commotions his house was burned down by the mob. Don Pacifico thereupon claimed from the Greek government the exorbitant sum of £26,618 as damages. On their refusal to pay this Pacifico fell back on his British citizenship and in January, 1850, Palmerston sent the Mediterranean fleet to the Piræus. The French government then instructed their ambassador in Athens to patch matters up, with the result that Britain and France fell out and the French ambassador to Queen Victoria was recalled to Paris. The House of Lords passed a vote of censure on Palmerston, but in the Commons he replied in his most famous speech claiming that British citizenship was a protection throughout the world. (See CRVIS ROMANUS.) In the end Pacifico received some £5,000 for his lost house and injured feelings.

Pack (U.S.A.). To carry, as to pack a gun. "We packed the hams and shoulders to camp" (1857).

Packing a jury. Selecting on a jury persons whose verdict may be relied on from proclivity, far more than from evidence.

To pack up. Slang for to take one's departure; to have no more to do with the matter; also to die.

To send one packing. To dismiss him summarily and without ceremony.

Packstaff. See PIKESTAFF.

Pactolus (pāk tō' lūs). The golden sands of the Pactolus. The Pactolus is a small river in Lydia, Asia Minor, long famous for its gold which, according to legend, was due to Midas (q.v.) having bathed there. Its gold was exhausted by the time of Augustus.

Paddington Fair. A public execution. Tyburn, where executions formerly took place, is in the parish of Paddington. Public executions were abolished in England in 1868.

Paddock. Cold as a paddock. A paddock is a toad or frog; and we have the corresponding phrases "cold as a toad," and "cold as a frog."

Here a little child I stand,
Heaving up my either hand;
Cold as Paddocks though they be,
Here I lift them up to Thee,
For a Benzon to fall
On our meat and on us all.

HERRICK: Grace for a Child.

Paddy, Paddywhack. An Irishman; from Patrick (Ir. Padraig). In slang both terms are used for a loss of temper, a rage on a small scale; and the latter also denotes the gristle in roast meat.

Padishah (pād' i sha) is the Turkish form of the Persian Padshah, a king or reigning sovereign. It was formerly applied exclusively to the Sultan of Turkey.

Padre (pa' drā). The name given by soldiers and sailors to a chaplain. It is Spanish and Portuguese for "father," and was adopted in the British Army in India from the natives, who had learned the term from the Portuguese.

Padua (pād' ū ā) was long supposed by the Scottish to be the chief school of necromancy; hence Scott says of the Earl of Gowrie—

He learned the art that none may name
In Padua, far beyond the sea.

Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Paduasoy (pād' ū a soj). A silk stuff, the French pou- or pout-de-soie, introduced into England in the 17th century and for 150 years or so called poudesoy or poodesoy. The material had no connexion with Padua, but there was a "say" or serge manufactured there which was known as Padua say, and the name Paduasoy is due to confusion with this.

Pæan (pæ' ān). The name, according to Homer, of the io pæan to the gods. It was used in the phrase Io Pæan as the invocation in the hymn to Apollo, and later in hymns of thanksgiving to other deities; hence pæan has come to mean any song of praise or thanksgiving, any shout of triumph or exultation.

Io pæans let us sing,

To physicke's and to poesie's king.

LYLY: Midas, v, 3.

Pagan (pā' gān). The long held idea that this word—which etymologically means a villager, a rustic (Lat. paganus)—acquired its present meaning because the Christian Church first established itself in the cities, the village dwellers continuing to be heathen, has been shown by recent research to be incorrect. The name arose from a Roman military colloquialism. Paganus (rustic) was the soldier's contemptuous name for a civilian or for an incompetent soldier, and when the early Christians called themselves miles Christi (soldiers of Christ) they adopted the soldier-slang, paganus, for those who were not "soldiers of Christ." See the last note but one to ch. xxi of Gibbon's Decline and Fall.

Pageant. A performance, usually in the open air, of a series of dramatic scenes representing outstanding events in the history of a town or building. The fashion for pageants was inaugurated in England by the Sherborne Pageant of 1905. Outstanding pageants were those of Bury St. Edmunds (1907), Oxford (1907), Winchester (1908), Chelsea (1908), Dover (1908). One of the principal producers of pageants was Louis N. Parker (1852-1944).

Pagoda (pā gō' dā). A Buddhist temple or sacred tower in India, China, etc., especially a slender, storied tower built over the relics of a saint. The word is Portuguese, and was formed by them in the 16th century on some now unknown native word which may have been the Persian but-kadah, idol-house, or some form of bhagavat, holy.

Pagoda was also the name of a gold coin, value about 7s., formerly current in Southern India. Hence the phrase:—

To shake the pagoda-tree. To make money readily in the Far East.

I have granted a pension of 400 pagodas per annum to the family of the late Reza Saheb.—Wellington's Dispatches, I, p. 31 (1799).

The amusing pursuit of "shaking the pagoda-tree" once so popular in our Oriental possessions.—THEODORE HOOK: Gilbert Gurney, I, p. 45.

Paid. See PAY.

Paiforce. The short name for the Persia and Iraq Command (P.A.I. Force). Constituted in Sept. 1942, with headquarters at Baghdad, its functions were (a) to stand as a bulwark against a possible German drive through the Caucasus, and (b) to protect and operate the routes by which supplies were sent to Russia. The Command was wound up in 1946.

Paint. To paint the lily. To indulge in hyperbolic praise, to exaggerate the beauties, good points, etc., of the subject to a very considerable extent.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet, . . .
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

King John, iv, 2.

To paint the lion. A sailor's term, meaning to strip a person naked and then smear the body all over with tar.

To paint the town red. To have a gay, noisy time; to cause some disturbance in town by having a noisy spree. Possibly from the frequent firing of towns by Indians on the war-path.

Painting. It is said that Apelles, being at a loss to delineate the foam of Alexander's horse, dashed his brush at the picture in despair, and did by accident what he could not accomplish by art.

This story is related of many other artists, and the incident is said actually to have occurred to Michael Angelo when painting the interior of the dome of St. Peter's at Rome.

Many legends are told of pictures so painted that the objects depicted have been taken for the things themselves. It is said, for instance, that Apelles painted Alexander's horse so realistically that a living horse mistook it and began to neigh. Velasquez painted a Spanish admiral so true to life that Philip IV mistook the painting for the man and reproved it severely for not being with the fleet. Zeuxis painted some grapes so well that birds flew at them to peck them. Quentin Matsys painted a fly on a man's leg so imitatively that Mandyn, the artist, tried to brush it off with his handkerchief. Parrhasios, of Ephesus, painted a curtain so well that Zeuxis was deceived by it, and told him to draw it aside that he might see the picture behind it; and Myron, the Greek sculptor, is said to have fashioned a cow so true to nature that a bull mistook it for a living animal.

Painter. The rope by which a ship's boat can be tied to the ship, a buoy, mooring-post, etc. The word is probably an extended sense of the 14th-century peyntour, the rope which held the anchor to the ship's side (now called the shank-painter), which was from Fr. pendre, Lat. pendere, to hang.

To cut the painter. To sever connexion; to send one to the right about in double quick time. In the late 19th century the phrase was much used in reference to a possible severance between her Colonial Empire and Great Britain.

On the contrary, the idea of "cutting the painter" is not popular.—E. KINGLAKE: The Australian at Home (1891).

Pair Off. When two members of Parliament of opposite parties agree to absent themselves, so that when a vote is taken the absence of one neutralizes the missing vote of the other, they are said to pair off. In the House of Commons this is usually arranged by the Whips.

Paix (pā). La Paix des Dames. The treaty concluded at Cambrai, in 1529, between Francis I and Charles V of Germany; so called because it was brought about by Louise of Savoy (mother of the French king) and Margaret, the emperor's aunt.

Pakistan. The name of the present Dominion was coined by Chaudhrie Rahmat Ali in 1933 to represent the units which should be included when the time came: P-Punjab; A-Afghan border states; K-Kashmir; S-Sind; TAN for Baluchistan.

Pal. A good friend, a mate, boon companion. It is a gipsy word meaning a brother or mate.

Palace originally meant a dwelling on the Palatine Hill (See PALATINATE) of Rome, where Augustus and, later, Tiberius and Nero built their mansions. The word was hence transferred to other royal and imperial residences; then to similar buildings, such as Blenheim Palace, Dalkeith Palace, and to the official residence of a bishop; and finally to a place of amusement as the Crystal Palace, the People's Palace, and—in irony—to a gin palace.

In parts of Devonshire cellars for fish, storehouses cut in the rock, etc., are called palaces or palaces; but this may be from the old word palis, a space enclosed by a palisade.

All that cellar and the chambers over the same, and the little palace and landing-place adjoining the River Dart.—Lease granted by the Corporation of Totnes in 1703.

Paladin (pāl' à dīn). Properly, an officer of, or one connected with, the palace (q.v.), palatine (q.v.); usually confined in romance to the Twelve Peers of Charlemagne's court, and hence applied to any renowned hero or knight-errant.

The most noted of Charlemagne's paladins were Allory de l'Estoc; Astolfo; Basin de Genevois; Fierabras or Ferumbras; Florismart; Ganelon, the traitor; Geoffroy, Seigneur de Bordeaux, and Geoffroy de Frises; Guerin, Duc de Lorraine; Guillaume de l'Estoc, brother of Allory; Guy de Bourgogne; Hoël, Comte de Nantes; Lambert, Prince de Bruxelles; Malagigi; Nani or Nayme de Bavière; Ogier the Dane; Oliver (q.v.); Otuel; Richard, Duc de Normandie; Rinaldo; Rioldu Mans; Roland (q.v.), otherwise Orlando; Samson, Duc de Bourgogne; and Thiry or Thiry d'Ardaire. Of these, twelve at a time seemed to have formed a special bodyguard to the king.

Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign, Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemain.
DRYDEN: The Flower and the Leaf.

Palamon (pāl ē' mon). In Roman legend, a son of Ino (see LEUCOTHEA), and originally called Melicertes. Palamon is the name given to him after he was made a sea-god, and as Portumnus he was the protecting god of harbours. The story is given in Spenser's Faery Queene (IV, xi); in the same poet's Colin Clout his name is used for Thomas Churchyard (c. 1520-1604) the poet.

Palaeography. See DIPLOMATICS.

Palaeolithic Age, The (pā li ð lith' ik) (Gr. palaíos, old, lithos, a stone). The earlier of the two periods into which the Stone Age of Europe is divided (cp. NEOLITHIC).

Palamedes (pāl à mē' dēz). In Greek legend, one of the heroes who fought against Troy. He was the son of Nauplios and Clymene, and was the reputed inventor of lighthouses, scales and measures, the discus, dice, etc., and was said to have added four letters to the original alphabet of Cadmus. It was he who detected the assumed madness of Ulysses, in revenge for which the latter encompassed his death. The phrase, he is quite a Palamedes, meaning "an ingenious person," is an allusion to this hero.

In Arthurian romance, Sir Palamedes is a Saracen knight who was overcome in single combat by Tristram. Both loved Isolde, the wife of King Mark; and after the lady was given up by the Saracen, Tristram converted him to the Christian faith, and stood his godfather at the font.

Palamon and Arcite (pāl' à mon, ar sí' tē). Two young Theban knights of romance whose story (borrowed from Boccaccio's Le Teseide) is told by Chaucer in his Knight's Tale, by Fletcher and (probably) Shakespeare in The Two Noble Kinsmen (1634) and elsewhere. Both were in love with Emilia, sister-in-law to the Duke of Athens, in whose hands they were prisoners. In time they obtained their liberty, and the Duke appointed a tournament, promising Emilia to the victor. Arcite prayed to Mars to grant him victory, Palamon prayed to Venus to grant him Emilia. Arcite won the victory, but, being thrown from his horse, died; and Palamon, though not the winner, won the prize.

Palatinate (pǎ lāt' in ät). The province of a palatine who originally was an officer of the imperial palace at Rome (cp. PALACE). This was on the Palatine Hill, which was so called from Pales, a pastoral deity, whose festival was celebrated on April 21st, the "birthday of Rome," to commemorate the day when Romulus, the wolf-child, drew the first furrow at the foot of the hill, and thus laid the foundation of the "Roma Quadrata," the most ancient part of the city.

In Germany The Palatinate was the name of a former very powerful and extensive state on the Rhine, and it is still that of the detached portion of Bavaria to the west of the Rhine bounded by Baden, Alsace, Rhenish Prussia, and Hesse.

In England Cheshire and Lancashire are palatine counties. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Pale, The English. The name given in the 15th century to that part of Ireland which had been colonized in the 12th century by Henry II, viz., the districts of Cork, Dublin, Drogheda, Waterford, and Wexford. It was only in these districts that the English law prevailed, hence the phrases, Within the pale, and Outside the pale. By the 16th century the English Pale had so much contracted that it embraced only the district about 20 miles round Dublin.

Paleface. A name for a white man attributed to the North American Indians as if translated from a term in their languages. Its popularity is largely due to the novels of Fenimore Cooper; but the term became notorious through an earlier connexion with an incident that occurred in 1799. A junior officer named Sterrett, serving on the Constellation frigate, wrote home "we would put a man to death for even looking pale on this ship." This letter was published in a Philadelphia paper on March 13th; by early April the affair had become magnified to the point where it was said that Sterrett himself had killed a man for looking pale.

Pales (pǎ' lēz). The Roman god of shepherds and their flocks. See PALATINATE above.

Palimpsest (pāl' imp sēst) (Gr. palin, again, psēstos, scraped). A parchment on which the original writing has been effaced and something else has been written. When parchment was scarce the scribes used to erase what was written on it and use it again. As sometimes they did not rub it out entirely, many works that would otherwise have been lost have been recovered. Thus Cicero's De Republica, which was partially erased to make room for a commentary of St. Augustine on the Psalms, has been restored.

Palindrome (pāl' in drōm) (Gr. palin dromo, to run back again). A word or line which reads backwards and forwards alike, as Madam, also Roma tibi subito motibus ibit amor. They had also been called Sotadics, from their reputed inventor, Sotades, a scurrilous Greek poet of the 3rd century B.C.

Probably the longest palindrome in English is—

Dog as a devil deified
Deified lived as a god—and another well known is Napoleon's reputed saying—

Able was I ere I saw Elba.

A good palindrome is attributed to Adam who thus introduced himself to Eve:

Madam, I'm Adam.

The following Greek palindrome is very celebrated:—

NIΨONANOMHMATAMHMNONANOΨIN

i.e. wash my transgressions, not only my face. It appears as the legend round many fonts, notably that in the basilica of St. Sophia, Constantinople, those at St. Stephen d'Egres, Paris, and St. Menin's Abbey, Orleans; and, in England, round the fonts of St. Martin's, Ludgate Hill, St. Mary's, Nottingham, at Dulwich College; and in churches at Worlingworth (Suffolk), Harlow (Essex), Knapton (Norfolk), and Hadleigh (Suffolk).

Palinode (pāl' i nōd) (Gr., a singing again). A song or discourse recanting a previous one; such as that of Stesichorus to Helen after he had been struck blind for singing evil of her, or Horace's Ode (Bk. I, xvi), which ends—

... nunc ego mitibus
Mutare quero tristia, dum mihi fiat recentatis amica obprobriis animumque reddas.

It was a favourite form of versification among Jacobean poets, and the best known is that of Francis Quarles (1592-1644) in which man's life is likened to all the delights of nature, all of which fade, and man too dies.

Isaac Watts (1674-1748) has a palinode in which he retracts the praise bestowed upon Queen Anne. In the first part of her reign he wrote a laudatory poem to the queen, but he says that the latter part deluded his hopes and proved him a false prophet.

Palinurus (pāl i nū' rūs) (in English Palinure). Any pilot, especially a careless one; from the steersman in Virgil's Aeneid, who went to sleep at the helm and fell overboard and was drowned.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While the long solemn unison went round.
Wide and more wide, it spread o'er all the realm;
Even Palinurus nodded at the helm.

POPE: Dunciad, iv, 611.

Palissy Ware (pāl' i si). Dishes and similar articles of pottery covered with models of fish, reptiles, shells, flowers, leaves, etc., carefully coloured and enamelled in high relief; so called after Bernard Palissy (1510-89), the French potter and enameller.

Pall (pawl). The covering thrown over a coffin is the Latin pallium, a square piece of cloth used by the Romans to throw over their shoulders, or to cover them in bed; hence a coverlet.

Pall, the long sweeping robe worn by sovereigns at their coronation, by the Pope, archbishops, etc., is the Roman palla, which was only worn by princes and women of honest fame. This differed greatly from the pallium (q.v.), which was worn by freemen and slaves, soldiers, and philosophers.

Sometimes let gorgeous Tragedy
In sceptred pall come sweeping by.

MILTON: Il Penseroso.

Pall-bearers. The custom of appointing men of mark for pall-bearers came to us from the Romans. Julius Cæsar had magistrates for his pall-bearers; Augustus Cæsar had senators; Germanicus had tribunes and centurions; Æmilius L. Paulus had the chief men of Macedonia who happened to be at Rome at that time; but the poor were carried on a plain bier on men's shoulders.

Pall Mall (pāl māl). This fine thoroughfare in the West End of London has been so called since the early 18th century because it is the place where formerly the game of Palle malle (Ital. palla, ball, maglia, mallet) was played. When first built, about 1690, it was named Catherine Street, in honour of Catherine of Braganza. "Pale malle," says Cotgrave—is a game wherein a round boxball is struck with a mallet through a high arch of iron. He that can do this most frequently wins.

The game was fashionable in the reign of Charles II, and the walk called the Mall in St. James's Park was appropriated to it for the king and his court.

In town let me live then, in town let me die,
For in truth I can't relish the country, not I.
If one must have a villa in summer to dwell,
O, give me the sweet shady side of Pall Mall!

CHAS. MORRIS (d. 1832): The Contrast.

Palladian. An architectural term for a heavy, classic style based on the work of the Italian architect Andrea Palladio (1518-80). It was introduced into England by Inigo Jones, and the Banqueting Hall, Whitehall, is an example of his Palladian work.

Palladium (pā lă' di ūm). In classical story, the colossal wooden statue of Pallas in the citadel of Troy, which was said to have fallen from heaven, and on the preservation of which it was believed that the safety of the city depended. It was carried away by the Greeks, and the city burnt to the ground; and later it was said to have been taken to Rome.

Hence, the word is now figuratively applied to anything on which the safety of a people, etc., is supposed to depend.

The liberty of the press is the palladium of all the civil, political, and religious rights of an English man.—Letters of Junius: Dedication.

See also ABATON; ANCILE; EDEN HALL.

The rare metallic element found associated with platinum and gold was named palladium by its discoverer, Wollaston (1803) from the newly discovered asteroid, Pallas; and the same name has been given to a place of amusement in London, apparently through the mistaken idea that the ancient Palladium, like the Colosseum (q.v.), was something akin to a circus.

Pallas. A name of Minerva (q.v.), sometimes called Pallas Minerva. According to fable, Pallas was one of the Titans, and was killed by Minerva, who flayed him, and used his skin for armour. More likely the word is either from pallo, to brandish, the compound implying "Minerva who brandishes the spear," or simply pallex, virgin.

Pallium (pāl' i ūm). The square woollen cloak worn by men in ancient Greece, corresponding to the Roman toga. Hence the Romans called themselves gens togata, and the Greeks gens palliata.

At the present time the scarf-like vestment of white wool with red crosses, worn by the Pope and archbishops, is called the pallium. It is made from the wool of lambs blessed in the church of St. Agnese, Rome, and until he has received his pallium no archbishop can exercise his functions. It is still displayed heraldically in the arms of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Palm. The well-known tropical and subtropical tree gets its name from the Latin palma, which was a transferred use of palma, the palm of the hand, applied to the tree because of the spread-hand or open fan-like appearance of the fronds. The English palm (of the hand) represents M.E. (and Fr.) paume.

The palm tree is said to grow faster for being weighed down. Hence it is the symbol of resolution overcoming calamity. It is believed by Orientals to have sprung from the residue of the clay of which Adam was formed.

An itching palm. A hand ready to receive bribes. The old superstition is that if your palm itches you are going to receive money.

Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself

Are much condemned to have an itching palm.

Julius Cæsar, iv. 3.

Palm oil. Bribes, or rather money for bribes, fees, etc.

In Ireland the machinery of a political movement will not work unless there is plenty of palm-oil to prevent friction.—Irish Seditions from 1792 to 1880, p. 39.

The rich may escape with whole skins, but those without "palm-oil" have scant mercy.—Nineteenth Century, Aug., 1892, p. 312.

Palm Sunday. The Sunday next before Easter. So called in memory of Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem, when the multitude strewed the way with palm branches and leaves (John xii, 12-19).

Sad Palm Sunday. March 29th, 1463, the day of the battle of Towton, the most fatal of all the battles in the War of the Roses. It is said that over 30,000 Englishmen were slain.

Whose banks received the blood of many thousand men,
On "Sad Palm Sunday" slain, that Towton field we call . . .

The bloodiest field betwixt the White Rose and the Red.

DRAYTON: Polyolbion, xxviii.

Palmey days. Prosperous or happy days, as those were to a victorious gladiator when he went to receive the palm branch as the reward of his prowess.

To bear the palm. To be the best. The allusion is to the Roman custom of giving the victorious gladiator a branch of the palm tree.

To palm off. To pass off fraudulently. The allusion is to jugglers, who conceal in the palm of their hand what they pretend to dispose of in some other way.

You may palm upon us new for old.—DRYDEN.

Palmam qui meruit ferat (Let him bear the palm who has deserved it) was Nelson's motto, and is that of the Royal Naval College. The line comes from Jortin's Lusus Poetici (1748), Ad ventos, stanza iv:—

Et nobis faciles parcite et hostibus,
Concurrant pariter cum ratibus rates:
Spectent numina ponti, et
Palmam qui meruit, ferat.

Palmer. A pilgrim to the Holy Land who was privileged to carry a palm staff, and who spent all his days in visiting holy shrines, living on charity.

His sandals were with travel tore,
Staff, budget, bottle, scrip he wore;
The faded palm-branch in his hand
Showed pilgrim from the Holy Land.

SCOTT: Marmion, i, 27.

At the dedication of palmers prayers and psalms were said over them as they lay prostrate before the altar; they were sprinkled with holy water, and received a consecrated palm branch.

Palmerin (pāl' mer in). The hero of a number of 16th-century Spanish romances of chivalry, on the lines of Amadis of Gaul. The most famous are Palmerin de Oliva, and Palmerin of England. Southey published an abridged translation of the latter.

Palmetto State. The State of South Carolina. The palmetto is a fan-leaved palm.

Palmy. See PALM.

Paludament (pa lū' dā mēt). A distinctive mantle worn by a Roman general in the time of war. This was the "scarlet robe" in which Christ was invested. (Matt. xxvii, 28.)

They flung on him an old scarlet paludamentum—some cast-off war-cloak with its purple laticlave from the Prætorian wardrobe.—FARRAR: Life of Christ, ch. ix.

Pam (pām). The knave of clubs in certain card-games, also the name of a card-game; short for Pamphile, French for the knave of clubs.

This word is sometimes given as an instance of Johnson's weakness in etymology. He says it is "probably from palm, victory; as trump from triumph."

Pam was the usual nickname of the great Victorian statesman Viscount Palmerston (1784-1865).

Pampas (pām' pás). Treeless plains, some 2,000 miles long and from 300 to 500 broad, in South America. They cover an area of 750,000 sq. miles. It is the Spanish form of Peruvian bamba, meaning fiats or plains.

Pampero, The (pām pē' ro). A dry, north-west wind that blows in the summer season from the Andes across the pampas to the sea-coast.

Pamphlet. A small unbound book of a few sheets stitched together, usually on some subject of merely temporary interest; so called from O.Fr. Pamphilet, the name of a 12th-century erotic Latin poem which was very popular in the Middle Ages.

This word has been the subject of much etymological guesswork. One "authority" derived it from a supposed Pamphila, a Greek lady, whose chief work was said to be a commonplace book of anecdotes, epitomes, notes, etc.; Johnson suggested par-un-filet (held "by a thread")—i.e. stitched, but not bound, while another "derivation is pagina filatæ (pages tacked together).

Pan (Gr., all, everything). The god of pastures, forests, flocks, and herds of Greek mythology; also the personification of deity displayed in creation and pervading all things. He is represented with lower part of a goat and the upper part of a man; his lustful nature symbolized the spermatic principle of the world; the leopard's skin that he wore indicated the immense variety of created things; and his character of "blameless" symbolized that wisdom which governs the world.

Universal Pan,

Knit with the Graces and the Hours in dance,
Led on the eternal spring.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, iv, 266.

Legend has it that at the time of the Crucifixion, just when the veil of the Temple was rent in twain, a cry swept across the ocean in the hearing of many, "Great Pan is Dead," and that at the same time the responses of the oracles ceased for ever. See E. B. Browning's poem of this name.

Pan-pipes. A wind instrument of great antiquity, consisting of a series of pipes of graduated length, across the upper ends of which the player blows, obtaining a scale of thin, reedy notes. Pan-pipes are associated by name and picture with the rural god Pan who, according to Greek legend, invented them and played them to the nymphs and dryads of the mountainside.

Panacea (pān ā sē' ā) (Gr., all-healing). A universal cure. Panacea was the daughter of Æsculapius (god of medicine), and the medicine that cures is the daughter or child of the healing art.

In the Middle Ages the search for the panacea was one of the alchemists' self-imposed tasks; and fable tells of many panaceas, such as the Promethean unguent which rendered the body invulnerable, Aladdin's ring, the balsam of Fierabras (q.v.), and Prince Ahmed's apple (see APPLE). Cp. also ACHILLES' SPEAR; MEDEA'S KETTLE; etc.

Panache (pan ash'). The literal meaning of this French word is a plume of feathers flying in the wind as from the crest of a helmet. Figuratively, however, "panache" is applied to one's courage or spirit, to keeping one's end up. It is in this sense familiar to those who have read or seen Cyrano de Bergerac.

Panama Hat. A light, broad-brimmed hat made of the young leaves of Carludovica palmata, a palm-like tree indigenous to Central America.

Pancake. A thin, flat "cake" made in a frying-pan. These pancakes were made from the necessity in the past, when conditions of fasting were more strict, of using up eggs and fat before the beginning of Lent. Shrove Tuesday (q.v.), a special day for these, came to be called Pancake Day, and the Shrove-bell the Pancake Bell.

Panchæa (pān kē' ā). A fabulous land, possibly belonging to Arabia Felix, renowned among the ancients for the quality and quantity of its perfumes, such as myrrh and incense.

Pancras, St. One of the patron saints of children (cp. NICHOLAS), martyred in the Diocletian persecution (304) at Rome at the age of 13. His day is May 12th, and he is usually represented as a boy, with a sword in one hand and a palm-branch in the other.

The first church to be consecrated in England (by St. Augustine, at Canterbury) was dedicated to St. Pancras.

Pandarus (păn' dâ rus). A Lycian leader and ally of the Trojans in Greek legend. Owing to his later connexion with the story of Troilus and Cressida, he was taken over by the romance writers of the Middle Ages as a procurer. See PANDER.

Pandects of Justinian (Gr. pandektes, all receiver or encloser). A compendium of Roman civil law made in the 6th century by order of the Emperor Justinian. It comprises 50 books, and contains the decisions to which Justinian gave the force of law. The story that the copy now in the Laurentian Library at Florence was found at Amalfi (1137), and gave a spur to the study of civil law which changed the whole literary and legal aspect of Europe, is not now credited.

Pandemonium (păn de mō' ni ūm) (Gr., all the demons). A wild, unrestrained uproar, a tumultuous assembly. The word was first used by Milton as the name of the principal city in Hell. It was formed on the analogy of Pantheon (q.v.).

The rest were all
Far to the inland retired, about the walls
Of Pandemonium city and proud seat
Of Lucifer.

Paradise Lost, x, 424 (see also i, 756).

Pander. To pander to one's vices is to act as an agent to them, and such an agent is termed a pander from Pandarus, who procures for Troilus (q.v.) the love of Cressida. In Much Ado About Nothing it is said that Troilus was "the first employer of pandars" (v, 2).

Let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all "Pandars." Let all constant men be "Troiluses," all false women be "Cressids," and all brokers-between, "Pandars." Say, Amen.—SHAKESPEARE: Troilus and Cressida, iii, 2.

Pandora's Box (păn dôr' à). A present which seems valuable, but which is in reality a curse; like that of Midas (q.v.), who found his very food became gold, and so uneatable.

Prometheus made an image and stole fire from heaven to endow it with life. In revenge, Jupiter told Vulcan to make the first woman, who was named Pandora (i.e. the All-gifted), because each of the gods gave her some power which was to bring about the ruin of man. Jupiter gave her a box which she was to present to him who married her. Prometheus distrusted Jove and his gifts, but Epimetheus, his brother, married the beautiful Pandora, and—against advice—accepted the gift of the god. Immediately he opened the box all the evils flew forth, and have ever since continued to afflict the world. According to some accounts the last thing that flew out was Hope; but others say that Hope alone remained.

Pangloss, Dr. (păn' gloss) (Gr., all tongues). The pedantic old tutor to the hero in Voltaire's Candide, ou l'Optimisme (1759). His great point was his incurable and misleading optimism; it did him no good and brought him all sorts of misfortune, but to the end he reiterated "all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds." This was an attack upon the current theories of J. J. Rousseau.

Panhandle. In the United States a narrow strip of territory belonging to one State which runs between two others, such as the Texas Panhandle, the Panhandle of Idaho, etc. West Virginia is known as the Panhandle State.

Panic. The word comes from the god Pan (q.v.), because sounds heard by night in the mountains and valleys, which gave rise to sudden and groundless fear, were attributed to him. There are various legends accounting for the name; one is that Bacchus, in his eastern expeditions, was opposed by an army far superior to his own, and Pan advised him to command all his men at dead of night to raise a simultaneous shout. This was rolled from mountain to mountain by innumerable echoes, and the enemy, thinking they were surrounded on all sides, took to sudden flight. Cp. Judges vii, 18-21.

Panjandrum (păn jăn' drŭm). A village boss, who imagines himself the "Magnus Apollo" of his neighbours. The word occurs in Foote's farrago of nonsense which he composed to test old Macklin, who said he had brought his memory to such perfection that he could remember anything by reading it over once. There is more than one version of the test passage; the following is as well authenticated as any:—

So she went into the garden to cut a cabbage-leaf to make an apple-pie, and at the same time a great she-bear came running up the street and popped its head into the shop. "What! no soap?" So he died, and she—very imprudently—married the barber. And there were present the Picinnies, the Jobillies, the Garyulies, and the Grand Panjandrum, himself with the little red button a-top, and they all fell to playing the game of catch-as-catch-can till the gunpowder ran out at the heels of their boots.

It is said that Macklin was so indignant at this nonsense that he refused to repeat a word of it.

Panope. See NEREIDS.

Panopticon (păn op' ti kôn). The Royal Panopticon of Science and Art, in Leicester Square, was opened in 1852-53 as a place of popular instruction and a home for the sciences and music. It was built in the Moorish style and awakened great admiration. It failed in its original intention, however, and after being closed some years was reopened in 1858 as a place of entertainment, under the name of The Alhambra. For many years this was one of the landmarks of London.

Pan-piper. See PAN.

Pantables. See PANTOFLES.

Pantagruel (păn tâ groo' el). The principal character in Rabelais' great satire The History of Gargantua and Pantagruel (the first part published in 1532, the last posthumously in 1565), King of the Dipsodes, son of Gargantua (q.v.), and by some identified with Henri II of France. He was the last of the giants, and Rabelais says he got his name from the Greek panta, all, and Arab. gruel, thirsty, because he was born during the drought which lasted thirty and six months, three weeks, four days, thirteen hours, and a little more, in that year of grace noted for having "three Thursdays in one week." He was covered with hair at birth, "like a young bear," and was so strong that though he was chained in his cradle with four great iron chains, like those used in ships of the largest size, he stamped out the bottom, which was made of weavers' beams, and, when loosed by the servants, broke his bonds into five hundred thousand pieces with one blow of his infant fist. When he grew to manhood he knew all languages, all sciences, and all knowledge of every sort, out-Solomoning Solomon in wisdom. His immortal achievement was his voyage from Utopia in quest of the "oracle of the Holy Bottle" (q.v.).

Wouldst thou not issue forth . . .

To see the third part in this earthy cell
Of the brave acts of good Pantagruel.

RABELAIS: To the Spirit of the Queen of Navarre.

Pantagruelism. Coarse and boisterous buffoonery and humour, especially with a serious purpose—like that for which Pantagruel was famous.

Pantaloon. The breeches, trousers, or under-drawers of various kinds (now often called pants) get their name from Pantaloon, a Venetian character in 16th-century Italian comedy, a lean and foolish old man dressed in loose trousers and slippers. His name is said to have come from San Pantaleone (a patron saint of physicians and very popular in Venice), and he was adopted by the later harlequinades and pantomimes as the butt of the clown's jokes.

The sixth age shifts

Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side,
His youthful hose well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound.

As You Like It, ii, 7.

Playing Pantaloon. Playing second fiddle; being the cat's-paw of another; servilely imitating.

Pantechnicon (păn tek' ni kôn) (Gr., belonging to all the arts). The name was originally coined for a bazaar for the sale of artistic work built about 1830 in Motcomb Street, Belgrave Square; as this was unsuccessful the building was converted into a warehouse for storing furniture, and the name retained. It is now often used in place of pantechnicon van, a furniture-moving van.

Pantheism (păn' thē izm). The doctrine that God is everything and everything is God; a monistic theory elaborated by Spinoza, who, by his doctrine of the Infinite Substance, sought to overcome the opposition between mind and matter, body and soul.

Pantheon (păn' thē on). A temple dedicated to all the gods (Gr. pan, all, theos, god); specifically, that erected at Rome by Agrippa, son-in-law to Augustus. It is circular, nearly 150 ft. in diameter, and of the same total height; in the centre of the dome roof is a space open to the sky. Since the early 7th century, as Santa Maria Rotunda, it has been used as a Christian church. Among the national heroes buried there are Raffaele, Victor Emmanuel II, and Humbert I.

The Pantheon at Paris was originally the church of St. Geneviève, started by Louis XV and completed in 1790. In 1791 the Convention changed its name to the Pantheon and decreed that men who had deserved well of their country should be buried there. Among them are Rousseau, Voltaire, and Victor Hugo.

Panther (earlier Panthera). In mediæval times this animal was supposed to be friendly to all beasts except the dragon, and to attract them by a peculiarly sweet odour it exhaled. Swinburne, in Laus Veneris, makes use of this tradition, but gives it a rather different significance:—

As one who hidden in deep sedge and reeds

Smells the rare scent made where a panther feeds,

And tracking ever slotwise the warm smell

Is snapped upon by the warm mouth and bleeds,

His head far down the hot sweet mouth of her—

So one tracks love, whose breath is deadlier.

In the old Physiologus the panther was the type of Christ, but later, when the savage nature of the beast was more widely known, it became symbolical of evil and hypocritical flattery; hence Lyly's comparison (in Euphues, the Anatomy of Wit) of the beauty of women to a delicate bait with a deadly hook, a sweet panther with a devouring paunch, a sour poison in a silver pot.

The mediæval idea is reflected in (or perhaps arose from) the name, which is probably of Oriental origin but was taken from Gr. panther, all beasts.

In Reynard the Fox (q.v.) Reynard affirms that he sent the queen a comb made of panther's bone, "more lustrous than the rainbow, more odoriferous than any perfume, a charm against every ill, and a universal panacea."

The Spotted Panther in Dryden's Hind and Panther (1687) typifies the Church of England as being full of the spots of error; whereas the Church of Rome is faultless as the milk-white hind.

The panther, sure the noblest next the hind,

And fairest creature of the spotted kind;

Oh, could her inborn stains be washed away

She were too good to be a beast of prey. Pt. 1.

Pantile. A roofing-tile curved transversely to an ogee shape. In the 18th century as Dissenters' chapels were—like cottages—frequently roofed with these, such meeting-houses were sometimes called pantile-shops, and the word was used in the sense of dissenting. Mrs. Centlivre, in A Gotham Election (1715), contrasts the pantile crew with a good churchman.

The Parade at Tunbridge Wells, known as the Pantiles, was so called because the name was erroneously applied in the 18th century to such flat Dutch tiles as those with which it is paved.

Pantisocracy (păn ti sok' rā si) (Gr., all of equal power). The name given by Coleridge to the communistic, Utopian society that he, with Southey, George Burnett, and others intended (about 1794) to form on the banks of the Susquehanna River. The scheme came to nothing owing chiefly to the absence of funds.

All are not moralists, like Southey, when
He prated to the world of "Pantisocracy."

BYRON: Don Juan, iii, 93.

Pantofles, or Pantables (păn' tofız, păn' táb lz). Slippers, especially loose ones worn by Orientals.

To stand upon one's pantofles. To stand on one's dignity, get on the high horse. It was a common proverbial phrase from the 16th to the 18th century.

I note that for the most part they stand so on their pantofles that they be secure of perils, obstinate in their own opinions . . . ready to shake off their old acquaintance without cause, and to condemn them without colour.—LYLY: Euphues, The Anatomy of Wit (1578).

Richard Puttenham (c. 1520-1601), in his Arte of English Poesie (1589), shows how the phrase probably arose. "The actor," he says, "did walk upon those high-corked shoes or pantofles, which now they call in Spain and Italy Shoppini."

Pantomime (păn' tō mīm). According to etymology this should be all dumb show, but the word was commonly applied to an adaptation of the old Commedia dell'arte that lasted down to the 19th century. The principal characters are Harlequin (q.v.) and Columbine, who never speak, and Clown and Pantaloon, who keep a constant fire of joke and repartee. This once popular pantomime has since devolved into a Christmas theatrical entertainment, usually based on a nursery tale, e.g. Cinderella, Mother Goose, or even Robinson Crusoe, enlivened by catchy songs, pretty girls, and considerable buffooning.

Panurge (Gr. pan, all, ergos, worker, the "all-doer," i.e. the rogue, he who will "do anything or anyone"). The roguish companion of Pantagruel, and one of the principal characters in Rabelais' satire. He was a desperate rake, was always in debt, had a dodge for every scheme, knew everything and something more, was a boon companion of the mirthfullest temper and most licentious bias; but was timid of danger, and a desperate coward. Panurge consulted lots, dreams, a sibyl, etc., and, lastly, the Oracle of the Holy Bottle; and to every one of the obscure answers Panurge received, whether it seemed to point to "Yes" or to "No," he invariably found insuperable objections.

Some "commentators" on Rabelais have identified Panurge with Calvin, others with Cardinal Lorraine; and this part of the satire seems to be an echo of the great Reformation controversy on the celibacy of the clergy.

Panzer (păn' tzer). German term used in World War II meaning "armoured"; Panzer division, as a term, applied to all the troops in or attached to that armoured division, whether actually riding in tanks or not.

Pap. He gives pap with a hatchet. He does or says a kind thing in a very brusque and ungracious manner. One of the scurrilous tracts against Martin Marprelate (see MARPRELATE), published in 1589, was entitled Pap with a Hatchet.

Papal States or States of the Church, were the Italian territories under the temporal sovereignty of the Popes until 1860 when, with the exception of the city of Rome and a few outlying possessions, the States were incorporated in the Kingdom of Italy. In 1870, with the withdrawal of the French garrison that had alone enabled the enfeebled Papal government to exist, the Italians entered Rome and the Pope made himself a voluntary "prisoner" in the Vatican. In 1929 the Lateran Treaty was signed between the Holy See and Mussolini's Italian government whereby de jure and de facto sovereignty was accorded to the Papal authorities in the Vatican City, which includes the Palace, the church and piazza of St. Peter's, and contiguous buildings to the extent of a little under a square mile, with a population of some 600 souls. The Pope's country seat at Castel Gandolfo is also included in the Vatican City.

Paper. So called from the papyrus, the giant water reed from which the Egyptians manufactured a material for writing on.

Not worth the paper it's written on. Said of an utterly worthless statement, promise, etc.

Paper blockade. A blockade proclaimed but not put into force.

Paper credit. Credit allowed on the score of bills, promissory notes, etc., that show that money is due to the borrower.

Paper money or currency. Bank notes as opposed to coin, or bills used as currency.

Paper profits. Hypothetical profits shown on a company's prospectus, etc.

The Paper King. John Law, the projector of the Mississippi Scheme (q.v.).

To paper a house. In theatrical phraseology, to fill the theatre with "deadheads," or non-paying spectators, admitted by paper orders.

To send in (or to receive) one's papers. To resign one's appointment, commission, etc., or to receive one's dismissal.

Paphian (pă' fi ăn). Relating to Venus, or rather to Paphos, a city of Cyprus, where Venus was worshipped; a Cyprian; a prostitute.

Papier mâché (păp' yer măsh' ä). Pulped paper mixed with glue, or layers of paper glued together and while pliable moulded to form various articles and ornaments. When dry the material becomes hard and strong. Lacquered, and often inlaid with mother o' pearl, papier mâché articles were greatly in vogue in early and mid-Victorian times. In 1772 Henry Clay, of Birmingham, used it in coach-building; in 1845 it was first employed for architectural mouldings, etc.

Papyrus. See PAPER. The written scrolls of the ancient Egyptians are called papyri, because they were written on this.

Par (Lat., equal). Stock at par means that it is to be bought at the price it represents. Thus, £100 stock if quoted at £105 would be £5 above par; if at £95, it would be £5 below par. A person in low spirits or ill health is said to be "below par."

In journalism a par is a paragraph, a note of a few lines on a subject of topical interest.

Paraclete (păr' ä klēt). The advocate; one called to aid or support another; from the Gr.

para-kalein, to call to. The word is used as a title of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter.

O source of uncreated Light.

The Father's promised Paraclete!

DRYDEN: Veni, Creator Spiritus.

Paradise. The Greeks borrowed this word from the Persians, among whom it denoted the enclosed and extensive parks and pleasure grounds of the Persian kings. The Septuagint translators adopted it for the garden of Eden, and in the New Testament and by early Christian writers it was applied to Heaven, the abode of the blessed dead.

A fool's paradise. See FOOL.

Paradise and the Peri. See PERI.

Paradise Lost. Milton's epic poem was published in 12 books in 1667. It tells the story—
Of Man's first disobedience and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
Brought death into the World, and all our woe
With loss of Eden.

Satan rouses the panic-stricken host of fallen angels with tidings of a rumour current in Heaven of a new world about to be created. He calls a council to deliberate what should be done, and they agree to send him to search for this new world. Seating himself on the Tree of Life, Satan overhears Adam and Eve talking about the prohibition made by God, and at once resolves upon the nature of his attack. He takes the form of a mist, and, entering the serpent, induces Eve to eat of the forbidden fruit. Adam eats "that he may perish with the woman whom he loved." Satan returns to Hell to tell his triumph, and Michael is sent to lead the guilty pair out of the Garden.

Milton borrowed largely from the epic of Du Bartas (1544-90), entitled The Week of Creation which was translated into almost every European language; and he was indebted to St. Avitus (d. 523), who wrote in Latin hexameters The Creation, The Fall, and The Expulsion from Paradise, for his description of Paradise (Bk. i), of Satan (Bk. ii), and other parts.

In 1671 Paradise Regained (in four books) was published. The subject is the Temptation. Eve, being tempted, fell, and lost Paradise; Jesus, being tempted, resisted, and regained Paradise.

Paradise shoots. The lign aloë; said to be the only plant descended to us from the Garden of Eden. When Adam left Paradise he took a shoot of this tree, and from it the lign aloës have been propagated.

The Earthly Paradise. In mediæval times it was a popular belief that paradise, a land—or island—where everything was beautiful and restful, and where death and decay were unknown, still existed somewhere on earth and was to be found for the searching. It was usually located far away to the east; Cosmas (7th century) placed it beyond the ocean east of China, in 9th-century maps it is shown in China itself, and the fictitious letter of Prester John to the Emperor Emmanuel Comnenus states that it was within three days' journey of his own territory—a "fact" that is corroborated by Mandeville. The Hereford map (13th century) shows it as a circular island near India, from which it is separated not only by the sea, but also by a battlemented wall. Cp. BRANDAN, St.

Paraguay, The Reductions of, were a Jesuit mission in Paraguay established in 1607. Basing their rule on the principle that they were the guardians and trustees of the Indians, the Jesuit fathers established a colony of a model nature. When the cupidity of the Spanish government closed the Reductions and expelled the Jesuits, Voltaire, a by-no-means uncritical observer, wrote: "When the Paraguay mission left the hands of the Jesuits in 1768 they had arrived at what is perhaps the highest degree of civilization to which it is possible to lead a young people. . . . Laws were there respected, morals were pure, a happy brotherhood bound men together, the useful arts flourished, and there was abundance everywhere."

Parallel. None but himself can be his parallel. Wholly without a peer. The line occurs in Lewis Theobald's The Double Falsehood (1727), iii, 1, a play which Theobald tried to palm off on the literary world as by Shakespeare. There are many similar sentences; for example:—

And but herself admits no parallel.

MASSINGER: Duke of Millaine, iii, 4 (1662).

None but himself can parallel.

Anagram on John Lilburn (1658).

Paraphernalia (pär ä fēr nā' lyä). Literally, all that a woman can claim at the death of her husband beyond her jointure (Gr. para, beside, pherne, dowry). In the Roman law her paraphernalia included the furniture of her chamber, her wearing apparel, her jewels, etc. Hence personal attire, fittings generally, anything for show or decoration.

Parasite (pär' ä sīt) (Gr. para sitos, eating at another's cost). A plant or animal that lives on another; hence a hanger-on, one who fawns and flatters for the sake of what he can get out of it—a "sponger."

Parcheesi (par chē' zi). A game resembling backgammon, played mostly in U.S.A.

Parchment. So called from Pergamum, in Mysia, Asia Minor, where it was used for the purpose of writing when Ptolemy prohibited the exportation of papyrus from Egypt.

Pardon Bell. The Angelus bell. So called because of the indulgence once given for reciting certain prayers forming the Angelus (q.v.).

Pardoner's Tale, in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, is that of Death and the Rioters, which comes from an Oriental source through the Italian Cento Novelle Antiche.

A pardoner was a cleric licensed to preach and collect money for a definite object such as a crusade or the building of a church, for contributing to which an indulgence was attached.

The pardoner's mitten. Whoever put this mitten on would be sure to thrive in all things.

He that his honde put in this metayn,

He shal have multiplyng of his grayn,

Whan he hath sowne, be it whete or otes,

So that ye offre pans [pence] or elles grootes.

CHAUCER: Prologue to the Pardoner's Tale.

Pargetting (par' jit ing). The ornamental plaster facing of exterior walls, usually in a simple pricked or traced design, and commonly found in Essex. Parget is a plaster made of lime, hair, and cow dung.

Pari mutuel (pa'ri mū tū el') was the name first given to the totalizator, which ensures that the winners of a race share the money staked on the horses, etc., after the cost of management, taxes, etc., have been deducted.

Pari passu. At the same time; in equal degrees; two or more schemes carried on at once and driven forward with equal energy, are said to be carried on pari passu, which is Latin for equal strides or the equally measured pace of persons marching together.

The cooling effects of surrounding matter go on nearly pari passu with the heating.—GROVE: Correlation of Physical Forces, p. 64.

Pariah. A member of the lowest caste of Hindu in Southern India, from a native word meaning "a drummer," because it was these who beat the drums at certain festivals.

Europeans often extend the term to those of no caste at all, hence it is applied to outcasts generally, the lowest of the low.

There was no worst

Of degradation spared Fifine; ordained from first To last, in body and soul, for one life-long debauch,
The Pariah of the North, the European Nauch!

BROWNING: Fifine at the Fair, xxxi.

Parian. A name given to a fine statuary porcelain manufactured in the mid-19th century, and used for small figures, vases, chessmen, jewelry, etc.

Parian Chronicle. One of the Arundelian Marbles (q.v.), found in the island of Paros, and bearing an inscription which contains a chronological register of the chief events in the mythology and history of ancient Greece during a series of 1,318 years, beginning with the reign of Cecrops (about 1580 B.C.), and ending with the archonship of Diognetus (264 B.C.), of which nearly the last hundred years is now lost.

Paris (pär'is). In Greek legend, the son of Priam, King of Troy, and Hecuba; and through his abduction of Helen (q.v.) the cause of the siege of Troy. Before his birth Hecuba dreamed that she was to bring forth a firebrand, and, as this was interpreted to mean that the unborn child would bring destruction to his house, the infant Paris was exposed on Mount Ida. He was, however, brought up by a shepherd, and grew to perfection of beautiful manhood. When the golden Apple of Discord (see under APPLE) was thrown on the table of the gods it was Paris who had to judge between the rival claims of Hera (Juno), Aphrodite (Venus), and Athene (Minerva); each goddess offered him bribes—the first power, the second the most beautiful of women, and the third martial glory. He awarded the Apple and the title of "Fairest" to Aphrodite, who in return assisted him to carry off Helen, for whom he deserted his wife, Ceneone, daughter of the river-god, Cebren. At Troy Paris earned the contempt of all by his cowardice, and he was fatally wounded with a poisoned arrow by Philoctetes at the taking of the city.

Paris (pär'is), the capital of France. So called from the ancient Celtic tribe, the Parisii, whose capital—the modern Paris—was known to the Romans as Lutetia Parisiorum, the mud-town of the Parisii. See LUTETIA, the Gauls gives a whimsical derivation of the name. He tells (I, xvii) how Gargantua played a disgusting practical joke on the Parisians who came to stare at him, and the men said it was a sport "par ris" (to be laughed at); wherefore the city was called Par-'is.

The heraldic device of the city of Paris is a ship. As Sauval says, "L'île de la cité est faite comme un grand navire enfoncé dans la vase, et échoué au fil de l'eau vers le milieu de la Seine." This form of a ship struck the heraldic authorities, who, in the latter half of the Middle Ages, emblazoned it in the shield of the city.

Monsieur de Paris. The public executioner of Paris.

Plaster of Paris. Gypsum, especially calcined gypsum used for making statuary casts, keeping broken limbs rigid for setting, etc. It is found in large quantities in the quarries of Montmartre, near Paris.

Paris-Garden. A bear-garden; a noisy, disorderly place. In allusion to the famous bull- and bear-baiting gardens of that name at Bank-side, Southwark, on the site of a house owned by Robert de Paris in the reign of Richard II. In 1504 the Swan Theatre was erected here, and in 1613 this gave way to The Hope.

Do you take the court for a Paris-garden?—Henry VIII, v, 3.

Parisian Wedding, The. The massacre of St. Bartholomew, which took place (Aug. 24th, 1572) during the festivities at the marriage of Henri of Navarre and Margaret of France.

Charles IX, although it was not possible for him to recall to life the countless victims of the Parisian Wedding, was ready to explain those murders.—MOTLEY: Dutch Republic, iii, 9.

Parlement. Under the old régime in France, the sovereign court of justice where councillors were allowed to plead, and where justice was administered in the king's name. The Paris Parlement received appeals from all inferior tribunals, but its own judgments were final. It took cognizance of all offences against the crown, the peers, the bishops, the corporations, and all high officers of state; and, though it had no legislative power, had to register the royal edicts before they could become law. The Parlements were abolished by the Constituent Assembly in 1790.

Parliament. From the French Parlement (see above), from parler, to speak, with the suffix -ment, denoting action, etc.

My Lord Coke tells us Parliament is derived from "parler le ment" (to speak one's mind). He might as honestly have taught us that firmament is "firma mentis" (a farm for the mind), or "fundament" the bottom of the mind.—RYMER: On Parliaments.

A number of English Parliaments have received special characteristic names, and the more important of these will be found in their alphabetical places. See, for instance, under ADDLED; BAREBONES; CONVENTION; DEVIL'S; DRUNKEN; DUNCES; GOOD; GRATTAN'S; LONG; MAD; MONGREL; PENSIONER; RUMP; USELESS; WONDERMAKING.

Parliamentary language, i.e. restrained and seemly language such as is required of any member speaking in Parliament, is now applied to a civil and courteous mode of addressing an opponent in an argument.

Parliamentary Train. By the Regulation of Railways Act of 1844 every railway in Great Britain was obliged to run at least one train a day over its system, at a minimum speed of 12 m.p.h., calling at every station, at a fare not greater than 1d. a mile. This was repealed in 1915.

Parlour. Originally the reception room in a monastery, etc., where the inmates could see and speak to (Fr. parler) their friends.

Parlour boarder. A pupil at a boarding-school who lives with the principal and receives extra care and attention. Hence, used of one in a privileged position.

Parlour tricks. Accomplishments that are useful in company, at At Homes, etc., such as singing, witty conversation, and so on.

Parlous. A corrupt form of perilous.

Oh! 'tis a parlous lad.

As You Like It, iii, 2.

Parmesan (par' me zăn'). A dry, hard cheese, originally made in Parma, Italy, from skim milk and especially suitable for grating.

Parnassus. A mountain near Delphi, Greece, with two summits, one of which was consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, the other to Bacchus. It is said to have been anciently called Larnassus, because Deucalion's ark, larnax, stranded there after the flood. After the oracle of Delphi was built at its foot it received the name of Parnassus, which Peuceer says is a corruption of Har Nahas (hill of divination).

Owing to its connexion with the Muses, Parnassus came to be regarded as the seat of poetry and music, and we still use such phrases as To climb Parnassus, meaning "to write poetry."

O, were I on Parnassus hill,
Or had o' Helicon my fill,
That I might catch poetic skill,
To sing how dear I love thee!

BURNS: Song.

The Legislator or Solon of Parnassus. Boileau (1636-1711) was so called by Voltaire, because of his Art of Poetry, a production unequalled in the whole range of didactic poetry.

Gradus ad Parnassum (Lat., steps to Parnassus). The title applied to a dictionary of Latin prosody formerly used in schools for teaching the writing of Latin verse.

Parnassian School. The name given to a group of French poets flourishing from about 1850 to 1890, from a collection of their poems entitled Parnasse contemporain (1866). They were followers of De Musset, and include Leconte de Lisle, Baudelaire, François Coppée, and Sully-Prudhomme.

In England the group of poets following Rossetti and William Morris have sometimes been referred to as "the Parnassians."

Parody. Father of Parody. Hipponax of Ephesus (6th century B.C.). Parody means an ode which perverts the meaning of another ode. (Gr. para ode.)

Parole (pâ rôl') (Fr.). A verbal promise given by a soldier that he will not abuse his leave of absence or by a prisoner of war that he will not attempt to escape.

Parolles (pâ rôl' êz). He was a mere Parolles. A pretender, a man of words, and a pedant. The allusion is to the faithless, bragging, slandering villain who dubs himself "captain," pretends to knowledge which he has not, and to sentiments he never feels, in Shakespeare's All's Well that Ends Well.

I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fixed evils sit so fit on him
That they take place . . . Act i, 1.

Parr. Thomas Parr, the "old, old, very old man," was said to have lived in the reigns of ten sovereigns, to have married a second wife when he was 120 years old, and to have had a child by her. He was a husbandman, born—by repute—at Alberbury, near Shrewbury, in 1483, and died 1635, aged 152 years. William Thoms, founder of Notes and Queries, examined the evidence in his Records of Longevity, and, though Parr certainly lived to a great age, found no confirmation for the generally accepted dates.

Parsees (par sêz). Guebres or fire-worshippers (q.v.); descendants of Persians who fled to India during the Mohammedan persecutions of the 7th and 8th centuries, and still adhere to their Zoroastrian religion. See also SILENCE (Towers of Silence). The word means People of Pars—i.e. Persia.

Parsifal. See PERCIVAL.

Parsley. He has need now of nothing but a little parsley—i.e. he is dead. A Greek saying; the Greeks decked tombs with parsley, because it keeps green a long time.

Parson. See CLERICAL TITLES.

Parson Adams. A leading character in Fielding's Joseph Andrews (1742), often taken as the type of the simple-minded, hard-working, and learned country curate who is totally ignorant of "the ways of the world."

As he never had any intention to deceive, so he never suspected such a design in others. He was generous, friendly, and brave to an excess; but simplicity was his characteristic; he did, no more than Mr. Colley Cibber, apprehend any such passions as malice and envy to exist in mankind.—Joseph Andrews, ch. i.

He was drawn from Fielding's friend, the Rev. William Young, who edited Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary (1752).

Part. A portion, piece, or fragment.

For my part. As far as concerns me.

For the most part. Generally, as a rule.

In good part. Favourably.

Part and parcel. An essential part, portion, or element.

"Well, Mr. Squeers," he said, welcoming that worthy with his accustomed smile, of which a sharp look and a thoughtful frown were part and parcel, "how do you do?"—DICKENS: Nicholas Nickleby.

Part of speech. A grammatical class of words of a particular character. The old rhyme by which children used to be taught the parts of speech is:—

Three little words you often see
Are ARTICLES, a, an, and the.
A NOUN's the name of anything;
As school or garden, hoop or swing.
ADJECTIVES tell the kind of noun;
As great, small, pretty, white, or brown.
Instead of nouns the PRONOUNS stand;
Her head, his face, our arms, your hand.
VERBS tell of something being done;
To read, count, sing, laugh, jump, or run.
How things are done the ADVERBS tell;
As slowly, quickly, ill, or well.
CONJUNCTIONS join the words together;
As, men and women, wind or weather.
The PREPOSITION stands before
A noun, as in or through a door.
The INTERJECTION shows surprise;
As, oh! how pretty! ah! how wise!
The whole are called nine parts of speech,
Which reading, writing, speaking teach.

Part up! Slang for "hand over," as in "If you don't soon part up with the money you owe me there'll be trouble." An extension of the use is the old saying (Tusser, 1573), A fool and his money are soon parted.

Till death us do part. See DEPART.

To play a part. To perform some duty or pursue some course of action; also, to act deceitfully. The phrase is from the stage, where an actor's part is the words or the character assigned to him.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players.
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts.

As You Like It, II, i, 7.
Why is the Past belied with wicked art,
The Future made to play so false a part?

WORDSWORTH: The Warning, 140.

To take part. To assist; to participate.

But Lilia pleased me, for she took no part
In our dispute.

TENNYSON: The Princess; Conclusion, 29.

To take the part of. To side with, to support the cause of.

A man of parts. An accomplished man; one who is clever, talented, or of high intellectual ability.

Low in the world, because he scorns its arts.

A man of letters, manners, morals, parts;

Unpatronised, and therefore little known.

COWPER: Tirocinium, 672.

Parting cup. See STIRRUP CUP.

The parting of the ways. Said of a critical moment when one has to choose between two different courses of action. The allusion, of course, is to a place at which a road branches off in different directions.

For the difficulties in which we find ourselves now, the parting of the ways was in 1853, when the Emperor Nicholas's proposals were rejected.—LORD SALISBURY: Speech (Jan. 19th, 1897).

Partant pour la Syrie (par' tong poor la sir' è). The favourite march of the French troops in the Second Empire. The words were by Count Alexander de Laborde (1810), and the music—attributed to Queen Hortense, mother of Napoleon III—was probably by the flautist Philippe Drouet. The ballad tells how young Dunois followed his lord to Syria, and prayed the Virgin "that he might prove the bravest warrior, and love the fairest maiden." Afterwards the count said to Dunois, "To thee we owe the victory, and my daughter I give to thee." The refrain was: Amour à la plus belle; honneur au plus vaillant.

Parthenon (par' thè non). The great temple at Athens to Athene Parthenos (i.e. the Virgin), many of the sculptured friezes and fragments of pediments of which are now in the British Museum among the Elgin Marbles (q.v.). The Temple was begun by the architect Ictinus about 450 B.C., and the embellishment of it was mainly the work of Phidias, whose colossal chryselephantine statue of Athene was its chief treasure.

Parthenope (par then' ò pì). Naples; so called from Parthenope, the siren, who threw herself into the sea out of love for Ulysses, and was cast up in the bay of Naples.

Parthenopean Republic. The transitory Republic of Naples, established with the aid of the French in Jan. 1799, and overthrown by the Allies in the following June, when the Bourbons were restored.

Particularists. Those who hold the doctrine of particular election and redemption, i.e. the election and redemption of some, not all, of the human race.

Partington. Dame Partington and her mop. A taunt against those who try to withstand progress. Sydney Smith, speaking on the Lords' rejection of the Reform Bill, October, 1831, compares them to Dame Partington with her mop, trying to push back the Atlantic. "She was excellent," he says, "at a slop or puddle, but should never have meddled with a temple."

The story is that a Mrs. Partington had a cottage on the shore at Sidmouth, Devon. In November, 1824, a heavy gale drove the waves into her house, and the old lady laboured with a mop to sop the water up.

B. P. Shillaber, the American humorist, published the Life and Sayings of Mrs. Partington (1854), the old lady—like Mrs. Malaprop—constantly misusing words.

Partition of Poland. See POLAND.

Partlet. The hen in Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale, and in Reynard the Fox (q.v.). A partlet was a ruff worn in the 16th century by women, and the reference is to the frill-like feathers round the neck of certain hens.

In the barn the tenant cock

Close to partlet perched on high.

CUNNINGHAM.

Sister Partlet with her hooded head, allegorizes the cloistered community of nuns in Dryden's Hind and Panther, where the Roman Catholic clergy are likened to barnyard fowls.

Partridge. Always partridge! See PERDRIX.

St. Partridges' Day. September 1st, the first day of partridge shooting.

Parturiunt montes (par tū' ri ent mon' tēz). Parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus. The mountain was in labour, etc. See under MOUNTAIN.

Party. Person or persons under consideration. "This is the next party, your worship"—i.e. the next case to be examined. "This is the party that stole the things"—the person or persons accused.

If an evil spirit trouble any, one must make a smoke . . . and the party shall be no more vexed.—Tobit vi, 7.

As a Victorian colloquialism party was synonymous with person, as—"That dull old party in the corner."

Parvenu (par' ve nü) (Fr., arrived). An upstart; one who has risen from the ranks. The word was made popular in France by Marivaux' Paysan Parvenu (1735).

The insolence of the successful parvenu is only the necessary continuance of the career of the needy struggler.—THACKERAY: Pendennis, II, xxi.

Parvis (par' vis) (Paravisus, a Low Latin corruption of paradisus, a church close, especially the court in front of St. Peter's at Rome in the Middle Ages). The "place" or court before the main entrance of a cathedral. In the parvis of St. Paul's lawyers used to meet for consultation, as brokers do in exchange. The word is now applied to the room above the church porch.

A sergeant of lawe, war and wys,
That often hadde ben atté parvys.
CHAUCER: Canterbury Tales.

Parsival. See PERCIVAL.

Pasch. Easter, from the Greek form of the Hebrew Pesach, passover.

Pasch eggs. Easter eggs, given as an emblem of the Resurrection.

Pasha (pāsh' a). A Turkish title borne by governors of provinces and certain military and civil officers of high rank. There were three grades of pashas, which were distinguished by the number of horse-tails carried before them and planted in front of their tents. The highest rank were those of three tails; the grand vizier was always such a pasha, as also were commanding generals and admirals; generals of division, etc., were pashas of two tails; and generals of brigades, rear admirals, and petty provincial governors were pashas of one tail.

Pasht. See BUBASTIS.

Pasiphe (pās' i fē). In Greek legend, a daughter of the Sun and wife of Minos, King of Crete. She was the mother of Ariadne, and also through intercourse with a white bull (given by Poseidon to Minos) of the Minotaur (q.v.).

Pasque Eggs. See PASCH EGGS.

Pasquinade (pās kwin ād'). A lampoon or political squib, having ridicule for its object; so called from Pasquino, an Italian tailor of the 15th century, noted for his caustic wit. Some time after his death, a mutilated statue was dug up, representing Ajax supporting Menelaus, or Menelaus carrying the body of Patroclus, or else a gladiator, and was placed at the end of the Braschi Palace near the Piazza Navona. As it was not clear what the statue represented, and as it stood opposite Pasquino's house, it came to be called "Pasquin." The Romans affixed their political, religious, and personal satires to it, hence the name. At the other end of Rome was an ancient statue of Mars, called Marforio, to which were affixed replies to the Pasquinades.

Then the procession started, took the way
From the New Prisons by the Pilgrim's Street
The street of the Governo, Pasquin's Street, (Where was stuck up, 'mid other epigrams,
A quatrain . . . but of all that, presently!)
BROWNING: The Ring and the Book, xii, 137.

Pass. A pass or A common pass. At the Universities, an ordinary degree, without honours. A candidate getting this is called a passman.

To pass the buck. To evade responsibility. An American phrase, coming from the game of poker. The "buck," perhaps a piece of buckshot or a bucktail, was passed from one player to another as a reminder that the recipient was to be the next dealer. The earliest recorded use of the phrase is by Mark Twain in 1872.

Passing Bell. See BELL.

Passpartout (pas' par too) (Fr., pass everywhere). A master-key; also a simple kind of picture-frame in which the picture is placed between a sheet of cardboard and a piece of glass, the whole being held together by strips of paper pasted over the edges.

Passim (pās' im) (Lat., here and there, in many places). A direction often found in annotated books which tells the reader that reference to the matter in hand will be found in many passages in the book mentioned.

Passion, The. The sufferings of Jesus Christ which had their culmination in His death on the cross.

Passion Flower. A plant of the genus Passiflora, whose flowers bear a fancied resemblance to the instruments of the Passion. Cp. PIKE'S HEAD. It seems to have first got its name in mediæval Spain.

The leaf symbolizes the spear.

The five anthers, the five wounds.

The tendrils, the cords or whips.

The column of the ovary, the pillar of the cross.

The stamens, the hammers.

The three styles, the three nails.

The fleshy threads within the flowers, the crown of thorns.

The calyx, the glory or nimbus.

The white tint, purity.

The blue tint, heaven.

It keeps open three days; symbolizing the three years' ministry.

Passion Play. A development of the mediæval mystery play with especial reference to the story of Our Lord's passion and death. The best known survival of such plays, which were common in France in the 14th century, is the Oberammergau Passion Play which takes place every ten years. In 1633 the Black Death swept over the village of Oberammergau; when it abated the inhabitants vowed to enact the scenes of the Passion every ten years. This has been done at the end of every decade with only one or two failures. Though the cast is still chosen exclusively from inhabitants of the village, the play is no longer the simple expression of piety but has become a highly commercial undertaking, in a special theatre with all the embellishments of costume and properties and an audience drawn thither from all parts of the world.

Passion Sunday. See JUDICA.

Passionists. Members of the Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Passion of Our Lord, founded by St. Paul of the Cross in 1728 at Monte Argentario, an island off the coast of Tuscany, for the purpose of giving retreats and holding missions. The monks wear on the breast of their black cassocks a heart surmounted by a cross and the inscription Jesu Xpi Passio, worked in white.

Passover (pas' ö ver). A Jewish festival to commemorate the deliverance of the Israelites, when the angel of death (that slew the first-born of the Egyptians) passed over their houses, and spared all who did as Moses commanded them. It is held from the 15th to the 22nd of the first month, Nisan, i.e. about April 13th to 20th.

Passport. A safe conduct issued by the authorities of a nation to its citizens, and required to be produced when crossing national frontiers. Passports were in wide use by the 18th century, but by the mid-19th century were almost obsolete. They were re-introduced with the outbreak of World War I in 1914.

Passy-measure Pavin. See PAVAN.

Paston Letters. A series of letters (with wills, leases, and other documents) written by or to members of the Paston family in Norfolk between the years 1440 and 1486. They passed from the Earl of York to Peter le Neve, antiquary; then to Thomas Martin (1697-1771), known as Honest Tom Martin, of Palgrave, Suffolk; and eventually passed to Sir John Fenn, who, in 1787, edited two volumes of them as Original Letters written during the Reigns of Henry VI, Edward IV, and Richard III by various Persons of Rank. In 1872-5 James Gairdner re-edited them in three volumes, and included some 500 additional letters besides a voluminous introduction and notes. The Letters are an invaluable source of information concerning the customs and business methods of the upper middle classes of 15th-century England.

Patch. A fool; so called originally from the nickname of Cardinal Wolsey's jester, Sexton, who got this nickname either from Ital. pazzo, a fool, or from the motley or patched dress worn by licensed fools.

What a pidd ninny's this! thou scurvy patch!
The Tempest, iii, 2.

Cross-patch. An ill-tempered person.

Not a patch upon. Not to be compared with; as, "His horse is not a patch upon mine."

To patch up a quarrel. To arrange the matter in a not very satisfactory way; a coat that has been torn and then "patched up" is pretty sure to break out again; so is a quarrel.

Patent (through Fr. from Lat. patentem, lying open). Open to the perusal of anybody. A thing that is patented is protected by letters patent.

Letters patent. Documents from the sovereign or a crown office conferring a title, right, privilege, etc., such as a title of nobility, or the exclusive right to make or sell for a given number of years some new invention. So called because they are written upon open sheets of parchment, with the seal of the sovereign or party by whom they were issued pendent at the bottom.

Patent Rolls. Letters patent collected together on parchment rolls. They extend from 1210, and each roll contains a year, though in some cases the roll is subdivided into two or more parts. Each sheet of parchment is numbered, and called a membrane; for example, the 8th sheet, say, of the 10th year of Henry III is cited thus: "Pat 10 Hen. III, m. 8." If the document is on the back of the roll it is called dorso, and "d" is added to the citation. Cp. CLOSE ROLLS.

Paternoster (pät' ér nos' tēr) (Lat., Our Father). The Lord's Prayer; from the first two words in the Latin version. Every tenth bead of a rosary is so called, because at that bead the Lord's Prayer is repeated; and the name is also given to a certain kind of fishing tackle, in which hooks and weights to sink them are fixed alternately on the line, somewhat in rosary fashion.

A paternoster-while. Quite a short time; the times it takes one to say a paternoster.

To say the devil's paternoster. See DEVIL.

Paternoster Row (London) was probably so named from the rosary or paternoster makers. There is mention as early as 1374 of a Richard Russell, a "paternosterer," who dwelt there, and we read of "one Robert Nikke, a paternoster maker and citizen," in the reign of Henry IV. Another suggestion is that it was so called because funeral processions on their way to St. Paul's began their pater noster at the beginning of the Row. For over three centuries Paternoster Row was the home of publishers and booksellers. It was totally destroyed in an air raid at the end of December, 1940.

Pathfinder. One of the names of Natty Bumppo (q.v.) in Fenimore Cooper's Leatherstocking Novels (q.v.). It was given to the American Major-General John Charles Fremont (1813-90), who conducted four expeditions across the Rocky Mountains.

Pathfinders. In World War II a R.A.F. term for specially skilled pilots and navigators who flew in first and dropped flares to identify the target for the benefit of the attacking force which followed them.

Patient Grisel. See GRISELDA.

Patmos (pät' mos). The island of the Sporades in the Ægean Sea (now called Patmo or Patino) to which St. John retired—or was exiled (Rev. i, 9). Hence the name is used allusively for a place of banishment or solitude.

Patois (pät' wa). Dialect peculiarity, provincialism in speech. It is a 13th-century French word of unknown origin.

Patres Conscripti. See CONSCRIPT FATHERS.

Patriarch (Gr. patria, family, archein, to rule). The head of a tribe or family who rules by paternal right; applied specially (after Acts vii, 8) to the twelve sons of Jacob, and to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and their forefathers. In one passage (Acts ii, 29) David also is spoken of as a patriarch.

In the early Church "Patriarch," first mentioned in the council of Chalcedon, but virtually existing from about the time of the council of Nice, was the title of the highest of Church officers. He ordained metropolitans, convened councils, received appeals, and was the chief bishop over several countries or provinces, as an archbishop is over several dioceses. It was also the title given by the popes to the archbishops of Lisbon and Venice, in order to make the patriarchal dignity appear distinct from and lower than the papal, and is that of the chief bishop of various Eastern rites, as the Jacobites, Armenians, and Maronites.

In the Orthodox Eastern Church the bishops of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem are patriarchs. Within a religious order the title is given to the founder, as St. Benedict, St. Francis, and St. Dominic.

Patrician. Properly speaking, one of the patres (fathers) or senators of Rome (see PATRES CONSCRIPTI), and their descendants. As they held for many years all the honours of the state, the word came to signify the magnates or nobility of a nation, the aristocrats.

Patrick, St. The apostle and patron saint of Ireland (commemorated on March 17th) was not an Irishman, but was born at what is now Dumbarton (about 373), his father, Calpornius, a deacon and Roman official, having come from "Bannavem Tabernæ," which was probably near the mouth of the Severn. As a boy he was captured in a Pictish raid and sold as a slave in Ireland. He escaped to Gaul about 395, where he studied under St. Martin at Tours before returning to Britain. There he had a supernatural call to preach to the heathen of Ireland, so he was consecrated and in 432 landed at Wicklow. He at first met with strong opposition, but, going north, he converted first the chiefs and people of Ulster, and later those of the rest of Ireland. He founded many churches, including the cathedral and monastery of Armagh, where he held two synods. He is said to have died at Armagh (about 464) and to have been buried either at Down or Saul—though one tradition gives Glastonbury as the place of his death and burial. Downpatrick cathedral claims his supposed grave which is covered with a massive slab of granite, for which Irishmen of every creed subscribed.

St. Patrick left his name to countless places in Great Britain and Ireland, and many legends are told of his miraculous powers—healing the blind, raising the dead, etc. Perhaps the best known tradition is that he cleared Ireland of its vermin.

The story goes that one old serpent resisted him; but he overcame it by cunning. He made a box, and invited the serpent to enter it. The serpent objected, saying it was too small; but St. Patrick insisted it was quite large enough to be comfortable. After a long contention, the serpent got in to prove it was too small, when St. Patrick slammed down the lid, and threw the box into the sea.

In commemoration of this St. Patrick is usually represented banishing the serpents; and with a shamrock leaf, in allusion to the tradition that when explaining the Trinity to the heathen priests on the hill of Tara he used this as a symbol.

St. Patrick's Cross. The same shape as St. Andrew's Cross (X), only different in colour, viz. red on a white field.

St. Patrick's Purgatory. A cave in a small island in Lough Derg (between Galway, Clare, and Tipperary). In the Middle Ages it was a favourite resort of pilgrims who believed that it was the entrance to an earthly purgatory. The legend is that Christ Himself revealed it to St. Patrick and told him that whoever would spend a day and a night therein would witness the torments of hell and the joys of heaven. Henry of Saltrey tells how Sir Owain (q.v.) visited it, and Fortunatus, of the old legend, was also one of the adventurers. It was blocked up by order of the Pope on St. Patrick's Day, 1497, but the interest in it long remained, and the Spanish dramatist Calderon (d. 1681) has a play on the subject—El Furgatorio de San Patricia.

Why should all your chimney-sweepers be Irishmen?

Faith, that's soon answered, for St. Patrick, you know, keeps purgatory; he makes the fire, and his countrymen could do nothing if they cannot sweep the chimneys.—DEKKER: Honest Whore, Pt. II, I, i.

The Order of St. Patrick. A British order of knighthood, instituted by George III in 1783 and revised in 1905, consisting of the Sovereign, the Lord Lieutenant (as Grand Master), and twenty-two knights. Its motto is Quis Separabit? In 1952 the Order consisted of the Sovereign and five knights.

Patriots' Day, in U.S.A. the anniversary of the battle of Lexington, April 19th, 1775, the first battle in the War of Independence. It is a public holiday in Massachusetts and Maine.

Patroclus (pà trok' lüs). The gentle and amiable friend of Achilles, in Homer's Iliad. When Achilles refused to fight in order to annoy Agamemnon, Patroclus appeared in Achilles's armour at the head of the Myrmidons, and was slain by Hector.

Patroon (pà troon'). An old term for a landowner in New Jersey and New York when they belonged to the Dutch. The patroon had certain manorial rights and privileges under a government grant.

Patter. To chatter, to clack, also the running talk of cheap Jacks, conjurers, etc., is from Paternoster (q.v.). When saying Mass the priest recites it in a low, rapid, mechanical way till he comes to the words, "and lead us not into temptation," which he speaks aloud, and the choir responds, "but deliver us from evil." In the Anglican Prayer Book, the priest is directed to say the whole prayer "with a loud voice."

Patter, the patter of feet, of rain, etc., is not connected with the above. It is a frequentative of pat, to strike gently.

Pattern. From the same root as patron (Lat. pater, father). As a patron ought to be an example, so pattern has come to signify a model.

Paul, St. Paul. Patron saint of preachers and tentmakers (see Acts xviii, 3). Originally called Saul, his name, according to tradition, was changed in honour of Sergius Paulus, whom he converted (Acts xiii, 6-12).

His symbols are a sword and open book, the former the instrument of his martyrdom, and the latter indicative of the new law propagated by him as the apostle of the Gentiles. He is represented of short stature, with bald head and grey, bushy beard; and legend relates that when he was beheaded at Rome (A.D. 66), after having converted one of Nero's favourite concubines, milk instead of blood flowed from his veins. He is commemorated on June 29th.

A Paul's man. A braggart; a captain out of service, with a long rapier; so called because the Walk down the centre of old St. Paul's, London, was at one time the haunt of stale knights. These loungers were also known as Paul's Walkers. Jonson called Bobadil (q.v.) a Paul's man, and in his Every Man out of his Humour (1599) is a variety of scenes in the interior of St. Paul's.

Paul's Cross. A pulpit in the open air situated on the north side of old St. Paul's Cathedral, in which, from 1259-1643, eminent divines preached in the presence of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen every Sunday. Upon its site a new pulpit and cross were erected in 1910.

St. Paul the Hermit. The first of the Egyptian hermits. When 113 years old he was visited by St. Antony, himself over 90, and when he died in 341 St. Antony wrapped his body in the cloak given to him by St. Athanasius, and his grave was dug by two lions. His day is Jan. 15th, and he is represented as an old man, clothed with palm-leaves, and seated under a palm-tree, near which are a river and loaf of bread.

Paul Pry. See PRY.

Pavan or Pavin (pa' van). A stately Spanish dance of the 16th and 17th centuries, said to be so called because in it the dancers stalked like peacocks (Lat. pavones), the gentlemen with their long robes of office, and the ladies with trains like peacocks' tails. The pavan, like the minuet, ended with a quick movement called the galliard, a sort of gavotte.

Every pavan has its galliard. Every sage has his moments of folly. Every white must have its black, and every sweet its sour.

Passy-measures pavin. A reeling dance or motion, like that of a drunken man, from side to side. The tupsy Sir Toby Belcher says of "Dick surgeon,"—

He's a rogue and a passy-measures pavin. I hate a drunken rogue.—Twelfth Night, v, 1.

The passy-measure was a slow dance, the Italian passamezzo (a middle pace or step). Also called a cinque measure, because it consisted of five measures—"two singles and a double forward, with two singles side."

Pawnbroker's Sign, The. See BALLS, THE THREE GOLDEN.

Pawnee (paw' nee). Anglo-Indian for water (Hind. pani, water).

Brandy pawnee. Brandy and water.

Pax (pāks) (Lat., peace). The "kiss of peace," which is given at High Mass. It is omitted on Maundy Thursday.

Also a sacred utensil used when mass is celebrated by a high dignitary. It is sometimes a crucifix, sometimes a tablet, and sometimes a reliquary, and is handed round to be kissed as a symbolic substitute for the "kiss of peace."

The old custom of "kissing the bride," which took place immediately before the Communion of the newly married couple and still obtains in some churches, is derived from the Salisbury rubric concerning the Pax in the Missa Sponsalium:—

Tunc amoto pallio, surgant ambo sponsus et sponsa; et accipiat sponsus pacem a sacerdote, et ferat sponsa osculans eam et neminem alium, nec ipse, nec ipsa; sed statim diaconus vel clericus a presbytero pacem accipiens, ferat aliis sicut solum est.

Pax! The schoolboy's cry of truce.

Pax Britannica. The peace imposed by British rule. The phrase is modelled on the Latin Pax Romana, the peace existing between the different members of the Roman empire.

Pax vobis (cum) (Peace be unto you). The formula used by a bishop instead of "The Lord be with you," wherever this versicle occurs in Divine service. They are the words used by Christ to His Apostles on the first Easter morning.

Pay, to discharge a debt, is through O.Fr. paier, from the Latin. pax, peace, by way of pacare, to appease. The nautical pay, to cover with hot tar for waterproofing, represents Lat. picare, from pix, pitch.

Here's the devil to pay, and no pitch hot. See DEVIL.

I'll pay him out. I'll be a match for him, I'll punish him.

They with a foxe-tale him soundly did paye.
The King and Northern Man (1640).

To pay out a rope is to let it out gradually by slackening it.

To pay off old scores. See SCORE.

To pay with the roll of the drum. Not to pay at all. No soldier can be arrested for debt when on the march.

How happy the soldier who lives on his pay,
And spends half-a-crown out of sixpence a day;
He cares not for justices, beades, or bum,
But pays all his debts with the roll of the drum.
O'KEEFE.

Who's to pay the piper? Who is to pay the score? The phrase may come from the story of the Pied Piper (q.v.), who agreed to rid Hamelin city of rats and mice, and when he had done so was refused his pay. An older and more probable derivation goes back to the piper who used to amuse guests at inns or on the green, and expected his payment for the entertainment.

You can put paid to that. You can treat it as finished, it's all over, done with. A phrase from the counting-house; when "Paid" is put to an account it is finished with.

Pay dirt. A mining term for ground which pays for working.

P.A.Y.E. The initials of Pay As You Earn, a system of collecting Income Tax from weekly earnings, introduced in Britain in 1944. The employer is furnished with a guiding table in accordance with which the proper tax is deducted before wages or salary are paid, and he is responsible to the Income Tax authorities for the sum thus collected.

Paynim (pā' nim), from the O.Fr. paienime, Lat. paganismus, a heathen, was the recognized chivalric term for a Moslem.

Peabody Buildings or Dwellings. In 1843 George Peabody (1795-1869), a successful American dealer in dry goods, set up in London as a banker and merchant. He amassed a fortune and founded in London the Peabody Dwellings for workmen and their families. These were a great boon to the overcrowded slum-dwellers who in the accommodation thus offered them found an opportunity of retaining their self-respect and bringing up a family in comparative comfort and decent surroundings.

Peace. A Bill of Peace. A Bill intended to secure relief from perpetual litigation. It is brought by one who wishes to establish and perpetuate a right which he claims, but which, from its nature, is controversial.

Peace Ballot. On June 27th, 1935, the League of Nations Union took a national ballot in Britain on certain questions regarding peace and disarmament. 11,640,066 votes were recorded in favour of adherence to the League of Nations, and over ten million voted for a reduction of armaments. The ballot was interpreted by the Axis powers as a sign of weakness indicating the unwillingness of the British people to go to war in any circumstances and this strengthened the determination of Hitler to stand out for his territorial and other demands.

If you want peace, prepare for war. A translation of the Latin proverb, Si vis pacem, para bellum. It goes a step farther than the advice given by Polonius to his son (Hamlet, I, iii), for you are told, whether you are "in a quarrel" or not, always to bear yourself so that all possible opposers "may beware of thee."

Peace at any price. Lord Palmerston sneered at the Quaker statesman, John Bright, as a "peace-at-any-price man." Cp. CONCHY.

Though not a "peace-at-any-price" man, I am not ashamed to say I am a peace-at-almost-any-price man. —LORD AVEBURY: The Use of Life, xi (1849).

Peace with honour. A phrase popularized by Lord Beaconsfield on his return from the Congress of Berlin (1878), when he said:—

Lord Salisbury and myself have brought you back peace—but a peace I hope with honour, which may satisfy our Sovereign and tend to the welfare of the country.

It is, of course, much older than this. Shakespeare uses it more than once, e.g.:—

We have made peace
With no less honour to the Antians
Than shame to the Romans.

Coriolanus, v, 5.

And Pepys writes in his Diary on May 25th, 1663:—

With peace and honour I am willing to spare anything so as to keep all ends together.

Peace in our time. Phrase used by Neville Chamberlain, Prime Minister, on his return from Munich on September 30th, 1938, when he imagined that by giving way to Hitler he had averted war.

The King's peace. The general peace of law-abiding subjects; originally the protection secured by the king to those employed on his business.

To kill an alien, a Jew, or an outlaw, who are all under the king's peace or protection, is as much murder as to kill the most regular born Englishmen.—Blackstone's Commentaries, IV, xiv.

The kiss of peace. See PAX.

The Perpetual Peace. The peace concluded June 24th, 1502, between England and Scotland, whereby Margaret, daughter of Henry VII, was betrothed to James IV; a few years afterwards the battle of Flodden Field was fought. The name has also been given to other treaties, as that between Austria and Switzerland in 1474, and between France and Switzerland in 1516.

To keep the peace. To refrain from disturbing the public peace or doing anything that might result in strife or commotion. Wrongdoers are sometimes bound over to keep the peace for a certain time by a magistrate; a specified sum of money is deposited, and if the man commits a breach of the peace during that time he is not only arrested but his deposit is forfeit.

Peach. To inform, to "split"; a contraction of impeach. The word is one of those that has degenerated to slang after being in perfectly good use.

Peacock. By the peacock! An obsolete oath which at one time was thought blasphemous. The fabled incorruptibility of the peacock's flesh caused the bird to be adopted as a type of the resurrection.

There is a story that when George III had partly recovered from one of his attacks of insanity his Ministers got him to read the King's Speech, and he ended every sentence with the word peacock. The Minister who drilled him said that peacock was an excellent word for ending a sentence, only kings should not let subjects hear it, but should whisper it softly. The result was a perfect success, and the pause at the close of each sentence had an excellent effect.

The peacock's feather. An emblem of vanity, glory, and in some Eastern countries a mark of rank.

As a literary term the expression is used of a borrowed ornament of style spatchcocked into the composition; the allusion being to the fable of the jay who decked herself out in peacock's feathers, making herself an object of ridicule.

The peacock's tail is an emblem of an Evil Eye, or an ever-vigilant traitor; hence the feathers are considered unlucky, and the superstitious will not have them in the house. The classical legend is that Argus (see ARGUS-EYED), who had 100 eyes, was changed into a peacock by Juno, the eyes forming the beautifully coloured disks in the tail.

Pea-jacket. A rough overcoat worn by seamen, etc.; probably from the Dutch pig or pye, a coarse thick cloth or felt. The "courtpey," the short (Fr. court) jacket worn by Chaucer's "Clerk of Oxenford," is from the same word:—

Ful thredbare was his overest courtpey,
For he had gotten him yet no beneficey.
Canterbury Tales: Prologue, 290.

Peal. To ring a peal is to ring 5,040 changes on a set of 8 bells; any number of changes less than that is technically called a touch or flourish. Bells are first raised, and then pealed.

This society rung . . . a true and complete peal of 5,040 grandsire triples in three hours and fourteen minutes.—Inscription in Windsor Curfew Tower.

Pearls. Dioscorides and Pliny mention the belief that pearls are formed by drops of rain falling into the oyster-shells while open; the raindrops thus received being hardened into pearls by some secretions of the animal.

Cardan says (De Rerum Varietate, vii, 34) that pearls are polished by being pecked and played with by doves.

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed
Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl.

Richard III, iv, 4.

Pearls . . . are believed to be the result of an abnormal secretory process caused by an irritation of the mollusk consequent on the intrusion into the shell of some foreign body, as a grain of sand, an egg of the mollusk itself, or perhaps some cercarian parasite.—G. F. KING: Gems, etc., ch. xii.

Cleopatra (q.v.) and Sir Thomas Gresham are said to have dissolved pearls in wine by way of making an ostentatious display of wealth, and a similar act of vanity and folly is told by Horace (2 Satire, iii, 239). Clodius, son of Æsop the tragedian, drew a pearl of great value from his ear, melted it in vinegar, and drank to the health of Cecilia Metella. This story is referred to by Valerius Maximus, Macrobius, and Pliny. Horace says,

Qui sanior, ac si

Illud idem in rapidum flumen jaceret cloacam?

How say you? had the act been more insane

To fling it in a river or a drain?

CONINGTON'S tr.

The Pearl Coast. So the early Spanish explorers named the Venezuelan coast from Cumana to Trinidad; the islands off this coast were called the Pearl Islands. This district was the site of large pearl-fisheries.

Peasants' War, The. The name given to the insurrections of the peasantry of southern Germany in the early 16th century, especially to that of 1524 in Swabia, Franconia, Saxony, and other German states, in consequence of the tyranny and oppression of the nobles, which was ended by the battle of Frankenhäusen (1525), when many thousands of the peasants were slain. In 1502 was the rebellion called the Laced Shoe, from its cognizance; in 1514, the League of Poor Conrad; in 1523, the Latin War.

Peascod. Winter for shoeing, peascod for wooing. The allusion in the latter clause is to the custom of placing a peascod with nine peas in it on the door-lintel, under the notion that the first man who entered through the door would be the husband of the person who did so. Another custom is alluded to by Browne—

The peascod greene oft with no little toyle
Hee'd seeke for in the fattest, ferti'st soile,
And rend it from the stalke to bring it to her
And in her bosome for acceptance woo her.

Britanna's Pastoral.

Pec. Old Eton slang for money. A contraction of the Latin pecunia.

Peccavi (pe ká' vī). To cry peccavi. To acknowledge oneself in the wrong. It is said that Sir Charles Napier, after the battle of Hyderabad, in 1843, sent a preliminary despatch with the single word "Peccavi" (I have sinned, i.e. Sinde).

Peckish. Hungry, or desirous of something to eat. Of course "peck" refers to fowls, etc., which peck their food.

When shall I feel peckish again.—DISRAELI: Sybil, Bk. vi, ch. iii.

Pecker. Keep your pecker up. As the mouth is in the head, pecker (the mouth) means the head; and to "keep your pecker up," means to keep your head up, or, more familiarly, "keep your chin up"; "never say die."

Peckham. All holiday at Peckham—i.e. no appetite, not peckish; a pun on the word peck, as going to Bedfordshire is a pun on the word bed.

Going to Peckham. Going to dinner.

Pecksniff. A canting hypocrite, who speaks homilies of morality, does the most heartless things "as a duty to society," and forgives wrongdoing in nobody but himself. (Dickens: Martin Chuzzlewit.)

Pecos Bill (pe' kos). A cowboy of American legend who performed superhuman prodigies on the frontier in early days. One of his feats was to dig the Rio Grande river.

Pectoral Cross. See CRUX PECTORALIS.

Peculiar. A parish or church which was exempt from episcopal jurisdiction, as a royal chapel, etc. Peculiars were abolished in 1849.

The Court of Peculiars. A branch of the Court of Arches which had jurisdiction over the "peculiars" of the archbishop of Canterbury. See above.

The Peculiar People. Properly, the Jews—the "Chosen people"; but taken as a title by a sect founded in 1838, the chief characteristic of which is that its members refuse all medical aid and, as a consequence, are frequently in conflict with the authorities. They have a strong belief in the efficacy of prayer; subscribe to no creed and have no recognized preachers or clergy. The name is based on Titus ii, 14—"to purify unto himself a peculiar people."

Pecuniary. From pecus, cattle, especially sheep. Varo says that sheep were the ancient medium of barter and standard of value. Ancient coin was marked with the image of an ox or sheep.

Pedagogue (Gr. pais, boy, agein, to lead). A "boy-leader," hence, a schoolmaster—now usually one who is pompous and pedantic. In ancient Greece the pedagogos was a slave whose duty it was to attend his master's son whenever he left home.

Pedlar is not a tramp who goes on his feet, as if from the Lat. pedes, feet. The name is probably from the ped, a hamper without a lid in which are stored fish or other articles to hawk about the streets. In Norwich there is a place called the Ped-market, where women used to expose eggs, butter, cheese, etc., in open hampers.

Pedlar's Acre. According to tradition, a pedlar of Lambeth parish left a sum of money, on condition that his picture, with a dog, should be preserved for ever in glass in one of the church windows. In the south window of the middle aisle, sure enough, such a picture exists; but probably it is a rebus on Chapman, the name of some benefactor. In Swaffham church there is a portrait of one John Chapman, a great benefactor, who is represented as a pedlar with his pack, and in that town a similar tradition exists.

Pedlars' French. The jargon or cant of thieves, rogues, and vagabonds. "French" was formerly widely used to denote anything or anyone that was foreign, and even Bracton uses the word "Frenchman" as a synonym of foreigner.

Instead of Pedlars' French, gives him plain language.—BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER: Faithful Friends, i, 2.

Peeler. Slang for a policeman; first applied to the Irish Constabulary founded when Sir Robert Peel was Chief Secretary (1812-18), and afterwards, when Peel as Home Secretary introduced the Metropolitan Police Act (1829), to the English policeman. Cp. BOBBY. In the 16th century the word was applied to robbers, from peel (later pill), to plunder, strip of possessions, rob. Holinshed, in his Scottish Chronicle (1570), refers to Patrick Dunbar, who "delivered the countrie of these peelers." Cp. also Milton's Paradise Regained, iv. 136:—

That people . . . who, once just,
Frugal, and mild, and temperate, conquered well
But govern ill the rations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
By lust and rapine.

Peelites was the name given to the Conservative adherents of Sir Robert Peel when he introduced a Bill for the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846.

Peep-o'-Day Boys. The Irish Protestant faction in Ulster of about 1786; they were precursors of the Orangemen (q.v.), and were active from the period mentioned; so called because they used to visit the houses of their Roman Catholic opponents (called Defenders) at "peep of day" searching for arms or plunder.

• Peeping Tom of Coventry. See GODIVA, LADY.

Peers of the Realm. The five orders of Duke, Marquess, Earl, Viscount, and Baron (see these names). The word peer is the Latin pares (equals), and in feudal times all great vassals were held equal in rank.

The Twelve Peers of Charlemagne. See PALADINS.

Peg. A square peg in a round hole. One who is doing (or trying to do) a job for which he is not suited; e.g. a bishop refereeing a prize-fight.

I am a peg too low. I am low-spirited, moody; I want another draught to cheer me up. Our Saxon ancestors used tankards with pegs inserted at equal intervals, so that when two or more drank from the same bowl no one might exceed his fair proportion (cp. PIN—In merry pin). We are told that St. Dunstan introduced the fashion to prevent brawling.

Come, old fellow, drink down to your peg!

But do not drink any farther, I beg.

LONGFELLOW: Golden Legend, iv.

To peg away at it. To stick at it persistently, in spite of difficulties and discouragement.

To take one down a peg. To take the conceit out of a braggart or pretentious person. The allusion here is not to peg-tankards, but to a ship's colours, which used to be raised and lowered by pegs; the higher the colours are raised the greater the honour, and to take them down a peg would be to award less honour.

Trepanned your party with intrigue,
And took your grantees down a peg.

BUTLER: Hudibras, ii. 2.

Well, he has come down a peg or two, and he don't like it.—HAGGARD.

Pegasus (peg' à sus). The winged horse on which Bellerophon (q.v.) rode against the Chimæra. When the Muses contended with the daughters of Pieros, Helicon rose heavenward with delight; but Pegasus gave it a kick, stopped its ascent, and brought out of the mountain the soul-inspiring waters of Hippocrene; hence, the name is used for the inspiration of poetry.

Then who so will with vertuous deeds assay
To mount to heaven, on Pegasus must ride,
And with sweete Poets verse be glorified.

SPENSER: Ruines of Time, 425.

Now, if my Pegasus should not be shod ill,
This poem will become a moral model.

BYRON: Don Juan, V, ii.

In World War II the horse, with Bellerophon on his back, in pale blue on a maroon ground, was adopted as the insignia of all British Airborne troops.

Peine forte et dure (pân fort â dūr). A species of torture applied to contumacious felons who refused to plead; it usually took the form of pressing the accused to death by weights. The following persons were executed in this way:—Juliana Quick, in 1442; Anthony Arrowsmith, in 1598; Walter Calverly, 1605; Major Strangways, in 1657; and even in 1741 a person was condemned to this death at the Cambridge assizes. Abolished 1772.

Peking Man, The (Sinanthropos pekinensis), is the name given to a suppositional primitive man, based on remains found in caves near Peking in 1927. Bones of some forty individuals were found, showing considerable resemblance to the Pithecanthropos or ape man supposed to have been in some way connected with primitive man, Homo sapiens. The date of Peking man is about 1,000,000 years ago, but whether he was an ancestor of the human race is still a matter of conjecture and dispute among anthropologists.

Pelagians (pe lâ jânz). Heretical followers of the British monk Pelagius (a Latinized form of his native Welsh name, Morgan, the sea), who in the 4th and early 5th centuries was fiercely opposed by St. Augustine, and was condemned by Pope Zosimus in 418. They denied the doctrine of original sin or the taint of Adam, and maintained that we have power of ourselves to receive or reject the Gospel.

Pelf. Filthy pelf. Money; usually with a contemptuous implication—as we speak of “filthy lucre,” or “Who steals my purse steals trash.”

How blest the maid . . .

Who knows not pomp, who heeds not pelf;

Whose heaviest sin it is to look

Askance upon her pretty Self

Reflected in some crystal brook.

WORDSWORTH: The Three Cottage Girls.

The word is from O.Fr. pelfre, connected with our pilfer, and was originally used of stolen or pilfered goods, ill-gotten gains.

Pelican (pel' i kán). In Christian art, a symbol of charity; also an emblem of Jesus Christ, by “whose blood we are healed.” St. Jerome gives the story of the pelican restoring its young ones destroyed by serpents, and his own salvation by the blood of Christ; and the popular fallacy that pelicans fed their young with their blood arose from the fact that when the parent bird is about to feed its brood, it macerates small fish in the large bag attached to its under bill, then pressing the bag against its breast, transfers the macerated food to the mouths of the young. The correct term for the heraldic representation of the bird in this act is a pelican in her piety, piety having the classical meaning of filial devotion.

The mediæval Bestiary tells us that the pelican is very fond of its brood, but when the young ones begin to grow they rebel against the male bird and provoke his anger, so that he kills them; the mother returns to the nest in three days, sits on the dead birds, pours her blood over them, revives them, and they feed on the blood.

Than sayd the Pellicane,
When my byrdis be slayne
With my bloude I them reuyue [revive]
Scripture doth record,
The same dyd our Lord,
And rose from deth to lyue.

SKELTON: Armoury of Birdis.

The Pelican State. Louisiana, U.S.A., which has a pelican in its device.

Pelion (pě' li on). Heaping Pelion upon Ossa. Adding difficulty to difficulty, embarrassment to embarrassment, etc. When the giants tried to scale heaven, they placed Mount Pelion upon Mount Ossa, two peaks in Thessaly, for a scaling ladder (Odyssey, xi, 315).

I would have you call to mind the strength of the ancient giants, that undertook to lay the high mountain Pelion on the top of Ossa, and set among those the shady Olympus.—Rabelais: IV, xxxviii.

Pell-mell. Headlong; in reckless confusion. From the players of pall-mall (q.v.), who rushed heedlessly to strike the ball.

Pelleas, Sir (pel' ē äs). One of the Knights of the Round Table, famed for his great strength. He is introduced into the Faerie Queen (VI, xii) as going after the “blatant beast” when it breaks the chain with which it had been bound by Sir Calidore. See also Tennyson's Pelleas and Ettarre.

Pells. Clerk of the Pells. An officer of the Exchequer, whose duty it was to make entries on the pells or parchment rolls. Abolished in 1834.

Pelmanism. A system of mind and memory training originated by W. J. Ennever in the closing years of last century, and so called because it was an easy name to remember. Owing to its very extensive advertising, the verb to pelmanize, meaning to obtain good results by training the memory, was coined.

Pelops (pel' ops). Son of Tantalus, and father of Atreus and Thyestes. He was king of Pisa in Elis, and was cut to pieces and served as food to the gods. The Morea was called Peloponnesus, the “island of Pelops,” from this mythical king.

The ivory shoulder of Pelops. The distinguishing or distinctive mark of anyone. The tale is that Demeter ate the shoulder of Pelops when it was served up by Tantalus; when the gods put the body back into the cauldron to restore it to life, this portion was lacking, whereupon Demeter supplied one of ivory.

Not Pelops' shoulder whiter than her hands.

W. BROWNE: Britannia's Pastorals, ii, 3.

P.E.N. The initials of an international association of poets, playwrights, editors, essayists, and novelists. Its principal activity is the organization of annual reunions of literary and artistic men and women in one or other of the European countries.

Pen. An interesting word etymologically, for it is the Latin penna, a feather, both of which words are derived from the Sanskrit root pet-, to fly. Pet- gave Sansk. parra (feather); this became in Lat. penna (Eng. pen), and in O. Teut. fethro (Ger. feder, Dut. veder, Eng. feather). Also, in O.Fr. penne meant both feather and pen, but in Mod.Fr. it is restricted to the long wing- and tail-feathers and to heraldic plumes on crests, while pen is plume. Thus, the French and English usage has been vice versa, English using plume in heraldry, French using penne, the English writing implement being named pen, and the French plume.

Pen-name. A pseudonym. See NOM DE GUERRE.

Penates. See DII PENATES.

Pencil. Originally, a painter's brush, and still used of very fine paint-brushes, from Lat. penicillum, a paint-brush, diminutive of peniculus, a brush, which itself is a diminutive of penis, a tail. When the modern pencil came into use in the early 17th century it was known as a dry pencil or a pencil with black lead.

Knight of the pencil. A bookmaker; a reporter; also anyone who makes his living by scribbling.

Pencil of rays. All the rays that issue from one point or can be formed at one point; so called because a representation of them has the appearance of a pointed pencil.

Pendente lite (penden' ti lí' te) (Lat.). Pending the trial; while the suit is going on.

Pendragon (pen drág' ón). A title conferred on several British chiefs in times of great danger, when they were invested with supreme power, especially (in the Arthurian legends) to Uther Pendragon, father of King Arthur. The word is Welsh pen, head, and dragon (the reference being to the war-chief's dragon standard); and it corresponded to the Roman dux bellorum.

A legend recorded by Geoffrey of Monmouth relates that when Aurelius, the British king, was poisoned by Ambron, during the invasion of Pascentius, son of Vortigern, there "appeared a star at Winchester of wonderful magnitude and brightness, darting forth a ray, at the end of which was a globe of fire in form of a dragon, out of whose mouth issued forth two rays, one of which extended to Gaul and the other to Ireland." Uther ordered two golden dragons to be made, one of which he presented to Winchester, and the other he carried with him as his royal standard, whence he received the title "Pendragon."

Penelope (pè nel' ò pi). The wife of Ulysses and mother of Telemachus in Homeric legend. She was a model of all the domestic virtues.

The Web of Penelope. A work "never ending, still beginning"; never done, but ever in hand. Penelope, according to Homer, was pestered by suitors at Ithaca while Ulysses was absent at the siege of Troy. To relieve herself of their importunities, she promised to make a choice of one as soon as she had finished weaving a shroud for her father-in-law. Every night she unravelled what she had done in the day, and so deferred making any choice until Ulysses returned and slew the suitors.

Penetralia (pen e trā' li à) (Lat., the innermost parts). The private rooms of a house; the secrets of a family. Properly, the part of a Roman temple to which the priest alone had access, where the sacred images were housed, the responses of the oracles made, and the sacred mysteries performed. The Holy of Holies was the penetralia of the Jewish Temple.

Peninsular War. The war carried on, under the Duke of Wellington, against the French in Portugal and Spain, between 1808 and 1814. It was brought about through the French attack on Spain and Portugal, and so far as Britain was concerned, was the most important of the Napoleonic Wars. It resulted in the French being driven from the Peninsula.

Penitential Psalms. The seven psalms expressive of contrition—viz. the vi, xxxii, xxxviii, li, cii, cxxx, cxlii. From time immemorial they have all been used at the Ash Wednesday services; the first three at Matins, the 51st at the Communion, and the last three at Evensong.

Pennant, Pennon. The former—the long narrow streamer borne at the masthead of warships—is the nautical form of the latter, which was the name of the small pointed or swallow-tailed flag formerly borne on knights' spears, and still carried by lancer regiments on their lances and as their ensign. Pennon is from Lat. penna, a feather (see FEN), and pennant was formed on it through a confusion with pendant (Lat. pendere, to hang), because it hangs from the masthead. It is sometimes, but erroneously, taken as representing the "whip" with which, according to the popular story, the English admiral was to defeat Van Tromp when he hoisted a broom to signify his intention of sweeping the ships of England off the seas.

Pennsylvania Dutch is the name given to the descendants of the settlers from South-west Germany who took up their abode in Pennsylvania in the mid-18th century. A German dialect is still spoken by them in East Pennsylvania.

Penny (A.S. pening). The English bronze coin worth one-twelfth of a shilling—often called a copper, because from 1797 to 1860 pennies were made of copper. From Anglo-Saxon times till the reign of Charles II pennies were of silver, and between that time and 1797 none were coined, though copper halfpence and farthings were. Silver pennies are still coined, but only in very small quantities and solely for use as Maundy Money (q.v.). The weight of a new penny is one-third of an ounce avoirdupois, and it is legal tender up to twelve pence.

The plural pennies is used of the number of coins, and pence of value; and the word is sometimes used to denote coins of low value of other nations, such as in Luke xx, 24, where it stands for the Roman denarius.

A pretty penny. A considerable sum of money, an unpleasantly large sum.

A penny for your thoughts! Tell me what you are thinking about. Addressed humorously to one in a "brown study." The phrase occurs in Heywood's Proverbs (1546).

A penny saved is a penny earned (or gained, etc.). An old adage intended to encourage thrift in the young.

He has got his pennyworth. He has got good value for his money; sometimes said of one who has received a good drubbing.

In for a penny, in for a pound. Another way of saying "having put your hand to the plough." Once a thing has been started it must be carried through, no matter what difficulties arise or what obstacles have to be overcome—one is in it and there can be no drawing back.

My penny of observation (Love's Labour's Lost, iii, 1). My pennyworth of wit; my natural observation or mother-wit. Perhaps there is some pun on penny and penetration.

No penny, no paternoster. No pay, no work; you'll get nothing for nothing. The allusion is to pre-Reformation days, when priests would not perform services without payment.

Penny a liner. The old name for a contributor to the newspapers who was not on the staff and used to be paid a penny a line. As it was to his interest to "pad" as much as possible the word is still used in a contemptuous way for a second-rate writer or newspaper hack.

Penny-dreadful, or -horrible. A cheap boys' paper, full of crude situations and highly coloured excitement. "Shilling shocker" is a name for a similar article of higher price, but no higher literary value.

A penny-father. A miser, a penurious person, who "husbands" his pence.

To nothing fitter can I thee compare

Than to the son of some rich penny-father,

Who having now brought on his end with care,

Leaves to his son all he had heap'd together.

DRAYTON: Idea, X, i.

Penny farthing. The nickname of what was also called the "ordinary" bicycle that came into vogue in 1872. The front wheel was much larger than the back wheel, sometimes being as much as 5 ft. in diameter while the rear was only 12 in. The drive was directly on the front wheel, the seat being above it and set only slightly back from the perpendicular of its axle. The penny farthing lasted until the late 80s, but the Safety, which was introduced in 1885 and was much on the lines of the bicycle now built, ousted it from ordinary use.

Penny fish. A name given to the John Dory (q.v.) because of the round spots on each side left by St. Peter's fingers.

Penny gaff. A concert or crude music-hall entertainment for which the entrance charge is one penny. See GAFF.

Penny-leaf. A country name for the navel-wort or wall pennywort (Cotyledon umbilicus), from its round leaves.

Penny-pies. A name given to the above and also to the moneywort (Sibthorpia europæa).

Penny Plain, Twopence Coloured. A phrase originating in the shop of a maker of toy theatres in East London. The scenery and characters for the plays to be acted on these theatres were printed on sheets of thick paper ready to be cut out, the sheets being sold at 1d. if plain but 2d. each if coloured.

Penny readings. Parochial entertainments, consisting of readings, music, etc., for which one penny admission is charged.

Penny weddings. Weddings formerly in vogue among the poor in Scotland and Wales at which each of the guests paid a small sum of money not exceeding a shilling. After defraying the expenses of the feast, the residue went to the newly married pair, to aid in furnishing their house.

Vera true, vera true. We'll have a' to pay . . . a sort of penny-wedding it will prove, where all men contribute to the young folk's maintenance.—SCOTT: Fortunes of Nigel, ch. xxv.

Penny wise and pound foolish. Said of one who is in danger of "spoiling the ship for a ha'porth of tar," like the man who lost his horse from his penny wisdom in saving the expense of shoeing it afresh when one of its shoes was loose; hence, one who is thrifty in small matters and careless over large ones is said to be penny wise.

Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves. An excellent piece of advice, which Chesterfield records in his Letters to his son (Feb. 5th, 1750) as having been given by "old Mr. Lowndes, the famous Secretary of the Treasury, in the reigns of King William, Queen Anne, and George I." Chesterfield adds—

To this maxim, which he not only preached, but practised, his two grandsons, at this time, owe the very considerable fortunes that he left them.

The saying was parodied in the Advice to a Poet, which goes "Take care of the sense and the sounds will take care of themselves."

To turn an honest penny. To earn a little money by working for it.

Pennyyroyal. The name of this herb (Mentha pulegium), a species of mint, is not connected with the coin, but is a corruption of pulyole ryale, from the Latin pulegium, thyme (so called from pulex, a flea, because it was supposed to be harmful to fleas), and Anglo-French réal, royal. The French call the herb pouliot, from pou, a louse.

Pennyweight. 24 grains, i.e. one-two-hundred-and-fortieth of a pound troy; so called because it was formerly the same proportion of the old "Tower pound" (i.e. 22½ grains), which was the exact weight of a new silver penny.

Pension. Etymologically, that which is weighed out (Lat. pensionem, payment, from pendere, to weigh, also to pay, because payment was originally weighed out. Cp. our pound, both a weight and a piece of money).

Pension, a boarding-house (to live en pension, i.e. as a boarder), though now pronounced and treated as though French, was, in the 17th century, ordinary English; this use arose because pension was the term for any regular payment made for services rendered, such as payment for board and lodging.

Pensioner. The counterpart at Cambridge of the Oxford commoner, i.e. an undergraduate who pays for his own commons, etc., and is neither a sizar nor on the foundation of a college.

At the Inns of Court the pensioner is the officer who collects the periodical payments made by the members for the upkeep of the Inn.

Gentlemen Pensioners. The old name for the members of the Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-arms (q.v.).

The Pensioner (or Pensionary) Parliament. That from May 8th, 1661, to Jan. 24th, 1679; convened by Charles II, and so called because of the many pensions it granted to adherents of the king.

Pentacle (pen' ták'l). A five-pointed star, or five-sided figure, used in sorcery as a talisman against witches, etc., and sometimes worn as a folded headress of fine linen, as a defence against demons in the act of conjuration. It is also called the Wizard's Foot, and Solomon's Seal (signum Salamonis), and is supposed to typify the five senses, though, as it resolves itself into three triangles, its efficacy may spring from its being a triple symbol of the Trinity.

And on her head, lest spirits should invade,
A pentacle, for more assurance, laid.

Rose: Orlando Furioso, iii. 21.

The Holy Pentacles numbered forty-four, of which seven were consecrated to each of the planets Saturn Jupiter, Mars, and the Sun; five to both Venus and Mercury; and six to the Moon. The divers figures were enclosed in a double circle, containing the name of God in Hebrew, and other mystical words.

Pentagon (pen' tã gon). A vast five-sided building erected in Washington, D.C., to house government officials. It is said to be so great that newcomers who leave their offices never find them again.

Pentameron (pen tãm' er on). A collection of stories written in the Neapolitan dialect in 1672 by Giovanni Battista Basile. It is modelled on the Decameron but consists of five days of ten stories each and was based on—in some instances was the foundation of—French fairy tales.

The Pentameron (1837) of Walter Savage Landor (1775-1864) was a collection of five long imaginary conversations.

Pentameter (pen tām' e tēr). In prosody, a line of five feet, dactyls or spondees divided by a cæsura into two parts of two and a half feet each—the line used in alternation with the hexameter (q.v.) in Latin elegiac verse. The name is sometimes wrongly applied to the English five-foot iambic line.

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column,
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

COLERIDGE: Example of Elegiac metre.

Pentateuch (pen' ta tük). The first five books of the Old Testament, anciently attributed to Moses. (Gr. penta, five, teuchos, a tool, book.)

The Samaritan Pentateuch. The Hebrew text as preserved by the Samaritans; it is said to date from 400 B.C.

Pentathlon (pen tǎth' lôn). An athletic contest of five events, usually the running broad jump, javelin throw, 200-metre race, discus throw, and 1,500-metre flat race.

Pentecost (pen' te kost) (Gr. pentecoste, fiftieth). The festival held by the Jews on the fiftieth day after the second day of the Passover; our Whit Sunday, which commemorates the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles on the Day of Pentecost (Acts ii).

Penthesilea (pen the sil' ē'a). Queen of the Amazons who, in the post-Homeric legends, fought for Troy; she was slain by Achilles. Hence, any strong, commanding woman; Sir Toby Belch, in Twelfth Night (ii, 3), calls Maria by this name.

Pent-house. Originally any smaller building with a sloping roof erected against the wall of a house, the word has now become associated chiefly with the dwelling houses built on the roofs of skyscrapers, etc., above the main roof line, but recessed behind the main wall line.

Peony (pē' ō nī). So called, according to fable, from Pæon, the physician who cured the wounds received by the gods in the Trojan war. The seeds were, at one time, worn round the neck as a charm against the powers of darkness.

About an Infant's neck hang Peonie,
It cures Aleydes cruell Maladie.
Sylvester's Du Bartas, I, iii 712.

People. People of God. See SHAKERS.

Peoples' Charter. See CHARTISM.

Pepper. To pepper one well. To give one a good basting or thrashing.

To take pepper i' the nose. To take offence. The French have a similar locution, La moutarde lui monte au nez.

Take you pepper in the nose, you mar our sport.—MIDDLETON: The Spanish Gypsy, IV, lii.

When your daughter is stolen close Pepper Gate. Pepper Gate used to be on the east side of the city of Chester. It is said that the daughter of the mayor eloped, and the mayor ordered the gate to be closed up. "Lock the stable-door when the steed is stolen."

Pepper-and-salt. A light grey colour, especially applied to cloth for dresses.

Peppercorn Rent. A nominal rent. A peppercorn is of no appreciable value, and given as rent is a simple acknowledgment that the tenement virtually belongs to the person by whom the peppercorn is given, though the freehold belongs to him who receives it.

Cowper makes a figurative use of the custom—

True. While they live, the courtly laureate pays
His quit-rent ode, his pepper-corn of praise.
Table-talk, 110.

Pepperpot. A stew of tripe, dumplings, and vegetables, originating in Philadelphia.

Per contra (pēr kon' tra) (Lat.). A commercial term for on the opposite side of the account. Used also of arguments, etc. Per saltum (Lat., by a leap). A promotion or degree given without going over the ground usually prescribed. Thus, a clergyman on being made a bishop may have the degree of D.D. given him per saltum—i.e. without taking the B.D. degree, and waiting the usual period.

Perceforest (pērs' for est). An early 14th-century French prose romance (said to be the longest in existence), belonging to the Arthurian cycle, but mingling with it the Alexander romance. After Alexander's war in India he comes to England, of which he makes Perceforest, one of his knights, king. The romance tells how Perceforest establishes the Knights of the Franc Palais, how his grandson brings the Grail to England, and includes many popular tales, such as that of the Sleeping Beauty.

Percival, Sir (pēr' si vāl). The Knight of the Round Table who, according to Malory's Morte d'Arthur (and Tennyson's Idylls of the King), finally won a sight of the Holy Grail (q.v.). He was the son of Sir Pellinore and brother of Sir Lamerocke, but in the earlier French romances—based probably on the Welsh Mabinogion and other Celtic originals—he has no connexion with the Grail, but here (as in the English also) he sees the lance dripping blood, and the severed head surrounded by blood in a dish. The French version of the romance is by Chrétien de Troies (12th century), which formed the basis of Sebastian Evans's The High History of the Holy Graal (1893). The German version, Parsifal or Parzival, was written some 50 years later by Wolfram von Eschenbach, and it is principally on this version that Wagner drew for his opera, Parsifal (1882).

Percy. When Malcolm III of Scotland invaded England, and reduced the castle of Alnwick, Robert de Mowbray brought to him the keys of the castle suspended on his lance; and, handing them from the wall, thrust his lance into the king's eye; from which circumstance, the tradition says, he received the name of "Pierce-eye," which has ever since been borne by the Dukes of Northumberland.

This is all a fable. The Percies are descended from a great Norman baron, who came over with William, and who took his name from his castle and estate in Normandy.—SCOTT: Tales of a Grandfather, iv.

Perdita (pěr' di tà). In A Winter's Tale, the daughter of Leontes and Hermione of Sicily. She was abandoned by order of her father, and put in a vessel which drifted to "the sea-coast of Bohemia," where the infant was discovered by a shepherd, who brought her up as his own daughter. In time Florizel, the son and heir of the Bohemian king Polixenes, fell in love with the supposed shepherdess. The match was forbidden by Polixenes, and the young lovers fled to Sicily. Here the story is cleared up, and all ends happily in the restoration of the lost (Fr. perdu) Perdita to her parents, and her marriage with Florizel.

Mrs. Robinson, the actress and mistress of George IV when Prince of Wales, was specially successful in the part of Perdita, and she assumed this name, the Prince being known as Florizel.

Perdrix, toujours perdrix (pâr' drê too zhoor pâr' drê). Too much of the same thing. Walpole tells us that the confessor of one of the French kings reproved him for conjugal infidelity, and was asked by the king what he liked best. "Partridge," replied the priest, and the king ordered him to be served with partridge every day, till he quite loathed the sight of his favourite dish. After a time, the king visited him, and hoped he had been well served, when the confessor replied, Mais oui, perdrix, toujours perdrix. "Ah! ah!" replied the amorous monarch, "and one mistress is all very well, but not 'perdrix, toujours perdrix.'"

Soup for dinner, soup for supper, and soup for breakfast again.—FARQUHAR: The Inconstant, iv, 2.

Père la Chaise (pâr la shâz). This great Parisian cemetery is on the site of a religious settlement founded by the Jesuits in 1626, and later enlarged by Louis XIV's confessor, Père la Chaise. After the Revolution, the grounds were laid out for their present purpose, and were first used in May, 1804.

Peregrine Falcon. A falcon of wide distribution, formerly held in great esteem for hawk-mg, and so called (13th century) because taken when on their passage or peregrination, from the breeding place, instead of straight off the nest, as was the case with most other hawks (Lat. peregrinus, a foreigner, one coming from foreign parts).

Dame Juliana Berners in the Book of St. Albans (see HAWK) tells us that the peregrine was for an earl. The hen is the falcon of falconers; the cock the tercel.

The word was formerly used as synonymous with pilgrim, and (adjectivally) for one traveling abroad.

Perfect. Perfect number. One of which the sum of all its divisors exactly measures itself, as 6, the divisors of which are 1, 2, 3=6. These are very scarce; indeed, from 1 to forty million there are only seven, viz. 6, 28, 496, 8,128, 130,816, 2,096,128, and 33,550,336.

Perfect rhyme is a rhyme of two words pronounced and often spelled alike but with different meanings, as "rain" and "reign," "thyme" and "time."

Perfectionists. Members of a communistic sect founded by J. H. Noyes (1811-86) in Vermont about 1834, and removed by him and settled at Oneida, New York, 1847-8. Its chief features were that the community was held to be one family, mutual criticism and public opinion took the place of government, and wives were—theoretically, at least—held in common, till 1879, when, owing to opposition, this was abandoned. In 1881 the sect, which had prospered exceedingly through its thrift and industry, voluntarily dissolved and was reorganized as a joint-stock company.

Perfume means simply "from smoke" (Lat. per fumum), the first perfumes having been obtained by the combustion of aromatic woods and gums. Their original use was in sacrifices, to counteract the offensive odours of the burning flesh.

Peri (pê' ri). Originally, a beautiful but malevolent sprite of Persian myth, one of a class which was responsible for comets, eclipses, failure of crops, etc.; in later times applied to delicate, gentle, fairy-like beings, begotten by fallen spirits who direct with a wand the pure in mind the way to heaven. These lovely creatures, according to the Koran, are under the sovereignty of Eblis; and Mohammed was sent for their conversion, as well as for that of man.

Like peris' wands, when pointing out the road
For some pure spirit to the blest abode.

THOMAS MOORE: Lalla Rookh, Pt. 1.

The name used sometimes to be applied to any beautiful, fascinating girl.

Paradise and the Peri. The second tale in Moore's Lalla Rookh. The Peri laments her expulsion from heaven, and is told she will be readmitted if she will bring to the gate of heaven the "gift most dear to the Almighty." After a number of unavailing offerings she brought a guilty old man, who wept with repentance, and knelt to pray. The Peri offered the Repentant Tear, and the gates flew open.

Pericles, Prince of Tyre (per' i klêz). According to Sir Sidney Lee, the greater portion of this play, which was ascribed to Shakespeare in all the Quartos (1st, 1608), but was not admitted to the collected works before the Third Folio (1664), was by George Wilkins, author of The Miserie of Inforst Marriage (1607), etc. The original story was the work of a late Greek romance writer and was extremely popular in mediæval times. The hero was Apollonius of Tyre, and under this name the story occurs in the Gesta Romanorum, Gower's Confessio Amantis (Bk. viii), and elsewhere.

Perillos and the Brazen Bull. See under INVENTORS.

Perilous Castle. The castle of "the good" Lord Douglas was so called in the reign of Edward I, because Douglas destroyed several English garrisons stationed there, and vowed to be revenged on anyone who should dare to take possession of it. Scott calls it "Castle Dangerous" (see Introduction of Castle Dangerous).

Peripatetic School (per i pâ tet' ik). The school or system of philosophy founded by Aristotle, who used to walk about (Gr. peri, about, patein, to walk) as he taught his disciples in the covered walk of the Lyceum. This colonnade was called the peripatos.

Periphrasis (pe rif' rā sis). The rhetorical term for using more words than are necessary in an explanation or description. A fair example is: "Persons prejudicial to the public peace may be assigned by administrative process to definite places of residence," i.e. breakers of the law may be sent to gaol.

Perissa (per is' ā). The typification of excessive exuberance of spirits in Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, ii). She was the mistress of Sansloy and a step-sister of Elissa (q.v.).

In wine and meats she flowed above the bank,
And in excess exceeded her own might;
In sumptuous tire she joyed herself to prank,
But of her love too lavish.

Faerie Queene, II, ii, 26.

Periwig. See PERUKE.

Periwinkle. The plant gets its name from Lat. Pervinca, which may mean either to conquer completely or to bind around, but why it should have received this name is unknown, though it may earlier have been applied to some climbing plant. In Italy it used to be wreathed round dead infants, and hence its Italian name, fiore di morto.

The sea-snail of this name was called in A.S. pinewinkle, the first syllable probably being cognate with Lat. pina, a mussel, and winkle from A.S. wincel, a corner, with reference to its much convoluted shell.

Perk. The derivation of the word is unknown, but as it is first met with (14th century) in connexion with the popinjay (parrot) it may have something to do with perch, the parrot bearing itself on its perch in a perky or jaunty way; and in some instances (e.g. "The eagle and the dove pearke not on one branch," Greene's Perimedes, and "Cæsar's crowe durst never cry Ave but when she was pearked on the Capitoll," Greene's Pandosto) it is not always easy to differentiate the two meanings.

To perk up. To get more lively, to feel better.

Permian Strata (pēr' mi ān). The uppermost strata of the Palæozoic series, consisting chiefly of red sandstone and magnesian limestone, which rest on the carboniferous strata; so called by Sir Roderick Murchison (1841) from Perm, in Russia, where they are most distinctly developed.

Perpetual Motion. The term applied to some theoretical force that will move a machine forever of itself—a mirage which holds attractions for some minds much as did the search for the philosophers' stone, the elixir of life, and the fountain of perpetual youth in less enlightened times.

It is quite possible, theoretically, at least, to eliminate all friction, air resistance, and wear and tear, and if this were done a body to which motion had been given would, unless interfered with, retain it for ever; but only on the condition that it were given no work to do; once connect the ideal spinning top with a wheel or crank and the spin would inevitably come to an end.

Persecutions, The Ten Great. (1) Under Nero, A.D. 64; (2) Domitian, 95; (3) Trajan, 98; (4) Hadrian, 118; (5) Pertinax, 202, chiefly in Egypt; (6) Maximin, 236; (7) Decius, 249; (8)

Valerian, 257; (9) Aurelian, 272; (10) Diocletian, 302.

It would be well if these were the only religious persecutions; but, alas! those on the other side prove the truth of the Founder: "I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. x, 34). Witness the long persecutions of the Wilderness and Albigenes, the thirty years' war of Germany, the persecution of the Guises, the Bartholomew slaughter, the wars of Louis XIV on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, the Dragonnades, and the wars against Holland. Witness the bitter persecutions stirred up by Luther, which spread to England and Scotland, the ferocious persecution of the Jews by Germans.

Persepolis (pēr sep' ō lis). The capital of the ancient Persian empire. It was situated some 35 miles NE. of Shiraz. The palaces and other public buildings were some miles from the city, and were approached by magnificent flights of steps.

Perseus (pēr' sūs). In Greek legend, the hero son of Zeus and Danaë (q.v.). He and his mother were set adrift in a chest, but were rescued through the intervention of Zeus, and he was brought up by King Polydectes, who, wishing to marry his mother, got rid of him by giving him the almost hopeless task of obtaining the head of Medusa (q.v.). He, with the help of the gods, was successful, and with the head (which turned all that looked on it to stone) he rescued Andromeda (q.v.), and later metamorphosed Polydectes and his guests to stone.

Before his birth an oracle had foretold that Acrisius, Danaë's father, would be slain by Danaë's son; and this came to pass, for, while taking part in the games at Larissa, Perseus accidentally slew his grandfather with a discus.

Person. From Lat. persona, which meant originally a mask worn by actors (perhaps from per sonare, to sound through), and later was transferred to the character or personage represented by the actor (cp. our dramatis personæ), and so to any human being in his definite character, at which stage the word was adopted in English through the O.Fr. persone.

Confounding the Persons. The heresy of Sabellius (see SABELLIANISM), who declared that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were but three names, aspects, or manifestations of one God, the orthodox doctrine being that of the Athanasian Creed—

We worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity; Neither confounding the Persons, nor dividing the Substance (Neque confundentes personas, neque substantiam separantes).

Persona grata (Lat.). An acceptable person; one liked.

The Count [Münster] is not a persona grata at court, as the royal family did not relish the course he took in Hanoverian affairs in 1866.—Truth, Oct. 22, 1885.

Perth is Celtic for a bush. The county of Perth is the county of bushes.

The Five Articles of Perth. Those passed in 1618 by order of James VI, enjoining the attitude of kneeling to receive the elements; the observance of Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and Pentecost; the rite of confirmation, etc. They were ratified August 4th, 1621, called Black Saturday, and condemned in the General Assembly of Glasgow in 1638.

Peru (per oo'). From China to Peru. From one end of the world to the other; world-wide. Equivalent to the biblical "from Dan to Beer-sheba." The phrase comes from the opening of Johnson's Vanity of Human Wishes—

Let observation with extensive view
Survey mankind from China to Peru.

Boileau (Sat. viii, 3) had previously written:—

De Paris au Pérou, du Japon jusqu'à Rome.

Peruvian Bark, called also Jesuit's Bark, because it was introduced into Spain by the Jesuits. "Quinine," from the same tree, is called by the Indians quinaquina. See CINCHONA.

Perule (per ūk') (Fr. perruke, the origin of which is unknown though the word has been conjecturally derived from Lat. pilus, hair). The wigs are first mentioned in the 16th century; in the next century they became very large, and the fashion began to wane in the reign of George III. Periwig, which has been further corrupted into wig, is a corrupt form of peruke.

Petard (pe tard'). Hoist with his own petard. Beaten with his own weapons, caught in his own trap; involved in the danger intended for others, as were many designers of instruments of torture. See list under INVENTORS. The petard was a thick iron engine of war, filled with gunpowder, and fastened to gates, barricades, and so on, to blow them up. The danger was lest the engineer who fired the petard should be blown up in the explosion.

Let it work;

For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard; and it shall go hard
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon.

Hamlet, iii, 4.

Pétaud (pā' tō). 'Tis the court of King Pétaud, where everyone is master. There is no order or discipline at all. This is a French proverb. Le roi Pétaud (Lat. peto, I beg) was the title of the chief who was elected by the fraternity of beggars in mediæval France, in whose court all were equal.

Peter. St. Peter. The patron saint of fishermen, being himself a fisherman; the "Prince of the Apostles." His feast is kept universally with that of St. Paul on June 29th, and he is usually represented as an old man, bald, but with a flowing beard, dressed in a white mantle and blue tunic, and holding in his hand a book or scroll. His peculiar symbols are the keys, and a sword (Matt. xvi, 19 and John xviii, 10).

Tradition tells that he confuted Simon Magus, who was at Nero's court as a magician, and that in A.D. 66 he was crucified with his head downwards at his own request, as he said he was not worthy to suffer the same death as Our Lord. The location of his tomb under the high altar of St. Peter's, Rome, was verified in 1950.

St. Peter's fingers. The fingers of a thief. The allusion is to the fish caught by St. Peter with a piece of money in its mouth. They say that a thief has a fish-hook on every finger.

St. Peter's fish. The John Dory (q.v.); also, the haddock.

Great Peter. A bell in York Minster, weighing 10½ tons, and hung in 1845.

Lord Peter. The Pope in Swift's Tale of a Tub.

To peter out. To come gradually to an end, to give out. The phrase came from the American mining camps of about '49, but its origin is not known.

To rob Peter to pay Paul. See ROB.

Peter-boat: Peterman. A fishing-boat made to go either way, the stem and stern being alike. They are still in common use round the mouth of the Thames, and were so called from Peterman, a term up to the 17th century for a fisherman.

I hope to live to see dog's meat made of the old usurer's flesh; . . . his skin is too thick to make parchment, 'twould make good boots for a peterman to catch salmon in.—CHAPMAN: Eastward Ho, II, ii.

Peter Funk. (U.S.A.) A swindle. A Peter Funk Auction is one that has been rigged.

Peterhouse, or St. Peter's College. The oldest of the Cambridge Colleges, having been founded in 1257 by Hugo de Balsham, Bishop of Ely.

Peter the Hermit. See HERMIT.

Peter's Pence. An annual tribute of one penny, paid at the feast of St. Peter to the see of Rome, collected at first from every family, but afterwards restricted to those "who had the value of thirty pence in quick or live stock." This tax was collected in England from about the middle of the 8th century till it was abolished by Henry VIII in 1534. Peter's Pence now consists of voluntary contributions of any amount made by Catholics in all parts of the world, and it is a considerable source of income to the Holy See.

Peter-see-me. A favourite Spanish wine was so called in the 17th century. The name is a corruption of Pedro Ximenes, the name of a grower who introduced a special grape.

Peter-see-me shall wash thy noul

And malaga glasses fox thee;

If, poet, thou toss not bowl for bowl

Thou shalt not kiss a doxy.

MIDDLETON: Spanish Gipsy, III, i.

Peterloo or the Manchester Massacre. The dispersal by the military on August 16th, 1819, of a large crowd of operatives who had assembled at St. Peter's Field, Manchester, to hear "Orator" Hunt speak in favour of Parliamentary Reform. The arrest of Hunt was ordered, but, as this was impossible and riot was feared, the magistrates gave the hussars orders to charge. Some six persons were killed in the charge, many were injured, and the arrest of Hunt (who was given two years' imprisonment) was effected.

The name was founded on Waterloo, then fresh in the popular mind.

Petit Sergeanty. See SERGEANTY.

Petitio principii (pe tish' yo prin sip' i i). A begging of the question, or assuming in the premises the question you undertake to prove. In mediæval logic a principium was an essential, self-evident principle from which particular truths were deducible; the assumption of this principle was the pettio, i.e. begging, of it. It is the same as "arguing in a circle."

Pettio Principii, as defined by Archbishop Whately, is the fallacy in which the premise either appears manifestly to be the same as the conclusion, or is actually proved from the conclusion, or is such as would naturally and properly so be proved.—J. S. MILL: System of Logic, II, p. 389.

Petitioners and Abhorers. Two political parties in the reign of Charles II. The former were those members of the Opposition or "Country" party who, in 1679, presented petitions to the King asking him to summon a Parliament in 1680. Their opponents presented counter-petitions expressing their abhorrence of the attempt to encroach on the royal prerogative, and were thus called Abhorers.

Petrel. The stormy petrel. A small sea-bird (Procellaria pelagica), so named, according to tradition, from the Ital. Petrello, little Peter, because during storms these birds seem to fly patting the water with each foot alternately as though walking on it, reminiscently of St. Peter, who walked on the Lake of Genesareth. Sailors call them "Mother Carey's chickens." The term is used figuratively of one whose coming always portends trouble.

Petticoat Government is management by women; in another phrase, wearing the breeches.

Petto. In petto. In secrecy, in reserve (Ital., in the breast). The pope creates cardinals in petto—i.e. in his own mind—and keeps the appointment to himself till he thinks proper to announce it. On the declaration of their names their seniority in the college of cardinals dates from their appointment in petto. It is claimed that the English historian Lingard was made cardinal in petto by Leo XII, who died before announcing the fact.

Petty Cury (Cambridge) means "The Street of Cooks," from Lat. curare, to cure or dress food. It is called Parva Cokeria in a deed dated 13 Edward III. Probably at one time it was part of the Market Hall.

Peutingerian Map. A map of the roads of the ancient Roman world, constructed in the time of Alexander Severus (A.D. 226), discovered in the early 16th century by Conrad Peutinger, of Augsburg.

Pewter. To scour the pewter. To do one's work.
But if she neatly scour her pewter,
Give her the money that is due t' her.
KING: Orpheus and Eurydice.

Pfister's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Phædria (fē' dri à). The typification in Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, vi) of wantonness; she was handmaid to Acrasia the enchantress, and sailed about Idle Lake in a gondola.

Phaeton (fā' ton). In classical myth, the son of Phæbus (the Sun); he undertook to drive his father's chariot, and was upset and thereby caused Libya to be parched into barren sands, and all Africa to be more or less injured, the inhabitants blackened, and vegetation nearly destroyed, and would have set the world on fire had not Zeus transfixed him with a thunder-bolt.

Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phœbus' mansion; such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.

Romeo and Juliet, iii, 2.

The name is given to a light, four-wheeled open carriage usually drawn by two horses.

Phaeton's bird. The swan. Cygnus, son of Apollo, was the friend of Phaeton and lamented his fate so grievously that Apollo changed him into a swan, and placed him among the constellations.

Phalanx (fāl' āngks). The close order of battle in which the heavy-armed troops of a Grecian army were usually drawn up. Hence, any number of people distinguished for firmness and solidity of union.

Phalaris (fāl' à ris). The brazen bull of Phalaris. See under INVENTORS.

The epistles of Phalaris. A series of 148 letters said to have been written by Phalaris, Tyrant of Agrigentum, Sicily, in the 6th century B.C., and edited by Charles Boyle in 1695. Boyle maintained them to be genuine, but Richard Bentley, applying methods of historical criticism, proved that they were forgeries of about the 7th or 8th centuries, A.D. See BOYLE CONTROVERSY.

Phallicism or Phallic Worship is the term applied to the primitive worship of fertility as symbolized in the phallus, or male generative organ. Phallic emblems are found in most parts of the world, but there is no reason to suppose that obelisks, church spires, and other suggestive objects are the vestiges of phallic worship.

Phantom. A spirit or apparition, an illusory appearance; from M.E. and O.Fr. fantosme, Gr. phantasma (phanein, to show).

Phantom corn. The mere ghost of corn; corn that has as little body as a spectre.

Phantom fellow. One who is under the ban of some hobgoblin; a half-witted person.

Phantom flesh. Flesh that hangs loose and flabby; formerly supposed to be bewitched.

The Phantom Ship. The "Flying Dutchman" (q.v.).

Phaon (fā' on). In Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, iv), a young man ill-treated by Furor, and rescued by Sir Guyon. The tale is designed to show the evil of intemperate revenge. In some editions of the poem Phedon is the name, not Phaon.

Pharamond (fār' à mond) In the Arthurian romances, a Knight of the Round Table, who is said to have been the first king of France, and to have reigned in the early 5th century. He was the son of Marcomir and father of Clodion. La Calprenède's novel Pharamond, ou l'Histoire de France, was published in 1661.

Pharaoh (fār' ō). The title or generic appellation of the kings in ancient Egypt. The word originally meant "the great house," and its later use arose much in the same way as, in modern times, "the Holy See" for the Pope, or "the Sublime Porte" for the Sultan of Turkey.

None of the Pharaohs mentioned in the Old Testament has been certainly identified, owing to the great obscurity of the references and the almost entire absence of reliable chronological data.

According to the Talmud, the name of Pharaoh's daughter who brought up Moses was Bathia.

In Dryden's satire Absalom and Achitophel (q.v.) "Pharaoh" stands for Louis XIV of France.

Pharaoh's chicken, or hen. The Egyptian vulture, so called from its frequent representation in Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Pharaoh's corn. The grains of wheat sometimes found in mummy cases. See MUMMY-WHEAT.

Pharaoh's rat. See ICHNEUMON.

Pharaoh's serpent. A chemical toy consisting of sulpho-cyanide of mercury, which fuses into a serpentine shape when lighted; so called in allusion to the magic serpents of Exod. vii, 9-12.

Pharisees (fâr' i sēs) (Heb. perusim, from perash, to separate) means "those who have been set apart," not as a sect but as a school of ascetics who attempted to regulate their lives by the letter of the Law. The opprobrious sense of the word was given it by their enemies, because the Pharisees came to look upon themselves as holier than other men, and refused to hold social intercourse with them. The Talmud mentions the following classes:—

(1) The "Dashers," or "Bandy-legged" (Nikfi), who scarcely lifted their feet from the ground in walking, but "dashed them against the stones," that people might think them absorbed in holy thought (Matt. xxi, 44).

(2) The "Mortars," who wore a "mortier," or cap, which would not allow them to see the passers-by, that their meditations might not be disturbed. Having eyes, they saw not (Matt. viii, 18).

(3) The "Bleeders," who inserted thorns in the borders of their gaberlines to prick their legs in walking.

(4) The "Cryers," or "Inquirers," who went about crying out, "Let me know my duty; and I will do it" (Matt. xix, 16-22).

(5) The "Almsgivers," who had a trumpet sounded before them to summon the poor together (Matt. vi, 2).

(6) The "Stumblers," or "Bloody-browed" (Kizai), who shut their eyes when they went abroad that they might see no women, being "blind leaders of the blind" (Matt. xv, 14). Our Lord calls them "blind Pharisees," "fools and blind."

(7) The "Immovables," who stood like statues for hours together, "praying in the market places" (Matt. vi, 5).

(8) The "Pestle Pharisees" (Medinkia), who kept themselves bent double like the handle of a pestle.

(9) The "Strong-shouldered" (Shikmi), who walked with their back bent as if carrying on their shoulders the whole burden of the law.

(10) The "Dyed Pharisees," called by Our Lord "Whited Sepulchres," whose externals of devotion cloaked hypocrisy and moral uncleanness (Talmud of Jerusalem, Berakoth, ix; Sota, v, 7; Talmud o Babylon, Sota, 22 b.).

Pharos (fâr' os). A lighthouse; so called from the lighthouse—one of the Seven Wonders of the World—built by Ptolemy Philadelphus in the island of Pharos, off Alexandria, Egypt. It was 450 feet high, and, according to Josephus, could be seen at the distance of 42 miles. Part was blown down in 793.

Pharsalia (far sâ' lia). An epic in Latin hexameters by Lucan. It tells of the civil war between Pompey and Cæsar, and of the battle of Pharsalus (48 b.c.) in which Pompey, with 45,000 legionaries, 7,000 cavalry, and a large number of auxiliaries, was decisively defeated by Cæsar, who had only 22,000 legionaries and 1,000 cavalry. Pompey's battle-cry was Hercules invictus; that of Cæsar, Venus victrix.

Pheasant. The "Phasian bird"; so called from Phasis, a river of Colchis, whence the bird is said to have spread westward.

Phedon (fê' don). An alternative name of Phaon (q.v.).

Phenomenon (fe nom' e non) (pl. phenomena) means simply what has appeared (Gr. phainomai, to appear). It is used in science to express the visible result of an experiment. In popular language it means a prodigy, and phenomenal (as "a phenomenal success") is colloquial for prodigious.

Phenomenal, soon, we hope, to perish, unregretted, is (at least indirectly, through the abuse of phenomenon) from Metaphysics; [such words are] at present, enjoying some vogue as slang, and come from regions that to most of us are overhead.—H. W. AND F. G. FOWLER: The King's English, ch. i (1906).

Phigalian Marbles (fi gâ' li ân). A series of twenty-three sculptures in alto-relievo, discovered in 1812 at Phigalia, in Arcadia, forming part of the Elgin Marbles (q.v.), now in the British Museum. They represent the combat of the Centaurs and Lapithæ, and that of the Greeks and Amazons.

Philadelphia (fil à del' fi à). The first city of the State of Pennsylvania, was founded in 1582 by William Penn (1644-1718) and others of the Society of Friends, and so named from the Greek Philadelphæia, brotherly love. It was also the name of an ancient city in Asia Minor, the seat of one of the Seven Churches (Rev. iii, 7).

Philadelphia lawyer. A lawyer of outstanding ability, with a keen scent for the weaknesses in an adversary's case and a thorough knowledge of the intricacies of the law. "You will have to get a Philadelphia lawyer to solve that" is a familiar American phrase. It is said that in 1735, in a case of criminal libel, the only counsel who would undertake the defence was Andrew Hamilton, the famous Philadelphia barrister, who obtained his client's acquittal in face of apparently irrefutable evidence, and charged no fee. In New England there was a saying that three Philadelphia lawyers were a match for the Devil.

Philadelphists. See BEHMENISTS.

Philandering (fi lan' der ing). Coquetting with a woman; paying court, and leading her to think you love her, but never declaring your preference. Philander literally means "a lover of men" (Gr. philos, loving, andros, man), but as the word was made into a proper noun and used for a lover by Ariosto in Orlando Furioso (followed by Beaumont and Fletcher in The Laws of Candy), it obtained its present significance. In Norton and Sackville's Gorboduc (1561) Philander is the name of a staid old counsellor.

Philemon and Baucis (fī lē' mon, baw' sis). Poor cottagers of Phrygia (husband and wife), who, in Ovid's story (Metamorphoses, iii, 631), entertained Jupiter so hospitably that he promised to grant them whatever request they made. They asked that both might die together, and it was so. Philemon became an oak, Baucis a linden tree, and their branches intertwined at the top.

Philip. Philip, remember thou art mortal. A sentence repeated to the Macedonian king every time he gave an audience.

Philip sober. When a woman who asked Philip of Macedon to do her justice was snubbed by the petulant monarch, she exclaimed, "Philip, I shall appeal against this judgment." "Appeal!" thundered the enraged king, "and to whom will you appeal?" "To Philip sober," was her reply.

St. Philip is usually represented bearing a large cross, or a basket containing loaves, in allusion to John vi, 5-7. He is commemorated with St. James on May 1st.

Philippic (fī līp' ik). A severe scolding; a speech full of acrimonious invective. So called from the orations of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon, to rouse the Athenians to resist his encroachments. The orations of Cicero against Antony are called "Philippics."

Philistines (fī l' tīnz). The ill-behaved and ignorant; persons lacking in liberal culture or of low and materialistic ideas. This meaning of the word is due to Matthew Arnold, who adapted it from Philister, the term applied by students at the German universities to the townspeople, the "outsiders." This is said to have arisen at Jena, because, after a "town and gown" row in 1689, which resulted in a number of deaths, the university preacher took for his text "The Philistines be upon thee" (Judges xvi).

The people who believe most that our greatness and welfare are proved by our being very rich, and who most give their lives and thoughts to becoming rich, are just the very people whom we call the Philistines.—M. ARNOLD: Culture and Anarchy (1869).

Philoctetes (fīl ok tē' tēz). The most famous archer in the Trojan war, to whom Hercules, at death, gave his arrows. In the tenth year of the siege Ulysses commanded that he should be sent for, as an oracle had declared that Troy could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules. Philoctetes accordingly went to Troy, slew Paris, and Troy fell.

The Philoctetes of Sophocles is one of the most famous Greek tragedies.

Philomel See NIGHTINGALE.

Philopena (fīl ō pē' nā). From the German vielliebchen, darling, sweetheart. A philopena is a double almond.

One evening we invited him to dine at our table, and we ate a philopena together.—MRS. MACKIN: Two Continents (1898).

The word is also applied to a game in which each of two persons tries to inveigle the other into paying a forfeit.

Philosopher. The sages of Greece used to be called sophoi (wisemen), but Pythagoras thought the word too arrogant, and adopted the compound Philosophie (lover of wisdom), whence "philosopher," one who courts or loves wisdom.

Marcus Aurelius (121-80) was surnamed The Philosopher by Justin Martyr, and the name was also conferred on Leo VI, Emperor of the East (d. 911), and Porphyry, the Neoplatonic opponent of Christianity (d. 305).

The leading philosophers and Schools of Philosophy in Ancient Greece were—

Philosophers of the Academic sect. Plato, Speusippus, Xenocrates, Polemo, Crates, Crantor, Arcesilaos, Carneades, Clitomachos, Philo, and Antiochos.

Philosophers of the Cynic sect. Antisthenes, Diogenes of Sinope, Monimos, Onesicritus, Crates, Metrocles, Hipparchia, Menippos, and Menedemos of Lampsacos.

Philosophers of the Cyrenaic sect. Aristippos, Hegesias, Anniceris, Theodoros, and Bion.

Philosophers of the Eleac and Eretriac sects. Phædo, Plisthenes, and Menedemos of Eretria.

Philosophers of the Eleatic sect. Xenophanes, Parmenides, Melissos, Zeno of Tarsos, Leucippos, Democritus, Protagoras, and Anaxarchos.

Philosophers of the Epicurean sect. Epicuro, and a host of disciples.

Philosophers of the Heraclitan sect. Heraclitus; the names of his disciples are unknown.

Philosophers of the Ionic sect. Anaximander, Anaximenes, Anaxagoras, and Archelaos.

Philosophers of the Italic sect. Pythagoras, Empedocles, Epicharmos, Archytas, Alcmaeon, Hippasos, Philolaos, and Eudoxos.

Philosophers of the Megaric sect. Euclid, Eubulides, Alexinos, Euphantos, Apollonius Chronosius, Diodoros, Ichthyos, Clinomachos, and Stilpo.

Philosophers of the Peripatetic sect. Aristotle, Theophrastus, Strato, Lyco, Aristo, Critolaos, and Diodoros.

Philosophers of the Sceptic sect. Pyrrho and Timon.

Philosophers of the Socratic sect. Socrates, Xenophon, Æschines, Crito, Simon, Glauco, Simmias, and Cebes.

Philosophers of the Stoic sect. Zeno, Cleanthes, Chrysippos, Zeno the Less, Diogenes of Babylon, Antipater, Panætios, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelius, and Posidonios.

Philosopher's Egg. A mediæval preservative against poison and a cure for the plague. The shell of a new egg was pricked, the white blown out, and the place filled with saffron or a yolk of an egg mixed with saffron.

Philosophers' Stone. The hypothetical substance which, according to the mediæval alchemists, would convert all baser metals into gold. Its discovery was the prime object of all the alchemists; and to the wide and unremitting search that went on for it we are indebted for the birth of the science of Chemistry, as well as for many inventions. It was in searching for this treasure that Botticher stumbled on the manufacture of Dresden porcelain; Roger Bacon on the composition of gunpowder; Geber on the properties of acids; Van Helmont on the nature of gas; and Dr. Glauber on the "salts" which bear his name.

In Ripley's treatise, The Compound of Alchymy (temp. Edward IV), we are told the twelve stages, or "gates," in the transmutation of metals. These are:—(1) Calcination; (2) Dissolution; (3) Separation; (4) Conjunction; (5) Putrefaction; (6) Congelation; (7) Cibation; (8) Sublimation; (9) Fermentation; (10) Exaltation; (11) Multiplication; and (12) Projection. Of these the last two were of much the greatest importance; the former consisted in the "augmentation" of the elixir, the latter in the penetration and transfiguration of metals in fusion by casting the powder of the philosophers' stone upon them, which is then called the "powder of projection." According to one legend, Noah was commanded to hang up the true and genuine philosophers' stone in the ark, to give light to every living creature therein; while another related that Deucalion (q.v.) had it in a bag over his shoulder, but threw it away and lost it.

Philosophers' Tree or Diana's Tree. An amalgam of crystallized silver, obtained from mercury in a solution of silver; so called by the alchemists, with whom Diana stood for silver.

Philter (Gr. philtron, from philein, to love). A draught or charm to incite in another the passion of love. The Thessalian philters were the most renowned, but both the Greeks and Romans used these dangerous potions, which sometimes produced insanity. Lucretius is said to have been driven mad by a love-potion, and Caligula's death is attributed to some philters administered to him by his wife, Cæsonia. Brabantio says to Othello:—

Thou hast practised on her [Desdemona] with foul charms,
Abused her delicate youth with drugs or minerals
That weaken motion.

SHAKESPEARE: Othello, i, 1.

Phiz, the face, is a contraction of physiognomy. Th' emphatic speaker dearly loves t' oppose,
In contact inconvenient, nose to nose,
As if the gnomon on his neighbour's phiz,
Touch'd with a magnet, had attracted his.

COWPER: Conversation, 269.

Phlegethon (fleg' è thon) (Gr. phlego, to burn). A river of liquid fire in Hades. It flowed into the river Acheron.

Fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.

MILTON: Paradise Lost, ii.

Phlogiston (flō jis' ton) (Gr., burnt up). The name used by early chemists to denote the principle of inflammability that was supposed to be a necessary constituent of combustible material. It was introduced by the German chemist Georg Ernst Stahl, in 1702, and belief in the theory lasted for nearly a century.

Phœbe (fē' bi). A female Titan of classical myth, daughter of Uranus and Ge; also a name of Diana as goddess of the moon.

Phœbus (Gr., the Shining One). An epithet of Apollo, god of the sun. In poetry the name is sometimes used of the sun itself, sometimes of Apollo as the leader of the Muses.

The rays divine of vernal Phœbus shine.

THOMSON: Spring.

Blind Melesigenes, thence Homer called,
Whose poem Phœbus challenged for his own.

MILTON: Paradise Regained, iv, 260.

Phœnix (fē' niks). A fabulous Arabian bird, the only one of its kind, that is said to live a certain number of years, at the close of which it makes in Arabia a nest of spices, sings a melodious dirge, flaps its wings to set fire to the pile, burns itself to ashes, and comes forth with new life.

It is to this bird that Shakespeare refers in Cymbeline (i, 7):—

If she be furnished with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird.

He also wrote the beautiful Phœnix and Turtle, based on the legendary love and death of this bird and the turtle-dove.

The phoenix was adopted as a sign over chemists' shops through the association of this fabulous bird with alchemy. Paracelsus wrote about it, and several of the alchemists employed it to symbolize their vocation.

Phœnix dactylifera. The date-palm; so called because of the ancient idea that this tree, if burnt down or if it falls through old age, will rejuvenate itself and spring up fairer than ever. Shakespeare may be referring to it in The Tempest (iii, 3):—

Now I will believe

That there are unicorns; that in Arabia

There is one tree, the phœnix' throne; one phœnix
At this hour reigning there.

Phœnix period or cycle, generally supposed to be 500 years; Tacitus tells us it was 500 years; R. Stuart Poole that it was 1,460 Julian years, like the Sothic Cycle; and Lipsius that it was 1,500 years. Now, the phoenix is said to have appeared in Egypt five times: (1) in the reign of Sesostris; (2) in the reign of Amasis; (3) in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus; (4) a year or two prior to the death of Tiberius; and (5) in A.D. 334, during the reign of Constantine. The Phoenix Cycle is therefore irregular, the reign or existence of Sesostris being doubtful; Amasis, 566 B.C.; Ptolemy, 266 B.C.; Tiberus, A.D. 34; Constantine, A.D. 334. In corroboration of this suggestion it must be borne in mind that Jesus Christ, who died A.D. 34, is termed the Phœnix by monastic writers. Tacitus (Annales, vi, 28) mentions the first four of these appearances.

Phœnix Park (Dublin). A corruption of the Gaelic Fionn-uisge, the clear water, so called from a spring at one time resorted to as a chalybeate spa.

The Phœnix Park Murders, which created an enormous sensation at the time, were the assassination by Fenians (May 6th, 1882) of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Thomas Henry Burke, Chief and Under Secretaries of Ireland. The following year one Thomas Carey turned informer and on his largely unsupported evidence five men were hanged for the crime. Carey was shipped for safety to South Africa but was murdered on the voyage out.

Phonograph. In Britain this word is applied to the old-fashioned sound-reproducing machine with cylindrical records that has now given place to the gramophone. In American the flat-disk gramophone is called a phonograph.

Phony. An American slang term originating about 1930 for something not genuine, bogus. The word probably comes from the "fawney" ring of imitation gold used by confidence-trick men. The period of more or less inactivity that
